It is affirmed of this Iland, that (amongſt other Privileges which it hath above other Ilands) it foſtereth no venomous Serpent, and that no ſuch will live here, brought from other places. Hence of her ſelf we find her ſpeaking in the Poet.

Illa ego ſum Graiis, Glacialis Hibernia dicta;
Cui Deus, & melior rerum naſcentium Origo, Jus commune dedit cum Creta altrice Tonantis,
Angues ne noſtris diffundant ſibila in oris.

I am that Iland which in times of old
The Greeks did call Hibernia, ycie-cold:
Secur'd by God and Nature from this fear,
Which gift was given to Crete, Joves Mother dear;
That poiſonous Snake ſhould never here be bred,
Or dare to hiſs, or hurtfull venom ſpred.

The other miracles of this Iland, are, 1 That there is a Lake in the Countie of Armagh, into which if one thruſt a peece of Wood, he ſhall find that part of it which remaineth in the Mud to be turned into Iron; and that which is in the Water, to be turned into a Whet-Stone: richly deſerved by him, if the tale be falſe, who did firſt report it. 2ly, That the Kine will yield no Milk, if their Calves be not by them; or at leaſt their Calves skinnes ſtuffed with ſtraw or Hay. It is ſaid alſo, that all the breed of this Countrie are of leſs ſize than they be in England, except Women and Greybounds, and thoſe much bigger than with us,

As for the Clergie of this Countrie, they have been little beholding to their Lay-Patrons in former times: ſome of their Biſhops being ſo poor, that they had no other Revenues than the Paſture of two Milch-Beaſts. And ſo far had the Monaſteries and Religious houſes invaded by Appropriations, the Churches rights, that of late times in the whole Province of Connaught the whole Stipend of the Incumbent was not above 40 ſhillings, in ſome places not above 16. So that the poor Iriſh muſt needs be better fed than taught: for ad tenuitatem Beneficiorum neceſſario ſequitur ignorantia Sacerdotum; Poor Benefices will be fitted with ignorant Prieſts, ſaid Panormitan rightly. But this was remedied in part by his Sacred Majeſty King CHARLES, the ſecond Monarch of Great Britain, who liberally (at the ſuit of the late Lord Arch-B. of Canterbury) reſtored unto this Church all the Impropriations and Portions of Tithes, which had been veſted in the Crown. An action of moſt ſingular pietie, and Princely bountie.

Principall Rivers of this Countrie, are, 1 the Shannon (the Senus of Ptolomie) which ariſing in the Mountains of Letrim in the County of Connaught, and making many fair Lakes as it paſſeth forwards; loſeth it ſelf, after a courſe of 200 miles (of which 60 navigable) in the Weſtern Ocean. 2 The Liff, by Ptolomie called Libnius, neighboured by the City of Dublin. 3 Awiduffe, or Blackwater, as the Engliſh call it. 4 Sione, ſuppoſed to be the Medona of the antient Writers. 5 The Showre. 6 The Slanie, &c. Of which, and others of like note, take this following Catalogue, out of the Canto of the mariage of the Thames and Medway in the Faierie Queen.

There was the Liffie rowing down the lea,
The ſandie Slane, the ſtonie Aubrian,
The ſpacious Shenin ſpreading like a ſea,
The pleaſant Boyne, the fiſhie-fruitfull Banne,
Swift Awiduffe, which of the Engliſhman
Is call'd Blackwater; and the Liffar deep,
Sad Trowis that once his people over-ran,
Strong Allo tumbling from Slewlogheer ſteep,
And Mallo mine, whoſe waves I wilom taught to weep.

There alſo was the wide-embayed Mayre,
The pleaſant Bandon crown'd with many wood;
The ſpreading Lee, that like an Iland fair
Incloſeth Cork with his divided flood;
And balefull Oure, late ſtain'd with Engliſh blood,
With many more, &c. So the renowned Spencer in his Canto of the mariage of Thames and Medway.

But beſides theſe Rivers, this Iland is in moſt places well-ſtored with Lakes, yeelding great plenty of Fiſh to the parts adjoyning. The principall of which, 1 Lough-Erne, containing 15 miles in bredth, and 30 miles in length; ſhaded with woods, and ſo repleniſhed with fiſh, that the Fiſhermen complain of too much abundance, and the often breaking of their nets. It hath alſo in it many Ilands, one moſt remarkable for the ſtrange and horrid noiſes which are therein heard; called therefore by the Vulgar S. Patricks Purgatorie. Almoſt as big as this is 2 the Lake of Corbes, which loſeth it ſelf in the Sea not far from Galloway. A Lake of 26 miles in length, and four in bredth; ſaid to have in it 30 Ilets, abounding with Pine-trees. 3 Lough-Foyle, ſuppoſed to be the Logia of Ptolomie. 4 Lough-Eaugh, out of which the River Banne, abundantly well-ſtored with Salmons, hath its firſt Originall: And beſides theſe and many others of leſs note, there are ſaid to be three Lakes in the Province of Meth, not far aſunder, and having an entercourſe of waters: but of ſo different a temper, that the Fiſh which are proper to the one (for each of them hath its proper and peculiar ſorts) will not live in the other: but either dieth, or by ſome ſecret conveyances find a way to their own Lake out of which they were brought. Ireland.

It was divided antiently into five Provinces, each one a Kingdom of it ſelf; that is to ſay, 1 Leinſter, 2 Meth, 3 Ulſter, 4 Connaught, and 5 Monſter: but of late time the Province of Meth is reckoned for a Member or part of Leinſter.

1 LEINSTER, by the Latines called Lagenia, hath on the Eaſt, the Iriſh Channel, (commonly called S. Georges Channel) by which parted from the Iſle of Great Britain; on the Weſt, the River Newrie, (Neorus as the Latines call it) which divides it from Mounſter; on the North, the Province of Meth; and the main Ocean on the South. The Soil more fruitfull generally than the reſt of Ireland, becauſe better cultivated and manured, as having been longeſt in the poſſeſſion of the Engliſh: from whom a great part of the Inhabitants doe derive themſelves, and for that reaſon more conformable to the civilities and habit of the Engliſh Nation. Well watred, beſides a large Sea-coaſt, with many fair and pleaſant Rivers; the principall whereof, 1 the Barrow, called in Latine Birgus; 2 the Newrie, 3 the Showre, and 4 the Liffie, (the Libnius of Ptolomie) neighbouring Dublin the chief City.

It containeth the Counties of 1 Dublin, 2 Kilkenny, 3 Caterlough, 4 Kildare, 5 Leaſe, or Queens County, 6 Ophalie, or Kings County and 7 Weiſhford: in which are comprehended 34 Towns of note, and 88 Caſtles, well-fortified, and able to make good reſiſtance againſt an Enemy; the Engliſh being forced to fortifie themſelves in their Plantations with ſtrong holds and fortreſſes, againſt the incurſions of the Natives.

Places of moſt obſervation in it, 1 Dublin, ſuppoſed to be the Eblana of Ptolomie; by the Iriſh called Balacleigh, becauſe being ſeated in a fennie and mooriſh Soil, it was built on piles, as the word doth ſignifie in that language. Situate at or neer the mouth of the Rive Liffie, which affordeth it a commodious Haven, but that the entrances thereof are many times encumbred with heaps of Sand. The Citie very rich and populous, as being the Metropolis of all the Iland, the Seat of the Lord Deputy, an Archbiſhops See, and an Vniverſity, beſides the benefit redounding from the Courts of Juſtice. In thoſe reſpects well-fortified againſt all emergencies; and adorned with many goodly buildings, both private and publique. The principall of which, are the Caſtle, wherein the Lord Deputy reſideth, built by Henry Loandres once Archbiſhop here; a College founded by Queen Elizabeth, to the honour, and by the name of the bleſſed Trinity; the Cathedrall Church dedicated to S. Patrick, the Apoſtle of the Iriſh Nation; a fair Collegiate Church called Chriſt-Church, beſides thirteen others deſtinated to Parochial meetings. Being deſtroyed almoſt to nothing in the Daniſh Wars, it was re-edified by Harald ſurnamed Harfager, King of the Norwegians, then Maſters of moſt parts of the Iland; and after the ſubjection of it to the Crown of England, was peopled with a Colonie of Briſtol men. 2 Weiſhford or Wexford, the Menapia of Ptolomie, ſituate on the mouth of the River Slane, ſuppoſed to be the Modona of the ſame Author: the firſt of all the Towns in Ireland which received a Colonie of Engliſh. 3 Kilkenny, on the River Newre, the chief Seat of the Biſhop of Oſſerie, and the faireſt Town of all the In-lands: ſo called, quaſi Cella Canici, the Cell or Monaſtery of Canicus, a man of great renown for pietie in theſe parts of the Countrie. 4 Kildare, an In-land Town alſo, and a Biſhops See; but of more note for giving the Title of an Earl to the antient Family of the Fitz-Geralds, of long time honoured with this title. One of which being much complained of to King Henry the 8th, as a man of ſo unquiet and turbulent a nature, that his Adverſaries cloſed their charge againſt him with this expreſſion; Finally, all Ireland cannot rule this Earl; the King replyed, that then this Earl ſhould rule all Ireland: and ſo for his leſts ſake made him Lord Deputy of the Kingdom. 5 Roſſe, once populous, well-traded, and of large Circumference, now a ruine onely; nothing remaining but the Walls, which were built by Isabell, the Daughter of Richard Strongbow Earl of Pembroke, the fortunate Conquerour of this Iland for King Henry the 2d. 6 Philips Town, the principall of the County of Ophalie, or Kings Countie; ſo called in honour of King Philip; as 7 Marieburg, the chief of Leaſe, or the Queens County, was in honour of Queen Mary. 8 Leighlin, a place of great importance, well walled and fortified againſt the incurſion of the Iriſh, by the Lord Deputy Bellingham. 9 Caterlogh, commonly, but corruptly Carlough, a Town of great ſtrength, and the chief of that County. 10 Rheban, not otherwiſe of note, but that it is conceived to be the Rheba of Ptolomie.

2 METH, by the Latines called Media, by Giraldus, Midia; becauſe ſituate in the middeſt of the Iland, hath on the South, Leinſter; on the Weſt, Connaught; on the North, Ulſter; on the Eaſt, the Iriſh Sea, or S. Georges Channel. A ſmall, but rich and pleaſant Province: well ſtocked with people, and ſtored with all things neceſſary for their ſuſtentation; and for a ſweet and wholeſom Air, not inferiour to any. Divided into three Counties onely, that is to ſay, 1 Eaſt-Meth, Ireland. Meth, 2 West-Meth, and 3 Longford; containing 13 Towns of note, and 14 Castles of good esteem. By reason of which strength it is called by some writers the Chamber of Ireland.

Townes of most consequence herein, 1 Trim, the chief Town of the County of East-Meth, the antient Baronie of the Lacies, possessed in former times of a fair Revenue in this County, and Lords of the greatest parts of Vlster. 2 Tredah, more properly Droghedah, situate on the River Boine on the edge of Ulster, to which Province belongs so much of the Town as lieth on the North side of that River: a very fair and populous City, as well by art as Nature very strongly fortified, and furnished with a large and commodious Haven. It took the name of Drogheda from the Bridge there built upon the River, for the Conveniency of passage (as the word signifieth in that Language)and therefore called Pontana by some Latine writers. 3 Mulinga, the chief Town of West-Meth. 4 Delvin, in the same County also, the Baronie of the Nagents, an antient Familie in this tract. 5 Longford, of most note in the Countty so named, but not else observable.

As for the fortunes of this Province (for Leinster since the first Conquest of it, hath been inseparably annexed to the Crown of England) it was first granted in Fee Farm by King Henry the 2d, to Hugh Lacy, a Man of great merit and imployment in the Conquest of Ireland; who left it unto Walter his younger Sonne. By Margaret, and Matilda, the Neeces of this Walter by his Sonne Gilbert, one moyety hereof came to the Mortimers Earls of March, and in their right unto the Crown in King Edward the fourth: and the other moyety to the Verduns, by whom dispersed and scatered into divers Families. Accompted for one County only till the time of King Henry the 8th. in whose reign it was divided into East-Meth and West-Meth, to which the County of Longford was after added, as it continueth to this day.

3 VLSTER, by the Latines called Vltonia, is the largest Province of all Ireland; bounded on the South, with Meth and Connaught; on the West, with the vast Irish Ocean; on the North, with that part of the Northern Ocean to which Ptolomie gives the name of Hiperborean; and on the East, with S. Georges Channel. A Country fruitfull of it self, but in most places formerly over-grown with Woods, and drowned in Marishes and great bogs, by the naturall slothfulness of the people: made more responsall to the husbandman both for corn and pasturage since the late Plantation of the British, than in times foregoing.

It is divided into the Counties of, 1 Louth, 2 Cavan, 3 Fermanath, 4 Down, 5 Monaghan, 6 Armagh, 7 Colrane, 8 Tirconnel, 9 Tir-Oen, and 10 Antrim. In which are comprehended 14 Towns of note for Commerce and Traffick, and 30 Castles for defence of the Countrie, and keeping under the wild Irish, wilder and more untractable in these Northern parts, than the rest of Ireland. The whole well watered with a large and spacious Sea on three sides thereof; many great Lakes in the body of it, besides the Rivers of 1 Boyne, called in Latine Branda, which divides it from Meth, 2 the Bann, 3 Moandus, and 4 the Eyn, belonging to this Province wholly.

Places of most importance in it, 1 Armagh, on or neer the River Kalin, the chief Town of the County so called, and the See of an Arch-Bishop, who is the Primate of all Ireland. An antient City, but so miserably defaced by fire in Tir-Oens Rebellion, that it can scarce preserve the reputation of a Market Town. 2 Carlingford, and 3 Dundalk, both situate on the Sea side, and both within the County of Louth. 4 Knock-Fergus, the chief of Antrim, more properly Rock-Fergus (and in that sense called Carig-Fergus by the Irish) so called from Fergus one of the Kings of the Irish Scots who there suffered Shipwrack. Seated upon a large and capacious Bay (the Vindertus of Ptolomie)which giveth it both a safe and commodious Port; as well by naturall situation, as the works of Art very strongly fortified; by reason of the neighbourhood of the Scots in Cantire, from which little distant. 5 London-Derry, a Colonie of the Londoners, best built of any Town in the North of Ireland. 6 Dungannon, the principall seat and residence in former times of the great Oneales. 7 Dungall, the principall of Tir-Connell. 8 Robogh, a small Village at present, but antiently a Bishops See, fit to be mentioned in this place in regard it still preserveth some footsteps of the old Robogdii, an Irish Tribe, and placed by Ptolomie in this tract, where they gave name unto the promontory by him called Robogdium, now the Faire-Fore-land; as is probably conceived by the learned Camden.

This, as it is the largest Province of all this Kingdom, so was it with most difficulty subjected to the Crown of England, and reduced to good order and civility. First conquered by Iohn Curcie a valiant Englishman, in the reign of King Henry the 2d. by whom created Earl of Vlster. But being maligned for his eminent vertues, and after proscribed by King Iohn, this Title and Estate were both conferred upon Hugh Lucie, the Lord and Conquerour of Meth, whom before we spake of. By an Heir Generall of the Lacies, it came unto the Burghs then Lords of Connaught; and by the mariage of Elizabeth Daughter and Heir of Richard de Burgh, the last Earl of that Family, it came to Leonel Duke of Clarence, the second Sonne (then living) of King Edward the 3d: as by his Daughter Philip to the Earls of March, from them by the like mariage to the house of York, and in the person of King Edward the 4th. to the Crown again. But being neglected by the English, in the whole course of their Government, especially in the Wars betwixt York and Lancaster, it was cantonned into many estates and Principalities by the great Lords of the naturall Irish, (who had born too great sway here in the former times) and so estranged from the civilities of England, and their Allegiance to that Crown, as if it had never been in subjection to it. In which eſtate it did continue (the Kings of England having here no more power or profit, than the great ones of the Countrey were pleaſed to give them) till the Rebellion firſt, and afterwards the Vanquiſhment of Hugh Oneal, the then Earl of Tir-Oen, brought it in full ſubjection to the Engliſh-government, of which more hereafter. Ireland.

4 CONNAVGHT, in Latine called Connacia, by the Iriſh, Connaght, is bounded on the North, with Vlſter; on the Weſt, with the Main Ocean; on the South, with Munſter, from which parted by the River Shanon; and on the Eaſt, with Meth and ſome part of Leinſter. So called from the Nagnata, an old Iriſh Nation, or from Nagnata a Port-Town, both placed by Ptolomie in this tract. The Soil of the ſame temper with that of Vlſter, as woodie and as full of bogs till theſe later times, in which indifferently well cleered of both inconveniences.

It hath been alſo called by our Engliſh Writers, the Countie of Clare, from Thomas de Clare, one of the younger Sonnes of Gilbert de Clare Earl of Gloceſter, on whom it was conferred by King Edward the firſt: and is divided at the preſent into theſe five Shires, that is to ſay, 1 Letrim, 2 Koſcommon, 3 Maio, 4 Slego, and 5 Galloway and Twomond. In which are comprehended but ſix Towns of any conſequence for commerce and traffick, (an Argument of the imperfect plantation of it by the Engliſh Conquerors) and about 24 Caſtles, for defence of the Countrie, of old erection, beſides ſuch Fortreſſes as have been raiſed occaſionally in theſe later troubles.

Places of moſt note and obſervation, 1 Toam, an Archbiſhops See. 2 Athenry, an antient Town, but decaied and ruinous; of moſt renown for being the Baronie of John de Bermingham, a noble Engliſhman, who had great poſſeſſions in this tract. 3 Letrim, the chief Town of the Countie ſo named, neighboured by the Curlew-Mountains, unfortunately memorable for the great defeat there given the Engliſh, in Tir-Oens rebellion; and by the Spring or Fountain of the River Shemin or Shanon, whoſe courſe we have before deſcribed. 4 Slego, and 5 Koſcommon, the chief Towns of their ſeverall Counties. 6 Athlone, a Peece of great ſtrength, and the Key of Connaught. 7 Twomond, not otherwiſe much obſervable, but for giving the title of an Earl to the noble Family of O-Brian, (deſcended from the Kings of Connaught) advanced unto that honour by King Henry the 8th. 8 Galloway, the principall of this Province, a Biſhops See, and the third Citie of the Kingdom for beautie and bigneſs. Situate neer the fall of the great Lake or River of Corbes, in the Weſtern Ocean; A noted Emporie, and lately of ſo great fame with forein Merchants, that an out-landiſh Merchant meeting with an Iriſhman, demanded in what part of Galloway, Ireland ſtood; as if Galloway had been the name of the Iland, and Ireland onely the name of ſome Town.

This once a Kingdom of it ſelf, as the reſt of thoſe Provinces; the laſt King whereof was Rodorick, ſurnamed the Great, who having a great hand over the reſt of the Roytelets, entituled himſelf ſole Monarch or King of Ireland. But being forced to ſubmit himſelf to King Henry the 2d, his Countrey at the laſt was brought into ſubjection to the Crown of England, by the valour and good fortune of William de Burgh, Gilbert de Clare, Earl of Gloceſter, William de Bermingham, and other noble Adventurers of the Engliſh Nation. And though all of them did partake of the fruit of their labours; yet the greateſt part of the ſpoil, together with the title of Lords of Connaught, fell to the Family of the Burghs; from them to Lionel D. of Clarence, and by degrees unto the Crown, as before was ſhewn. Cantonned again amongſt the Iriſh and degenerate Engliſh, as Vlſter was, by the ſupine neglect of the Kings of England: till the Rebellion of Tir-Oen, involving all the Chiefs of the Iriſh Nation in the ſame cauſe with him, involved them alſo conſequently in the ſame deſtruction.

5 MOVNSTER, by the Latines called Momonia, is bounded on the North, with Connaught; on the Eaſt, with Leinſter; on the Weſt, with the Atlantick or Weſtern Ocean; and on the South, with the Vergivian. By the naturall Iriſh it is called Mown, whence the Engliſh had the name of Mounſter. A Province, which for rich Towns, commodious Havens, fair Rivers, and the fertilitie of the Soil, yeelds not to any in the Kingdom.

It is divided into ſix Counties, viz. 1 Limerick, 2 Waterford, 3 Cork, 4 Deſmond, 5 Kerry, and 6 Tipperarie; which two laſt antiently enjoyed all the rights of a Countie Palatine: And in theſe Shires are comprehended (beſides many ſafe Stations and Rodes for Shipping) 24 Towns of note and trading, and 66 Caſtles of old erection.

Places of moſt obſervation, 1 Caſſiles, in the Countie of Limerick, an Archbiſhops See, advanced unto that honour by Pope Eugenius the third, about the year 1150. 2 Limerick, the principall of that Countie, and the fourth in eſtimation of all the Kingdom: Situate in an Iland compaſſed round about with the River Shanon, by which means well fortified: a well-frequented Emporie, and a Biſhops See; Diſtant from the main Ocean about 60 miles, but ſo accomodated by the River, that ſhips of burden come up cloſe to the very wals. The Caſtle and the Bridge, peeces of great both ſtrength and beautie, were of the foundation of King John, exceedingly delighted with the ſituation. 3 Clonmel, in the Countie of Tipperarie, of great ſtrength and conſequence. 4 Holy Croſs, in the ſame County alſo, once flouriſhing, by reaſon of the great reſort of Pilgrims to ſee & worſhip there a peece of the holy Croſs as it was ſuppoſed: which ſuppoſition as it drew much wealth unto the Town, ſo it obtained the rights of a County Palatine for the County alſo. 5 Thurles, in the ſame Countie, which gives the title of a Vicount to the Earls of Ormond, but not elſe obſervable. 6 Waterford, on the River Showre, a well-traded Port, a Biſhops See, and the ſecond Citie of the Kingdom: Of great fidelity to the Engliſh ſince the conqueſt of Ireland, and for that

Ireland. that cauſe endowed with many ample privileges. Firſt built by ſome Norwegian Pirates, who though they fixed it in one of the moſt barren parts and moſt foggie air of all the Country, yet they made choice of ſuch a ſafe and commodious ſite for the uſe of ſhipping, that of a neſt of Pirats it was eftſoons made a Receipt for Merchants, and ſuddenly grew up to great wealth and power. 6 Cork, (by the Latines called Corcagia) the principall of that Countie, and a Biſhops See: well walled, and fitted with a very commodious Haven; conſiſting chiefly of one Street reaching out in length; inhabited by a civill, wealthy, and induſtrious people. 7 Dunk-Eran, an old Epiſcopall See, ſuppoſed by ſome to be the Ivernis of Ptolomie, but not elſe obſervable. 8 Kinſale, upon the mouth of the River Bany, a commodious Port, oppoſite to the Coaſts of Spain, and fortified in Tir-Oens Rebellion by a Spaniſh Garriſon, under the command of Don Iohn de Aquilar, but ſoon recovered (after the defeat of that Grand Rebel neer the Walls hereof) by the valour and indefatigable induſtrie of Charles Lord Mountjoy, the then Lord Deputy of this Kingdom. 9 Baltimore, 10 Youghall, and 11 Bere-haven, all upon the Sea, and all provided of ſafe Roads or convenient Havens. 12 Liſmore, of old a Biſhops See, now annexed to Waterford, in which ſhire it ſtandeth. Nothing in point of ſtorie ſingular which concerns this Province; but that it was ſo carefully looked to by the Kings of England, that there was appointed over it a peculiar Officer (in the reign of Queen Elizabeth, in power and place next to the Deputie himſelf) called the Lord Preſident of Mounſter: by whoſe vigilancie there have hapned fewer Rebellions here than in any Province of this Iland.

The antient Inhabitants of this Iland, being originally Britans (as before is ſaid) were in the time of Ptolomie diſtinguiſhed into the Nations of the Rhobogdii, Darni, Voluntii, Venicnii, and Erdini, poſſeſſing the Northern parts, now Vlſter: the Auteri, Gangani, and Nagnata, inhabiting Connaught: the Velibori, Vterni, Vodii, and Coriondi, in the South, now Mounſter; and the Menapii, Cauci, Blanii, Brigantes, taking up the Provinces of Meth and Leinſter. Principall Cities of the which, were, Eblana, now Dublin; Menapia, now Waterford; Nagnata, which Ptolomie honoureth with the title of Vrbs inſignis; Rhigia, Rheba, Macolicum, Laberus, Ivernis, &c. not eaſily diſcernable by what names we may call them now: this Countrie never being ſo happy as to come under the power of the Romans, the great Maſters of Civilitie and good Letters in the Weſt of Europe; and by that means the Actions and affairs thereof buried in ignorance and ſilence. Towards the falling of which Empire we find the Nation of the Scots to be ſeated here, and from hence firſt to take poſſeſſion of the Hebrides or Weſtern Iſles, next of the Weſtern part of Britain on the the North of Solway. Afterwards ſome of the Saxon Monarchs caſt their eyes upon it and made themſelves maſters of Dublin, and ſome other places; but being encumbred with the Danes could not hold them long; being hardly able to defend their own againſt that people. The next that undertook the conqueſt were the Northern Nations, Danes, Swedes, and Normans, all paſſing in the Chronicles of that time under the name of Norwegians: who firſt onely ſcowred along the Coaſts in the way of Piracie. But after finding the weakneſs of the Iland, divided amongſt many petit and inconſiderable Princes, they made an abſolute conqueſt of it under the conduct of Turgeſius, whom they elected for their King: ſoon rooted out by the Policie of the King of Meth, the only Iriſh Prince who was in favour with the Tyrant. This petit King, by name Omo-Caghlen, had a Daughter of renowned beautie, whom Turgeſius demanded of her Father to ſerve his luſts: and he ſeeming willing to condeſcend to the motion, as if honoured by it, made anſwer, That beſides his Daughter, he had at his diſpoſing many others of more exquiſite beauties, which ſhould all be readie at command. Turgeſius ſwallowing this bait, deſired him with all ſpeed to effect this meeting. But the King of Meth attiring in the habits of Women, a company of young Gentlemen, who durſt for the common liberty adventure their ſeverall lives, conducted them to the Tyrants Bed-chamber. And they according to the directions given them, (when for that little modeſty ſake he had in him, he had commanded all his attendants to avoid the room) aſſaulted him, now ready for, and expecting more kind embraces, and left him dead in the place. The Methian King had by this time acquainted divers of the better ſort with his plot; all which upon a ſigne given, ruſh into the Palace, and put to death all the Norwegians, and other attendants of the Tyrant. After this, the Roytelets enjoyed their former Dominions till the yeer 1172, in which Dermot Mac Morogh King of Leinſter, having forced the Wife of Maurice O Rork King of Meth, and being by him driven out of his Kingdom, came to the Court of England for ſuccour. To this Petition, Henry the ſecond then King, condeſcended; ſending him ayd under the leading of Richard de Clare, ſurnamed Strongbow, Earl of Pembroke; who reſtored King Dermot, and brought a great part of the Iland under the Engliſh ſubjection. John, King of England, was the firſt who was entituled Lord of Ireland; which ſtile was granted him by Pope Urban the 3d; who for the ornament of his royaltie, ſent him a plume of Peacock Feathers: and when Tir-Oen ſtiled himſelf Defender of the Iriſh Libertie, he was by Clement the 8 honored with a like plume. But here we are to underſtand, that though the Kings of England uſed no other title than Lords of Ireland; yet were they Kings thereof in effect and power, Lords Paramount, as we uſe to ſay. And though themſelves retained only the name of Lords, yet one of them gave to one of his Engliſh Subjects, the honourable, but invidious title of Duke of Ireland. And they retained this title of Lords, till the yeer 1542; in which Henry the 8th, in an Iriſh Parliament, was declared K. of Ireland, as a name more ſacred, and repleat with Majeſtie, than that of Lord: at which time alſo he was declared to be the Supreme Head under God, of the Church of Ireland; and the pretended jurisdiction of all forein Powers, especially the usurped Autoritie of the Pope of Rome renownced by Law, though still acknowledged by too many of this superstitious and untractable People. Ireland.

The Government of this Country, since the first Conquest by the English, hath been most commonly by one Supreme Officer, who is sometimes called the Lord Lieutenant, most generally the Lord Deputy of Ireland; than whom no Vice-Roy in all Europe hath greater power, or comes nearer the Majesty of a King in his Train and State. For his assistance he hath a Privie Councell attending on him, though resident for the most part at Dublin: and in emergencies, or cases of more difficult nature proceedeth many times in an arbitrary way, without formalities of Law. And for their Laws, which are the standing Rule of all civill Government, they owe their being and original to the English Parliaments. For in the reign of King Henry the 7th. Sir Edward Poynings then, Lord Deputy caused an Act to pass in the Irish Parliament, whereby all Laws and Statutes, which were made in England before that time, were to be entertained and Hand in force as the Laws of Ireland. On which foundation they have raised many Superstructures both of Law and Government, enacted in their own Parliaments, summoned by the Lord Deputy at the Kings appointment: in which, by an other Statute made in the time of the said Poynings, the people are inabled to make Laws for their own good Governance, conditioned they were first transmitted to the Court of England to be considered of by the King, before they were Voted to in either of the houses of the Irish Parliaments. Which Laws commmonly called Poynings Laws, have hitherto continued in force amongst them; though the last much stomaked and repined at; not only as a badge of their Subjection to the Crown of England, but as a Curb or Martingall to hold them in.

Yet notwithstabding these good Laws, and the ample power of their Commission, the Lord Deputies could never absolutely subdue the Iland, or bring the People to any civill course of life, the Fathers inflicting a heavy curse on all their posterity, if ever they should sow Corn, build houses, or Learn the English tongue. To this indisposition of the Irish themselves, let us adde the defects of the Kings of England, and Irish Deputies, in matters of civill policie, as I find them particularized by Sir John Davies, in his worthy and pithy discourse of this Subject. I will only glean a few of them. First then saith he, a barbarous Country is like a field overgrown with weeds, which must first be well broken with the Plough, and then immediately Sown with good and profitable seed: so must a wild and uncivill people, be first broken and Ploughed up by War, and then presently Sown with the seed of good Laws and discipline; lest the weeds revive in the one, and ill manners in the other. Here then was the first defect in our English Kings, not to tame and take down the Stomacks and pride of this people, though either civill or forrein wars perhaps occasioned this neglect: and also the Irish Deputies, who at such times as the people upon a small discomfiture, were crest-faln, neglected the so keeping of them by severity of discipline. The second oversight concerneth particularly our Kings, who gave such large possessions and regalities unto the first Conquerours, that the people knew no Authority in a manner, above their own immediate Lords. Thirdly, the Laws of England were not indifferently communicated to all the Irishrie, but to some particular Families and Provinces only: insomuch as there were but five great Lords of the Naturall Irish, who had the benefit and protection of the Laws of England, that is to say O Neale in Ulster, O Connohor in Connaught, Mac Morrough in Lemster, O Malaghlin in Meth, O Brian in Twomond; known by the name of Quinque Sanguines in some old Records. By means whereof the rest of the people being in the condition of Out-laws, or at the best of Aliens, had no incouragement either to build, or plant, or manure their Land, or to behave themselves as Subjects. A fourth defect was more particularly in the Deputies or Lords Lieutenants, who having made good and wholsome Laws against the barbarous customes of the Common people, and the mercilesse oppressions of the Lords, never put any of them in execution; as if they had been made for terror, not for reformation. Fiftly, Adde unto these (which Sir John Davies hath omitted) the little care which was too often taken by the Kings of England in the choice of their Deputies: sometimes conferring that high Office as a Court-preferment, without Relation unto the merits of the person; and sometimes sending men of weak or broken fortunes, who attended more their own profit than their Masters service, and were more bent to fleece than to feed this Flock. Sixthly, And yet besides these Errours of the Kings and Deputies in point of Government, there was another, and as great in the Planters themselves: who building all their Forts and Castles in the open Countries, abandoned the Woods and Bogs, and other Fastnesses to the naturall Irish; the strength whereof not only animated them to Rebell upon all occasions; but served too fitly to continue them in their antient Barbarism.

In these terms of wildnes and non-subjection stood Ireland, till the latter end of Queen Elizabeths reign; at what time the Rebellion of Hugh O Neal Earl of Tir Oen had ingaged almost all the Irishrie in that desperate Action: which ending in the overthrow of that ingratefull Rebel, and all his partizans, not only crushed the overmuch powerablenesse of the Irish Nobility; but made the finall and full conquest of the whole Nation. So true it is, that Every Rebellion when it is suppresst, doth make the Prince stronger, and the Subjects weaker. Ireland thus broken and ploughed up, that glorious Queen died a victor over all her enemies. and left Ireland. the Sowing of it unto her ſucceſſor King Iames, who omitted no part of a skilfull Seedſman. 1 Then there was an Amneſia or Act of Oblivion made, whereby all the offences againſt the Crown were remitted, if by ſuch a limited day the people would ſue out their Pardons, and by the ſame Act, all the Irishrie were manumitted from the ſervitude of their Lords, and received into the Kings immediat protection. 2ly, The whole kingdom was divided into Shires, and Judges itinerant appointed to circuit them: whereby it hath followed, that the exactions of the Lords are laid aſide, the behaviour of the people is narrowly looked into, the paſſages before unknown unto our Souldiers, are laid open by our Vnder-Sheriffes and Bayliffs; and the common people ſeeing the benefit and ſecurity they enjoy by the Engliſh Laws, and loth to plead alwayes by an Interpreter, begin to ſet their children to School, for the learning of the Engliſh tongue. 3ly, The Iriſh were not rooted out, as in the firſt plantation in Lemſter, and the Engliſh onely eſtated in their rooms; but were onely removed from the woods, bogs, and mountains, into the plain and open countrey; that being like wild trees tranſplanted, they might grow the milder, and bear the better fruit. And 4ly, whereas there was before but one Freeholder in a whole Country, which was the Lord himſelf, the reſt holding in villenage, and being ſubject to the Lords immeaſurable taxations; whereby they had no encouragement to build or plant: Now the Lords eſtate was divided into two parts, that which he held in demain to himſelf, which was ſtill left unto him; and that which was in the hands of his Tenant, who had eſtates made in their poſſeſſions, according to the Common-Law of England paying in ſtead of uncertain Iriſh taxations, certain Engliſh rents: whereby the people have ſince ſet their minds upon repairing their houſes, and manuring their lands, to the great increaſe of the private and publick revenue.

But that which moſt advanced the reduction of Ireland to a ſetled and civil Government, and rooted it in a ſubjection to the Crown of England, was the voluntary flight of the Earls of Tyrone, & Tirconnel, Sir John Odaughertie, and other great men of the North, poſſeſſed of large territories and great juriſdictions. Who being both uncapable of Loyaltie, and impatient of ſeeing the Kings Iudges, Iuſtices, and other Miniſters of State, to hold their Seſſions, and execute their Commiſſions of Oyer and Terminer, within the parts where they commanded: without more provocation, or the fear of any danger but a guilty Conſcience, forſook the Countrie, and left their whole Eſtates to the Kings diſpoſing. By whoſe directions, their Lands were ſeized upon and ſold to ſeverall Purchaſers, the Citie of London infeoffed in a great part of them, a great plantation made in Vlſter of Engliſh, Welch, and Scots, by the united name of a Britiſh Plantation; and a new Order of Knights Baronets erected in the Kingdom of England for raiſing money to advance and indear the Work. Which had it been as cordially affected by the Engliſh, as it was by the Scots; if more of this Nation had gone thither, and not abandoned ſo great a part of it to the power of the other, it had been better for both Kingdoms, in the conformity of each to one form of Government (which the Scots, being factious for another did not eaſily brook) and the uniting of both people in the bonds of Amitie: the Iriſh looking on the Scot as a meer Intruder, but on the Engliſh as his old Maſter, or his Fellow-Subject. Howſoever, ſo great a part of the Countrey (and that which heretofore was the neſt of the Rebels) being thus diſpoſed of, it came to paſs, that Ireland, which before ſerved only as a grave to bury our beſt men, and a gulf to ſwallow our greateſt treaſures; being governed neither as a country Free, nor conquer'd: was brought in ſome hope, by the prudence and policie of her laſt Kings, and late Lord Deputies, to prove an Orderly Common-wealth; civill in it ſelf, profitable to the Prince, and a good ſtrength to the Britiſh Empire. For to ſuch Order it was reduced, in a little time, that the wayfaring men might travell without danger, the ploughman walk without fear, the laws adminiſtred in every place alike, the men drawn unto villages, the woods and faſtneſses left to beaſts; and all reduced to that civility, as our fathers never ſaw, nor could we well ſample out of antient hiſtories.

The revenues of this kingdome are ſaid by Walſingham, in the time of Edward the third, to have been yeerly 40000 pounds; but his ſucceſſors, till of late, have ſcarce got ſo much as the keeping of it coſt them: King Richard the 2d being by the ſame Walſingham reported to have ſpent 30000 marks out of his own purſe, over and above the money which he received thence. Whether this Countrey were ſo profitable to Edward the third, or no, I determine not, though I find good reaſons to perſwade me, that Walſingham was not well acquainted with the ſtate of that Exchequer. But ſure I am that the Revenues of the Crown are more than double what they were in the ſaid Kings reign, and more duely paid into the Exchequer of that Kingdom than ever formerly; the profits of the Cuſtomehouſe amounting to 30000 per Annum, in the laſt yeer of King Iames his reign. Not to ſay any thing of the great Improvements which were made by the Earl of Strafford, in the time of his Government, becauſe they fell together with him.

The ſtrength of this Kingdom conſiſteth partly in the ſituation of it, begirt about with difficult and dangerous Seas; partly in the many Caſtles firſt built and fortified by the Engliſh Planters; and partly in a ſtanding Armie continually kept up by the Kings of England for defence of their hold and intereſts againſt the Rebellions of the Natives. What Forces it is able to raiſe both of Horſe and Foot, could never be conjectured at till now of late. For formerly the Kings of England being actually poſſeſſed onely of thoſe four Counties which they called the Pale, that is to ſay, the Counties of Dublin, Louth, Kildare, and Meth (which laſt hath ſince the time of King Henry the 8th been ſubdived into three:) were not able to raiſe any great power out of that Eſtate, but were forced to ſend Soldiers out of England (as occaſion was) to preſerve their Soveraignty in Ireland. The greateſt Levie which I read of, was that of 1500 Iriſh, led by the Prior of Kilmainham to King Henry the fifth, then being at the ſiege of Harfleu in Normandie. And on the other ſide, the great Lords of the naturall Iriſh, and degenerate Engliſh, being divided into factions amongſt themſelves, and never joyned in any one principle of common interels, were more inconſiderable than the weak but united forces of the Kings of England. And though moſt of them at the laſt were drawn into a conſederacy with the Earl of Tir-Oen, to make good his rebellion: yet find I not that their Armie did exceed at any time the number of 8000 men; and thoſe not well-appointed neither. So that the beſt eſtimate which can be made of the forces of Ireland, muſt be meaſured by the Armies raiſed in the late Rebellion: when the Iriſhrie had both time and leizure to get themſelves ſome reputation in the world, and make proviſion for a War. In proſecution of which, he who conſiders the many Armies they have raiſed ſince their firſt muſtering under the command of Sir Phelim O Neal, the many deſeats which have been given them, and thoſe as many new recruits after each defeat, all of them raiſed out of the bodies of their own People, without ſupplie from other Countries; (beſides ſuch as have ſerved againſt them for the King,) muſt needs conclude that they want not men enough for ſervice; nor skill nor courage to attempt the moſt difficult enterpriſes. Orcades, & Schetland.

The Arms of Ireland are Azure, an Harpe Or, ſtringed Argent. Which Coat, King James, (to ſhew himſelf the firſt abſolute King of Irelana) firſt cauſed to be marſhalled with the Royall Arms of Great Britain.

THE LESSER ILANDS.

AND now we come at laſt to the LESSER ILANDS, diſperſed in ſeverall parts of the Britiſh Ocean. The chief whereof are, 1 The Orcades, 2 Schetland, 3 The Hebrides, 4 Man, 5 Angleſey, 6 The Ilands of the Severn Sea, 7 The Sorlinges or Iſles of Silly, 8 Wight, 9 Thanet, 10 Sunderland, 11 Holy Iland.

I. The ORCADES or Iſles of Orkney are in number 32, ſituate over againſt Cathneſs, the moſt Northern Countrey of all Scotland, and ſeparate from one another by ſome narrow Streights. The Soil indifferently fruitfull, exceedingly well ſtored with Barley, and great Herds of Cattell; plentifull in Hares and Conies, as of Cranes and Swans; but deſtitute of wheat, and unfurniſhed both of woods and trees. But their chief commoditie is their Fiſh, which the inhabitants catch upon the coaſts in great abundance. Thoſe of moſt note in all the cluſter, are, 1 Heth, conceived to be the Ocetis of Ptolomie: as 2 Fair Iſle, on good reaſon thought to be the Dumna of Plinie; the chief Town of it being ſtill called by the name of Dumo. 3 Hey, taken or miſtaken for the Dumna of Plinie, but not elſe obſervable. 4 Pomonia, the chief of all, in length about 26 miles, in bredth, where it is broadeſt, ſix. The chief Town of it, Kirkwall, honoured with a Biſhops See, and ſtrengthned with two Caſtles. This Iland is well ſtored with Tinne and Lead, and is at this day by the inhabitants called Mainland.

The people of theſe Iſles (according to Maginus) are great drinkers, but no drunkards; bibaciſſimi ſunt incolæ, nunquam tamen inebriantur: they uſe the Gothiſh Language, which they derive from the Norwegians, in whoſe poſſeſſion they once were; and of whoſe qualities they ſtill retain ſome ſmack. The Iſles themſelves in the time of Solinus were not inhabited, being then overgrown with ruſhes; (now in a meaſure, populous and fertile, as before was ſaid) and were firſt diſcovered by Julius Agricola, the firſt that ever ſailed about Britain. In later times they were poſſeſſed by the Normans or Norwegians, who held them till the yeer 1266; when Magnus K. of Norwey ſurrendred them up to Alexander King of Scotland, which ſurrendry ſome of the ſucceeding Kings did afterwards ratifie: the claim hereto being finally relinquiſhed by Chriſtiern the firſt King of Denemark and Norwey, on the mariage of his Daughter Margaret with King James the third, An. 1474. ſome money being added to make good the contract, without which the Danes would not forgoe their pretenſions to them.

II. Two dayes ſayling North of theſe Orcades, lyeth SCHETLAND, an Iland belonging to the Hebrides, & Man.

Crown of Scotland: and is by many learned men, upon very good reasons, supposed to be the Thule of the Antients. For first, it standeth in the 63 degree of latitude, in which Ptolomie placed Thule. 2ly, It lieth opposite to Bergen in Norwey; against which Pomponius Mela hath seated it: & 3ly, Cesper Peucerus hath observed, that this Schetland is by Mariners called Thylensell; a name in which that of Thule is apparently couched. That Ise-land was not Thule (as most say) we shal shew you when we come to Norwey, & the Northern Ilands. Here we adde only, that the Antients did report many strange things of it, and some of them beyond all belief. Plinie affirming that they had no day here for all the winter (nulli per brumam dies, as his own words are) with whom agree Solinus and many others, as to that particular. Isidore addes (Origin. lib. 14. c. 6.) nullum ultra eam diem esse, that beyond this Isle there was no day in any place; as if here had been the end of the world and nature. But Pytheas in Polybius goes beyond them all, reporting that in this Isle there was no distinction of Earth, Air, and Water: ἀλλα σύγκριμά τι κ τέτων, but a confused mixture of all together, like the primitive Chaos of the Poets. The reason of which strange reports was the audaciousness of those who had seen the Iland and thought that what lover they said of it would not be disproved, because of the remoteness of it from more civil Countries. So truly and judiciously spoken was that of Synesius, a right learned Prelat, Ἡ Θύλη δίδωσι τοῖς διαπλέουσιν αὐτὴν ἀδεῶς ψεύδεσθαι. Thule (saith he) gave those who had sailed unto it, the opportunity of lying without controll. An opportunity which many of our Mariners and vulgar Travellers have made too much use of in these last times also.

III. The HEBRIDES, HEBUDAE, or Western Ilands, situate on the West of Scotland, are in number about 44. The chief whereof, 1 Ila, 24 miles long, and 16 in bredth, plentifull in Wheat, Cattle, and herds of Deer. 2 Iona, famous for the Sepulchres of the old Scotish Kings; whose chief Town is Sodore, once a Bishops See, called hence Sodorensis; his jurisdiction comprehending these Ilands with the Isle of Man; his See erected by Pope Gregory the 4th, Anno 840, or thereabouts. His dwelling for the most part in the Isle of Man, as the wealthier and more pleasant part of his Diocese; till the conquest of it by the English: at what time those of the Western Ilands, withdrew themselves from his obedience, and had a Bishop of their own: both of them for a long time called Sodorenses, but at last this took the name of Insulanus, Bishop of the Isles, which he still retains. 3 Mala, by Ptolomie called Maleos (that of Ila before-mentioned being his Epidia) mountainous and hillie, but affording good mines of Lead and Copper; 25 miles more in compass than that of Ila. 4 Leuves, or Levissa, the largest of all the Hebrides, said to be 60 miles in length, and 30 in bredth, the more Western of the two Ebudae spoken of by Ptolomie: the other being now called 5 Skye, famous for multitude of Sea-Calves in the Creeks thereof. 6 Racline, the Recina of Ptolomie, the smallest of the Hebrides, and most neer to Ireland. The rest of less note, not known, or not inhabited in the time of the Romans, and not very well peopled at the present, I forbear to name: some of them rather Rocks than Ilands, others scarce having grass enough to hide their bareness. The people of them all as well in language as behaviour resemble the wild-Irish, and are called Redshanks: a people, as King James affirmeth in his Basilicon Doron, utterly rude, and without all shew of Civilitie; such as endure not to be governed by Laws, or kept under by Discipline. Legum severitate, & judiciorum metu, se allegari non patiuntur, saith judicious Camden. Such as they are, they came unto the Crown of Scotland by a contract betwixt Magnus King of Norwey, and King Alexander the third: the Orcades being bargained for at the same time also.

South of the Hebrides, in the Bay of Dunbritton Frith, lieth the Isle of Rothsay (now called Buthe) which gives the title of a Duke to the Prince of Scotland; and the Isle of Arran, which gives the title of an Earl to the chief of the Hamiltons.

IV. MAN is situate just over against the Southern part of Cumberland, and from which it is distant 25 miles; and was judged to belong to Britain rather than to Ireland, because it fostered venemous Serpents brought hither out of Britain. By Ptolomie it is called Monoeda, or the further Mona, to differenee it from that which we now call Anglesey; by Plinie, Blonabia; Menavia, by Orosius and Beda; Eubonia, by Gildas an old British Writer. The Welch at this day call it Menaw, the Inhabitants Manaing, and the English, Man. It is in length 30 miles, in bredth 15, and 8 in some places. The people hate theft, and begging; and use a Language mixt of the Norwegian and Irish tongues. The soyl is abundant in Flax, Hemp, Oates, Barley, and Wheat, with which they use to supply the defects of Scotland, if not the Continent it self, yet questionless the Western Iles, which are a Member of it. For thus writeth the Reverend Father in God, John Merieke late Bishop of this Iland, in a letter to Mr. Camden, at such time as he was composing his most excellent Britannia. Our Iland (saith he) for cattell, for fish, and for corn, hath not only sufficient for it self, but sendeth also good store into other Countries: now what Countries should need this supply (England and Ireland being aforehand with such provision) except Scotland, or some members thereof, I see not. Venerable Bede numbred in it 300 Families, and now it is furnished with 17 Parish Churches. The chief Towns are. 1 Balacuri, and 2 Russin, or Castle-Town, the seat of a Bishop, who though he be under the Archbishop of York, yet never had any voice in the English Parliament. In this Iland is the hill Sceafull, where on a clear day one may see England, Scotland, and Ireland, here also are bred the Soland Geese, of rotten wood falling into the water. This Iland was taken from the Britans by the Scots, and from them regained by Edwin King of Northumberland: Afterwards the Norwegians seized on it, and made it a Kingdom; the Kings hereof ruling over the Hebrides, and some part of Ireland. From them taken by Alexander the 3d of Scotland, by a mixt title of Arms and purchase: after which time it was sometimes English, sometimes Scotish, as their fortunes varied, till in the end, and about the year 1340. William Montacute, Earl of Salisbury, descended from the Norwegian Kings of Man, won it from the Scots, and sold it to the Lord Scrope: who being condemned of Treason, Henry the fourth gave it to Henry Piercy Earl of Northumberland; but he also proving false to his Soveraign, it was given to the Stanleys, now Earls of Darby. Man, & Anglesey.

12 William Lord Stanley, Earl of Darby.
13 James Lord Stanley, Earl of Darby, Lord of the Isle of Man, now living Anno 1648. King in effect, though but Lord in title, as having here all kind of Civill power and jurisdiction over the Inhabitants, under the Feife and Sovereignty of the Crown of England; together with the nomination of the Bishop, whom he presents unto the King for his Royall assent, then to the Arch-Bishop of York for his consecration, And this I take to be the reason why the Bishop of Man was no Lord of Parliament, none being admitted to that honour, but such as held immediately of the King himself; nor was it reason that they should.

V. ANGLESEY, is an Iland situate in the Irish Sea, over against Carnarvonshire in North-Wales, from which it is divided by a narrow streight, which they call the Menai. By the Britans themselves, as by the Welch at this day, it was called Mon, from whence the Romans had their Mona: but being Conquered by the English it obtained the name of Anglesey, as one would say, the Iland of the English Men, (eye in the Saxon language signifying an Iland) A place of such a fair Revenue to the Princes of it, that LLewellen the last Prince of Wales being stripped of almost all the rest of his Estates by King Edward the first, paid to that King a tribute of 1000 per An. for this Iland only.

And to say truth, the Iland is exceeding fruitfull both in Corn and Cattle; from whence the Welch are liberally stored with both: and therefore it is said proverbially Mon Mam Cymri, that Anglesey is the Mother of Wales. In length from East to West about 20 miles, and 17 in bredth. Containing in that Compasse 74 Parishes, divided into six hundreds, and hath in it only two Market Towns: that is to say, 1 Beaumaris, seated on a flat or marish grownd, neer the Menai, built by King Edward the first to secure his Conquest: by whom well walled and fortified as the times then were. 2 Newburg, a Town of no great antiquity, as the name doth intimate, by the Welch called Rossur: in former times it had an Haven of some good receipt, but now choaked

Isles: with ſand. The other places of moſt note are 3 Aberfraw, a ſmall village now, but heretofore the Royall ſeat of the Kings of Wales: and 4ly. Holy-head, ſeated on an head-land or Promontory thruſting into the Sea, made holy (or thought ſo at leaſt) by the religious retirement of Saint Kuby, or Kibius, one of the Diſciples of St. Hilarie of Poictiers; from whence by the Welchmen called Caer-Cuby: of moſt note for the ordinary paſſage betwixt Wales and Ireland. Anciently this Iland was the ſeat of the Druides, and brought with no ſmall difficulty under the power of the Romans by Suetonius Paulinus: the People fighting in other parts of Britain for their liberty only; but here pro Aris & focis too, for their Religion, Liberty, and their Gods to boot. Being deſerted by the Romans with the reſt of Britain, it remained in the poſſeſſion of its own natural Princes, till the fatal period of that State; when added to the Crown of England by the puiſſance of King Edward the firſt, by whom made one of the ſhires of Wales, as it ſtill continues.

Not far from Angleſey, ſome what inclining to the South, is the Iſle of Bardſey, by Ptolomie called Edri, by Plinie Adros, by the Welch Enlhy, extending towards the Eaſt with a rockie Promontory, but rich and fruitfull towards the Weſt: the retiring place of many godly and devout Hermits in the former times. Southwards from hence, and over againſt St. Davids, are two other Ilands, the one called Selame, plentifull of wild honey; the other named by the Welch Lymen; by the Engliſh, Ramſey; thought to be the Limni of Ptolomie, the Silimnum of Plinie, but not elſe remarkeable.

VI THE ILANDS OF THE SEVERN SEA are four in number; of no great note, but I muſt take them in my paſſage to the Iſles of Silly. Of thoſe the firſt is Flat-Holm; from the flat and levell: the 2d Stepholm, from the ſteep and craggie diſpoſition of it: both by the Welch called Echni, and both ſituate over againſt the County of Somerſet. More towards the opening of the Channel, lieth the Iſle of 3 Chaldey, called by the Welchmen Inis Pir, of as ſmall note as the other: and at the very mouth thereof the Iſle of 4 Lundey, over againſt Devonſhire, the principall Iland of this Sea: extending two miles every way; of excellent paſturage, well ſtored with Conies, and great plenty of Pigeons. Situate a good diſtance from any part of the land, in the middeſt of the Salt and Brackiſh Ocean, and yet yieldeth many Springs of Freſh-Water for the uſe of the people, inhabiting for the moſt part in a Town of the ſame name with the Iland. A place of very great ſtrength and ſafety; begirt about with dangerous unapproachable Rocks; and having but one way of acceſs into it, and that ſo narrow that two men cannot go a breſt.

VII The Iſles of SILLY, in number 145, are ſituate over againſt the moſt Weſtern Promontorie of Cornwall, from which diſtant 24 miles; and lie round together in the manner of a ring or Circle. Diſcovered firſt by the Silures, a Phœnician Colonie in Spain, oppoſite againſt which they lie; thence called Silures by Solinus; much traded and reſorted to by the ſaid Phœnicians from the Iſle of Gades; invited thereunto by the unexhauſtible Mines of Tinne which they found amongſt them. A Trade ſo great and gainfull to them, that they held it a great point of State, κρύπτειν ἅπασι τὸν πόρον, to keep it as a ſecret from all the World, as we find in Strabo, who addes the ſtory of a Carthaginian or Phœnician Merchant, incountred in his voyage hither by ſome Roman Veſſels; and ſplitting his ſhip on the next ſhore (where he knew the Romans would not follow him) rather than let them know to what place he was bound; Rewarded for his honeſt care, and recompenced for the loſs of his ſhip and goods, out of the publick Treaſurie. From this abundance of Tinne, the Gracians when they came to know them called them, Caſſiterides: (Caſſiteros in that language ſignifying Tynne) accordingly Herodotus ὑπὲρ τούτων τῶν νήσων τῶν Κασσιτερίδων ἐούσας ἐν τῷ βαρβάρῳ ἡμεῖς φοιτᾶ, affirming that he knew not thoſe Ilands called Caſſiterides, from whence Tynne was brought. The richneſs of this Commodity, the pleaſures of the place, and the Weſtern Situation of them, make many of the Grecians call them the Heſperides; miſtaking them for the Fortunate Ilands. By Solinus they are called Silures. as before is ſaid, Sigdeles in the corrupt Copies of Antoninus; inſula Silline, by Severus Sulpitius, from whence we have the name of the Iſles of Silly. The Flemings, I know not why, call them the Sorlings. All of them very fruitfull in Corn and Herbage. beſides the treaſures hid within: well ſtored with Conies, Cranes, Swans, and moſt ſorts of Wild Fowl. Ten of them more eſteemed than the reſt are called by the names of 1 Armath, 2 Agnes, 3 Sampſon, 4 Silly, 5 Breſar, 6 Ruſco, 7 S. Helens, 8 Arthur, 9 S. Maurice, and 10 St. Maries: Of which the moſt famous in the accompt of former times was that of Silly, as giving name unto the reſt; but in the preſent eſtimate St. Maries is accompted the chief of all: 8 miles in compaſs, fruitfull of all neceſſaries, and fortified with a very ſtrong Caſtle built by Queen Elizabeth, well manned and Garriſoned for defence of a large and goodly Harbour made amongſt theſe Ilands, capable of the greateſt Navies.

Theſe Ilands firſt diſcovered by Himilco a Carthaginian, ſent by that State to ſearch into the Weſt Coaſts of Europe, became of great fame afterwards both in Greece and Italy; by reaſon of the Mines of Tynne ſpoken of before. So beneficiall to the Romans, that they uſed to ſend hither their condemned Priſoners to work in the Mines; as the beſt ſervice to be done by their forfeited lives. And hither, amongſt others, Inſtantius, a fierce Priſcilli- cillianist, for his factious and seditious cariage, was sent by Maximus; ad Silvanam insulam ultra Britanniam deportatus, as Sulpitius hath it. After the Romans had forsaken their hold in Britain, they returned again into the power and possession of the Natives; from whom subdued, and added unto the English Crown by Athelstan the eighth King of England; now ordered for Civill matters as a part of Cornwall; for military, by their own Captain, subordinate to the Lord Lieutenant of that Countie; and for the Tin-trade, by the Lord Warden and Court of Stanneries. An Officer and Court erected for the benefit and regulating of the Tinners of Cornwall, who by reason of their employment in these Mines have many privileges and exemptions more than other Subjects, but of late limited and restrained by Act of Parliament. Wight, & Thanet.

VIII. The Isle of WIGHT lieth over against Hampshire, from which it seemeth to have been divided; the passage betwixt it and Hurst-Castle on the opposite shore being very narrow; and the name of it intimating some such division. For by the Britans it was antiently called Guith, which signifieth a breach or separation, from whence the English have their Wight, the turning of Gu. to W. being familiar with the Saxons, and all other Dutch people: and from the same Root probably the Romans had the name of Vectis; Vecht, Wight, and Guith, being words of such neer resemblance, that we need not travell further for an Etymologie. The Iland of an Ovall form, 20 miles in length, and 12 miles broad about the middest, from thence growing narrower towards each end, to the North and South. Naturally fenced about on all sides, on the South especially, where it looks towards France, on which side inaccessible by reason of the steep and craggie Rocks, the whole length thereof; and not much less safe on the North-west, where the remainder of the Rocks (which they call the Shingles, and the Needles) not worn away either at or since the first separation from the other shore, make the passage dangerous, except to single ships, and those not unacquainted with the course of the Channell: Towards the North-East more flat and levell, and therefore fortified with the two Castles of the Cowes and Sandham. There is also the Castle of Yarmouth in the West parts of the Iland, and that of Garesbrook in the middest (but more towards the North) in which last there is said to be Armour for 5000 men; and in each Village (of which here are 33, besides many Market Towns) a peece of Ordnance. Yet do not all these Arms and Castles adde so much to the strength of it, as the naturall courage of the People, warlike and stout, and trained unto the postures of Warre from their very Childhood.

The Soil hereof abundantly answereth the pains of the Husbandman, so plentifull of Corn, and all the fruits of a good pasturage, that they have not only enough for themselves, but furnish the markets of Southampton and Portsmouth, (but the last especially) with the greatest part of the Wheat, Flesh, Cheese, and Butter which is spent amongst them. Insomuch as the Soldiers of Portsmouth presuming on the strength of the Town have been used to say, That if they had the Isle of WIGHT to their friend, and the Seas open, they cared not for all the World besides. Their Sheep here of so fine a fleece, that the Wooll hereof hath the second place of esteem next to that of Lemster (in the Countie of Hereford) and precedencie of that of Cotswald.

Their chief Towns, 1 Yarmouth, on the North-west of the Iland, seated on a convenient Haven, which is said to have some resemblance to that of Rochell, and that Haven defended with a Castle. 2 Brading, another Market-Town. 3 Newton, an antient Burrough, and privileged with sending Burgesses to the English Parliament. 4 Guersbrook, a large Town, and neighboured with an Antient Castle. 5 Newport, now the chief of all the Isle, called in times past Medina, afterwards Novus Burgus de Medena, at last Newport; Seated upon an Arm of the Sea, capable of Ships of lesser burden to the very key; and by that means populous, well traded, and inhabited by a civill and wealthy People.

The Iland first subdued to the Romans by the valour of Vespasian, (afterwards Emperour of Rome) in the time of Claudius. Extorted from the Britans by Cerdick, King of the West-Saxons, and by him given to Stuffa and Whitgar, two of that Nation, who had almost rooted out the old Inhabitants. It was the last Countrey of the Saxons which received the Gospell, and then upon compulsion too; forced to it by the power as well as the perswasion of Cedwalla, the West-Saxon King. Took from the English in the time of the Norman Conquerour, by William Fitz-Osborn Earl of Hereford, who thereupon was made the first Lord thereof. From whose Family, by the gift of Henry the second, it passed to that of Redvars, or Rivers, (de Ripariis) then Earles of Devonshire: and on the failing of that House returned to the Crown in the reign of Edward the first. Never so much ennobled as by Henry the sixth, who bearing a great affection to Henry Beauchamp Earl of Warwick, in the 23 of his reign crowned him King of Wight, Anno 1445. Which title ended with his life about two yeers after.

IX. THANET, is a little Iland in the North-East of Kent, not far from Sandwich, environed on three parts with the Sea; into which it shooteth with a large Promontorie called the North-Fore-land; the Cantium of the antient Writers: & towards the West

ſevered from the Main-land of Kent by the River Stoure, which is here called Yenlade. Called by Solinus, Athanatos, in ſome Copies Thanatos, from whence the Saxons had their Thanet. Famous, as in other things, ſo in theſe particulars, that it was the place which the Saxons landed at when they firſt came into Britain; the firſt Liveries and Seizen, which they had of the whole Kingdom, conferred upon them by the improvident bountie of Vortiger, to whoſe aid called in; and the landing place of Auguſtine the Monk, when he brought the Goſpell to the Saxons. The whole about 8 miles in length, and four in bredth, was reckoned to contein in thoſe times 600 Families; now very populous for the bigneſs, and plentifull of all commodities neceſſary, but of corn eſpecially. The People generally are a kind of Amphibii, able to get their livings both by Sea and Land; well skilled, as well in ſteering of a ſhip at Sea, as in holding the Plough upon Land; and in both induſtrious. Of moſt note in it, 1 Stonar, a Port-Town, the uſuall landing place of the Saxons; more memorable for the Sepulchre of Vortimer, King of the Britans, who having vanquiſhed the Saxons in many battels, and finally driven them out of the Iland, deſired to be here interred: on a conceit that his dead Corps would fright them from Landing any more upon theſe Coaſts: And this perhaps he did in imitation of Scipio African, who having had a fortunate hand againſt thoſe of Carthage, gave order to have his Tomb placed towards Africk, to fright the Carthaginians from the Coaſts of Italie.

X. SUNDERLAND is an Iland onely at an high-water, when environed on all ſides with the Sea; at other times joyned unto the Land, or of an eaſie paſſage from the one to the other: pulled by ſome tempeſt, or by the working of the Sea from the reſt of the Land; whence the name of Sunderland. Situate in the North-Eaſt part of the Biſhoprick of Durham, over againſt the influx of the River Were. Rich in its inexhauſtible mines of Coal, and for that cauſe ſeldom without the company of forein Merchants: yet not to have been here remembred, but that it hath been thought worthy by our Soveraign Lord King Charles, the ſecond Monarch of Great Britain, to conferre the title of Earl to the two Noble Families of the Scropes and Spencers: the firſt in the 3d yeer of his reign, Anno 1627, the ſecond in the 18th, Anno 1642.

XI. THE HOLY ILAND lieth upon the Coaſt of Northumberland, not far from Barwick; ſtretched out in length from Eaſt to Weſt, with a narrow point unto the Land, from thence growing broader like a wedge: fortified with a ſtrong Caſtle, and of great ſafety, but more famous for what it hath been, than for what it is. In the dawning of Chriſtianity amongſt the Northumbers made a Biſhops See, by S. Aidanus, one of the firſt Apoſtles of that potent Nation. Selected for this dignitie by that Godly man, for the Solitude and privacie of it, which made it thought more fit and proper for Devotion. The name then Lindisfarn; but the Religious lives of ſo many pious Biſhops, Monks, and others of the Clergy as did there inhabit, gained it the name of Holy-Iland. The See continued there 353 years, that is to ſay, from the yeer 637, to 990, under 22 Biſhops, hence called Biſhops of Lindisfarn; then removed to Durham: the inſolencies of the Danes (who then raged terribly on thoſe coaſts) compelling them to abandon that religious ſolitude.

Thus have we taken a ſurvey of the Britiſh Ilands, and ſhewn by what meanes Ireland and all the leſſer Ilands became united either to the Crowns of England or Scotland; and thoſe two Kingdoms to each other joyned in the perſon of the ſame King, and the participation of his favours, though different ſtill in Lawes, and ſome forms of Government; as moſt of the Eſtates of Spain, at the preſent time. Vnited alſo in one name, the different Appellations of England and Scotland being ſwallowed up, or incorporated rather in that of GREAT BRITAIN, which it pleaſed King James to own for his Stile Imperiall. And for a memorie thereof, to cauſe a peece of Gold to be coyned of 20 s. (ſince raiſed to 22 s.) which he called the Vnitie, ſtamped on the one ſide with his picture, and this Inſcription, IACOBVS D. GR. MAGNÆ BRITANNIÆ, FR. ET HIBERNIÆ REX, and on the other ſide with his Arms, crowned with this Motto, FACIAM EOS IN GENIEM VNAM. All we have now to doe is to lay down the names of thoſe puiſſant Princes whom God hath raiſed to be

The Monarchs of Britain.

1602. 1 James, the ſixth of that name, King of the Scots, Sonne of Mary Qu. of Scots, Daughter of James the 5th, the Sonne of James the 4th, and of the Lady Margaret, eldeſt Daughter of Henry the 7th of England: which Margaret being after maried to Archembald Douglaſs Earl of Angus, had a Daughter named Margaret alſo (the only Child of her Parents) maried to Matthew Stewart Earl of Lennox, by whom ſhe was made the mother of Henry Lord Darnley, the Father of King Iames the ſixth, by the ſaid Mary Queen of Scots. So that King Iames deſcending from the eldeſt Daughter of Henry the 7th, both by Father and Mother, on the expiring of the Line of Henry the 8th, in the perſon of Q. Elizabeth of famous memorie, was the next heir to the Crown of of England, and was accordingly with all joyfull acclamations proclamed and acknowledged King in the Citie of London, March 24. Anno 1602. (according to the Accompt of the Church of England) A learned and Religious Prince, a true Defender of the Faith, a Nursing Father of the Church, and a lover of learning. He died at Theobalds, March 27. 1625. having reigned 23 yeers, and four dayes over.

1625. 2 Charles, second Sonne of King James, and Anne of Denmark, (his elder Brother Henry dying long before,) the 63d King in descent from Cerdick, King of the West-Saxons, the 45th King of England in descent from Egbert, the 24th from the Norman Conqueror; the 64th Monarch of the English, and the second Monarch of Britain. In the beginning of his reign, he maried the Princess Henrietta Maria, Daughter to Henry the 4th, and Sister to Lewis the 13th, French Kings; by whom blest with a Royall Issue of Sonnes and Daughters.

As for the Forces and Revenues of these British Monarchs, we cannot put the estimate of them in a better way, than by laying together that which hath been delivered of each severall part, out of which Items, the summa totalis of the whole both in power and treasure, will be easily gathered. For though these Monarchs never had any occasion to muster and unite the Forces of their severall Kingdoms upon any one Action: yet by considering what they have been able to doe divided; we may conclude of what they may doe, if need be, being now united. And so we are to do in marshalling the Arms of the British Monarchie, which are 1 Quarterly France and England, 2 Scotland, 3 Ireland, the fourth as the first. I shut up this discourse of the British Empire with those words of Scripture, (the Motto of another of King James his Coins) QVÆ DEVS CONJVNXIT NEMO SEPARET.

And so much for Britain.

The End of the firſt BOOK.

An Advertiſement to the Reader touching the Errata of this part, Conteining Italy, and the Alpes, with the Preface.

THe Reader is to be advertiſed, that the Work being committed to five ſeveral Printers for the more ſpeedy diſpatch thereof, it is thought fit that every houſe ſhall bear the burden of its own Errata. But I muſt firſt crave pardon for an Erratum of mine own, in making the Dukedom of Urbine a diſtinct Eſtate from that of the Papacie: whereas I have been informed from Signior Almerico the Florentine Agent, that it was not long ſince ſwallowed up in the Popedom, as the Dukedom of Ferrara had been before. Howſoever, being the diſcourſe thereof doth follow ſo immediatly upon that of the Popedom, the Reader may conſider it as an Appendant on it, though not among the Provinces or Members incorporate with it. But for the Errours of the Preſs, together with their ſeveral Corrections, they are theſe that follow.

An Advertisement to the Reader touching the Errata of this Part, Conteining France, Spain, and Britain.

IN the former part of the Errata, I charged my self with a Sin of Ignorance, and in this I am to charge my self with a Sin of Omission: which is, the leaving out of the Catalogue of the Daulphins of Vienna, before the incorporating of that Province with the Realm of France. For being absolute Princes, they deserve place here, as well as the Dukes of Anjou, or the Earls of Champaene, or any of the rest, under the degree and rank of Kings, whose successions are herein laid down: and here they follow in this Catalogue of

The Daulphins of Viennois.

A. Ch.

1110. 1 Guigne, surnamed the Fat, Earl of Albon and Grisivaudan, at the time of the dissolution of the Kingdom of Burgundie.

1135. 2 Guigne II. the first Proprietary and absolute Prince hereof, by the name of the Daulphin of Viennois.

1146. 3 Guigne III. Sonne of Guigne the 2d.

1151. 4 Beatrix, Daughter of Guigne the 3d. first married to Raymond the 3d, Earl of Tholouse; next, to Hugh the 3d, D. of Burgundie, and finally, to Guigne of S. Albons, of the Collaterall line of the former Earls: all in her right entituled Daulphins of Viennois.

1208. 5. Andrew, the Sonne of Beatrix, and of Guigne the 4th.

1242. 6 Guigne V. Sonne of Andrew.

1283. 7 Humbert, the first of that name, in the right of Anne his Wife, Daughter and Heir of Guigne the fift.

1305. 8 John, the Sonne of Anne and Humbert, exercised in continuall wars, as his Father was, with the Earls of Savoy.

1322. 9 Guigne VI. Sonne of John, taken Prisoner by Edward Earl of Savoy, Anno 1329. and at last slain, Anno 1324.

1342. 10 Humbert II. the second Sonne of John, and the Brother of Guigne the sixt, the last Daulphin of this Line: Of whose surrendrie, and the reasons which induced him to it, we have spoke at large, fol. 191. and thither I remit the Reader.

Of BELGIUM.

HAving purſued the fortunes of the Roman Empire through the 4 Weſtern Dioceſes or Diviſions of it, wholly ſubdued to the command of that conquering State; let us next look on thoſe Countries which lay further North, and either never felt the force of the Romane Armies, or were but conquered in part; or els were reckoned as the members of ſome great Province. Of this laſt ſort was all that tract which is now called Belgium, or the Netherlands, bounded on the Eaſt with Weſtphalen, Gulick, Cleve, and the land of Triers, Provinces of the Higher Germanie; on the Weſt with the main Ocean, which divides it from Britain; on the North with the River Ems, which parts it from Eaſt-Friſeland; on the South, with Picardie and Champagne, two French Provinces; upon the South-eaſt with the Dukedome of Lorrain.

By the Latins (eſpecially of theſe laſt times) it is called Belgium from the Belgæ the moſt potent people of all theſe parts; and ſometimes alſo Germania inferior, or the Lower Germanie, (in the ſame ſenſe as by the Engliſh it is called the Low Countries and the Netherlands) from their low ſituation, and the conformity which they have with the other Germans in Laws, Language, Cuſtomes and Manners. The more peculiar name is Flanders, which though but one of the 17 Provinces, hath yet given denomination to all the Netherlands, the people of which were once generally called by the name of Flemmings; and that either for the power of that Province, in regard of the others, or by reaſon of the great trade and traffick formerly driven at the Fairs or Marts of Bruges (a Town thereof) by the Merchants of all parts of Europe, or in reſpect that lying neerer then the reſt to France, Spain, Italy and England, that name was better known and took notice of. But this was when the whole Countrey was under the command of many Princes, of which the Earls of Flanders wtre eſteemed moſt potent. And though this name continued alſo after the incorporating of moſt of theſe Provinces in the houſe of Burgundie, at which time they were called the Eſtates of Flandrs: yet ſince the falling off of Holland, and the reſt of the United Provinces from the Kings of Spain, it hath loſt this honor; the name of Flanders being now reſtrained within narrower bounds.

And for the name of Belgium, though I find that name moſt currant amongſt the Latines of this age, yet I ſee little reaſon for it. For firſt, the Provinces of Flanders, Hainault, Namurce, Luxembourg, Limbourg, Brabant, Holland, Zeland, Utrecht and Gelderland with their Appendixes were never reckoned of as parts of old Belgium, or Gallia Belgica: And ſecondly, old Belgium, Flanders. or Gallia Belgica, contained many large estates which are not now within the reckoning of these 17. Provinces, that is to say, Alsatia, and a great part of the lower Palatinate, the Dukedomes of Lorraine, Cleve, and Juliers; the Bishopricks of Colen, Mentz, and Triers; and so much of France as containeth the Privince of Picardie, and part of Champaigne.

As for the Belgæ from whence we have the names of Belgium, and Gallia Belgica, they were originally Germans who driving out the Gauls, planted themselves within the Rhene: esteemed by Cæsar to be the valianteſt of the Gallick nations for these three reasons; First, they were the farthest from Provence where the Roman civilities, and more affable course of life, was embraced. Secondly, they dwelt on a Sea not then frequented by Merchants; and so wanted those allurements to effeminate which are in Countries of traffique. And thirdly, they bordered on the Germans, a warlike nation, with whom they were continually in armes. This people seeing the prosperous succesſe of Cæsars victories in Gaul joyned together in a common League, and muſtered an army of 269000. fighting men againſt him. But seeing they could not draw him out of his Fortresses they retired again, and that in such disorder, that three Legions, (for no more was Cæsars Army) put them to an infinite slaughter. After this Cæsar fighting againſt them severally, overcame them all, and made their Country, and the Countrey of the bordering Germans, whom he also vanquished, subject unto the Roman Empire. By Constantine the Great made part of the Dioceſe of Gaul, and by him cast into four Provinces, that is to say, 1. Belgica Prima, containing the Dukedome of Lorraine and the land of Triers, the Metropolis whereof was Triers; 2. Belgica Secunda, comprehending Artois, Picardie, and the Countrey of Chambray, with parts of Campagne and France Speciall; of which the Metropolis was Rhemes; 3. Germania Prima, comprehending Alsatia, part of the Palatinate and the Bishoprick of Mentz, the Metropolitan City of that Province; and 4. Germania Secunda, containing Cleveland, Brabant, Guelderland, Vtrecht, Holland, Zeland, Flanders, Hainalt, Namurce, Luxemburg, Limbourg, and the land of Colen; which last was honoured with the title of the Metropolitan. In the declining of the Empire, they were invaded and possessed by the French; under whom they made the Kingdome of Metz or Qstenrick united to the rest of France by Childerick the third, and made a Member of that Kingdome, of which they continued a especiall part, till the time of Lewis the godly, Son of Charles the Great. By whom, and Charles the Bald, and others of that line both in France and Germanie, they were parcelled into many petite estates, and principalities; so many of them became united in the house of Burgundie, passing under the accompt of Belgium; under which name and notion we do now consider it.

And taking it according to this name and notion, it is in compasse 1000. Italian, or 250. German miles: and is situated in the northern Temperate Zone, under the 7. 8. & 9. Climates, the longest day in the midst of the 7. Climate where it doth begin, being 16. hours; and the beginning of the 9. Climate increased to 16. hours three quarters, or near 17. hours. The Aire in these later dayes grown more wholesome then formerly; partly by the wonderfull increase of the Inhabitants, and partly by the incredible industry of the people, who by draining the Marishes, and converting the standing waters into running streams, have purged the aire of many grosse and unhealthy Vapours, which did thence usually arise in times foregoing.

The Countrey is very populous, containing welnigh three millions of souls, the men being for the most part well proportioned, great lovers of our English Beer, unmindfull both of good turns and injuries: of good wit for inventing, and of a most indefatigable industry for perfecting the rarest Manufactures. For unto them we are indebted for the making of Cloth, which we learnt of the Flemmings; as also for Arras-hangings, Dornix, Clocks, Watches, and the perfection of the Mariners Compasse. They restored Musick, and found out divers Musicall Instruments, being naturally good Musicians, and generally so given unto it, and so perfect in it, that heretofore (till the Art of Musick grew more common) there were not many great mens houses, which had them not to teach their Children. To them belongeth also the invention of Chariots, the laying on of colours with oyle, the working of Pictures in glasse, and the making of Worsteds, Saies, and Tapestries: the making of which and other Stuffes, being driven out of their Countrey by the Duke of Alva, they first taught the English. The women generally are of a good complexion, well proportioned, especially in the leg and foot; honourers of vertue, active, and familiar. Both within doors and without, they govern all; which considering the naturall desire of women to bear rule, maketh them too imperious and burdensome.

They use for the most part the Germane or Dutch Language, with a little difference in the Dialect. But in the Provinces adjoyning to France, that is to say, Luxembourg, Namurce, Artois, Hainalt, and some parts of Flanders, and Brabant they use the French; but speak the same very corruptly and imperfectly by reason of that mixture which it hath of the Dutch or Germen, yet so, that one may easily discern those people to be French originally; or some remainder of the old Gaules mastered by the French, but not rooted out: from their language or first originall called to this day by the name of Wallons, the Germans usually changing G into W, as Warre for Guerre, Warden for Guardian, and in the like case Wales for Galles. I know there is another Etymologie of the name of Wallons, some making them to be of the Burgundian race, who at their first passing over the Rhene enquired their way of the Countrey people in these words, Ou allons, i.e. Whither go we; which being oft repeated by them, occasioned them to be called Wallons: A trim invention doubtlesse, but of no solidity, nor to be further honoured with a confutation.

The Countrey in those parts which lye towards Germanie, especially on the South-east bordering upon Cleveland and Lorraine, is somewhat swelled with hils, and overshaded with woods; the re-liques of the great Forreſt of Ardenne, which once took up a great part thereof. But towards the Weſt and North, where it joyns to the Sea, it is plain and levell, full of flats and mariſhes, affording very litle corne, but abounding in paſturage, which yeeld a great increaſe of butter and cheeſe, good ſtore of beeves and horſes of more then ordinary bigneſſe. By reaſon of which low and levell ſituation, and the ill neighbourhood of a troubleſome and unruly ſea, it hath been formerly much ſubject to inundations, inſomuch as in the time of King Henry 2. Flanders was ſo overflown, that many thouſands of people, whoſe dwellings the ſea had devoured, came into England to beg new ſeats; and were by that King firſt placed in Yorkeſhire, and then removed to Pembrookeſhire. Since that, it hath in Zeland ſwallowed eight of the Iſlands, and in them 300. Towns and Villages: many of whoſe Churches and ſtrong buildings are at a dead low water to be ſeen. And as once Ovid ſaid of Helice, and Buris, cities of Achaia, ſo may we of theſe, Flanders.

Invenies ſub aquis, & adhuc oſtendere nautæ,
Inclinata ſolent cum mœnibus oppida verſis.

That is to ſay,

The waters hide them, and the Saylers ſhow
The ruined wals and ſteeples as they row.

The chief Commodities which they vent into other Countries, are Linnen, Scarlets, Worſted, Saies, Silks, Velvets, and the like rich Stuffes; together with great quantities of Armour, Ropes, Cables, Butter, Cheeſe, &c. Of which, excepting Cheeſe and Butter, there is nothing of the naturall growth of the Countrey: the reſt being Manufactures, which they make out of ſuch materials as they fetch out of forein Regions. But the Commodity which yeeldeth them moſt benefit is that of Fiſh, not caught upon their own coaſt neither, but either in the northern ſeas, or the coaſt of England: the very Herrings which they catch on the ſhores of England (to the no ſmall diſhonour of the Engliſh nation) bringing them a revenue (beſides what is purſed up by the Adventurers) of 440000. pounds per annum; and that of Codfiſh which they catch on the coaſts of Frizeland, amounting to 150000 l. ſterling yearly.

Captains of note and eminence it hath bred but few, the People living till of late in perpetuall peace. The chief of thoſe whoſe names have been tranſmitted to us, 1. Civilis, a Prince of the Batavians, for ſubtilty of wit compared to Hannibal and Sertorius, of which in his long war againſt the Romans in the time of Veſpaſian, he gave very good proof. In the middle times, 2. William Earl of Holland, elected Emperour of Germanie, 3. Baldwin Earl of Flanders, Emperour of Conſtantinople. 4. Philip the good, and 5. Charles the Warlike, Dukes of Burgundie, 6. Charles the fift, Emperour and King of Spain: and of late times the Princes of the houſe of Naſſaw and Orange, tranſplanted hither in the Regency of Maximilian, out of higher Germany. And to ſay truth, their Genius doth not lie ſo much, for land ſervice, as it doth for the ſeas; in which they have been very famous, and not leſſe fortunate. For of this nation was Oliver de Noort, the fourth that compaſſed the world; Jacob le Maire, the firſt diſcoverer of the Straight, or Fretum, which now beareth his name; beſides divers others. And generally the people are ſo expert in Navigation, (eſpecially thoſe bordering on or near the coaſts) that they ſeem born for and to the ſeas: many of which being born on ſhip-board and bred up at ſea, know no other Countrey; and brook the land as ill as a fiſh doth the dry ground. Which naturall inclination to it, and the neceſſity they have of employing themſelves that way, (the Countrey not being otherwiſe able to provide ſuſtenance for thoſe multitudes of men which it doth abound with) hath ſo exceedingly increaſed their ſhipping, that it is thought that they are maſters of more veſſels of all ſorts, taking one with another, then almoſt all the reſt of Europe.

Scholars of note it hath bred many. 1. Eraſmus, the great Reſtorer of learning in theſe parts of the World. 2. Juſtus Lipſius, as eminent a reviver of the Latine Elegancies. 3. Joſeph Scaliger, the ſon of Julius, ὁ τῶν πανταχοῦ πεπαιδευμένων, a man not to be followed in all parts of learning; but of equall arrogance. 4. Rodolphus Agricola. 5. Levinus Lemnius. 6. 7. Janus Douza, the Father and the Son. 8. Abraham Ortelius, and 9. Gerard Mercator, the Geographers. 10. Geo. Caſſander, 11. Dr. James Harmin, 12. Gerard Voſſius, eminent Divines, and 13. Hugo Grotius, of as great parts (but ſeaſoned with more modeſty and moderation) as the famous Scaliger. 14. Janſenius, and 15. Pamelius two right learned men, but of the Pontifician party.

The Chriſtian Religion was planted in ſeverall Provinces, by ſeverall men: in Holland, Zealand, and Friſeland, by Willibrode an Engliſhman, the firſt Biſhop of Vtrecht; whence by degrees it gained on the reſt of the Countrey: theſe being the firſt people of the Frankes or Germans converted totally to the Goſpell. In tract of time it fell from the primitive purity, participating of the Errours and Corruptions of the Church of Rome; from which when they deſired to reclaim themſelves, they were therein oppoſed by the King of Spain and his Miniſters. Hence the beginning of the troubles; enlarged afterwards on pretence of civill rights, invaded and infringed by the Spaniard, affecting a more abſolute Dominion over them, then their Laws admitted. At this time as the country doth ſtand divided betwixt the States & the Spaniard; ſo ſtands it with Religion alſo: the Spaniard permitting only the Religion of the Church of Rome, within the Provinces & Eſtates under his command; and the States General indulging the free uſe of all Religions (even the very Jewes) but countenancing only that of the Reformed Churches, according to the Platform laid down by Calvin.

Flanders. Chief Foreſts of this Countrey are 1. that of Ardenne, which in the time of Cæſar extended from the banks of the Rhene as far as Tournay one way, and Champagne another way; and was in compaſſe 500. miles, in the leaſt accompt. At this time, though the greateſt of all Gaule Belgick it reacheth but from Leige to Theonville, 20. leagues in length: and yet not all that Woodlands neither, though within the Vierge of the Foreſt; there being much tillage and many Villages in that tract of ground; the principall of which is the town of S. Hubert, ſituate almoſt in the midſt of it. 2. Niepe, and 3. Numen, in the Earldome of Flanders: the firſt extending to the banks of the River Lis, the other coming up cloſe to Ypris. 4. Pondsberg in the Confines of Hainalt and Flanders, near unto Mount Gerrard: all of them parts of this great Foreſt of Ardenne, which once overſhadowed all this Countrey. 5. Normault in Hainalt, in which is much Char-coal made; ſuppoſed for that reaſon to be a part of that Foreſt, which the old French called La Charbonniere. 6. Echterwald in Guelderland near Arnhem, &c.

The chief Rivers are 1. Rhene, which ariſeth out of two ſprings in the Lepontian Alpes amongſt the Griſons, united into one ſtream near Clur: thence paſſing by the Cities of Conſtance, Baſil, Spire, Wormes, Mentz, and Colen, is again divided about the confines of Guelderland into four branches or channels. Of which the firſt is called the Wael, which running through Guelderland by Nimmegen, and Bomel, loſeth it ſelf in the Maes: the ſecond, which keeps the name of the Rhene, paſſeth by Arnhem, from thence in a contracted channell to Vtrecht, and ſo through Holland unto Leiden: the third called the Lecle, taketh his courſe through the Provinces of Vtrecht and Holland, and ſo into the ſea betwixt Dort and Roterdam; and the fourth called the Yſel which paſſing by the towns of Zutphen and Deventer, betwixt Guelderland, and Over-yſſel, emptieth it ſelf into the Ocean near Amſterdam. And of theſe branches I have given the exacter reckoning, partly becauſe the courſe of that famous River is otherwiſe not eaſie to be obſerved; and partly becauſe the knowledge of a great part of theſe Provinces dependeth on the knowledge of the courſe of this River. A River of ſuch reputation in the ancient times, that into it the old Belgæ uſed to caſt the children which they ſuſpected to be Illegitimate: for were they born of lawfull bed, they floated on the waters; if of an unlawfull, they ſank immediately. Whereunto Claudian alluding ſaith, naſcentes explorat gurgite Rhenus. But the great ſearcher of Antiquities, Verſtegan is of opinion, that they thereby only inured their children to hardneſſe, and made tryall of their ſtrength, adultery being rarely found among them, and ſo theſe kindes of experiments needleſſe. 2. Moſa, or the Maes, or the Meuſe, which riſing in France not far from the ſprings of the Seine and the Marne paſſeth through Loraine, Luxemburg, Namur; ſtom thence by Ruremond, and Venlo: where turning toward the Weſt, it taketh in a part of the Rhene, and falleth into the ſea not far from Bril, with ſo great a violence, that the waters of it for a long ſpace do continue freſh. 3. Ems, in Latine called Amiſus, dividing the two Friſelands. 4. Scaldis, which ariſing in Picardie, and running through Artois and between Hainalt and Brabant, meeteth with the ſea a little above Antwerpe: and 5. Lis or Ley, which runneth quite through Flanders. Beſides which Rivers and others of inferiour note (which we ſhall meet withall in their proper places) here are great ſtore of lakes, pools, and mariſhes, which do both fortifie the Countrey, and provide it of fiſh: beſides many navigable channels, made by the hand of man from one River to another for the convenience of paſſage, and the more eaſie tranſport of their commodities.

The ſhore of this countrey hath been much worn out by the Sea, eſpecially that of the Iſlands of Zeland, and ſuch as lye ſcattered about Holland, where they are defended with banks and ramparts, painfully made, and chargeably maintained. Theſe banks are about ten ells in height and twenty five in breadth at the bottom: They are made of the hardeſt clay that may be gotten; in the inſide ſtuffed with wood and ſtone, on the outſide, covered with mats ſtrong and thick made.

The former inhabitants were divers, as ſhall be ſhewed particularly in their proper dwellings. They are at this preſent divided into ſeventeen Provinces; beſides the two great Biſhopricks of Leige and Cambray, which being alwaies under the protection of the Belgicke Princes, partakers of their fortunes either good or ill, and lying intermixt among their eſtates, ſhall have their turn in the deſcription of theſe Countries, divided generally

- 2 Biſhopricks: 1 Leige or Luick. 2 Cambray.
- 4 Dukedomes: 1 Limburg. 2 Luxenburg. 3 Gelderland. 4 Brabant.
- 1 Marquiſate; viz. of the holy Empire.
- 7 Earldomes: 1 Flanders. 2 Artoys. 3 Hainault. 4 Namur. 5 Zutphen. 6 Holland. 7 Zeland.
- 5 Baronies: 1 Weſt-Friſeland. 2 Utretcht. 3 Over-yſſell. 4 Machlin. 5 Groyning.

Of theſe nineteen, two only did acknowledge the Soveraignty of the Kings of France, viz. Flanders and Artoys: the Earls whereof were Homagers unto that Crown; but ſeldome did deſcend ſo low as to do their Homage, quitted at laſt to Philip the ſecond King of Spain and his Succeſſours, by

K. Henry

K. Henry the ſecond of France, in the treaty at Cambray, Anno 1558. The reſt were held originally of the German Empire, and by Maximilian Emperour of Germanie, and Regent of thoſe Countries for his ſon Philip, (who had a purpoſe to ſubject them to the Empire again) were made the tenth Circle of the Empire, called the Circle of Burgundie. But neither ſince, nor before that time, would the Princes of the houſe of Burgundie acknowledge any ſuch ſubjection, but governed theſe Eſtates as abſolute Princes, without relation to the Empire, or ſubordination to the Emperor, or Imperiall Officers: never appearing at the Diets, nor contributing to any Taxes there impoſed, nor holding themſelves bound by any Conſtitutions which were made therein. So that theſe ſeverall Relations being out of uſe, we muſt behold it at this time as it ſtands divided betwixt the Spaniard and the States: beginning firſt with thoſe Provinces which belong to the Spaniard; the true Proprietary of the whole; and therein firſt with Flanders as of moſt eſteem. Flanders.

1. FLANDERS, and 2. ARTOIS.

THeſe two I have thought fit to joyn together, becauſe at firſt but one Eſtate; and though divided for a time, yet after five or ſix deſcents were again united, and have ſo continued ever ſince.

1. FLANDERS ſo called (as ſome ſay) a Flando, becauſe it lyeth open to the winds, is bound on the Eaſt with Hainalt and Brabant; on the Weſt with the Engliſh or German Ocean, on the North with the Seas of Zealand, and a branch of the Scheld; and on the South with part of Picardie in France, interpoſing betwixt Calice and Graveling.

The Soyle indifferently fruitfull in corn and paſtures; the aire healthfull, temperate and pleaſant. The whole Countrey not in length above 90. miles, and in breadth but ſixty: and yet containing in that compaſſe above thirty Cities, (for they reckon all Cities which be walled) 1154. Villages; which ſtand ſo thick, (as needs they muſt in ſo narrow a compaſſe) that the Spaniards at their firſt comming in with King Philip the ſecond, took the whole Province for one Town. Divided commonly into Imperialem, 2. Gallicam, and 3. Teutonicam: or Flanders Imperiall, 2. Flanders Gallicant, and 3. Flanders Flammengant.

1. FLANDERS FLAMMENGANT, which is the greateſt of the three, is bounded on the Eaſt with Imperiall Flanders, and the River Scheld; on the weſt with the Engliſh Ocean; on the North with the ſeas of Zealand; and on the South with Artois and Flanders Gallicant: The chief Towns of it, 1. Gaunt, in Latine called Gandavum, ſeven miles in compaſſe; but taking in the Suburbs which are great and large, the whole circuit is ten miles at leaſt. One of the greateſt Cities of Europe for extent of ground: but not ſo populous as many of a leſſe capacity; there being made waſte ground even within the wals. Commodiouſly ſeated on the banks of the Scheld and the Ley, both which run thorow it, and make in it 26. Ilands, joyned together with 98. Bridges: and had not her many ſeditions ruinated her beauties, ſhe might have been the Queen of Europe. In this Town were born John Duke of Lancaſter, commonly called John of Gaunt, and Charles the fift Emperor and King of Spain: which laſt to reſtrain the People from their old ſeditions, which had been very troubleſome to his predeceſſors (the Gauntois taking on them many times to rule and over-rule their Princes) built a ſtrong Citadell in the place where ſtood the Abbie of S. Bavons. For Churches, Monaſteries, and other places of devotion there were numbred in it 55, all of them anſwerable to the grandeur and renown of the City, the private buildings being alſo very ſtately, if not majeſticall. But now it is much fallen from its former glories, the often ſeditions of this people drawing upon themſelves the vengeance of their angred Prince; and their wealth much empaired by the long wars and the diverſion of their trading by the Hollanders, who command the ſeas. 2. Bruges or Brug, more within the land; a town that hath neither Port nor River, yet formerly of ſuch wealth, and the people in thoſe times ſo willing to ſhew it, that Queen Joan the wife of Philip the fair, having been there and marked the pomp of the women, complained, that She was not Queen alone. The town of four miles circuit within the wals, wonderfully well peopled, the buildings fair and ſumptuous, (amongſt which 60. Churches and Religious houſes) the ſtreets large and ſtreight, and a ſpacious market-place, from which the ſix principall ſtreets of the City do paſſe directly on to as many Gates, which is very pleaſant to behold. And though the Town hath neither Port nor River as before was ſaid, yet was it anciently of ſo great trading, that it was accounted one of the four Mart-towns of Chriſtendome, flouriſhing chiefly by the benefit of the Engliſh Cloth, and ſenſibly decaying when the Engliſh traffick was removed hence to Antwerpe. It was walled by Earl Baldwin, Anno 890. is diſtant three leagues from the ſea: and ſeated on a fair and deep channell made by art, and filled with the waters of all the adjoyning Fountains and Rivulets: which artificiall channels are in theſe Countries very frequent, to the great enriching of the whole State. 3. Ypres a town ſeated very ſtrongly, and almoſt impregnable, on a ſmall river ſo named, a reaſonable rich Town, and well built, though moſt of the houſes be of timber: very well ſerved with water, conveyed into every houſe almoſt in leaden pipes; of which there is ſo great a number, that the foundations of it ſeem to be laid in lead. 4. Bourbourg, a fine ſtrong town, but little; pertaining to the French King in the rights of the Houſe of Burbon. 5. Comines, on the River Lis or Ley, beautified with a ſtrong caſtle and an excellent Library, but more in being the birthplace of Philip de Comines that notable States-man and Hiſtorian. 6. Courtray on the ſame River of Ley, one of the ancienteſt towns in Flanders, yet ſtill continueth well built; and of very great ſtrength both by art and nature, famous for a great overthrow given the French, Anno 1301. for which the town was called of long time the Sepulchre of

Flanders. the Frenchmen. 7. Winocksberg ſo called of a goodly Abby built upon an hill in the honour of S Winock an Engliſh man of an holy life: ſacked by the French, Anno 1538. but ſince reedified and made more beautifull then it was before. 8. Graveling on the ſea ſide, which ſince the taking of Calice by the French, hath been made the ſtrongeſt town in the Low-countries. 9. Oudenard ſeated on the Scheld, a fair ſtrong town, and of very great traffique, eſpecially for Tapeſtry, and the fineſt Linnens, which are herein made: the birth-place of Margaret, Dutcheſſe of Parma, and Mother to Alexander, Prince of Parma that renowned ſouldier.

The principall Ports of Flanders being four in number, are all of them ſeated in this part, viz. 1. Dunkerke, a ſmall but ſafe Port belonging to the French King (as doth Graveling alſo) in the right of the houſe of Vendoſme, both taken lately by the French, and ſo returned ex poſt liminio to the proper owner. Moſt memorable in theſe dayes, in that the people of it in the times of war, ſo infeſted the ſeas. 2. Scluſe, ſeated at the mouth of the Channell of Bruges; beautified with a very fair Haven, able to contain 500 good Ships, and is now ſubject to the States; with whoſe ſafety it could not well ſtand to let the Spaniards enjoy any ſafe and large harbour ſo near unto them. Over againſt it lyeth the Iſle of Caſſandt, (famous for the birth of George Caſſander, a moderate and learned Papiſt:) Formerly as big again as it is at the preſent, having then a fair town in it, and many rich villages; of which there is but one remaining, (of the ſame name with the Iland) the reſt all ſwallowed by the ſea. 3. Newport, a pretty Town, with a very ſtrong Caſtle, built on a well frequented Haven, but not very ſafe, and therefore not much uſed by the men of war, nor made rich by Piracies, as Dunkerke. Near to this town, Anno 1603. was fought the field-battell betwixt Arch-duke Albert, and the States; the victory next under God, being gotten for the States by the valour of the Engliſh, and the excellent conduct of the Veres. 4. Oſtend, not walled till the Low-countrey wars, and then but with a mud-wall only, and that not finiſhed till the Arch-duke ſate down before it; inſomuch as the Arch-dutcheſſe Iſabell is ſaid to have ſworn that ſhe would not ſhift her ſmock till the town were taken: who had ſhe kept that raſh oath, had been very lowſie, the town (then garriſoned with Engliſh) holding out againſt the ſaid Arch-duke a ſiege of three years and as many moneths.

2. IMPERIALL FLANDERS, ſo called, becauſe it was long under the obedience of the Emperors, is ſevered from Brabant by the River Dender, and from the Gallick Flanders, by the River Scheld about Oudenard. It was ſometimes called Bracant, of a Caſtle of that name deſtroyed by Baldwin le Debonaire Earl of Flanders: and is now called the County of Aloſt, from the chief town thereof ſo named; the juriſdiction whereof containing 170 Villages, extendeth as far as to the wals of Gaunt, and the Gates of Oudenard. The town ſtrong and indifferently fair, ſituate on the River Dender, moſt famous in theſe times for a Fair of Hops which is kept there yearly. 2. Hulſt, a walled town, and the chief of the four towns in the County of Waes; the other three being 3. Axele, 4. Mouchont, 5. Aſſeneds, of which little memorable; but that they were all taken from the Empire by the ſaid Baldwin le Debonaire in the time of the Emperour Henry the fourth. 6. Dendremond, ſituate at the mouth of the Dender where it entreth into the Scheld; a ſtrong town both by Art and Nature, and much enriched by making Fuſtians, and a weekly market of Flax. A diſtinct Signeurie of it ſelf, with many rich villages belonging to it, incorporated into the Earldome of Flanders by the marriage of Earl Lewis de Malaine with the Lady Margaret of Brabant, to which houſe it formerly appertained. 7. Rupelmond, on the mouth of the River Rupel, where it falleth into the Scheld, famous in former times for an ancient Caſtle in which were kept the Muniments and Records of the Earls of Flanders: more in late times, for being the birth-place of Mercator, that renowned Coſmographer. 8. Mont Gerhard, called by the French Grandmont, a fine and pleaſant town ſeated on the Dender. Which three laſt towns, together with Bornhen a fair large village, having ſome juriſdiction on the parts adjoyning, made up that eſtate, which was called the Propro, or Donaire of Flanders, becauſe not holden of the Empire; or the Kings of France, but in the ſoveraignty alone of the Earls hereof.

3. FLANDERS GALLICANT, ſo called from the French language there ſpoken, lyeth on the ſouth of Flanders Flammengant, having Hainault on the Eaſt, Artois on the Weſt, and the Country of Cambray on the South. The chief towns of it, are 1. Liſtle, in Latine, Inſula, ſo called from its Iland-like ſituation, amongſt ponds, pools, and mariſhes, dryed up and made firm land by Earl Baldwin le Barbum, who built the town Anno 1007. which afterwards was walled by Baldwin de Liſle, his ſon, (born in this town, and hence ſo named) Anno 1066. The town made rich by manufactures, and reſort of Merchants; accompted the beſt town of traffick next Amſterdam, and Antwerp, in all the Netherlands. Not far from which are to be ſeen the ruines of an ancient Caſtle called Brug, the Seat or Manour houſe of the ancient Forreſters, who had the government of this Countrey for the Kings of France. 2. Doway (Duacum in Latine) a fair and ſtrong town ſeated on the Scharpe, having many fountains, good buildings, and a great number of Churches; made an Univerſity by King Philip the ſecond of Spain, who built therein a Seminary or Colledge for Engliſh Fugitives. 3. Orchies, a pleaſant town and well traded for the making of Serges, which with the other two make up the three Eſtates of this part of Flanders. 4. Armentiers, an unwalled town, but of very great trading; here being yearly 25000. pieces of Cloth ſent hence to Italie, and thence to Conſtantinople. 5. Tournay, (or Dornick, as the Dutch call it) a great, rich, mighty, and ſtrong town, ſeated on the Scheld, well built and full of ſtately and magnificent Churches and religious Houſes; and anciently honoured with a See Epiſcopall. A town of great importance and much contended for betwixt the Flemmings and the French; but finally fell unto the French, as the more puiſſant Prince: taken from them by Henry the eighth of England, Anno 1513. to whom the Citizens paid 100000 Duckets for their preſent ranſome; reſtored by him unto the French, Artois.

Anno

Anno 1518. for the ſum of 600000. Crowns; and finally from them recovered by Charles the fift, who reſtored it to the body of Flanders from which it had been long diſmembred, but ſo that it is governed as a State apart, and is called the Signeury of Tourneſis, having a goodly juriſdiction over the Countrey round about it. 6. S. Amand, in the Countrey of Tourneſis, pleaſantly ſeated on the Scharpe; in which is one of the richeſt Abbies in all Flanders; the Abbat thereof having the temporall and ſpirituall juriſdiction over it, and the parts about it. And ſo much for the Chorographie of the Earldome of Flanders; inhabited by the Nervi, and Morini, in the time of Cæſar.

11. ARTOIS, is bounded on the Eaſt with Flanders Gallicant, and the Countrey of Cambray; on the South and Weſt with Picardie; on the North with Flanders Flammegant and the River Lis. The aire exceeding temperate, and the ſoyle ſo fruitfull that it ſerveth as a Granarie to a great part both of Flanders and Brabant.

On the Weſt part hereof towards France, lyeth the Earldome of S. Paul, ſo called from the chief town thereof, a goodly Signeurie, and of great juriſdiction and revenue: containing beſides many Villages, the good town of Berne, a walled town, and of great importance. The Earls hereof were of the noble family of the Earls of Luxembourg, the laſt of which was Lewis of Luxembourg, made Conſtable of France by K. Lewis the 11. With whom, as alſo with Edward the 4. of England, and Charles Duke of Burgundie, he plaid ſo many croſſe tricks, that having long deluded them all and kept them in a continuall jealouſie of one another, he was at laſt by Duke Charles taken and beheaded. After whoſe death, this goodly Signeurie fell to the houſe of Vendoſme in France, by the marriage of Francis Earl of Vendoſme with Mary the daughter of this Lewis: to whom it was adjudged by the power and favour of the French-Kings; the Heirs Males being made uncapable of ſucceſſion in it by the Attaindure and Confiſcation of the ſaid laſt Earl. By means whereof the houſe of Vendoſme were entituled to many fair Eſtates in Artois and Flanders, and much good lands in France which they were poſſeſſed of.

The Armes of theſe Earls were Argent, a Lyon Gules armed and Crowned Or, his tail forked of the ſecond.

As for the reſidue of Artois, the towns of moſt importance in it, are Arras, in Latine Attrebatum Civitas, the chief City of the Attrebates, the old inhabitants hereof in the time of Cæſar; and ſtill the chief City of this Province, a large, populous, and well fortified City, anciently honoured with a See Epiſcopall, and ſtocked with an induſtrious people; the firſt makers of the Cloth of Arras, which took name from hence. Divided into two diſtinct towns, both of them walled, and called by two ſeverall names: the leſſer called La Cite, ſubject to the Biſhop, beautified with a fair and ſtately Cathedrall Church, and a Library containing many excellent Manuſcripts, the leſſer called La Ville, ſubject to the Prince, having large ſtreets, and a rich Monaſtery of the yearly revenue of 20000. crowns. By Ptolemy it is called Regiacum, ſeated within a bow-ſhoot of the River Scharp: and heretofore the Metropolitan town of Flanders, till Artois was diſmembred from it; ſince which time the chief City of this Province, as before is ſaid. 2. S. Omer a fair town, and well peopled, ſeated upon the River Aa, ſome 8 Dutch miles from the Ocean, ſo called from S. Omer, or Audomarus, Biſhop of the Morini, who built a Monaſtery in this place, from which grew the town, the ſecond of eſteem and rank in all the countrey. Near to it is a goodly lake of freſh water, in which are many little Ilands affording good paſturage for Cattell: of which Lewis Guicciardine reporteth, that by faſtning a cord unto the buſhes which grow in them, a man may draw them which way he will; and that under them there are found great numbers of fiſhes, who bed themſelves there for ſhelter againſt the Weather. 3. Betune, a ſtrong town, and ſeated amongſt extellent paſtures, of which the people make great plenty of the beſt Cheeſe: which, with the territory hereof, fell to Guy of Dampierre Earl of Flanders in right of Maud his wife, daughter and heir of Daniel the Lord of this town. 4. Aire, on the Lys, a ſtrong town with a Caſtle of great antiquitie. 5. Bapaulme, a little, but well fortified town; and yet more ſtrong becauſe it cannot be beſieged for want of freſh water, which is not to be had within three leagues of it. 6. Renty, an unwalled town, but fenced with a very ſtrong Caſtle, beſieged by the French Anno 1554. but being overcome in a ſet-field by Charles the fift, they were fain to raiſe the ſiege and go home again. 7. Hedinfert, on the confluence of two little Rivulets, Blangis and Canche, a frontier town on the edge of France, one of the ſtrongeſt and moſt defenſible places of all the Netherlands, built by Charles the fift out of the ruines of old Heſdin, which having taken from the French, he commanded it to be razed as no longer ſerviceable, and raiſed this town inſtead thereof, ſomewhat near France. 8. Terwin, or Theroven, the Tervanna of Ptolemy, and Civitas Morinum of Antoninus, a frontire town, held for a long time by the French, by whom thought impregnable, till taken by King Henry the 8. Anno 1513. they changed their opinion. A ſiege not only memorable for the iſſue of it, but for two other matters of great moment: the one that the Emp. Maximilian came and ſerved in perſon under the colours of S. George, with the Engliſh croſſe upon his breaſt; the other, that the French intending to victuall the town had ſo great an overthrow, that had the Engliſh followed their fortune, they had opened a fair way to have made themſelves maſters of all France; the French King being ſo aſtonilhed on the newes hereof, that he prepared to flie into Britain. But the Engliſh more minded the ſpoyles and riches of Terwyn then the ſequell of an abſolute victory; Et fruì malùerunt victoriâ, quàm uti, as the Hiſtorian ſaid of Hannibal. It is now after many changes of fortunes in the hands of the French; and by ſome reckoned and accompted of as a part of Picardie. There are beſides theſe four walled towns more, that is to ſay, Lilliers, Pern, Lens, and La Baſſei, of which little memorable; and to the number of 854. Villages.

Theſe

Flanders and Artois.

These Countries of Flanders and Artois, were anciently part of the great Forrest of Ardenne, nothing but a continuall waste of Woods and Deserts, till the Conquest of it by the French: the Sea coasts being then unpeopled for fear of the Danes, who by their frequent Piracies did much vex those shores, and the inland countries meanly planted, for want of corn and other necessaries for the life of man. By Dagobert K. of France, anno 621. this wild country extending then as farre as the River Some, and comprehending besides Artois and Flanders, a good part of Picardie, was given unto one Lideric le Bucq, with the title of Forrester, to be holden under the Soveraignty of that Crown. In whose posterity it continued with the title of Forresters till the time of Baldwin the first, the son of Odoacer, the seventh of the Forresters, whose names occurre upon record, there being a long intermission of their names and memories, during the ravagements and depredations of the Danes and Normans. This Baldwin having first ravished, and afterwards married Judith, sister to Charls the Bald King of France and Emperour, was by him created Earl of Flanders, the Soveraignty thereof reserved as before it was; in whose issue it remained entire, till Philip the first Earl of that name, gave unto Philip Augustus K. of France, the country of Artois, with Boulognois, and Verumanduois, now parts of Picardie, in marriage with Isabel his Neece, daughter of Baldwin Earl of Hainalt. By Lewis the 8. son and successour of Philip Augustus, Artois was given in portion to his youngest son Robert, made the first Earl of Artois by K. Lewis the 9. anno 1234. And by the marriage of Lewis the first of Flanders, with Margaret the heir of Artois, and the Earldom of Burgundie, both those Estates were added unto this of Flanders, now made farre mightier then before. And yet before this great accession of estate, it was accounted the prime Earldom, as Millain was the prime Dukedom of Europe: these Earls being priviledged to write themselves Dei gratia, all others Dei clementia only; and Flanders being grown abroad to so great esteem that it was generally used for all the Netherlands. Finally, by the marriage of Margaret daughter of Lewis de Malain Earl of Flanders, to Philip the Hardie Duke of Burgundie, this great estate became united to that house, and afterwards was conveyed unto that of Austria, as shall be shewn hereafter in due time and place. In the mean season let us take a brief survey of

The Earls of FLANDERS and ARTOIS.

The Earls of FLANDERS.

864 1 Baldwin the first Earl of Flanders.
879 2 Baldwin II.
918 3 Arnulph, son of Baldwin the 2.
960 4 Baldwin III. son of Arnulph.

The Arms of Flanders were Or, a Lyon sable, langued and armed Gules. Those of Artois being Seme of Flower de Lyces Or, in a field Azure, a file of three Labels Gules, charged with as many Castles of the first.

HAINALT.

HAINALT is bounded on the East with Namur, on the West with Flanders, on the North with Brabant, on the South with Picardie, and Champagne in France. It was antiently called Sal-tus Carbonatius: by some writers of the middle times, the lower Picardie: and is supposed to have taken this new name from the River Hain, or Hania which passeth through it.

The length thereof is 60 miles, 48 the breadth, comprehending in that compasse 950 Villages, and 24 towns; in and amongst which there is reckoned one principate, 10 Earldoms, 12 Peerdoms, or Pairries, 22 Baronies, 26 Abbeys, one Lord Marshall, besides other Officers of the Prince, descending by inheritance to the Lords of this Province.

The air hereof is very good, and the soil fruitfull by reason the country is watered with so many Rivers, as the Scheld, the Sambre, the Dender, and severall lesser streams, besides divers lakes, marishes, ponds, and pools, which do much enrich it: the country abounding in most places with fresh Meddows and sweet Pastures, good fruits and profitable trees, but especially with great plenty of corn. Here are also in some parts of it notable Mines of iron and lead; and excellent quarries of the best stone, fit for all kind of buildings.

The principall of the Towns are 1. Monts, situate at the confluence of the Haine, and a little River called Trulle, which gives a good naturall strength unto it, fortified besides with a very strong wall, three large deep ditches, and an antient Castle. The Town, great, beautifull, and rich, adorned with sumptuous buildings both private and publick, and replenished with wealthy Merchants, and men of trade: the principall of all the Province erected into an Earldom by Charls the Great, and sometimes used for the stile of the Earls of Hainalt. In this town is the noble Nunnerie of S. Valdrude, once a Dutchesse of Lorrain, the Nuns whereof are to be Ladies and Gentlewomen of noble families, in the morning apparelled in white, like Nuns; in the afternoons according to their birth and qualities, who when they please may leave the Cloister and be marryed. The Abbesse hath both jurisdictions in the town and country about it; and antiently did put the Earls of Hainalt into possession of the state. Another Nunnerie like this (but not of such large Revenues) there is at 2 Maubuige on the Sambre, a good town of Merchandise. 3. Valenciennes seated on the Scheld, and a little River called Rouelle, which make not only in it many pleasant Isles, but passe almost under every mans house, to the great benefit and delight of the place and people. The site hereof so strong by nature, (besides the fortifications of Art) that on the one side it may be easily made unapproachable by water; and on the other sides so defended by hils, that it can hardly be besieged but by three Armies at once. A goodly, large and beautifull town, especially for publick buildings, the chief whereof are the Church of our Lady, built after the antient manner of Architecture, with sumptuous arches goodly Pillars of Marble and Porphyrie; the Earls Palace and the Town-hal, buildings of great magnificence, and excellent workmanship: the birth-place of Henry the 7. Emperour of Germanie, of Mary daughter of Charls the Warlike, and Froissart the great French Historian. Finally a town, which for the eminence thereof, is governed as a State apart by it self, having under the jurisdiction of it, 3 Towns and 132 Villages, which on occasions of appeal resort not to the Provinciall Councell at Mons, but the great Councell at Machlyn. 4. Chimay upon the River Blanche near a pleasant Forrest, which gives the title of a Prince to the eldest son of the Duke of Arschot, one of the principall Lords of Brabant, who have here a very goodly Palace. 5. Halle, seated on the Seine, which runs through it, a place of great credit amongst the Papists, by reason of an Image of the blessed Virgin, famed for many miracles. Of which, see Lipsius on that Subject. 6. Beauvais an old town, at a pillar whereof begin all the wayes leading into France, made of paved stones by Brunhault the wife of Sigebert King of Mets, or Austrasia, who with Fridegond the wife of Chilperick, and Katherine Medices the wife of Henry the 2. are said to be the three Furies of France. 7. Landrecie on the River Sambre, famous for the notable resistance which it made to Charls the 5, 1543. 8. Mariemburg, built by Marie Queen of Hungarie, Governesse here for the said Charls, anno 1524. to serve as a Bulwark against France, on which it frontireth. 9. Philippe Ville, built and well fortified for the same reason by King Philip the 2. 10. Bouchant, upon the Scheld, in the county of Ostrinand, which countie is the title of the first son of Hainalt, and by that name William the eldest son of Albert Earl of Hainalt and Holland,

Hainelt. was admitted Knight of the Garter by King Richard the 2. 11. Conde a good little town ſeated on the Scheld, the moitie whereof belonged heretofore to the houſe of Montpenſier in France; as 12. Anghien a town of great trade for tapeſtrie to the houſe of Vendoſme: from whence the Princes of Conde, and Dukes of Enghien do derive their titles. 13. Beaumont upon the knap of a goodly hill, whence it hath the name, belonging at the preſent to the Dukes of Arſchot, but antiently the partage of the ſecond ſon of the Earls of Hainalt. 14. Bins, or Binche, on a branch of the River Huin, one of the jointure-towns of the Counteſſes of Hainalt, much beautified and made a place of pleaſures by Marie Queen of Hungarie, to whom it was given by Charls the 5. (commonly called the Queens Paradiſe) but burnt and utterly deſtroyed by the French, anno 1554. 15. Ath, ſeated on both ſides of the Dender, a little, but a pleaſant and wealthie town; here being held the ſtaple of Linnen for all this country, the cloth here ſold amounting to 200000 crowns per annum.

As for the Hiſtory of Hainalt, the antient Inhabitants thereof were the Nervii, the moſt valiant people of the Gaules, dwelling within this part of the Forreſt of Ardenne; which in the beginning of the Kingdome of the French, gave the title of Earl to many great and puiſſant Princes. Growing too great, and truſting too much to that greatneſſe, they drew upon themſelves the jealouſies of thoſe mightier Princes, by whom at laſt Brunulph Earl of Ardenne was ſlain in battle, and his eſtate parcelled out amongſt his children: Alberic, ſurnamed the Orphelin, one of his younger ſons, being by Sigebert King of Mets or Auſtraſia, enfeoffed of this country, by the name and title of Earl of Hainalt, (Hannuvia the Latines call it.) Twice this Eſtate was added or united to that of Flanders. 1 In the perſon of Baldwin the 5. Earl of Flanders, ſucceeding hereunto in right of Richild his wife, daughter of Regnier the 3. 2 By the marriage of Baldwin the 6. of Hainalt, with Margaret Counteſſe of Flanders, ſiſter and heir of Philip of Elſas, Earl of Flanders. But being divided the firſt time by the uſurpation of Flanders, wreſted from Arnulph the 3. by his Uncle Robert, and the ſecond time by the intruſion of John de Aveſnes, naturall ſon of Margaret the ſecond daughter of the Emperor Baldwin, into the Eſtate and Earldom of Hainalt; it was finally annexed to Holland by the marriage of John de Aveſnes to Adelize, or Aleide, daughter, (and at the laſt) heir of Florence the 4. Earl of Holland, Zeland, &c. from which it never was divided, till they were both incorporated into that of Burgundie.

The EARLS of HAINALT.

1 Alberic, one of the younger ſons of Brunulph, Earl of Ardenne.
2 Waultier, ſon of Alberic.
3 Waultier II. ſon of Waultier the firſt.
4 Waultier III. ſon of Waltier the ſecond.
5 Albon, in right of his wife, eldeſt daughter of Walter the third.
6 Albon II. ſon of the ſaid Albon by that wife.
7 Manaſſier ſon of Albon the ſecond.
8 Regnier, ſon of Manaſſier.
9 Regnier II. ſon of Regnier the firſt.
10 Regnier III. ſon of Regnier the ſecond.
11 Baldwin V. of Flanders, in right of Richild his wife, the ſole daughter to Regnier the third, was Earl of Hainalt.
1070 12 Arnulph, ſon of Baldwin and Richild, deſpoiled of his eſtate and life by his Uncle Robert, who ſeiſed on the Earldom of Flanders.
1071 13 Baldwin II. brother of Arnulph, ſucceeded in Hainalt.
14 Baldwin III. ſon of Baldwin the ſecond.
15 Baldwin IV. ſon of Baldwin the third.
16 Baldwin V. ſon of Baldwin the fourth.
17 Baldwin VI. of Hainalt, and VIII. of Flanders, in right of Margaret his wife, ſiſter and heir of Philip of Elſas, Earl of Flanders.
1199 18 Baldwin VIII. of Hainalt and IX of Flanders, Emperour of Conſtantinople.
1295 19 Joan Counteſſe of Hainalt and Flanders, firſt married to Ferdinand of Portugal, and then to Thomas Earl of Savoy.
1244 20 Margaret the younger ſiſter of Joan, married to William of Bourbon Lord of Dampierre, by whom ſhe had William and Guy both Earls of Flanders.
21 John de Aveſnes, baſe ſon of Margaret, begot before her marriage by Buſchart her Guardian, the Porter of S. Peters in L'Iſle, by force and fraud extorted Hainalt from his Brethren born in lawfull wedlock; and married Aleide daughter and heir of Florence the 4. Earl of Holland: whoſe ſucceſſours in both Eſtates we ſhall meet with there, and amongſt them, with William the 2. father of Queen Philippa, wife of Edward the 3. one of the moſt conſiderable of all the number.

Cambray: & Namur.

4. The Biſhoprick of CAMBRAY.

Southward with Hainalt lieth the Biſhoprick of CAMBRAY, containing a goodly Town and territory, reckoned of anciently as a part of Hainalt, now a ſtate diſtinct; rather confederate with the Princes of the Netherlands, then ſubject to them.

The Principall City hereof is Cambray (called in Latine, Cameracum) ſeated on both ſides of the River Scheld; a fair, goodly and mighty City, full of people, many of which are rich Merchants, but all of them induſtrious, eſpecially in making that fine linnen Cloth, from hence called Camerac, or Cambrick. The private buildings very fair, but the publick much fairer, eſpecially the Monaſteries and other Churches, of which the moſt remarkable is that of our Ladie, an ancient and ſumptuous fabrick, and the See Epiſcopall. From whence the countrey and territory hereunto adjoyning, is called Cambreſis, in which are divers Villages and places of importance; the chief of which is Chaſteau Cambreſis, ſix leagues from the City, remarkable for the treaty held there betwixt France and Spain anno 1559. in which a peace was happily ſetled amongſt all the chief Princes of Chriſtendome. 2. Aveſnes le ſec (ſo called to diſtinguiſh it from Aveſnes in Hainalt) near which are digged excellent white ſtones for building, little inferiour unto Marble.

This Biſhoprick was founded in the perſon of S. Diogenes, a Grecian born, Anno 390. or thereabouts. Whoſe Succeſſours in tract of time became ſo potent, that at the laſt the Biſhop hereof became both the Lord ſpirituall and temporall of the Town and territory, honoured with the title of a Duke, and Prince of the Empire, and in the end made an Arch-biſhop by Pope Paul the 4. anno 1562.

The City of Cambray made Imperiall by the Germane Emperours, was firſt by Henry the fift given in protection to Robert of Hieruſalem Earl of Flanders; afterwards ſetled and confirmed on all his Succeſſours by the Emperour Frederick, anno 1164. Which notwithſtanding, the French finding it convenient for them, divers times poſſeſſed it: but governing with too great inſolence, they were driven out by the people, in the time of Lewis the 11. and the town yeelded voluntarily unto Maximilian, governour of theſe countries for his ſon Philip. Charles the 5. in the year 1543. built a ſtrong Citadell in it, pretending that he did it for defence of the Town againſt the French; but indeed to keep it for himſelf. After this it was taken by the Duke of Alenſon, (brother of Henry the 3. of France) then Governour of the Netherlands, anno 1582. but regained not long after by the Spaniards, the Inhabitants giving up the Town for want of victuals. Since that continually poſſeſſed by the Spaniards; but ſo, that the people ſtill enjoy their ancient priviledges, and are governed by their own lawes and Biſhops.

5. NAMVR.

The Earldome of NAMVR hath on the Eaſt Hainalt, on the Weſt the Biſhoprick of Leige, on the North Brabant, and on the South Luxenbourg. The countrey very ſmall, containing only 182. Villages and four walled Towns; but plentifull of all commodities, and repleniſhed with a loyall and induſtrious people. Particularly the aire hereof is very wholeſome; the countrey watered with many rivers and pleaſant brooks, (amongſt which the Sambre, and the Maes) which beſides the benefit of portage, yeeld great plenty of fiſh. The hils, whereof it hath not many, clothed with woods, abounding with all kinde of fowle and veniſon; the vallies eminently fruitfull of all ſorts of grain, rich mines of Lead, quarries of Marble of all colours, as alſo of Porphyrie or Jaſper, and great plenty of Coal; but in mines of Iron ſo abounding and that continually hammered by a painfull people, that Vulcans forge may ſeem to be reſtored to the world again, and ſeated here; which as it makes the people wealthy, ſo it keeps them from idleneſſe. And as for the Nobility, they are generally valiant, given to all military exerciſes fit for their degrees, and very affectionate to their Prince; the greateſt vertue of a ſubject.

Walled Towns it hath but four, as before was ſaid, that is to ſay, 1. Namur, the chief of all the Province, where reſideth the Councell for the countrey, from which lyeth no appeal but to Macblyn only. Seated between two hils on both ſides of the Sambre, which doth there fall into the Meuſe. The City rich, inhabited for the moſt part by the Nobility, defended with a ſtrong Caſtle, and beautified with a fair Cathedrall, founded here in the Church of S. Albin anno 1559. Not farre off in the Villages of Ardenne and Munſtier, are two Nunneries of Ladies, like thoſe of Montz and Maubuige, ſpoken of in Hainalt. 2. Bovines upon the Meuſe, ſacked by the French anno 1554. ſince repaired, and fortified. 3. Charlemont, a ſmall Town, but of moſt exact fortifications, built by Charles the 5. anno 1555. to oppoſe the French, who had then poſſeſſed themſelves of Mariemburg, a Town of Hainalt. 4. Valencourt, a little Town, but ſtanding in a goodly and fruitfull countrey. Of the Villages the chief is Doue, ſeated on the Meuſe or Maes, fortified with a ſtrong Caſtle, and honoured with the title of a Viſcountie; 2. Florent, 3. Vaſcie, and 4. Saufin, of much beauty and greatneſſe.

The ancient Inhabitants of this countrey were a part of the Nervii; firſt made an Earldome by ſome of the deſcendents of the ſons of Clodius the ſecond King of the French, who being diſpoſſeſſed of their Fathers kingdome by Meroveus, the Maſter of his horſe (to whom he had committed the guardianſhip or tuition of them,) were forced to betake themſelves to the moſt defenſible parts of the great forreſt of Ardenne, and the parts adjoyning: where they founded the great Earldome of Ardenne: divided in ſucceeding times into many parcels, of which this was one. By what and by how many Earls poſſeſſed, I am yet to learn; but ſold it was by John the laſt Earl unto Philip the Good; continuing ever ſince in the houſe of Burgundie, or in their right in thoſe of Auſtria and Spain.

The Armes hereof are Or, a Lyon Sable, debruiſed with a Bend Gules.

6. LVXENBOVRG.

LVXENBOVRG is bounded on the Eaſt with the Moſelle, and the land of Triers; on the Weſt with the Meuſe or Maes, and a branch of the forreſt of Ardenne; on the North with Luyck-land, Namur, and a part of Hainalt; and on the South with the Dutchie of Lorrain. Divided into two parts, the Eaſtern part being called Fanenne, fruitfull of corn, and yeelding withall ſome wines, ſome mines, and many excellent quarries of goodly ſtone; the Weſtern called the Ardenne, a remainder of that ſpacious Forreſt which ſometimes overſhadowed all this countrey, barren of corn, but very plentifull of Veniſon, and of Fowle good ſtore. The people of this country are not all of one language, thoſe nearer Germanie, as in Luxenbourg, Arlune, Rodemark, Theonville, and the reſt on that ſide, ſpeaking the Dutch; as thoſe of Ivois, Mommedi, Morvill, and Damvilliers, with the reſt bordering on France, do a corrupt or broken French. In which regard the pleadings held before the Councell reſiding in Luxenbourg, are made in both Languages, that ſo they may be underſtood by all that have buſineſſe there. But the Nobility and Gentry (of which there is more in this Province then in any other of the ſeventeen) ſpeak both Tongues perfectly. A breed of men full of vertue, curteſie, and hoſpitality towards one another, and of great truth and faith to their Prince: but reckoned for the worſt Landlords in all theſe countries, governing their Subjects and Tenants like the Peſants of France, contrary to the uſe and liberties of the reſt of the Netherlands. Both ſorts, as well the Nobility as the Commons, hate both Law and Lawyers; and for the moſt part end their controverſies amongſt themſelves, without any proceſſe.

The whole countrey containeth in compaſſe about 70. leagues, or 200. Italian miles, in which are comprehended 23. walled Towns, and 1168. Burroughs and Villages. The principall of which are 1. Luxembourg, built in the place where anciently ſtood the Auguſta Veromanduorum of Ptolemie; and took this new name quaſi Lucis burgum, from the image of the Sun there worſhipped, ſeated on the Alſnutius, or Alze, which runneth through it; large and of a ſtrong ſituation, but not very well built; nor yet recovered of the ſpoils which the long wars betwixt the French and the Spaniard brought upon it, before the treaty of Cambray. However it is the chief Town of the Province, honoured with the reſidence of the Councell hereof, and the Sepulchre of John K. of Bohemia, ſlain in the battell of Crecie againſt the Engliſh, anno 1348. 2. Arlune, on the top of an high hill, ſo called quaſi Ara lunæ, from an Altar conſecrated to the Moon in the times of Paganiſme. 3. Theonville, on the Moſelle, over which it hath a goodly bridge; a frontier Town near Metz, and the border of Lorrain; and for that cauſe made marvellous ſtrong, but taken by the French anno 1558. and reſtored the next year by the peace of Cambray. 4. Boſtonack, a fair Town, and very well traded; commonly called the Paris of Ardenne, in which part it ſtandeth. 5. Mommedi, on an high hill at the foot of which runneth the River Chiers. 6. Damvilliers, once a very ſtrong place alſo; both taken and ranſacked by the French anno 1552. 7. Morville upon the Chiers, the one half whereof belongeth to the Duke of Lorrain, the other to the King of Spain, as Duke of Luxenbourg; for which cauſe called La ville commune. 8. Rock di March, fortified with a ſtrong Caſtle. 9. Ivoys, a place once of great importance, ſacked by the French anno 1552. and reſtored by the treaty of Cambray, on condition it ſhould never more be walled. 10. La Ferte on the Chiers, a Town of the ſame condition.

In the skirts of this countrey towards France ſtandeth the Dukedome of Bovillon, and the principality of Sedan; diſtinct Eſtates, and in the hands of ſeverall Owners; yet ſo that the Soveraign of Sedan is ſtiled Duke of Bovillon. Towns of moſt note, 1. Bovillon the chief Town, built on the ſide of an hill near the River Semoy; a fair large City, and beautified with a goodly Caſtle on the top of an hill; ſo ſtrong as well by Art as Nature, that before the uſe of great Ordnance it was held impregnable; but ſince it hath been often taken, ſometimes by the Emperours, and finally anno 1552. by the French King. It hath command over a fair and goodly Territory, honoured with the title of a Dutchy, and is now in the hands of the Biſhops of Leige; to one of whoſe Predeceſſors named Obert, it was ſold by Godfrey of Bovillon Duke of Lorrain, at his going to the Holy-land. 2. Sedan or Eſdain, ſituate on the banks of the Maes or Moſa, the uſuall reſidence of the Prince, a fine neat Town, well fortified, and planted with 80. braſſe Pieces of Ordnance: honoured alſo with a ſeat of Learning, which being of a middle nature betwixt a Grammar Schoole and an Univerſity, is in the Criticiſme of theſe times, called a Schola illuſtris, to which men may ſend their children to learn good letters, though they can take in them no Degrees, that being a priviledge reſerved only to the Univerſities. So that theſe Schooles may be ſomewhat like our Collegiate Churches of Weſtminſter, Wincheſter, and Eaton: but that the younger Students in theſe laſt named, are more reſtrained to Rhetorick and Grammar, then in the other; though theſe more liberally indowed for the incouragement and reward of learning, then all the Scholæ illuſtres of either Germanie. 3. Loni. 4. Mouſon, (Muſonium it is called in Latine) a Town of great ſtrength and conſequence on the River Maes, upon ſome jealouſies of State, garriſon'd by by the French (as ſome other good Peers of this Dukedome are.) 5. Sauſi, and 6. Florenge, which two laſt came unto the Princes of Sedan by the Lady Jone the wife of Robert Earl of Mark, and mother of that Robert Earl of Mark who firſt of all this houſe was honoured with the title of Duke of Bovillon. All taken and levelled with the ground by Charles the 5. in his war againſt Robert Earl of Mark, and Duke of Bovillon; but afterwards repaired on the peace enſuing. 7. Jamais, a Town of great importance on the edge of Lorrain; by the Duke whereof in the year 1589. it was taken after a long ſiege from the Lady Charlotte, the laſt Heire: Generall of this Houſe; and laid unto that Dukedome as a part thereof. Bovillon.

As for the Dukedome of Bovillon it was anciently a part of the great Earldome of Ardenne: by Geofrey of Ardenne Duke of Bovillon, united to the Dukedome of Lorrain, at his inveſtiture in that eſtate, anno 1004. By Geofrey the 2. of that name, and fift Duke of Lorrain, it was given in Dower to his Siſter Ida, at her marriage with Euſtace Earl of Boulogne in Picardie; to whom he brought the famous Godfrey (ſurnamed of Bovillon, becauſe Duke thereof, before he did ſucceed into that of Lorrain) renowned for the conqueſt of Hieruſalem, and the Holy-land. Who afterwards ſucceeding in the Dukedome of Lorrain, ſold his Eſtates of Bovillon unto Obert Biſhop of Leige, as before was ſaid: by whom and his Succeſſors both the Eſtate and Title of Duke of Bovillon, was peaceably enjoyed, till the year 1530. or thereabouts: when Eberhard of Mark, Biſhop and Cardinall of Leige, ſold it to Robert Earl of Mark his brother, deſcended from Engelbert Earl of Mark, and a daughter of the houſe of Aremberg, who brought with her Sedan, Jamais, and others of the Towns ſpoken of before. But Robert being worſted by Charles the 5. (for whom he was too weak an enemy) the Town of Bovillon being taken by the conquering Emperour, was afterwards reſtored to the Biſhops, and nothing but the title of Dukes of bovillon left to the Princes of Sedan. And that he might be able to hold Sedan, this Robert was fain to return again to the protection of the French (as his Anceſtors had done before) and died anno 1535. leaving his titles and eſtate unto Robert his ſon, one of the Marſhals of France: whoſe grandſon, called alſo Robert, being a dear friend and companion of Henry of Bourbon K. of Navarre, and afterwards of France alſo, dying without iſſue at Geneva, anno 1588. committed to him the diſpoſall of his eſtates and of the Lady Charlotte his only Siſter. And he ſo well diſcharged his truſt, that (having ſetled his own affairs) he gave the Lady in marriage to Henry de la Tour, Viſcount of Turene in France, one who had done him very good ſervice in the courſe of his long war againſt the Leaguers, and with her the poſſeſſion of Sedan, and the title of Bovillon; whoſe poſterity do ſtill enjoy it. As for the Town of Bovillon it ſelf, being taken from Duke Robert by Charles the 5. and from the Imperialiſts by the French, anno 1552. as before was ſaid, it was at laſt reſtored unto the Biſhop of Leige by the treaty of Cambray, anno 1559. but without prejudice to the title of the Prince of Sedan. So that at this time there are no fewer then three which write themſelves Dukes of Bovillon, viz. the Biſhop of Leige who hath poſſeſſion of the Town; the houſe of de la Tour, who is inveſted in Sedan and ſome other pieces; and finally the Heirs Males of the collaterall line of the houſe of Mark, who hold ſome other parts and places of this eſtate.

But to return again to the Dutchy of Luxembourg, it was at firſt a part of the great Earldome of Ardenne; diſmembred from it in the time of the Emperour Otho the firſt, by Sigefride the ſon of Ricuinus Prince thereof; who in the diviſion of that eſtate amongſt his Brethren had this for his portion, with the title of Earl, denominated from the Caſtle (now the town) of Luxembourg, ſelected by him for the ſeat of his principality. Of his Succeſſours there is little to be found upon good record, untill the time of Henry the 1. father of Henry the 7. Emperour of Germany, and of a Royall progeny of Kings and Princes, two of the which are moſt conſiderable, though all of them of eminent quality in their ſeverall times, viz. 1. Henry elected and crowned Emperour, by the name of Henry the 7. ſaid to be poiſoned by a Frier in the Holy Chalice, to prevent ſome deſigns he had againſt the Pope, in aſſerting the Imperiall power in Italie: 2. John the ſon of this Henry, choſen King of Bohemia, in regard of his marriage with Elizabeth daughter of Wenceſlaus, King thereof; the poſſeſſion of which Realm he left unto his Poſterity advanced unto a Dukedome by Charles the 4. the eldeſt ſon of this John, in the perſon of Wenceſlaus his younger brother. What elſe concerns it, we ſhall finde in this following Catalogue of

1 Sigifride, the ſon of Ricuine, Prince of Ardenne.

2 Henry Earl of Luxembourg, ſlain in the quarrell of Rainold Earl of Gueldres, contending with John Duke of Brabant for the Dutchie of Limbourg.

3 Henry II. by means of his brother Baldwin Elector of Triers, choſen Emperour of the Germans, the 7. of that name, anno 1308. firſt crowned at Aken, and afterwards at Rome; one of the laſt Emperours that medled in the affairs of Italy.

1313 4 John, ſon of Henry II. Earl of Luxembourg, married Elizabeth daughter of Winceſlaus the elder, King of Bohemia; of which he was upon that marriage elected and crowned King, anno 1311. in the life of his father, ſlain by the Engliſh in the battell of Crecie, anno 1346.

Limbourg. 1383 6 Wenceſlaus II. eldeſt ſon of the ſaid Charles the 4. Emperour and King of Bohemia alſo, ſucceeded his Uncle in the Dukedome.

1419 7 Sigiſmund, brother of Wenceſlaus, ſucceeded Wenceſlaus in all his eſtates; to which he added the Crown of Hungarie by the marriage of Mary daughter of King Lewis the firſt.

8 Elizabeth, daughter of John Duke of Garlitz, (a Town of Luſatia) the brother of Sigiſmund, by the gift of Sigiſmund her Uncle, being then alive; the better to fit her for the bed of Anthony of Bourgogn Duke of Brabant; after whoſe deceaſe ſhe married John the 3. Earl of Hainalt, Holland, &c. But having no iſſue by either of them, ſhe ſold her intereſt in this Dukedome to Philip the Good in purſuance of the contract and agreement made at her firſt marriage, for ſetling this eſtate in the houſe of Burgundie.

The Armes are B. ſix Barrulets A, ſupporting a Lyon, G, crowned and armed, Or.

The greateſt of the Eſtates of Belgium for extent of territory at the time of their incorporating in the houſe of Burgundie, was that of Brabant, comprehending 5. of the 17. Provinces, that is to ſay, the Dukedome of Limbourg and Brabant, the Marquiſate of the holy Empire, the Earldome of Namurce, and the Seigneury of Machlyn.

1. LIMBOVRG, hath on the Eaſt the Dukedome of Gulick in High Germany; on the Weſt the Biſhoprick of Leige; on the North, Brabant; and on the South, the Dukedome of Luxembourg. The Soyle fruitfull of all neceſſary commodities, excepting wines, the want whereof is recompenſed with moſt excellent wheat, great ſtore of fewell, and plenty of the beſt iron mines in all theſe countries: all which commodities it hath of ſo great excellency in their ſeverall kinds, that it is ſaid of them proverbially, that their Bread is better then bread, their Fire hotter then fire, and their Iron harder then iron. It is alſo well ſtored with medicinable ſimples, and enriched with a mine of Copperas, (by Plinie called Lapis æroſus, lib. 34. c. 10.) which being incorporated with braſſe makes Lattin, and increaſeth the braſſe by one third part. Lapis æroſus multum æris habet, & ex eo fuſo fit æs, as that Author hath it.

It is one of the leaſt of the Belgick Provinces, containing in it but 125. Villages, and no more then five walled Towns or Cities, viz. 1. Limbourg, which gives name to the whole Eſtate, pleaſantly ſeated on an hill amongſt ſhady woods, under which runneth the River Weſdo, which having watered the whole countrey emptieth it ſelf into the Maes; well built, and fortified with a very ſtrong Caſtle, mounted upon a ſteep Precipice, of no eaſie acceſſe. 2. Walkenbourg, called by the French Fauquemont, a reaſonable fair Town, with a large territory, two Dutch miles from Maeſtricht; conquered from Reynold Lord hereof by John the 3. Duke of Brabant. 3. Dalem a little Town with a Caſtle, the territory thereof extending beyond the Maes; conquered by Henry Duke of Brabant, of that name the ſecond. 4. Rhode le Duck, a little old Town with as old a Caſtle, half a league from Walkenbourg. 5. Carpen, ſituate between Gulick and Colen, beautified with a Collegiate Church, and a ſtrong Caſtle, in which there is a Governour with a good Garriſon for defence of the place. Each of theſe Towns hath juriſdiction on the parts adjoyning; but with appeal unto the Chancery of Brabant.

The ancient inhabitants of this tract, and the Biſhoprick of Leige adjoyning, were the Eburones. When it was firſt made an Earldome, I am yet to ſeek: but of an Earldome it was made a Dukedome by the Emperour Frederick Barbaroſſa, anno 1172. Henry one of the Dukes hereof, marryed his daughter Margaret to Godfrey the 3. Duke of Brabant, which gave that houſe ſome colour to pretend unto it: backed with a better title on the death of another Henry, the laſt Duke of Limbourg, whoſe next heir Adolph ſold it to John Duke of Brabant, pretending to it in the right of the former marriage, anno 1293. But Reynold Earl of Gueldres, thinking himſelf to have a better title then Adolph, in right of Ermingrade his wife the daughter of Herman, a late Duke hereof, put in his plea, and challenged it by force of Armes: but being vanquiſhed and taken priſoner by the ſaid Duke John in the battell of Worancan, was fain for his releaſe, to releaſe all his claim and title to the Dukedome of Limbourg; after that quietly enjoyed by the Dukes of Brabant, till they fell both together to the houſe of Burgundie.

The Armes hereof are Argent, a Lyon Barrie of ten pieces, Or, and Gules.

8. LVICK-LAND, OR The Biſhoprick of LEIGE.

Weſtward of Limbourg, but a far mightier eſtate then it, lieth LVICK-LAND, as the Dutch, or the Biſhoprick of LEIGE, (Leodienſis) as the Latine and French writers call it: anciently under the protection of the Dukes of Brabant, and afterwards of the Princes of the houſe of Burgundie, as Lords of that countrey. By ſome accompted of, and deſcribed as a part of Germany; but for the reaſons reaſons before mentioned I ſhal place it here: environed on all ſides with the Belgick Provinces that is to ſay, with the Dukedome of Limbourg on the Eaſt, with Brabant on the North and Weſt; on the South with Luxembourg. Leige.

The Aire hereof is very wholeſome, and the Earth as fruitfull, abounding with all kinde of grain and fruits, ſome ſtore of wine; and as for fleſh, fiſh, fowle, and veniſon, it hath very great plenty, and that too of an excellent taſte. But the chief riches of this Countrey is under ground, conſiſting in mines of Lead, and Iron, and ſome few of Gold; quarries of Alabaſter mingled with all ſorts of Marble; rich veins of Brimſtone, and unexhauſtible pits of Coal, which laſt it hath in ſuch abundance, that there is digged within the compaſſe of one league of the City of Leige, not only ſufficient for that great City, but ſo much overplus as being ſold at mean prices about the countrey amounts unto 100000. duckets of yearly value. The Coal much ſweeter then elſewhere, and of a nature contrary to all other Coal, in that it is kindled with water, and quenched with oyle: and the ſtrong fervour of it taken off by caſting ſalt on it.

The whole countrey containeth 24 walled Towns, and 1800. Villages, the principall of which are 1 Leige or Luick, (in Latine Leodium) ſituate in a pleaſant valley environed with hils, the Meuſe entring it in two branches, accompanied with four leſſer Riverets, which make in it many delightfull Ilands. The compaſſe of it about four miles, the ordinary buildings very fair, all built of ſtone; the Biſhops palace a magnificent and ſumptuous piece: the Churches in number forty, of which eight are Collegiate, 32. Parochiall; all of them for their riches and bounty excelling all in any City of France or Germanie. Beſides theſe, there are ſo many Convents, Monaſteries, and religious houſes about the Town, that taking all together they amount to an hundred: all of them of ſuch fair revenues, ſo well endowed, and the Religious perſons there of ſo great authority, that it is cailed the Paradiſe of Prieſts, and that deſervedly. It is alſo an Univerſity of good Antiquity, wherein were Students at one time, 9. Kings ſons, 24. Dukes ſons, 29. Earls ſons, beſides Barons and Gentlemen; the greateſt part of which were Canons of the Church of S. Lambert, which is the Cathedrall of the City. Yet notwithſtanding it hath taſted of the malice of fortune as well as others, being firſt deſtroyed by the Danes, then by the Normans, twice taken and once deſtroyed by Charles of Burgundie, anno 1468. Subject it is unto the Biſhop as Lord temporall of it; from whom (being long ſince made an Imperiall City) there lyeth an Appeal to the Chamber of Spires. 2. Dinand upon the Meuſe, near Namur, of very great traffick till deſtroyed by Charles of Burgundie, in the ſame year with Leige: hardly recovered of which wounds, it was again ſacked by K. Henry the 2. of France, anno 1854. 3. Maeſeck, upon the Meuſe or Maes alſo, a league from whence is the fair Nunnery of Thuren, of the ſame nature with that of Mentz, and others ſpoken of before: the like to which there is near 4. Bilſen, another Town of this Biſhoprick; the Abbeſſes of each having the priviledge of coyning both gold and ſilver. 5. Lootz, by the Dutch called Borclom, in the county of Dioſtein; made a county in the time of Charles the Great, the title and poſſeſſion of Vgier the Dane, ſo famous in the Hiſtory of Gallen of France, and others of the old Romances. 6. Franchimont, which gives the title to a Marqueſſe of the Biſhop of Leige. 7. Centron or S. Truden, a fair Town, ſo called of the Abbie, dedicated to that Saint. 8. Huy or Hoey, ſo called of a violent River, which there runs into the Meuſe. 9. Tungres, the chief City of the Tongri, (which together with the Eburones were) once the Inhabitants of this tract in which are ſtill the ruines of a Temple conſecrated to Hercules. Anciently an Epiſcopall See, tranſlated hence to Maeſtreicht, and at laſt to Leige: and in thoſe times ſo great, and of ſuch renown, that Attila the Hun deſtroyed in it 100. Churches: now but a very ſmall Town, and not worth the mentioning but for theſe Antiquities. Eight leagues from hence, amongſt the ſhady thickets of the Forreſt of Ardenne, is that ſo celebrated 10. Villages, and thoſe famous hot Baths, frequented from all the places of Europe, called the Spa: not ſo pleaſant, as wholeſome; not ſo wholſome, as famous. Yet are they good for ſundry diſeaſes, as the Tertian Ague, and Dropſie, the Stone, the exulceration of the Lungs, the Sciatique, &c. They are of moſt virtue in July, becauſe they are then hotteſt, and to ſuch as taſte them. they reliſh much of iron, from ſome iron mines, it ſeemeth, through which the waters run, which feed them. Theſe Baths of great fame in the time of Plinie, who doth thus deſcribe them. Tungri Civitas fontem habet inſignem, plurimis bullis ſtillantem, ferruginei ſaporis, quod ipſum non niſi in fine potus intelligitur. Purgat hic corpora, febres tertianas diſcutit, calculorumq; vitia. So he, lib. 31. cap. 2. agreeably to the nature of them at this preſent time.

As for the Biſhoprick of Leige, it was firſt founded at Tungres, as before was ſaid; after the ſackage of which City by Attila, removed anno 498. by S. Servatius unto Maeſtricht. But the people of Maeſtricht having Martyred S. Lambert, then Biſhop, anno 710. by Hubert his deſigned Succeſſour, with the leave of Pope Conſtantine, it was tranſlated to this place, and a Cathedrall Church here founded by the name of S. Lambert. His Succeſſours did ſo well husband their advantages, that they did not only buy the Dukedome of Bovillon, but the City and territory of Leige, ſold unto Speutus and Obertus ſucceſſively Biſhops of it, by Godfrey of Bovillon, Duke of Lorrain (of which Dukedome it was formerly a part or member) at his departure hence to the Holy-land: not much increaſed ſince that in lands, though he be in titles, the Biſhop being ſtiled a Prince of the Empire, Duke of Bovillon, Marqueſſe of Franchimont, Earl of Leotz and Hasbain. Yet are not his ordinary Revenues above 30000. duckets yearly, his ſubjects living very well under him, at eaſie rents, and growing for the moſt part unto good eſtates: An argument whereof may be, that when the Leigeois had rebelled againſt Philip the Good, Duke of Burgundie, (under whoſe Clientele they were, as Duke of Brabant) they bought their peace of him at the price of 600000 Florens of the Rhene, to be paid in ſix years. After which time

Brabant. again rebelling againſt Charles the warlike (as they have been obſerved to be the moſt rebellious City in Europe excepting Gaunt) they were able to wage 30000 men, but not being able to withſtand the forces of their Lord Protectour, they fell into that miſerable deſtruction ſpoken of before. Since that time they have lived with more moderation under the protection of the Princes of the houſe of Auſtria: but counted neutrall in the quarrells betwixt the King of Spain, and the States confederate, as formerly between the Spaniard and the French, though many times they ſuffer in the conteſtations.

9. BRABANT. 10. The MARQUISATE, And 11. MACHLIN.

THeſe I have joyned together, though diſtinct eſtates, becauſe they have a long time followed the ſame fortune, and that the two laſt doe no otherwiſe differ from the firſt, then the parts from the whole: the Marquiſate, and Machlin, being reckoned as parts of Brabant, and included in it.

9. BRABANT is bounded on the Eaſt, with Luickland, or the Biſhoprick of Leige; on the Weſt, with the River Scheld, and a part of Flanders; on the North, with the Maes, which ſevereth it from Holland, and Guelderland; and on the South, with Hainalt, Namur, and part of Luickland.

The Air hereof is generally very wholeſome, and good, and the Soil naturally fruitfull, excepting Kempenland, (being the parts hereof lying towards the North, which being barren of it ſelf, is made indifferently fertile by keeping Cattell, Soiling the ground, and other arts of good Husbandry. The people live in moſt freedome, and are the beſt priviledged of any in Belgium; A thing for which they are more beholding to the Princes goodneſſe, then their own great wits; being noted to be none of the wiſeſt, eſpecially as they grow in age, when moſt men learn wiſdome. Brabanti quo magis ſeneſcunt, eo magis ſtulteſcunt, as Eraſmus telleth us.

The length hereof, from S. Gertrudenberg to Genblaurs, North and South, is 22 Dutch, or German miles; from Helmont to Berghen ap Some, Eaſt and Weſt, 20 of the ſame miles; the whole compaſſe 80. Within which circuit are conteined 26 walled Townes; and Villages with Pariſh Churches 718. of which, the odde 18 called Franks, or Market-townes, enjoy the priviledges of walled Townes, or Cities, though unwalled themſelves.

Places of moſt importance in it, are 1. Shertogen Boſch, or the Boſch, as the Dutch; Bois le Duc, or Bolduc, as the French; and Silva Ducis, or Boſcum Ducis, as the Latines call it: each name derived according to the ſeverall languages, from a pleaſant wood belonging to the Dukes of Brabant, where the Town now ſtands, ſituate on a litle River called Deeſe, ſome two leagues from the Maes, neer the borders of Guelderland: a large and well built Town, very ſtrongly fortified, and of great trade for Clothing, here being made yeerly, in the time of Lewis Guicciardine 20000 Clothes, worth 200000 Crownes to the Clother or Draper; made an Epiſcopall See anno 1559. the Cathedrall, which is fixed in the Church of S. John, being fair and large, and beautified with one of the goodlieſt Dials in the Chriſtian world. This is the principall town of Brabant (properly and diſtinctly ſo called) comprehending under it the four Countries of Kempenland, Maesland, Peeland, and Oſterwick; and was taken by the Confederate Eſtates from the King of Spain, after a long and chargeable ſiege, Anno 1628. 2. Tilmont, on the little River Geet, once the chief of Brabant, but long ſince decayed. Arſchot on the litle River Demere, which gives the title of a Duke to them of the Noble houſe of Croy; the Dukes hereof (advanced unto that honour by Charles the Fift) being men of greateſt Revenue and Authority of any in Belgium. 4. Bergen ap Zome, ſo called from the River Zome, upon which it is ſituate, about half a league from the influx of it into the Scheld, and not far from the Sea, which gives it a reaſonable good Haven. A town of great ſtrength by nature, but more ſtrongly fortified: Famous for being made a Marquiſate by Charles the Fift, anno 1553. more for the notable reſiſtance which it made to the Marquis Spinola, anno 1622. 5. Breda, upon the river Merck, a Town pleaſantly ſeated, well fortified, and of great Revenue, having under it the Town and Territorie of Steenberg, the franchiſe of Roſindale, and the Seigneury of Oſterhout: the reſidence, Baronie, and chief town of the Princes of Orange, from whom being taken by the Spaniard in the beginning of thoſe wars, it was again recovered by ſome venturous Gentlemen, who hiding themſelves in a Boat covered over with Turf, were conveyed into the Caſtle, which they eaſily maſtered, and made the Prince Lord of it again. After re-taken by the Spaniard, anno 1625. but now in the poſſeſſion of its naturall owners. 6. Dieſt, on the River Demere, a good town, and of a large territory and juriſdiction, belonging to the Prince of Orange, who had it in exchange for ſome other lands of the Duke of Cleve; and in right hereof is Burgrave of the City of Antwerp. 7. Grinbergen, an ancient Baronie, with a large juriſdiction, deſcendible on the youngeſt ſonne onely, after the manner of Burgh Engliſh, as our Lawyers call it. 8. Gertrudenberg, ſtanding on the Douge, not far from the influx of it into the Maes, the furtheſt town in the North of Brabant, where it joyns to Holland: which makes it a matter of diſpute betwixt thoſe Provinces, to which of them it doth belong. A town of great trade for fiſhing, plenty of Salmons, and Sturgeons being taken here; but of Shads eſpecially, whereof 18000 are ſometimes caught in a day, ſalted, and ſent abroad into forain parts: It acknowledgeth the Prince of Orange for the Lord thereof; as doth alſo 9. Grave, a good town upon the Maes, bought by these Princes of the King of Spain with consent of the States; without whose approbation, no part of the Domain is to be dismembred. 10. Maestreicht (in Latine, Trajectum ad Mosam) so called of a ferry over the Maes in former times, supplyed now with a goodly Stone bridge in the place thereof. A fair and goodly town, beautified with two Collegiate Churches, in one of which the Dukes of Brabant were alwayes Canons, subject in part to the Bishop of Leige, and partly to the Duke of Brabant: The children are subject to that Prince to whom the Mother was subject at the time of the Birth, without relation to the Father, according to that Maxime of the Civill Law, Ingenuus sequitur ventrem: And if a stranger come to live there, he must declare to which of the two he will be subject, yet is the Duke of Brabant the chief Soveraign of it, he onely having the power of Coynage, and of granting pardon to Offenders: and as a town of this Dukedome, besieged and taken by the confederate States, Anno 1632. The Marquisate.

Here is also within the limits of this Dukedome, the town and Signeurie of Ravestein, situate on the banks of the Maes, held by the Dukes of Cleve, of the Duke of Brabant; but no otherwise subject; and on the same River, the Town and County of Horn, a Fief Imperiall, beautified with a strong Castle, and a goodly Territory, in which is Wiert, the residence of the Earls of Horne descended of the ancient house of Montmorencie in France.

2. THE MARQUISATE OF THE EMPIRE, so called, because the fartherest bounds and Marches of the German Empire frontizing on Flanders, which appertained unto the Soveraignty of the Crown of France, comprehendeth four of the best Towns in Brabant, with very large and spacious Territories adjoyning to them, viz. 1. Lovain, on the River Dyle, about four English miles in compasse, but in that compasse much of the ground is taken up with Vineyards, Gardens, Meadowes, and pleasant Fields, which make the situation far more delightfull, then if all built, and peopled. It was the Mother town of Brabant, and sometimes gave the title of an Earl to the Dukes hereof: afterwards made an University by Duke John the 4. anno 1426, wherein are contained about 20 Colledges, such as they be; much priviledged, and inriched with pensions for publick Readers, by King Philip the 2. 2. Brussels (Bruxella) the seat of the ancient Dukes of Brabant, and of the Dukes of Burgundie also, after they came to be Lords of these Countries, seated upon the Sinne, and other sweet springs and Riverets, which make it one of the sweetest situations in all Europe: having withall, a goodly channell made by Art from Brussels, to the River Dele, and from thence to the Scheld; the charge whereof amounted to 900000 Crowns. It is of the same compasse with Lovain, the buildings sumptuous, and the town very rich; not only in regard that it is the ordinary seat of the Prince, or his Regent, and of the Chancery for all Brabant, and the Dutchy of Limbourg; but in regard of the rich Manufactures of Armour and Cloth of Arras, of Silk, Gold, and Silver, which are there industriously pursued. 3. Nivelle, on the borders of Hainalt, in a very rich and fruitfull soil, remarkable for the abundance of fine Linnen, which is therein made, but most of all for a very rich Nunnery (or rather Nurserie) of noble Ladies; of the same nature with those of Mentz, and others before described. 4. Antwerp, situate in a goodly plain on the River Scheld, above 17 leagues from the Sea, but furnished with eight Channels cut out of the River for the transport of Commodities, one of the which is capable of 100 great Ships, the private buildings very handsome, but the publick sumptuous; the chief whereof were reckoned the Church of Nostre Dame, the Bourse, the Town-house, and the house of the Easterlings, or Eastern Merchants, well peopled, and of so great Trade in the former times, that it was held to be the richest Empory of the Christian world: the commodities here bought and sold, amounting to more in one moneth, then that of Venice in two years. The causes of which sudden growth and increase of Trading, are said to be these, 1. The two Marts holden here every year, either of them during six weeks, in which time no mans person could be arrested, or his goods distrained. 2. The King of Portugall having in the yeer 1503. diverted the course of Merchandise from Alexandria and Venice to the City of Lisbon, kept here his Factories, and sent hither his Spices, and other Indian Commodities; for which cause the Merchants, in the yeer 1516. forsook Bruges in Flanders, and setled here. 3. And 3. many of the Nobility and Gentry during the long and bloudy wars betwixt France and Spain, forsook their Country houses, and repaired hither; by means whereof Antwerp, in a very little time grew bigger by 3000 houses, then it had been formerly. But as the growth hereof was sudden, so the fall was sensibler occasioned through the yoking of it with a Citadell by the Duke of Alva, which made Merchants afraid to resort any longer thither, as a place of little freedome, and lesse security: but chiefly by blocking up the Haven, and intercepting the trade at Sea, by the more powerfull Hollanders, which hath removed this great traffick to Amsterdam, and other towns of their Country. So that now the chief support of it is the reputation which it hath of being an Imperiall City, the place of receipt for the Kings Revenues, and a Bishops See founded here in the yeer 1559. which draweth hither some resort of Lawyers and Church-men.

3. The Signeurie of MACHLIN, consisteth only of that City, and a small Territorie of nine Villages adjoining to it. The Citie seated on both sides of the River Dele, which ebbeth and floweth to the town and a league above it: and running through the very midst, maketh in it a number of small Islands, to the great ornament and commoditie of it. A goodly town, containing seven Parish Churches besides the Cathedrall, being the See of an Archbishop founded here in the year 1559. strong in regard it may be easily drowned on all sides: and of great wealth by reason of the many manufactures of linnen, great Artillery of Brasse and Iron, Bels, painted works and others of like use and ornament. And being situate in a manner in the Center of Brabant, distant four Leagues from

Antwerp,

Machlyn. Antwerp, Lovain, and Bruxels, was made by Charls the Warlike (who loved the place) the ordinary ſeat of the great Councell of State, to which appeals are made from the other Provinces. But yet more beautifull in former times then it is at the preſent, the City being much defaced by firing 200 barrels of powder, anno 1546. and by the ſackage of of the Spaniard, by whom it was taken by force, anno 1572. moſt memorable at this time for a famous Numerie like to that of Nivelle, wherein are ſometimes 1600 Nuns, who when they pleaſe may leave their Cloiſter and be married. A town though in Brabant, yet not of it, but a State diſtinct: for which cauſe many women at the time of their childbirth, uſe to lay downe their bellies in ſome Village of Brabant, that their children may be capable of the priviledges and immunities of that country. The principall of the Villages is named Leeſt, or Heyſt, pleaſantly ſeated on an hill, the reſidue of the Burroughs lying at the foot thereof. Both Town and Villages the patrimonie heretofore of the noble family of the Bertholds: which failing in the perſon of Gualter, ſlain in the battle of Worancan by John Duke of Brabant; it fell the one half to the Biſhop of Leige, who ſold his moitie to John the ſecond Duke of Brabant, the other to the Earl of Gueldres, who in the year 1333. ſold his part unto Lewis of Malain, Earl of Flanders. But hee ſold nothing but the title, John the third Duke of Brabant having ſeiſed upon it, and added it to his eſtate: the occaſion of ſome quarrels between thoſe Princes, compoſed by the marriage of that Lewis with the heir of Brabant.

But to return again unto Brabant it ſelf, the antient inhabitants hereof, were the Aduatici, and ſome part of the Tungri: accompted by the Romans a part of the Province of Germania ſecunda; and by the French a Province of the Kingdom of Eaſt-France, or Auſtraſia, when it was a Kingdom; as after of the great Dukedom of Lorrain, conteining then the modern Dukedoms of Lorrain, Gulick, and Brabant, with the lands of Luick. Brabant at that time had the name of Baſſe (or Low) Lorrain, and as a memory thereof, there is a Court for criminall and civill cauſes held at Genappe (one of the Franks or Market towns of Brabant) called La Court de Lorrain to this day. A Dukedom firſt erected by the Emperour Otho the 2. who gave it to Charles of France ſon of Gerburg his Aunt, by Lewis ſurnamed Tranſmarine, King of France; reſerving out of it as a Dower for his ſaid Aunt Gerburg, the towns and territories of Lovain, Bruxels, Nivelle, and Antwerp, lying in the Marches of his Dominions towards France, which he honoured with the title of the Marquiſat of the holy Empire, anno 981. Gerburg the ſiſter, and after the death of her brother Otho, the heir of Charls, diſſeiſed of Lorrain and the right of that fair inheritance by the Emperour Henry (who gave it to Geofrey of Ardenne) ſucceeded her Grandmother the firſt Gerburg in the towns and territories of Lovain, Nivelle, and Bruxels, which ſhe conveyed in marriage to Lambert, one of the ſons of Reyner of Hainalt, with the title of Earl of Lovain. Henry his ſon having made himſelf Maſter of Antwerp alſo, was by that means poſſeſſed of the whole Marquiſate, but ſtill retained the title of Earl of Lovain. Godfrey the 6. Earl, having enlarged the bounds of his Dominions, was by the Emperour Henry the 5. anno 1108. created the firſt Duke of Brabant: whether ſo named from the old Bratuſpantium, which Ceſar placeth in this tract, or that it was ſo called quaſi Brachland, that is to ſay, a barren ſoil, is not yet determined. John the firſt Duke of that name, added hereunto the Dutchie of Limburg, and John the third, the Signeurie of Malines or Machlin. How it became united to the houſe of Burgundie, is to be ſeen by the enſuing Catalogue of the

The EARLS of LOVAIN, and DUKES of BRABANT.

1041 1 Lambert, one of the ſons of Regnier Earl of Hainalt, made the firſt Earl of Lovain in right of Gerburg his wife.

1015 2 Henry the ſon of Lambert, who took Antwerp, making it the head City of the Marquiſate of the holy Empire.

1046 3 Lambert II. ſon of Henry.

1054 4 Henry II. ſon of Lambert the ſecond.

1068 5 Henry III. ſon of Henry the ſecond.

6 Henry IV. ſon of Henry the third.

1096 7 Godfrey ſurnamed Barbatus, brother of Henry the fourth, created the firſt Duke of Brabant by the Emperour Henry the fifth, anno 1108. father of Adelize, the ſecond wife of our Henry the firſt.

1140 8 Godfrey or Geofrey II. ſon of Godfrey.

1143 9 Godfrey or Geofrey III. ſon of Godfrey the ſecond.

1183 10 Henry V. ſon of Godfrey the third.

1230 11 Henry VI. ſurnamed the Good, ſon of Henry the fift.

1247 12 Henry VII. ſurnamed the Magnanimous, by whoſe marriage with Sophia daughter of Lewis the ſixt, Lantgrave of Turingia, the Lantgravedome of Haſſia came into this houſe, inveſted on it in the perſon of Henry his ſon, by the ſaid Sophia.

1260 13 John, ſon of Henry the ſeventh, took in the Dukedom of Limbourg, and deſtroyed the potent Familie of the Bertholds: his younger brother Henry, by another venter, ſucceeding in Haſſia.

14 John II. ſon of John the firſt, bought of the Biſhop of Leige the moitie, or one halfe of Machlyn.

1312 15 John

1312 15 John III. ſon of John the ſecond, added the whole eſtate of Machlyn to the Dukedome of Brabant. Holland.

1355 16 Joane, eldeſt daughter of John the third, married to Wenceſlaus the firſt Duke of Luxembourg, but dyed without iſſue.

1406 17 Anthony of Burgogne, ſon of Philip the Hardie, and the Lady Margaret his wife, daughter of Lewis de Malain Earl of Flanders, and of Margaret the ſiſter and heir of Joane; after the death of the ſaid Wenceſlaus and Joane his wife, ſucceeded in the Dukedom of Brabant, his elder brother John giving way unto it.

1415 18 John IV. ſonne of Anthony by his firſt wife Joane daughter of Waleran Earl of Saint Paul.

1426 19 Philip, the ſecond ſon of Anthony, and brother of John the fourth.

1430 20 Philip II. called the Good, Duke of Burgundie, ſon and heir of John Duke of Burgundie, elder brother of Anthony; on the death of his two Couſin Germans John and Philip, ſucceeded in the Dukedom of Brabant, as the direct heir of the Lady Margaret, wife of Lewis de Malain, and daughter of John the third, the laſt Duke of Brabant of the houſe of Lovain.

The Arms hereof are Sable, a Lyon Or.

12. HOLLAND, 13. ZELAND, 14. WESTFRISELAND.

Having thus ſpoken of thoſe Provinces which ſtil continue in ſubjection to the King of Spain (except ſome few towns in Flanders and Brabant before mentioned;) let us next look on thoſe which have withdrawn their obedience from him, beginning firſt with Holland, and its Appendixes, as of more power and conſideration then all the reſt. Which though diſtinct Provinces and acting in their ſeverall capacities at the preſent time: yet having been alwayes under the command of the ſame Princes, they muſt be joined together in the Storie of them, but ſhall be ſeverally handled as to the Chorographie.

HOLLAND, ſo called quaſi Holt-land, that is to ſay, a woodie country, as Ortelius hath it, but rather quaſi Hollow-land, from the bogs and mariſhes, and unſound footing on the ſame: hath on the Eaſt the Zuider See, Utrecht, and ſome part of Guelderland, on the Weſt and North the German Ocean, on the South, the Iſlands of Zeland, and ſome part of Brabant.

The country for the moſt part lyeth very low, in ſo much that they are fain to fence it with Banks and Ramparts to keep out the Sea, and to reſtrain the Rivers within their bounds, ſo that in many places one may ſee the Sea far above the Land, and yet repulſed with thoſe Banks: and is withall ſo fenny and full of mariſhes, that they are forced to trench it with innumerable dikes and channels to make it firm land, and fit for dwelling: yet not ſo firm as to bear either trees or much graine. But ſuch is the induſtry of the people and the trade they drive, that having little or no corn of their own growth, they do provide themſelves elſewhere not only ſufficient for their own ſpending, but wherewith to ſupply their neighbours: having no timber of their own, they ſpend more timber in building ſhips, and fencing their water-courſes, then any country in the world; having no wine, they drink more then the people of the country where it groweth naturally; and finally having neither Flax nor Wool, they make more cloth of both ſorts, then all the countries in the world, except France and England.

The preſent inhabitants are generally given to Sea-faring lives, ſo that it is thought that in Holland, Zeland, and Weſt-Friſeland, there are 2500. ſhips of war and burden. The women for the moſt part laborious in making ſtuffes. Nay you ſhall hardly ſee a child of four years of age, that is not kept to work, and made to earn its own living, to the great commendation of their government. The greateſt of their natural Commodities is Butter and Cheeſe, of which, beſides that infinite plenty which they ſpend in their own houſes, and amongſt their Garriſons, they ſell as much unto other Countries, as comes to 100000 Crowns per annum. By which means, and by the greatneſſe of their fiſh-trade ſpoken of before, they are grown ſo wealthy on the land, and ſo powerfull at Sea, that as Flanders heretofore was taken for all the Netherlands, ſo now Holland is taken generally for all the Provinces confederated in a league againſt the Spaniard.

The whole compaſſe of it is no more then 180 miles, no part thereof being diſtant from the Sea, above three houres journey: and yet within that narrow circuit, there are contained no fewer then 23 walled Towns, and 400 Villages: ſome ſituate in the North, and others in South-Holland, as it ſtands divided. In South-Holland (being that part hereof which lyeth next to Zeland and the middle channell of the Rhene paſſing from Utrecht unto Leiden,) the principall Towns are, 1. Dort (in Latine Dordrectum) formerly the Staple for Rheniſh wines, a large, rich, and well-peopled town: anciently joined to the firm land, but in the year 142, rent from it by the violence of the Sea, and made an Iland of great command upon the traffique of the Maes and the Wael, upon whoſe confluence it ſtands; but of moſt note for an Aſſembly of Divines out of divers Countries following Calvins doctrine, for condemnation of the Lutheran or Arminian Tenets, concerning Univerſall Grace and Predeſtination, Holland. deſtination, anno 1618. 2. Roterdam, ſeated on a dike or channell called the Rotter, not farre from which at a place named Kempen, the Leck, one of the three main branches of the Rhene, falleth into the Maes: a ſtrong, fair, and well traded Port, the birth-place of the learned Eraſmus. 3. Schoon-hoven, ſituate on the Leck, a fair town having a commodious haven. 4. Gorichom upon the VVael, where it meeteth with the Linges, from the Church whereof one may diſcerne 22 walled townes. 5. Gouds, one of the ſix principall towns of Holland, rich and well fortified; ſeated on a Dike called Yſſel, drawn from the middle channell of Rhene; as is alſo, 6. Over-water, and 7. Yſſel-ſtein, this laſt belonging properly to the Prince of Orange; the firſt of great trade for making cables and cords for ſhipping. 8. Leiden, or Lugdunum Batavorum, an Univerſity founded anno 1564. The town conſiſteth of 41 Iſlands, to which they paſſe partly by boats, partly by bridges, whereof there are 144; and of them 104 builded with ſtone. Here is in this town a caſtle ſaid to have been built by Hengiſt the Saxon, at his return out of England. And not far off ſtood the famous Nunnerie of Rainsburg of the ſame nature with thoſe of Mentz and Nivelle before deſcribed; ſo liberally endowed, that 2000 perſons did there dayly receive relief. 9. Vianen on the Leck, a Seigneurie diſtinct from Holland, pertaining antiently to the Lords of Brederode. 10. Delfe, a town of great trade for cloathing, large and well built, beautified with ſpacious ſtreets, and goodly Churches; the birth-place of that monſtrous Heretick David George, who called himſelf King and Chriſt Immortall. He fled with his wife and children, anno 1544, to Baſil; there he ſet up his Doctrine: the points whereof were, 1. That the Law and the Goſpell were unprofitable for the attaining of Heaven; but his Doctrine able to ſave ſuch as receive it. 2. That he was the true Chriſt and Meſſias. 3. That he had been till that preſent, kept in a place unknown to all the Saints: and 4. that he was not to reſtore the houſe of Iſrael by death or tribulation, but by love and grace of the Spirit. He dyed in the yeare 1556. and three dayes after his Doctrine was by them of Baſil condemned, his goods confiſcate, and his bones taken up and burned. Hee bound his Diſciples to three things: 1. to conceal his name: 2. not to reveale of what condition hee had been: and 3. not to diſcover the articles of his Doctrine to any man in Baſil.

In that part thereof which is called North-Holland, lying betwixt the middle channel of the Rhene, and the Zuider-See, the towns or Cities of moſt importance are 1. Alamar, encompaſſed with deep fens and mariſhes, a rich town in regard of the great plenty of butter and cheeſe, which is made about it more then in any place in Holland, and famous for the defeat which the Duke of Alva received before it. For he in the beginning of the Low-countrey troubles, having with the loſſe of 20000 of his own men forced Harlem, laid his ſiege round about this town. Had he left any way for the ſouldiers to have fled thence, the town had been abandoned: but having environed them round, he put them to ſuch a reſolution or deſperation, (chooſe you whether) that manfully they reſiſted three of his aſſaults; and in the end made him depart with great loſſe as well of his ſouldiers, as his reputation. 2. Amſterdam, a very fair Haven Town, where divers times at one tide 1000 ſhips of all ſorts have been ſeen to goe out and in: So truly ſaid a modern Poet,

> Quod Tagus, atq; Hermus vehit, & Pactolus, in unum
> Vere hunc congeſtum dixeris eſſe locum.
> What Tagus, Hermus, and Pactolus beare;
> One would conjecture to be heap'd up here.

The people thereby made ſo rich, that if a fleet of 300 ſail ſhould come into the Port fraught with all kinde of commodities, in five or ſix dayes they would be ready to buy all the lading. Situate it is on the Gulph called the Tie, and the dike or channell called Amſtell, whence it hath the name of Amſteldam, in Latine Amſtelodunum: built upon piles like Venice, and reſembling it in ſo many points, that it may be juſtly called the Northern Venice. Firſt fortified with Towers and ramparts by Giſelbert of Amſtell about 300 yeares agone. But being burnt through the envy of its neighbours, it began to be walled anno 1482. Grown to this wealth ſince the diverting of the trade from Antwerp hither, and for that cauſe inhabited by men of all Nations, and of all Religions, and thoſe not onely tolerated and connived at in private, but openly and freely exerciſed without any diſlike. A greater Confuſion (in my minde) then that of Babel; this being of Religions, that of Languages only. 3. Harlem on the Lake called Harlem-meere, the greateſt Town of all Holland, and the ſecond for dignity; well built, and very pleaſantly ſituated amongſt many goodly meadowes, near a delightfull forreſt, and round about environed with wealthy Villages: famous for the invention of printing; invented here, but perfected at Mentz in higher Germany; the firſt book which was ever printed being Tullies Offices. 4. Naerden on the Zuider-See, fortified with a ſtrong Caſtle, held of the Earles of Holland by the Dukes of Brunſwick, to whom it antiently belonged. 5. Enchuiſen, on the very point of the Gulph of Zuider-See oppoſed to Friſeland, from which not diſtant above two leagues. A town of great conſequence to the prince of Orange in the firſt revolting of theſe Countries from the King of Spain. For ſiding with him in that war, and ſtanding conveniently to obſtruct the paſſages by Sea unto Amſterdam: it compelled that City in ſhort time, by ſtopping all ſupply of victuals and other neceſſaries, to yeeld it ſelfe unto the Prince. 6. Hoorn on the ſame Gulf alſo, a rich town with a very good Haven, and of ſo great ſtrength by reaſon of the multitude of Dikes and channels which are round about it, that it ſeemes impregnable. 7. Edam upon the ſame Gulfe (or

(or Zuider-See) remarkable for the great number of ships which are built yeerly in it; and an incredible number of the best Holland Cheeses made in the Countrey round about it. 8. Medemblick on the Ocean, seated in the best Countrey of Holland for the feeding of Cattell; unwalled, but enjoying all the priviledges which a walled town hath; and fortified with a right strong Castell. Zeland.

The chief of the Holland Villages is the Hague or Graven Hogue, in Latine Hoga Comitis, because formerly the Court and residence of the Earls of Holland, who had here a very large and beautifull Palace, founded by Earl William King of the Romans, and therein a chief and excellent Library gathered together by John Harie a Canon Regular of this place, and by him given to Charles the fift. In former time the residence of the Council for the Province of Holland; as it is now of the Commissioners or Delegates of the confederate Provinces, called by the name of the States-Generall. Now much increased in buildings, of what it was; and yet so great in the time of Lewis Guicciardine that it then contained 2000 housholds. The Inhabitants will not wall it, as desiring to have it rather accounted the chief Village in Europe, then the second City. The other Villages of note, 2. Egmond, 3. Brederode, 4. Wassenar, which anciently gave name to three Noble families: of which none but that of Brederode now left for ought I can learn. Neer to the last stood the famous Fortresse called Arx Britannica, built by Caligula in memory of his great battel upon this Shore. For making shew of a voyage into Britain to subdue that Island, he borded his Galley, embattelled his souldiers, caused his Trumpets to sound, gave them them the Signall, and then commanded them to gather Cockles. Which Tower or Fortresse was at the fall of the Roman Empire overwhelmed by the Sea, the ruins whereof at a dead low water are still to be seen.

Besides these places on the firm land or Continent, there are some Islands which pertain to the State of Holland, called by the generall name of Voorn, because situate directly against Holland, Voorn signifying as much as before, or in old English Bevorne: but known by their distinct and more proper names of Somersdike, 2. Gaurode, 3. Rierschille, so called of their principall townes: and 4. Voorn, specially so named, the chief of them all, being of a fat and fruitfull soil, plentifull of most sorts of grain. The principall townes whereof are 1. Briel (which we call the Brill) a strong town, and the first which revolted against the Spaniard, An. 1572. Cautionarie to the English with the town of Flusbing; chosen by them in regard of the great command it hath upon the passage to Gertrudenberg and the rest of Brabant, 2. Gerulit, a small town, but having a jurisdiction over many villages. There are also on the North side of Holland the Isles Wyerengeh and Texel; of which little memorable.

One speciall accident concerning Holland, I cannot over passe in silence, namely how Margaret Countesse of Hennenberg, and sister to William King of the Romans, being of the age of 42 years, was delivered at one birth of 365 children, the one half males, the other females, the odde one an hermaphrodite, christened at the Church of Lesdune not far from the Hague, by the names of John and Elizabeth, in two Basins, still to be seen the said Church, by Guido the Suffragan of Utrecht: all which immediately after dyed, and with them the mother.

The Armes of Holland of it self, as a State distinct, are Or, a Lyon Gules.

ZELAND, so called as some think quasi Sea and Land, consisteth of seven Islands, the remainder of 18 which the Sea hath swallowed; and in them 300 inhabited Townes. Severed from Flanders with the left branch or arm of the Schelde, which they called Houte, and on the East from Brabant with the right branch of the said River, which still keeps his name on the North from Holland, with the Gulph called the Flack; and on the West with the main Ocean from the Kingdom of England.

The Countrey generally more fruitfull then the neighbouring Brabant, producing great quantity of excellent corn, plenty of Coriander, and aboundance of Meder, used in dying: the soil also very rich in pasture, but low and marishy, which makes the air to bee very unhealthy, and the whole destitute both of fresh water and wood; the want of which last is supplyed with coal out of England and Scotland, or by Turf digged amongst themselves, but very sparingly for fear of weakning the Sea banks.

The whole containeth 8 Towns and 100 Villages. The Islands which remain, being divided into the Western and the Eastern, are 1. Walcheren, (Valachria in Latine) lying to the South-west of Sluys in Flanders, the richest and most populous of all this Province, in compasse 10 Dutch or 40 Italian miles. The principall towns of which are 1. Middleburg, seated upon a Creek of the Sea, well walled and fortified, the streets spacious, the houses and Churches well built; inhabited by wealthy Merchants and industrious tradesmen, and of late times (since the removing of the English trade from Antwerp) a most flourishing Emporie. So called, because built in the midst of the Islands; or because built (as saith Ortelius) by Prince Zelandus, of whom this Province was thus named, in honour of his Grandfather Metellus, and by him called Metelli Burgum. 2. Flusbing, of great note for its good Port and invincible strength. One of the first Townes which the Low-Countreymen took from the Spaniards, by the diligence of Veerst a Seaman, and Monsieur de Berland, then the Bayliffe thereof, and not long after put into the hands of the English, as a Town of Caution: the first Governour of it being the renowned Philip Sidney. A poore Town then it was, God wot, now the Key of the Netherlands, without whose licence no ship can passe either to or from the City of Antwerp, insomuch that if the Duke of Alva in the beginning of his Government had bestowed that paines in fortifying this and others of the Maritime Townes, as he did in the strengthening Zeland. Antwerp, and ſome mid-land Cities; he had in all probability hindred the remedileſſe revolt of theſe flouriſhing Countries. Not far off ſtandeth the Fort called the Rammikins, once cautionary to the Engliſh alſo, together with the Brill, the chief Town in the Iſle of Voorn, (an Iſle of Holland) all three being taken from the Spaniard, An. 1572. made Cautionary to Queene Elizabeth An. 1585. and finally ſurrendered by King James, to the States united An. 1616. Robert Lord Liſle (afterwards created Earl of Leiceſter) the brother of Sir Philip Sidney being then Governour of Fluſhing. 3. Kamne, or Armyden, an unwalled Town, but beautified with one of the goodlieſt and moſt frequented Havens in all the World: out of which one may ſometimes ſee 500 ſail of ſhips, of great burden, ſet forwards on their voiages to ſeverall parts. 4. Vere or Camfere, ſeated in the North part of the Iſland; which once gave title to a Marqueſſe, and from the which the noble Families of the Veres (now and of long time Earls of Oxford) took demomination. So as it is no marvell that ſo many of that family have ventured their Eſtates and lives in the wars of this Countrey being their Grandmother in a manner, or their Primitive Parent, from whence tranſplanted into England.

Antwerp,

2. SOVTH-BEVERLAND, ſituate betwixt Walcheren and Brrbant, the greateſt of the Iſles of Zeland, heretofore 20 Dutch miles in compaſſe, but now much diminiſhed by the rage and fury of the Sea; by which the Town and Signeury of Borſule, with all the Countries round about it, was ſwallowed up, An. 1532. That which remains hath in it many goodly Woods and pleaſant Thickets, full of Fowl and wilde Beaſts for hawking and hunting. Chief Towns here are 1. Romerſwall ſeated on the Eaſt towards Bergen op Some, ſevered at the ſame time from the reſt of the Iſland, and made an Iſland of it ſelf; defended with continuall charge from following the ſad fate of the Town of Borſule. 2. Goes, or Tergoes on the Northern Coaſt, a ſtrong Town, well priviledged, and the only walled Town in all the Iſland.

3. NORTH-BEVERLAND, lying betwixt South-Beverland and the Iſle of Showen, in former times eſteemed the Paradiſe of Zeland, and having in it a proper Town called Chort-Cheen; but ſo deſtroyed by the great Sea-breach ſpoken of before, that there is nothing now remaining but a few poor Villages.

4. WALFERSDIKE, lying between the two Beverlands, the ſmalleſt of the Weſtern Iſlands, as having in it no more then two Villages, but repleniſhed with good ſtore of Paſture.

And theſe are all which fall in the diviſion of the Weſtern Iſlands, ſo called becauſe they lie Weſtward of the River Schelds; as thoſe which they call the Eaſtern Iſlands, on the Eaſt thereof. Of which laſt there are three in number.

1. SCHOWEN, lying on the Northweſt of Holland, ſo neer unto North-Beverland in former times, that the Inhabitans could talk together from one ſhore to the other: but now the Sea hath ſet them at a greater diſtance. It containeth in compaſſe ſix Dutch miles; chief Towns wherein are 1. Siriczee, the antienteſt Town of all Zeland, once beautified with a fair and commodious Haven, now choaked up with beach; yet ſtill reputed for the ſecond Town of all the Province; the whole trade thereof conſiſting in Salt and Mader, of which it yeelds good plenty: moſt famous for the birth of Levinus Lemnius that renowned Philoſopher and Phyſitian. 2. Brewers-Haven, inhabited onely by Fiſhermen, not elſe remarkable.

2. DUVELAND, ſo named from the multitudes of Doves or Pigeons, ſituate between Schouwen and Tolen, in compaſſe about 4 Dutch miles; hath no good Town in it, but onely Countrey Villages and Gentlemens Farms. Surrounded by the Sea An. 1530. but by the induſtry and diligence of Adolph of Bugundy and Lord of Soferes in Flanders, recovered again; and at the exceſſive charge of the people hitherto preſerved.

3. TOLEN, ſo called from the chief Town of the Iſland, where the Earles toll was wont to be paid, whence it had the name; is ſituate over againſt the Northweſt of Brabant, from which disjoined by a narrow Creeke or Arm of the Sea: the ſecond Town of note being called S. Martins Dike, walled, but not otherwiſe conſiderable.

Agreeable to the quality of this Countrey of Zeland, are the Arms thereof; being Or, a Lyon Gules, riſing out of a Sea, wavie, Argent, & Azure.

WEST-FRISELAND hath on the Eaſt, Groyning-land, and a part of Weſtphalen in High-Germany; on the South Over-yſſell and the Zuider-See; on the North and Weſt, the main Ocean. The Countrey generally mooriſh and full of fennes, unapt for corn, but yeelding great ſtore of paſturage: which mooriſhneſſe of the ground makes the air very foggie and unhealthy; nor have they any fewell wherewith to rectifie it (except in that part of it which they call Seven-wolden) but turf and Cow-dung, which addes but little to the ſweetneſſe of an unſound air. Nor are they better ſtored with Rivers, here being none proper to this Countrey but that of Leuwers, the want of which is ſupplyed by great channels in moſt places, which doe not onely drain the Mariſhes, but ſupply them with water. Which notwithſtanding, their paſtures doe afford them a good breed of horſes fit for ſervice; plenty of Beeves both great and ſweet, the beſt in Europe next theſe of England: and thoſe in ſuch a large increaſe, that their Kine commonly bring two Calves, and their Ewes three lambs at a time.

The Countrey divided into three parts. In the firſt part called WESTERGOE, lying towards Holland, the principall towns are 1. Harlingen, an Haven town upon the Ocean, defended with a very ſtrong Caſtle. 2. Hindeloppen on the ſame Coaſt alſo; 3. Staveren an Hanſe Town, oppoſite to Enchuiſen, Enchuiſen in Holland; the town decayed, but fortified with a ſtrong Caſtle which ſecures the Haven. 4. Francker, a new Univerſity, or Schola illuſtris, as they call it. 5. Sneck in a low and inconvenient ſituation, but both for largeneſſe and beauty the beſt in this part of the Province, and the ſecond in eſteem of all the countrey. In Ooſtergoe, or the Eaſt parts lying towards Groiningland, the townes of moſt note are 6. Leuwarden, ſituate on the hinder Leuwars, the prime town of Weſt-Friſeland, and honoured with the ſupreme Court and Chancery hereof, from which there lyeth no appeal: a rich town, well built, and ſtrongly fortified. 7. Doccum, bordering upon Groyning, the birth place of Gemma Friſius. In SEVEN-VVOLDEN, or the Countrey of the Seven Forreſts, ſo called from ſo many ſmall Forreſts joining neer together, is no town of note; being long time a Woodland Countrey, and not well inhabited till of late. The number of the walled Townes is 11 in all; of the Villages or Burroughs 345. Holland.

To this Province belongeth the Iſle of Schelinke, the ſhores whereof are plentifully ſtored with Dog-fiſh, took by the Inhabitants in this manner. The men of the Iland attire themſelves with beaſts skins, and then fall to dancing; with which ſport the fiſh being much delighted, make out of the waters towards them; nets being pitched preſently betwixt them and the water. Which done, the men put off their diſguiſes, and the frighted fiſh haſtning towards the ſea, are caught in the toyles.

Touching the Friſons, heretofore poſſeſſed of this countrey, we ſhall ſpeak more at large when we come to Eaſt-Friſeland, poſſeſſed alſo by them, and ſtill continuing in the quality of a free Eſtate, governed by its own Lawes and Princes: here only taking notice that the Armes of this Friſeland are Azure, ſemy of Billets Argent, two Lyons Or.

The ancient Inhabitants of theſe three Provinces, were the Batavi, and Caninefates, inhabiting the Iſland of the Rhene ſituate betwixt the middle branch thereof and the Wael, which now containeth South-Holland, Vtrecht, and ſome part of Gueldres; the Friſii dwelling in Weſt-Friſeland and the North of Holland; and the Mattiaci, inhabiting in the Iſles of Zeland. By Charles the Bald, theſe countries being almoſt unpeopled by the Norman Piracies, were given to Thierrie, ſon of Sigebert a Prince of Aquitain, with the title of Earl: his Succeſſours acknowledging the Soveraignty of the Crown of France, till the time of Arnulph the 4. Earl, who atturned Homager to the Empire. In John the 2. they became united to the houſe of Hainalt; and in William the 3. to that of Bavaria: added to the eſtates of the Dukes of Burgundie in the perſon of Duke Philip the Good, as appeareth by this ſucceſſion of 1305 19 William III. ſurnamed the Good, Father of the Lady Philippa wife of one Edward the 3.

1337 20 William IV. of Holland, and the II. of Hainalt, ſlain in a war againſt the Friſons.

1351 22 William V. ſecond ſon of Lewis and Margaret, (his elder Brother Steven ſucceeding in Bavaria) in right of Maud his wife, daughter and coheir of Henry Duke of Lancaſter, ſucceeded in the Earldome of Leiceſter.

1377 23 Albert the younger Brother of William the fift, fortunate in his warres againſt the Friſons.

1404 24 William VI. Earl of Oſternant, and by that name admitted Knight of the Garter by King Richard the 2. eldeſt ſon of Albert.

1417 25 Jaqueline only daughter of Earl William the ſixt, firſt marryed to John the 4. Duke of Brebant, the ſon of Anthony of Burgogne, from whom divorced under colour of Conſanguinity, ſhe was marryed after to Humfrey Duke of Gloceſter, and then to Frank of Borſelles, a private Gentleman; being unworthily handled by Duke John of Burgundie, ſurrendred her eſtates to Duke Philip the Good.

26 Philip the Good, Duke of Burgundie, ſon of John Duke of Burgundie, and of the Lady Margaret ſiſter of Earl William the ſixt, and daughter of Albert, Earls of Hainalt, Holland, &c. ſucceeded on the reſignation of the Lady Jaqueline, his Couſin Germain: tranſporting theſe Eſtates to the houſe of Burgundie.

15. VTRECHT. 16. OVER-YSSELL.

The Biſhoprick of VTRECT, I mean the temporall juriſdiction and eſtate thereof, contained once all that tract of ground which now makes up the Provinces of Vtrecht, Over-Yſſell, and Groining. But Groining was long ſince diſmembred. Vtrecht and Over-Yſſell remaining parts thereof till the year 1528. when added to the reſt of the Belgick Provinces, by Charles the fift.

VTRECHT hath on the Eaſt Guelderland; on the Weſt, North, and South environed with Holland. The Countrey very fruitfull, much dryer then Holland, and ſo fitter for all ſorts of grain. It containeth 70. villages and five walled Towns, that is to ſay, 1. Wick at Duerſteed, ſituate on the middle Channell of the Rhene where it diverteth into the Leck; well built, and fortified anciently with a good Caſtle; ſuppoſed to be the Batavoducun ſpoken of by Tacitus, the manſion at that time of the ſecond Legion. 2. Rhenen, upon the ſame branch or Channell, whence it hath the name, about which is digged abundance of turfe for fewell. 3. Amesfort on the River Ems, (called in Latine Amiſia) a fair Town and well peopled. 4. Montfort, upon the Yſſell, pleaſantly ſeated and of great ſtrength, as being anciently a frontier Town againſt the Hollanders. 5. Vtrecht, ſituate on the middle Channell of the Rhene, firſt called Antonina, from one of the Antonines of Rome; but Dagobert King of France gave it the name of Trajectum (or Vltrajectum) we now call it Vtrecht, becauſe there was at that time the common Ferry over the River. The town large, beautifull, and very ſumptuouſly built, having in it many goodly Churches, of which five were anciently Collegiate, beſides two famous Monaſteries of noble women, ſuch as thoſe ſpoken of elſewhere: the private houſes well contrived, moſt of them having goodly cellars, vaulted with wonderfull art and skill, to which the people may reſort in all times of danger. Sometimes the Seat-Royall of Radbold King of the Friſons, then of the Biſhops; honoured of old with a Juridicall reſort for the parts adjoyning, and now the principall of this Province. A city ſo miraculouſly ſeated amongſt walled Towns, that a man may go from hence in one day to any one of 50. walled Towns or Cities, thence equally diſtant; or to any one of 26. Towns to dinner, and come home to bed.

OVER-YSSELL, in Latine, Tranſiſulana, ſo named from its ſituation beyond the Yſſell, is bounded on the Eaſt with Weſtphalen; on the Weſt with the Zuider-Zee; on the North with Weſt-Friſeland, on the South with Guelderland. The countrey very plain, and without hils, but wet, and mooriſh; affording excellent good paſturage, and not defective in corn. Divided into three parts, that is to ſay, Tuent, confining upon Weſtphalen; Yſſelland on the River Yſſell, and Drent beyond the River Vecht; in all which are contained 11. Towns and 100. Villages. The principall of which are, 1. Deventer, on the River Yſſell, ſtrong and well fortified, and withall beautifull and well peopled; an Hanſe town, and the chief of all this Province: firſt taken for the States by the Earl of Leiceſter; then then Governour of thoſe countries for Queen Elizabeth, anno 1586. treacherouſly reyeelded to the Spaniard by Sir William Stanley; but in the year 1590. again recovered by the States. 2. Swoll, ſtanding on a little River which runs into the Vidre, anciently fortified with a double ditch and very ſtrong ramparts; an Hanſe town, as is alſo 3. Campen, ſituate on the left ſhore and fall of the Yſſell into the Zuider-zee; a fair and large town, and of very great ſtrength by reaſon of thoſe inacceſſible mariſhes amongſt which it is ſituate. Theſe three are in that part hereof which is called Yſſelland, and by ſome Saland, by whom (erroneouſly) ſuppoſed to be the countrey of the ancient Salii. In that part hereof which is called Tuent, we have the Towns of 4. Oldenſel, 5 Enſchede, 6. Delden, 7. Almeloo; of which little memorable. And in that of Drent, the Town and Caſtle of Vallenhoven, ſtanding upon the Zuider-zee, well ſerved with all ſorts of victuals: for which cauſe made the ordinary reſidence of the Governour and ſupreme Councell for the whole Province. Guelderland.

The ancient inhabitants of theſe two Provinces, were ſome parts of the Batavi and Friſii minores for that of Vtrecht; the Bructeri, and (as ſome ſay) the Salii, in Over-yſſell: both Provinces belonging anciently to the Epiſcopall See of Vtrecht, founded by Dagobert King of France, who endowed it with great lands and territories; the firſt Biſhop being Willibald an Engliſhman, who converted theſe parts to Chriſtianity. His Succeſſours grew to ſo great power, that they were able to bring 40000. men into the field: and with great courage did maintain their eſtate and patrimony againſt the incroaching Earls of Holland. But at the laſt, having continued for the ſpace of 900. years, Henry of Bavaria Biſhop hereof, being extremely diſtreſſed with war by the Duke of Gueldres; and driven out of the City of Vtrecht by his own ſubjects (perhaps upon ſome humour of Reformation) alienated all the temporalties of his Biſhoprick to Charles the fift, anno 1527. And the next year, the Imperialiſts by one of the factions were let into Vtrecht; at what time both the Eſtates of the Countrey, and Pope Clement the 7. confirmed the Alienation made by the Biſhop. After which ſolemne Acts of theirs, the Emperour cauſed himſelf to be inveſted in this eſtate by the States of the Empire (for Vtrecht was of old an Imperiall Fief;) and for the better Government and adminiſtration of it, divided it into two Provinces, as it ſtill coutinueth. But what this Biſhop loſt in power, his Succeſſours not long after gained in title: the Biſhop of Vtrecht being made an Archbiſhop or Metropolitane, anno 1561. but by reaſon of the change of Religion which was then working, and the falling off of theſe Countries which ſoon after followed, he had but little joy in his new preferment.

17. GVELDERLAND. 18. ZUTPHEN, and 19. GROINING.

The Dukedome of Guelderland, at ſuch time as it was firſt taken in by Charles the fift contained under it, the Dutchy of Guelders properly and ſpecially ſo called, the Earldome of Zutphen, and the Town and Seigneurie of Groining: held by diſtinct titles, and governed ever ſince their union with the Belgick Provinces, as diſtinct Eſtates.

GVELDERLAND is bounded on the Eaſt with Cleveland, and the Earldome of Zutphen; on the Weſt with Holland and Vtrecht; on the North with Over-yſſell, and the Zuider-Zee; and on the South with Brabant and the land of Gulick. The countrie flat, having few hils in it, but many pleaſant and commodious woods, eſpecially that called Echterwalt; of corne and cattell very fruitfull.

The whole Countrey is generally divided into two parts. 1. The Veluwe, contained within the Zuider-Zee, the Rhene, and the Yſſell, the barrener of the two and the worſe inhabited, the people hereof preferring wealth before health as in other places; but affording a more pure aire and a pleaſanter dwelling then the other, the woods and forreſts well repleniſhed with moſt kinds of game. 2. The Betuwe (ſo called of the Batavi who poſſeſſed theſe parts) intercepted betwixt the middle Rhene and the Wael, exceedingly fruitfull in corn, and of ſo excellent a paſturage for the feeding of Cattell, that in the year 1570. there was a Guelderland Bull ſold in Antwerp which weighed 3200. pounds.

In both diviſions (not reckoning in the county of Zutphen) are contained 300. villages, and 16. walled Towns, beſides ſome fortified of late ſince the wars began. The chief whereof are 1. Nimmegent (in Latine, Noviomagus) an Imperial City, ordained by Charles the great to be one of the three Seiges of the Empire for theſe outer parts, the other two being Theonville in Luxembourg, & Aix or Aken in the land of Gulick. And as a Town Imperiall it had anciently the priviledge of coyning money: for which and other freedomes of immunities indulged unto it, the people did no other ſervice to the Emperours, then once a year to ſend a man to Aix or Aquiſgrane, with a Glove full of Pepper. But the town being ſold to the Gueldrois by William Earl of Holland and King of the Romans for 21000. marks of ſilver, anno 1248. the power of coynage fell to thoſe Princes; and yet the Town was brought to do better ſervice, then formerly it had done at Aken. The Town high mounted on the top of an hill, the Wael which is there large and deep running at the foot of it: rich, great, and populous, having beſides the modern fortifications an ancient Caſtle with ſo goodly a proſpect, that from thence one may behold the beſt part of the countrey; built, as ſome ſay, by Julius Ceſar to command thoſe parts. Under the juriſdiction of it are 2. Tiel, and 3. Bomel, two walled Towns, both ſituated on the Wael, both ſtrong, and having many rich villages under their command; and 4. Gheut, on the Zutphen. Wael alſo, an unwalled Town, but having all the priviledges which the walled Towns have. Not far off, at the firſt meeting of the Wael and the Maes, ſtands the ſtrong Fort of S. Andrews, raiſed by the Archduke Albert to command the paſſage of thoſe Rivers; but in the year 1600. taken in by Maurice Count of Naſſaw (after Prince of Orange) and ever ſince garriſoned by the States to ſecure that paſſage. 5. Riuermond, ſeated on the mouth of the Ruer, where it falleth into the Maes; a beautifull and well peopled City, ſtrong by Art and Nature, and ſeated in a fruitfull countrey: heretofore of the Diocele of Leige (as Nimmegen anciently of Colen) but made a See Epiſcopall by King Philip the 2; anno 1559. This is the ſecond Capitall City of Guelderland, and hath under the juriſdiction of it, 6. Venlo, a ſtrong Town on the Maes, on which the Duke of Cleve yeelded himſelf to Charles the fift, anno 1543. 7. Gueldres, heretofore of ſuch reputation that it gave name to all the countrey; and well it doth deſerve to do ſo ſtill, being the only Town in all this Dukedome which neither firſt nor laſt hath been won by the Hollanders; but ſtill preſerved themſelves in their obedience to their natural Princes. 8. Strael, or Straelen, a well fortified piece, but which, according to the chances of War, hath oft changed its maſters. 9. Arnhem, the Arenacum of Tacitus, and in thoſe times the manſion of the 10 Legion, ſituate on the Rhene, not above a mile from the great Channell, which Druſus to keep his ſouldiers from idleneſſe cauſed them to dig, to let the waters of the Rhene into thoſe of the Yſſell; called therefore by the Ancients Foſſa Druſiana, by the moderns Yſſell-Dort. The Town large and well-built; the ordinary reſidence heretofore of the Dukes of Guelderland, who had here their Chancery, and other ſupreme Courts of juſtice. This is the third Capitall City of Gueldres (anciently of the Dioceſe of Vtrecht) and hath under the juriſdiction of it, beſides divers Villages, 10. Wagheninghen on the Rhene, the ſame which Tacitus cals Vada. 11. Harderwick on the Zuider-See, burnt to the ground anno 1503. but ſince reedified, and now more ſtrong and beautfull then ever formerly. 12. Hattem upon the Yſſell, a good town of war, but not elſe obſervable.

Within the limits of this Dukedome ſtands the Town and County of Culemberg, erected into a County by King Philip the ſecond, by reaſon of the fair territory which belonged unto it, formerly held in Fee of the Dukes of Guelderland, but otherwiſe not reckoned as a Member of it. 2. The Town and Earldome of Buren, ſituate on the River Liughe, having a ſtrong Caſtle anciently, and a goodly territory; holden immediately of the Empire as a Fief Imperiall. The patrimony of the valiant Maximilian of Egmond, Earl of Buren, who died anno 1549. after whoſe death it fell to Philip of Naſſaw eldeſt ſonne of William Prince of Orange, and Anne the daughter of the ſaid Maximilian.

ZVTPHEN, accompted formerly for the 4. Capitall City of Guelderland, now a diſtinct Province of it ſelf, is bounded on the Eaſt with Weſtphalen; on the Weſt with that part of Guelderland which is called the Veluwe; on the North with Over-yſſell; on the South with Cleveland. It containeth 8. walled Towns beſides many Villages; that is to ſay, 1. Doetecum, ſtanding on the old Yſſell, riſing out of Weſtphalen. 2. Doesburg, where the old Yſſell falleth into the new Yſſell, or the trench called Foſſa Druſiana, communicating thereunto its name. 3. Brookhurſt, a County of it ſelf, which anciently had its particular Governour. 4. Lochen upon the River Berkell. 5. Yſheerenbergue, a Town and County. 6. Groll taken by the Prince of Orange for the States Confederate, anno 1627. 7. Brederword, a town of war, and ſubject to the change of Maſters, as ſuch places are. 8. Zutphen, or Zuidſen, ſo called of the Southern ſituation of it amongſt the Fennes, on the right ſhore of the Yſſell, where it receiveth in it the River Berkel, which runs through the Town. A Town indifferently well built, as well for private as publick edifices; a diſtinct ſtate in Civill matters, but in ſpirituall ſubject (in former times) to the Biſhop of Munſter: a thing obſervable, and not to be paralleld elſewhere, that the four chief Towns and quarters of one Province only, ſhould appertain (as here in Guelderland) to four ſeverall Dioceſes. Of which there may ſome reaſon be aſſigned for Zutphen, in regard it is a State more ancient then that of Guelderland it ſelf; and not depending anciently on the fortunes of it: united to it by the marriage of Otho of Naſſaw, the firſt Earl of Guelderland, with Sophia daughter and heir of Wickman the laſt Earl of Zutphen. So as this Earldome ended when that firſt began. After this it continued ſubject to the Earls and Dukes of Gueldres, till the revolt of Holland and the other Provinces from the King of Spain, at what time it was beſieged for the States by the Earl of Leiceſter; at the ſiege whereof fell that gallant Gentleman Sir Philip Sidney, of whom our Britiſh Epigrammatiſt thus verſifieth.

Digna legi ſcribis, facis & digniſſima ſcribi;
Scripta probant doctum te tua, facta probum.

Thou writ'ſt things worthy reading, and didſt doe
Things worthy writing too.
Thy Acts thy valour ſhow
And by thy works we do thy learning know.

And though upon the loſſe of that gallant man (nephew and heir unto that Earl) the ſiege was raiſed at the preſent; yet was it re-enforced again anno 1190. and the Town then taken; continuing ever ſince in the confederacy of the States united.

GROI-

Groining-land.

GROINING-LAND, hath on the east East-Friseland, on the west West-Friseland, on the North the main Ocean, on the South Over-yssell; so wedged in as it were betwixt both Frislands, that some hold it to be but a part of the West. It containeth under it the Country called the Ommel nds, (corruptly for the Emmelands, as I conjecture, because lying along the River Ems) and therein 145 Burroughs and Villages: the chief whereof are 1. Dam, near the Ems, bordering on East-Friseland: 2 Keykirk: 3. Old-Haven, standing on the Sea. As for the town of Groyning it self, it is rich, great, and very well built, situate amongst divers small streames which run through it; and having also divers Channels for conveyance of waters, which addes much to the safety and strength thereof. A town of great jurisdiction, both within, and without, judging absolutely without appeals in causes, both Civill, and Criminall; in Spirituall, subject heretofore to the Bishop of Munster, till made one of the new Bishopricks by King Philip the second, anno 1559. And though the Prince in Civill causes had his officer or Lieutenant there; yet in Criminall the town was Soveraign, and granted pardons as Soveraign of the whole estate, paying to the Prince for all duties yeerly, but 6000 Crowns. Both Town and Country anciently belonged to the Bishops of Utrecht, by whose negligence in defending them, they submitted their estate to the Dukes of Guelderland. But the Dukes of Saxonie laying some claim to it, disturbed this agreement for a time; during which Ezardus the Earl of East-Friseland possessed himself of it; but not able to make good his unjust possession, sold his estate therein to Gueldres, anno 1514. to whom of right it did belong. Afterwards in the yeer 1536. they put themselves under the command of Charles the fift, but with the reservation of all their priviledges, and ancient Liberties: for preservation of the which, in danger to be over-born by the power of the Spaniard, they confederated with the rest of the united States, anno 1594. and so still continue.

The antient inhabitants of these Countries were the Menapii and Sicambri, very valiant people possessing Guelderland, and the Majores Frisii, which were planted in Groyning, and the rest of Friseland. Of these the Sicambri were accompted the most valiant people, uniting with other nations in the name of French, and by that name, possessing with the rest of those Nations, the mighty Empire of the West. In the division whereof, by the posterity of Charles the Great, these Countries were first part of the Kingdome of Austrasia, or East-France, afterwards of the Germane Empire: governed at the first by Guardians, or Protectours, created by the people in the reign of Charles the Bald: the two first being Wickard, and Lupold (or Leopold) two Brethren; who fixing their chief Seat in the Castle of Gueldres, occasioned the whole Country to be called Guelderland. But they, and their successours, by what name or title soever called, were in effect but Provinciall Officers, accomptable to the Emperours for their administration; the first free Prince hereof being Otho of Nassaw, who having to his first wife, the Lady Aleide, daughter of Wickard, the last Guardian; was by the Emperour Henry the third made first Earl of Guelderland: adding thereto the State of Zutphen, by a second marriage, as is said before. In Reinold the ninth Earl it was made a Dukedome by the Emperour Lewis of Bavaria, anno 1339. sold by Duke Arnold (justly incensed at his ungracious son Adolp) to Charles Duke of Burgundy, for 92000 Florens of ready money, and an Annuall pension, anno 1472. But notwithstanding this Agreement, Adolph (upon the death of Charles) possessed himself of it, and left it unto Charles his son; who finally surrendred it unto Charles the fift, anno 1547.

EARLS and DUKES of GVELDERLAND.

1079 1 Otho of Nassaw the first Earl.
2 Gerard, the son of Oth, by his first wife Aleide.
1131 3 Henry, the son of Gerard.
1162 4 Gerard II. son of Henry.
1180 5 Otho II. brother of Gerard.
1202 6 Gerard III. son of Otho the second.
1229 7 Otho III. son of Gerard, who walled the towes of Ruermond, Arnhem, Bonel, Goch, Wagenitgen, and Harderwick.
1271 8 Reinold, son of Otho the third, taken and imprisoned till his death, by 1326 9 Rainold II. his own son, created the first Duke of Gueldres, by the Emperour Lewis of Bavaria, at Francfort, Anno 1339. liberall to the poor, and a great Patron of the Muses.
1343 10 Rainold III. son of Rainold the 2d, molested with continuall wars with his brother Edward, by whom taken, and imprisoned till his dying day.
1371 11 Edward, the son of Rainold the second, by Eleanor the daughter of Edward the third of England, his second wife, dyed the same yeer with his brother; the last of the male issue of Otho of Nassaw.
1371 12 Mary, (by some called Joan) Sister of Edward, by the same venter, and wife of William Earl of Gulick.
13 William, son of William Duke of Gulick, and Mary of Gueldres, admitted Knight of the Garter by King Richard the second.
14 Rainold IV. the brother of William.
15 Arnold of Egmond, son of John Lord of Egmond, and Mary his wife, daughter of Joan, the sister of Rainold, and William, the two last Dukes, succeeded in the estate of Gueldres; taken, imprisoned imprisoned, and most barbarously handled by his own son Adolph, and delivered by Charles the Warlike, Duke of Burgundie, he sold to him his estates of Gueldres, and Zutphen, to be injoyed by him after his decease, anno 1472.

1473 16 Adolph, the wicked son of Arnold, dispossessed of his estate by the said agreement which Duke Charles enjoyed for his life; after the death of the said Charles was restored to liberty by the Gauntois, anno 1467. and made the Generall of their forces against Lewis the eleventh.

1477 17 Charles, son of Arnold, after long wars with the Princes of the houses of Burgundy and Austria, pretending the sale and legacy of Duke Arnold, to Charles the Warlike; surrendred his estates unto Charles the fift, to be enjoyed by him after his decease, if he left no issue. According to which contract, the Emperor Charles succeeded him in Gueldres and Zutphen, anno 1538. being the year of his decease: after that time accompted in the number of the Belgick Provinces.

The Armes hereof were Quarterly, 1. Azure, a Lyon Or, crowned Gules; for the Dukedome of Guelderland; 2. Azure, a Lyon Gules, for the Earldome of Zutphen.

Thus have we seen a Country, which at the first erecting of these Estates, was nothing in a manner but bogs and marishes; and at the best, but a continuall Wilderness of woods and forrests: by the great providence of the Princes, and extreme industry of the People, made the most populous, best planted, and the wealthiest Estate (for the bigness of it) in the whole habitable world. And we have seen those severall Estates and Principalities, by Marriages, and other Contracts, reduced into the hands of the house of Burgundy: under the Princes of which great and illustrious Family, inferiour to no Kings of Christendome for Power and Riches, especially Duke Philip the Good; the subjects hereof did so abound in wealth and plenty, that Philip de Comines who then lived, affirmeth that this Country seemed like the land of Promise. Some thought there was a purpose in this Duke Philip, of erecting these estates into a Kingdome; diverted from it by the difference and variety of Lawes and Priviledges, which those people severally lived under; not to be brought without great difficulty and distaste, to one forme of Government: yet might have done it, if he would, as himself openly affirmed to the Embassadours of King Lewis the 11. But Charles his son being more bent on the designe, negotiated to that end with the Emperour Frederick, whom he met at Triers, anno 1473, and doubtlesse had obtained his purpose, upon the marriage of his daughter with Maximilian, Fredericks son (which was then propounded) had not his rash ingagement against the Swissers, and his untimely death therein, broke the course of his projects; which projects had they took effect, as in all probability they had but for that engagement, he had extended his dominions all along the Rhene, and on both sides of it, from the Alpes unto the German Ocean; and been the most considerable Prince at that time in Christendome: all Elsats in high Germany, being sold, or mortgaged to him by the Duke of Austria, the Dukedome of Lorrain at his mercy; besides, the hopes he had of the Earldome of Provence, intended to him by King Reny, which would have opened him a way to the Mediterranean: he being dead, the Government continued, as before it was; each Province having its distinct Lawes and living according to their ancient Priviledges, till the attempt of Philip the second, King of Spain; most resolutely (but unfortunately) bent to bring them under the command of that Crown, to cancell all their priviledges, and new mould the Estate, according to his own will and pleasure: occasioning thereby the Revolt of a great part of the Country; and the setting up of a new Estate, opposite unto him, and destructive of his interesse in it. But before we come unto this change, we will first look upon the Princes Power, Revenue, and other things considerable touching this Estate whilest it stood entire under the Princes of the house of Burgundie, and

LORDS of BELGIVM.

1369 1 Philip the Hardie, Duke and Earl of Burgundie, Earl of Flanders and Artois, the first great raiser of this House.

1404 2 John the Proud, Duke of Burgundie, &c.

1419 3 Philip the Good, added to his estate the Dukedomes of Brabant and Limbourg, the Marquisat, and Machlin, by the death of his cousin Philip; the Earldomes of Hainalt, Holland, Zeland, and the Lordship of West-Friseland, by the resignation and death of the Countesse Jaqueline, whose next Heir he was; the Dukedome of Luxemburg, and the Earldome of Namur, which he bought for money.

1467 4 Charles the Warlike, who bought the Estates of Gueldres and Zutphen; and held them peaceably all his life.

1476 5 Mary, the daughter and Heir of Charles, married to Maximilian, son of the Emperour Frederick; from whom King Lewis the eleventh of France took the Dukedome of Burgundie, and the greatest parts of the Counties of Burgundie, and Artois; unfortunately killed with a fall from her horse, and an unseasonable modesty in not suffering the Chirurgians to dresse her wound; the hurt which she had taken being in her thigh.

1482 6 Philip III. sonne of Mary and Maximilian, to whom Charles the eight of France restored all the places in Artois, and the County of Burgundie taken by his Father: married Joane daughter of Ferdinand and Isabel, Kings of Spain. 1506

1506 7 Charles II. Arch-Duke of Austria, King of Spain, and Emperour of that name the fift; added to his Eſtate in theſe Countries, the Dukedome of Guelderland, the Earldome of Zutphen, the Lordſhips of Utrecht, Over-yſſell, and Groyning. Guelderland.

1558 8 Philip IV. of Belgium, and the II of Spain, invading theſe Countries againſt their priviledges, was by a great part of them rejected from being their Prince, anno 1581. which made him after a long and a bloody war, to ſurrender all his intereſſe in them to 1599 9 Iſabella Clara Eugenia his daughter, and Albert Archduke of Auſtria, whom he married to her: during whoſe Government, a truce for 12 years was made, and in the preface to that Truce the Confederate Eſtates declared to be treated with as a Free Eſtate, to whom the Kings of Spain could pretend no title.

16 10 Philip V. of Belgium, and the IV. of Spaine on the decreaſe of the Arch-Ducheſſe Iſabella his Aunt, ſucceeded in the poſſeſſion of ſome, and the title unto all the Belgick Provinces.

The ordinary Revenue of theſe Countries to the Dukes of Burgundie, and after to the Kings of Spain, before the breach, were eſtimated at three millions of Crowns yearly, which was more then any King in Chriſtendome at thoſe times received; the French onely excepted: the very meaſuring of corn in the City of Antwerp, being farmed yearly for 100000 Crowns in ready mony; But the extraordinary was far greater: the Eſtates of theſe Countries in the year 1550 granting to Charles the fift an Aide, which they call the Noventale, amounting to 150000 crowns a moneth; and yet the Provinces of Luxenbourg, Limbourg, Gueldres, and Groyning, were not rated to it: And it is ſaid, that Philip the ſecond at his firſt coming to the Eſtate, was preſented with a grant of 40 millions of Florens, to be paid in few years. So that theſe Countries were the true Cofrelative of both his Indies: the loſſe of which, before the making of the truce, anno 1609. coſt him above 100 millions of Crownes, and the loſſe of 400000 men.

The Forces of theſe Princes by Land, may beſt be ſeen in the expedition of Charles (then Earl of Charolois) againſt Lewis the eleventh, whom Duke Philip the Good his father furniſhed to that enterpriſe with 9000 Archers, and 1400 men of Armes, every one of which had five or ſix great horſes attending on him: and at his ſetting forward, was told by his Father, (never accompted for a Braggart) that if he fell into any danger, he ſhould not be abandoned for the want of 100000 fighting men. The ſaid Duke having thus ſent away his ſon, and being provoked by the indignities of thoſe of Leige, and Dinand, who revolted from him: ſuddenly raiſed an Army of 28000 horſe, and a proportionable number of foot, for the chaſtiſement of that proud and rebellious people. And Charles himſelf, ſucceeding on the death of his Father in his unproſperous attempt upon the Switzers, had no leſſe then 80000 men at the ſiege of Morat. As for their power at Sea, I find not that they kept any ſtanding Navy, nor needed they ſo to doe, as the caſe ſtood with them, conſidering that when they had occaſion of any ſuch ſervice, they uſed to take up all the Ships which they found in their harbours (of which there never wanted good ſtore) employing as many as they pleaſed, and diſmiſſing the reſt.

The principall order of Knighthood ordained by theſe Princes, was that of the Golden Fleece, firſt inſtituted by Duke Philip the Good (in imitation of the Order of S. George in England) anno 1430. The name and fancy borrowed, as ſome conceive, from Gedeons Fleece; from Jaſons Fleece, as others think; but more probably from the Golden Fleeces of England, which brought him in ſo much gold and treaſure in the way of cuſtome. Their Habit is a Collar of Gold interlaced with irons ſeeming to ſtrike fire out of a Flint, (ex ferro flammam being the word:) at the end whereof hung the Toiſon d'Or, or Fleece of Gold. Their number at the firſt was but 25. (which is the number of Knights of the Engliſh Garter) increaſed afterwards by the ſame Duke Philip unto thirty one. Charles the firſt raiſed them to fifty one: And now the King of Spain hath aſſumed a liberty of making as many as he pleaſeth: this being the onely Military, or Civill Order of which thoſe Kings have the beſtowing; the orders of Alcantara, Calatrava, and the reſt of Spaniſh inſtitution, being rather Religious, and Monaſticall, at the beſt but mixt. Saint Andrewes day, the day of the Inſtallation.

In this great Pomp and Glory did theſe Princes live, as long as they continued in good termes with the ſubject Provinces being maſters of more goodly Jewels, magnificent furniture for their houſes, & coſtly moveables then any 3 of the greateſt Princes in all Europe. And on the other ſide, the ſubjects whilſt they lived in duty under ſo great Princes, attained unto the height of all worldly happineſſe: in their Apparell exceſſively gorgeous, in their Feaſts and Banquets over-ſumptuous, in their Manners diſſolute, vices which uſually accompany that kind of felicity. An happineſſe too great to continue long. By the ambition and violence of Charles the Warlike, they were firſt plunged into a war againſt Lewis the eleventh, of which they did not only feel the preſent miſeries, but loſt all the Towns and Holds which they had in Picardy, with the whole Dutchy of Burgundy. And by a like, but better grounded Ambition of Charles the fift, they were exerciſed in continuall wars againſt the French, who miſerably harrowed, and ranſacked the Countries of Luxemburg, Hainelt, and Artois, bordering next unto them. Charles at his death commended them to the eſpeciall care of Philip his ſon, adviſing him to uſe them kindly, as thoſe that were the chief ſupporters of his State and Glory: adding, that if he ſhould deal otherwiſe with them, it would prove the ruine of his Fortunes. And on the other ſide, the People, to obtain his favour, preſented him at his firſt entrance on the Government, vernment, with a grant of 40 millions of Florens, as before was ſaid. But he tranſported with ambition, and a Catholick zeal, not onely forgot their love, but his fathers counſell; and had no ſooner concluded on a peace with France, effected by the treaty of Cambray, anno 1559. but preſently he caſt his thoughts on the ſubjection of this people to his will and pleaſure. For they were ſo fortified with Priviledges, which their former Princes had granted, and the latter had been ſworn to obſerve, that he wanted much of that abſolute and uncontrollable command, which he ſtrongly aimed at. Some of which Priviledges were, that the Prince could place no ſtranger amongſt them, with juriſdiction over their Eſtates and perſons, in Offices of war or juſtice. 2. The Prince could give nothing to the Clergy: nor 3 leavy any ſubſidies, without the States of the Country. But the main Prerogative was, that if the Prince by violence or wrong, did infringe any of the ſaid Charters and Franchiſes, the people after the declaration thereof made might goe to election of a new Prince. This not a little grieved the Spaniards, that ſuch baſe and unworthy people (for ſo they eſteemed them) ſhould in ſuch liberty poſſeſſe ſo brave and rich a Country; their King bearing no title of Majeſty, or abſolute command over them. Beſides, the Reformation of Religion, which then began to grow to ſome ſtrength, moved the King to reduce them back to the Church of Rome, by the power and terrour of the Inquiſition; and by the erecting of ſome new Epiſcopall Sees amongſt them (for before there were but three in all) to ſettle ſome more conſtant courſe of Eccleſiaſtical Diſcipline: Againſt both which, when the people violently oppoſed, he then reſolved of bringing them by Spaniſh Rhetorick (that is, by the Sword and the Cannon) to their old obedience. To theſe ends he ſent the Duke of Alva, an old and expert Captain (as having 60 years been a Souldier) with a puiſſant Army to be his Vice-Roy among them. He alſo gave him a Commiſſion of that large extent, that he might place and diſplace whom he would, and execute all ſuch as he could finde oppoſite to his deſignes. At that time the two chief men among them were the Prince of Orenge, and Count Egmont: the firſt more potent with the people, the latter, with the Souldiers. Had theſe two joyned together, they might eaſily have prevented D. Alva's entrance; but Egmont was ſo ſoothed up with Letters from Spain, that he believed not the Intelligence which the Prince had concerning the Dukes Commiſſion. The Earl exhorted the Prince to ſubmit himſelf to the pleaſure of the King, and ſo to prevent the ruine of his houſe: The Prince deſired the Earl to maintain the Liberty of the Country; as for himſelf, He had rather be a Prince without an Houſe, then a Count without an Head. Being thus reſolved, the Prince retires to his friends of Naſſaw, in high Germany; the Earl ſtayeth to congratulate the entrance of the new Governour: who had no ſooner ſetled himſelf, but he intrapped the Counts of Horne and Egmond, and beheaded them, anno 1567. Being thus rid of theſe two, with diverſe others of good quality, who living would have much hindred his proceedings; he quartered his Spaniards in the Townes and Provinces, ſpoiled the people, not of their Priviledges onely, but their Liberty. Among the Reformed he brought in the bloudy Inquiſition; and indeed ſo tyrannically did he behave himſelf, that the people were forced to a defenſive war, as well for their lives, as ſubſtance. This was a war of State, not Religion; the moſt part of the Hollanders being Papiſts, at the time of their taking Armes. During theſe troubles, the Prince of Orenge was not idle; but he in one place, and Count Lodewick his brother, in another, kept Duke Alva imployed; though divers times not with ſuch fortunate ſucceſſe as they did expect. In the year 1572, Fluſhing was ſurpriſed by Voorſt, and Berland, as we have before ſaid. So alſo was the Brill in Voorne, an Iſland of Holland, by the Count de la March, and not long after, all Holland, except Amſterdam, followed the fortune and ſide of the Prince, together with all the towns of Zeland, Midleburg excepted, Anno 1573. Duke Alva being recalled, Don Lewis de Requiſens was appointed Governour; during whoſe rule many of the Belgians abandoned their Country: ſome flying into Germany, others into France, moſt into England. After his death, and before the arrivall of Don John, the Priuce and his party recovered ſtrength and courage again, till the coming of the Prince of Parma, who brought them into worſe caſe then ever. Yet anno 1581. they declare by their writings directed to all people, that Philip of Spain was fallen from the Government: and take a new oath of the People, which bound them never to return to the Spaniſh obedience. This done, they elect Francis Duke of Anjou, heir apparent to the French King, and then in no ſmall hopes of marrying Queen Elizabeth of England, to be their Lord. But he intending rather to ſettle a Tyranny in himſelf, then to drive it from the Spaniard, attempted Antwerp, put his men into the town, but was by the valour of the Burgers ſhamefully repulſt. Shame of this ignoble enterpriſe, eſpecially grief for its ill ſucceſſe, took him out of the world. About which time, the eſtate of theſe Countries was thus by this Hieroglyphick expreſſed. A Cow repreſented the body of Belgium: there ſtood the King of Spain ſpurring her, the Queen of England feeding her, the Prince of Orenge milking her, and Duke Francis plucking her back by the tail, but ſhe foul'd his fingers. During his unfortunate Government, Parma prevailed in all places, eſpecially after the death of William Prince of Orenge, treacherouſly ſlain with a Piſtoll, anno 1584. Now were the poor Hollanders truly miſerable; deſperate of pardon from their Prince, and having none to lead them, none to protect them, but ſuch as were likely to regard their own profit more then theirs. England was the only ſanctuary they had now left: to which they ſue, offering the Queen thereof the ſoveraignty of their Provinces, who had, if not a true, yet a plauſible title to them: As being generally deſcended from Edward the third, and Philip his Wife, who was ſiſter, and (as ſome ſay) Heir to William Earl of Hainalt, Holland, &c. If Margaret, from whom the right of Spain is derived, were daughter to Earl William, then was our Queen to ſucceed after Philip, who was rejected: if that Margaret were (as many write) his younger ſiſter, then was our Queen the undoubted Heir: her predeceſſour Philippa being Earl Williams eldeſt ſiſter. But that Heroick Queen not diſputing the right of the title, nor intending to herſelf any thing, ſave the honour of relieving her diſtreſſed neighbours; and providing for her own eſtate, by this diverſion; took them into her protection. Under which the Belgian affairs ſucceeded ſo proſperouſly (I will not now ſtand upon the particulars) that before they would hearken to any treaty of peace, they forced the King of Spain to this concluſion, that he treated with them as with a free Eſtate, abſtracted from all right and title, which he might pretend unto the places which they were poſſeſſed of. This peace was concluded anno 1609. ſince which time, they have kept Garriſons well diſciplined, and as well paid: ſo that theſe Countries have in theſe late dayes been the Campus Martius, or School of defence for all Chriſtendome, to which the youth of all Nations repair to ſee the manner of Fortifications, and learn the art of war. Thus did they for 40 years hold the ſtaffe againſt a moſt puiſſant Monarch, and in the end capitulated with great advantage; that it is obſerved, that whereas all other Nations grow poor by war, theſe only grow rich. Whereupon it is remarkable to conſider into what follies and extremities Princes run, by uſing their people to the warre. The Kings of France place moſt of their hopes in their Cavalrie, becauſe in policie they would not that the Vulgar ſhould be exerciſed in arms. Lycurgus gave a Law to the Lacedemonians, that they ſhould never fight often with one enemie: the breaking whereof, made the Thebans a ſmall Common-wealth, to be their equals in power. The Turks won the vaſt Empire they now poſſeſſe, by making many and ſpeedy wars. But now that policy being worn out of faſhion, we ſee that (to omit Perſia) the little and diſtracted Kingdom of Hungarie, hath for 200 years reſiſted their Forces. So was it between the Dukes of Auſtria and the Switzers; and ſo it is betwixt the Spaniard and Low-country men, who formerly being accounted a dull and heavy people, altogether unfit for the wars; by their continuall combating with the Spaniard, are become ingenious, full of action, and great managers of cauſes appertaining to fights either by Sea or Land. We may hereby alſo perceive what advantage a ſmall State gaineth by fortifying places and paſſages; there being nothing which ſooner breaketh a great Army, and undoeth a great Prince, then to beleaguer a well fortified town: for that herein he conſumeth his time, and commonly loſeth his men, credit, and money, as the Romans before Numantia; the great Turk in Malta, and Charls of Burgundie before Nancie. For where war is drawn out of the field unto the wals, the Mattock and Spade being more neceſſary then the Sword and Spear, there the valour of the aſſailant is little available, becauſe it wanteth its proper object.

Thus as before we brought theſe ſeverall Eſtates and Provinces into one hand; ſo now we have broke them into two, the one part continuing in obedience to the Crown of Spain, the other governing themſelves as a State apart. Under the King remain the Dukedoms of Luxembourg, Limbourg, and Brabant, (ſome few towns excepted) the Marquiſate of the Empire, the Earldoms of Hainalt, Namur, Artois and Flanders (except only S. Ivjs) and the Lorſhip or Signeurie of Machlyn; with many places of importance in the Dutchie of Gueldres, to countervail the towns with-held from them in Flanders and Brabant. This is by far the greater part of the Countrie, and more fruitfull in regard of the Commodities there naturally growing; but as much inferiour to the other in power and riches by reaſon of their ſtrength in ſhipping, by which they have the command at Sea, and thereby draw the whole trade of Chriſtendom, driven before at Antwerp, to Amſterdam, and other towns of their confederacie.

For the government of theſe Provinces, there is a Regent ſent from the Court of Spain, whoſe authoritie is generally as great as that of the Kings, ſave that all matters of moment paſſe under the Kings name, and that all Officers of any great truſt and moment are appointed by him: and that all laws, decrees, ſentences and negotiations are diſpatched in his name. For the aſſiſtance of the Regent there is a Privy Councell, a Councell of State, and a Councell of Finances, by whom all things are ordered which concern the publick, the Regents authoritie cooperating and concurring with them: without which, though they may conſult, they can execute nothing. And for the governance and well ordering of the ſeverall Provinces, there is in every one of them a Lieutenant, or Provinciall Governour, ſubordinate to the Regent and accomptable to him: and in each Province a particular Councell held in the Kings name, conſiſting of more or leſſe Counſellors (as the bigneſſe of the Province is) for the moſt part Doctors or Licentiates of the Civill-Laws, with a Preſident as the head thereof: which in ſome places they call the Parliament after the manner of the French, and in ſome the Chancerie. To theſe Courts all the Subjects do reſort for juſtice in cauſes both Criminall and Civill: to theſe are brought appeals from inferiour Judicatures, ſuch as the Courts of great Towns, and particular Franchiſes: and from theſe lieth an appeal to the great Councel at Machlyn, ſupreme and ſuperintendent unto all the reſt.

When any thing is to be done which concerns the profit of the Prince, or otherwiſe is of publick moment, the Regent ſendeth out letters in the Kings name to command the Eſtates, that is to ſay, the Clergy, the Nobility, and the principall Towns of every Province (except thoſe of Luxembourg, Guelders, Weſt-Friſeland and Over-yſſel, who by ſpeciall priviledge cannot be called out of their own countries) to come before him. The place of their Aſſembly is for the moſt part at Bruxels, the Court and reſidence of the Regent, becauſe the Brabanters are alſo priviledged not to be ſummoned out of the Precincts of their own Province. Where being come, the States aſſemble not all together, but thoſe of one Province at a time, ſo one after another: to whom the Preſident or ſome one of the Councell of State propoſeth in the Princes name, that which he demandeth: to which if any town oppoſe, then all which the reſt have done is of no effect; nothing being granted by the Deputies or States of any Province, but with this condition, that all the reſt of the Eſtates do agree unto it. Without this punctuall conſent of all parties intereſſed, the Prince can impoſe nothing, by their Laws, upon the Subject, nor alter any thing at all in the publick government.

And as the people are thus priviledged in regard of the Prince, ſo are the Princes and Prelates priviledged in regard of the Pope: it being agreed upon between them,

1. That the Prince is to give Clergie-Benefices, and the Pope to confirm them.
2. That neither Prelate nor Lay-perſon may be cited to Rome, but the Pope to ſend his Delegates or Commiſſioners into the Countrie.
3. The Pope not to give a Benefice nor grant a Pardon, nor ſend a Bul into the Country without the leave of the Prince.
4. That no Clergie man can buy lands or other immoveables without the Princes conſent. And
5. That the Prince hath power to viſit the Clergie, to ſee if they be well governed or not, and if they be not, to reform the abuſes.

Great priviledges, if conſidered rightly, greater then which few Proteſtant Princes do pretend to in their own Dominions.

As for the Revenue raiſed by the Spaniard out of his part of this Eſtate, it is not eaſie to be gueſſed at: and of that which is, there comes but little to his Coffers. The expences of his Court there, is as great as ever under any of the former Regents, and his charge of entertaining Souldiers for his towns and garriſons, greater then before. Nor doth it now ſtand with reaſon of State to lay any arbitrarie taxes upon the people, leſt he exaſperate them to a ſecond Rebellion, or ſtartle them to ſome new Confederacies againſt his quiet.

Under the government of the Confederate Eſtates, are the Dukedome of Guelderland, excepting ſome few Towns in the hands of the Spaniard, the entire Earldoms of Holland, Zeland, and Zutphen, the Seigneuries of Weſt-Friſeland, Utrecht, Over-Iſſell, Groining, the town of Sluyes, with the Iſle of Caſſandt in Flanders, and many pieces of importance in the Dutchie of Brabant. This is the leſſer part by far, and far inferiour to the other in regard of the ſoil, but the more populous of the two, and by the induſtry and great trading of the people, the more rich and powerfull. Governed after their own old Laws, by the particular Eſtates of every Province not yet united into one entire body of a Comonwealth: ſaving that for the better preſervation of their confederacie, the Commiſſioners of the ſeverall Provinces doe conſult together, whom they have honoured with the name of the States Generall.

The Eſtates of the particular Provinces, elected out of the principall towns and places of moſt importance, doe order the affairs thereof according to their ancient priviledges, rights, and cuſtoms, as well by themſelves as by their Colleagues and Officers whom they doe appoint, and that as well for matters of State, as in point of Juſtice. For adminiſtration of the which, the Governour, Preſident, and Counſellors of the Provinciall Courts, have the cognizance of all caſes both civill and criminal; and in all cauſes of appeal from inferiour Courts, in each of which they do proceed without appeal, making their Acts and Commiſſions in the name of the ſaid Governour, Preſident, and Councell; but pronouncing ſentence and executing judgment in the right of the Soveraigntie of the ſaid Province. And theſe Provinciall States are choſen generally out of the Plebeians or common people, and the Burgers (at the beſt) of the greater Townſhips: the Nobilitie and Gentry being ſo worn out, that in all Holland, and Zeland, there are not left above 3 families of Gentlemen; and thoſe compelled to live after the Plebeian faſhion for fear of envie, and to avoid the inſolencie of the ſaucie Clowns, who out of rudeneſſe and the deſire of equality, hate nothing more among them then the name of a Gentleman.

Out of theſe Provinciall States which hold not for any certain and determinate time, but only during the pleaſure of the communitie for which they ſerve, are choſen one or more for each ſeverall Province, according to the condition and capacitie of thoſe which are choſen, to reſide at the Hague, there to conſult of the affairs which concern the publick: but ſo, that be they more or leſſe out of every Province, they make amongſt them but one ſuffrage when any thing is to be put unto the Vote. And theſe they call the States Generall, firſt becauſe a collected body out of all the Provinces, and ſecondly, becauſe they are not properly to deal in any matters of particular concernment, which are determinable abſolutely by the States Provinciall, but only in ſuch things as concern the generall good of the whole Eſtate; as treating with Ambaſſadours, making war and peace, &c. For their aſſiſtance in the which, there is a Councel of State made up of the Governours and ſome eminent men of every Province (in which the Ambaſſadour of England, as long as we held Fluſhing and the other Cautionarie Towns, had his voice or ſuffrage:) by whoſe advice they diſpoſe of all things which concern the publick. But ſo, that if any difficultie do appear in the buſineſſe they conclude nothing till they have the approbation and conſent of the particular Cities and Provinces for which they are choſen, to whom they are accomptable for their adminiſtration, and by whom revocable whenſoever they pleaſe.

The Revenue of this Eſtate doubtleſſe is exceeding great, the Armie which they keep in continuall entertainment, conſiſting of no leſſe then 30000 men, which they can draw into the field, leaving the Forts and Towns very well provided: yet ſo well paid, that we never read of any mutinie amongſt them for want thereof. The whole charge, with the entertainment of Captains and ſuperiour Officers, is ſaid to amount to 500000 l. per annum, raiſed on the people by Exciſe laid upon all commodities, and many taxes of like nature ſo inſupportable in themſelves and amongſt men which would be thought to live in a free State, that ſhould the Spaniard, or any Prince in Chriſtendome lay but half ſo much upon their Subjects, it would occaſion a Revolt. So that whereas one of the firſt cauſes of their falling falling off from the King of Spain, was to free themſelves from taxes and impoſitions, illegally (as they ſaid) inforced upon them, they have drawn upon themſelves more arbitrarie and illegall payments then any Nation in the World. So little have they got by the change of government. Touching their power at Sea, we have ſpoke alreadie. All I ſhall now adde to it, is by way of inſtance, which is, that in the year 1587. the King of Denmark on pretence of ſome diſpleaſure, arreſted 608 ſhips of theirs, of all ſorts at one time, in the Sound; and that the next year after they ſet out upon very ſhort warning, an hundred good men of war to join with England againſt the invincible Armada which then threatned both. To conclude, there is nothing wanting to theſe Countries, wherewith the God of all bleſſings doth enrich a Nation, but a gracious Prince, unitie of Religion, and a quiet Government: which if it pleaſed the Almighty to confer upon them, they would ſurpaſſe all neighbouring States in treaſure, potencie, content, and all worldly happineſſe.

There are in theſe Countries,

OF

OF GERMANIE.

GERMANIE is bounded on the East with Prussia, Poland, and Hungarie; on the West with France, Switzerland, and Belgium; on the North with the Baltick Seas, and some part of Denmark; on the South with the Alps, which part it from Italy. By which accompt the modern Germanie much differeth from that described by Tacitus, and others of the Roman writers: that comprehending the three Kingdoms of Denmark, Norway, and Sweden, with so much of the Kingdom of Poland as lieth on this side of the River Vistula; but bounded on the East with the Rhene, and on the South with the Danow: the modern Germanie containing on the further banks of those Rivers, 5 whole Roman Provinces, that is to say, Noricum, Ripense, and Mediterraneum, Rhætia secunda, Belgica, and Germania prima, with some parts of Rhætia prima, and Germania secunda, but terminated with the Danes, and the Baltick Sea.

It was first called thus by the Romans (as some conceive) who seeing the people both in customs, speech, and course of life, so like those of Gallia, called them the Germanes to the Gaules: the word Germanus in the Latine, signifying a Brother of the whole bloud, (as our Lawyers phrase it) that is to say, a brother both by father and mother: those which have the same mother but divers fathers, being called Fratres uterini. And of this minde is Strabo, who speaking of the great resemblance which was betwixt these Nations, in manners, speech, customs, and way of life, concludes it thus, that the Romans did with very good reason call them Germans, cum fratres eos Gallorum hoc nomine vellent ostendere; intending to signifie by that name that they were the brethren of the Gaules. But this is to be understood of those people only which dwelt next to Gaule, and not of all the Nations which inhabited in this vaste Continent, according to the ancient extent thereof: it being very well observed by Tacitus, that Germanie was at first Nationis non Gentis nomen, the name of some of the Nations only, not of all the Country: the name in processe of time spreading over all that large tract of ground, and those scattered Nations which were either conquered by them, or incorporate with them. Others will have the name to be meerly Dutch, deriving it from Ger, which signifieth all, and the word man, signifying in that language as in ours; whence also they derive the name of Almans; by which they would imply that the Almans or Germans are a very warlike Nation, a people that have in them nihil nisi virile, nothing not worthie of a man. Bocartus somewhat near to this, telling us that Ger in the antient Gallick did signifie as much as Guerre in the modern French, would have them at their first coming over the Rhene to be called Germans by the Gaules, that is to say, men of war, (or Gens d' Armes in the present French) by reason of the great and many victories obtained by them.

The like diversity I find for the name of Almans: For though some gave them the name of Almans from the same originall from whence they fetch the name of Germans, as was said before: yet others as probably conjecture, that they had that name because they consisted of so many severall Nations coming out of the North and North-east hither, that they seemed to be an Hotch-poth of all sorts of men, kneaded into one name and Nation, which is the conceit of Asinius Quadratus. But for my part I doe conceive (supposing the name of Almans to be Dutch originally) that the whole Country was not called Almain, till ſuch time as the Princes of the Dukedome of Almain (ſince called Suevia or Schwaben) did poſſeſſe the Empire: which continuing in that potent familie near 100 years, might very well occaſion them to be called the Emperours of Almain, or the Almain race, and ſo impart that name to the Empire alſo. And for the Almains naturally and properly ſo called, (of whom we ſhall ſpeak more when we come to Suevia) I ſee no Etymologie more agreeable to true Antiquitie, then to derive the name from Mannus the ſon of Tuiſco, one of their Gods and a principall Founder of this Nation, (Tuiſconem Deum & Filium Mannum, originem gentis conditoreſque,) as is ſaid by Tacitus, the people being called Alemanni (with a double n) in all antient writers, as men that did derive themſelves from this Mannus the ſon of Tuiſco. In like ſort as I think the Marco-manni inhabiting the countries of Moravia, were ſo called, as the Manni of the Marches or out-borders of Germanie, and not the Mark-mans, as if they were men of mark, the only men of fame and honour of all thoſe Nations: which might as well be preſſed from the Dutch originall, as that of All-man, in the meaning by them pretended. And unto this opinion I am ſwayed the rather, becauſe I find the Dutch Nation generally ſo much inclined to derive their Originall from Tuiſco, (from whom the Teutones inhabiting about Brandenbourg may well fetch their Pedegree) the name of Dutch-land, or Dutch-men, coming near in ſound to Tuiſc-land, and Tuiſc-men: In which I ſhall ſubſcribe to Verſtegans opinion, though for the moſt part I look upon him but as the ſecond part of Goropius Becanus.

But being the Etymologies of the names of moſt antient Nations are very uncertain, and for the moſt part founded on conjectures only, let us leave the name a while, and ſurvey the Country: the length whereof (according to the trueſt and exacteſt meaſurement) from Eaſt to Weſt, that is to ſay, from the Viſtula, or Wixell to the Rhene, is eſtimated at 840 Italian miles; the breadth from North to South, that is to ſay, from the Ocean to the Towne of Brixen in Tyrol, 740 of the ſame miles. So that the figure of it being near a ſquare it may take up 3160 miles in compaſſe, or thereabouts. Situate in the northern temperate Zone, betwixt the middle Parallels of the ſixth and tenth Climates, the longeſt day in the moſt Southern parts, being 15 hours and an half, and in the moſt Northern, 17 hours and a quarter.

In this compaſſe and extent of ground are ſuppoſed to live 10 millions of people. The men of the poorer ſort laborious, painfull, and of a ſincere and honeſt carriage; the Nobles for the moſt part either Scholars or Souldiers, and true lovers of honour, though Tacitus hath otherwiſe reſolved it, affirming that the Gaules fight for liberty, the Belgians for honour, and the Germans for gain. Which yet is true enough of the common ſouldiers, who if they fail of pay, fail in courage preſently. Of both ſorts they are generally tall and big, of great bones, much fleſh, and large ſinews: but commonly of ſuch a phlegmatick conſtitution, that they have not ſpirit enough to manage ſuch a maſſe of fleſh as they bear about them. Which want of naturall heat to concoct that humour, makes them for the moſt part to be men of a bright, or light-brown hair, and fair complexions. They are little addicted to Venus, and very much to Bacchus; whence the Proverb, Vivere Germanorum eſt bibere; and the old Verſes,

Germani poſſunt cunctos tolerare labores,
O utinam poſſent tam bene ferre ſitim.

The Dutch themſelves to labour well inure;
O would they thirſt could halt ſo well indure.

This love unto their liquor, together with their naturall temper, maketh them fat and corpulent. Whereupon Pope Julio the ſecond, ſtiling the Spaniards birds of the air, becauſe of their ambition; the Venetians and Genoeſes, fiſhes of the ſea, becauſe ſo much accuſtomed to Navigation: called the Germans by the name of the Beaſts of the field. And when Auguſtus was reſolved to take unto himſelf the Supream government of Rome, he was adviſed by Agrippa to chooſe a guard of Germans to attend upon him. The reaſon was (as Dion giveth it) becauſe in thoſe great bodies there was little malice hidden, and leſſe ſubtlety; and that they were a people that took more pleaſure to be commanded, then to command. In matters of war this people have been formerly in a meaſure famous; yet not ſo much by the valour or conduct of their Captains (for they have had but few ſuch) as by their own hardineſſe. They withſtood the Romans 210 years, afflicting and troubling them more in that ſpace, than either the Carthaginians, Spaniards, Gauls, or Parthians; and even at the laſt (ſaith Tacitus) Triumphati magis ſunt quam victi. In our times the Rutters and Lanſknights of Germany, (for ſo they call their horſe and foot) have been much imployed: but more by reaſon of their numbers, eaſily raiſed out of ſo large a Country, then any opinion of their valour; being ſlow of motion, dull of apprehenſion, fearfull of putting any thing to the chance of war. By reaſon of which fearfulneſſe as they are very cruell upon all advantages, not ſparing either age or ſex when they get the victorie: ſo are they apt to run upon any Alarm, not to be rallied, if once routed, upon any perſwaſions. Inſomuch as Charls Count of Mansfield, General of an Armie of 50000 fighting men, but moſt of this Nation, was forced to ſuffer a ſmall Armie of 10000 Turks to paſſe by his trenches, being then ſtrongly encamped before Strigonium, (now Gran) a Town of Hungarie, and to victuall the town before his face: not daring to ſet upon them or diſturb their purpoſe, for fear leſt being luſtily charged, his Germans would give back and indanger all. And yet beſides theſe weakneſſes they have ſome great faults. One of which is a cuſtome, if their wages be not duly paid, (though it be in the very midſt of a battell) to cry Guelt, Guelt, throw down their weapons, and ſuffer themſelves to bee cut in peeces by the Enemie. And ſo they ſerved Frederick the Electour Palatine at the battell of Prague. The other is an extreme humour of ſpoil and plunder: on which they are ſo bent whereſoever they come, that ſuch as entertain them have juſt cauſe to ſay that they receive more damage by them then they doe by their enemies. Two undeceiveable notes of mercenarie valour.

The women are of a good complexion, but by reaſon of their intemperance in eating and drinking much given to corpulency: women of a good carriage (as the ſaying is) good Bearers, and as fruitfull breeders. Servilely obſequious to their husbands, whom many of good rank ſerve at the table with trenchers and other neceſſaries, and take away when he hath done, eating the reſidue apart with and amongſt their maides: ſcarſe ſitting down with him once a week, and then too at the lower end, or at ſome ſuch diſtance. And though the women by their lawes have a property in the goods which they bring with them at their marriage, or are given them after, (ſo as the husband hath but the uſe of them onely) and may diſpoſe of them by their laſt will at the time of their death; yet is their condition thereby little better: the husband being no leſſe churliſh and imperious then hee would be otherwiſe. Which made Caracalla to ſay often, that only that Nation knew how to rule their Wives, which added the feminine article to the Sun, and the maſculine to the Moon, as the Germans doe. Moſt of them as well VVives as Virgins (except perſons of honour) uſe to goe bare footed within doors, and ſeldome put on ſhoes or ſtockins but when they are to goe abroad upon their occaſions. A thing that ſeems the more ſtrange in regard of the extreme coldneſſe of the Countrey, which is ſo fierce, that generally they lodge between two Feather beds both in ſummer and winter: and in moſt houſes have their ſtoves, of which the doores and windowes are kept very cloſe, as well to retain the heat as to keep out the cold. Which though they may be uſefull and inoffenſive in Gentlemens houſes; yet in the common Innes where all ſorts of people are neceſſitated to throng together, the ill ſmels, never purged by admitting any freſh air, are ready to ſtifle and choak up the ſpirits of raw Travellers not accuſtomed to them.

The diet of Germany France and Italy, is by a Traveller thus cenſured: the Germans have much meat, but ſluttiſhly dreſſed; the French little, but neatly cooked; the Italians neither the one nor the other. And to ſay truth, the Germans have meat enough: the people being generally of good ſtomachs, and either by nature or ill cuſtome, exceſſive both in eating and drinking, ſeldome riſing from the table till they have conſumed all which was ſet before them. Inſomuch as in ſome places it is provided by Law, that in their feaſts they ſhall not ſit above five houres at the table. During which time if by intemperance either in eating or drinking, a man diſgorge his foul ſtomach in his fellows lap, or piſſe under the table, it is no diſgrace to him, nor at any time taken notice of to his reproach. Which humour of gormandizing and exceſſive drinking, is not onely cheriſhed among the Vulgar, but even amongſt their greateſt Princes, who beſides what they doe in this kinde themſelves, have their drinking champions, as well to anſwer all challenges, as to challenge all comers: contending with each other, as a point of State, whoſe cellar ſhall afford the greateſt and moſt capable Veſſels.

The title of the Fathers deſcend to all the children; every ſon of a Duke being a Duke; and every daughter, a Dutcheſſe: a thing which the Italians hold ſo ridiculous, that they put it in the forefront of this facetious Satyre. The Dukes and Earles of Germany, the Dons of Spain, the Monſieurs of France, the Biſhops of Italy, the Nobility of Hungary, the Lairds of Scotland, the Knights of Naples, and the younger brethren of England, make a poore company. For by this common aſſuming of the Fathers honour, and parting his lands among all the brethren; the Nobility is beyond reaſon multiplyed, and no leſſe impoveriſhed: there being not long ſince 17 Princes of Anhalt, and 27 Counts of Mansfields; to moſt of which, their Armes have been the beſt part of their riches; & nihil niſi arma & manus, & in his omnia; as Tacitus once ſaid of the ancient Britains. And yet there is not one of this poore Nobility that will vouchſafe to marry with the daughter of the wealthieſt Merchant; or ſuffer any of their ſiſters to be married to any under the degree of a Nobleman: nor any juſter cauſe of diſheriting their children, then ignoble marriages, never permitting the iſſue of ſuch a Bed to ſucceed in any of their Fees, Eſtates, or titles, by means whereof though they debar themſelves of ſuch acceſſions of wealth as matches of that kinde might bring them: yet to the great honour of their generoſity in this particular, they preſerve the pure ſtream of their bloud from running into muddie channels, and keep the ſpirits of brave men though they want the fortunes.

The Languages here ſpoken are the French in Lorrain, and ſome towns of the Biſhop of Triers; the Italian in the higheſt parts of Tyrol, which lie next to the Commonwealth of Venice; the Sclavonian ſpoken in Bohemia, Moravia, and ſome parts of Luſatia: and the high Dutch, the generall Language of the Country. A language very antient doubtleſs (though I am not ſo much a Goropian as to think it ſpoke in Paradiſe, or before the Flood) and ſuch as by reaſon of the little or no impreſſion which the Roman Armies made upon this contrary hath leſſe commixture with the Latine, then any which is uſed in theſe Weſtern parts, (the VVelch excepted) and is very harſh by reaſon of its many Conſonants.

This Country was eſteemed by Tacitus to be rude and barren, containing nothing but unpeopled Forreſts, unprofitable Heaths, and unhealthy Pools. Germaniam informem terris, aſperam cœlo, triſtem cultu aſpectuque, as he further addeth. And ſuch no doubt it was in thoſe times wherein Tacitus lived: the people not being civilized, nor the Countrey cultivated, nor any means found out to rectifie the ſharpneſſe of that Northern air. But he who doth obſerve it now cannot but confeſſe that there is no Countrey in the World either better planted, or repleniſhed with more goodly and gallant Cities: being alſo in moſt parts both pleaſant, healthy and profitable, abounding with mines of ſilver, and interiour metals plentifull in corn and wines, with which they supply the defect of other Nations; as also with Flesh, Fish, Linnen, Quickſilver, Allom, Saffron, Armour and other iron-workes. The Arable lands so spacious in the Eastern parts, that the husband man going forward with his Plough in the morning, turned not back again till noon; so making but two furrows for his whole days work. For this Verstegan is my Authour, and if it be not credible let him bear the blame.

Souldiers of most eminencie in the Elder times, were 1. Arminius the Prince of the Cheruſci, who overthrew Quintilius Varus and the Roman Legions, 2. VVitikind the last King of the Saxons: for the middle ages, 3. Otho the first, 4. Frederick Barbaroſſa, 5. Rodulph of Habsburg, Emperours and Kings of Germany, 6. Henry surnamed the Lion, Duke of Saxony. 5. And in the last Centurie of years, 6. Frederick the second Electour Palatine, who made good Vienna against the Turks; 7. Albert of Brandenburg, of whom more hereafter. 8. Earnest Earl of Mansfeild, 9. John George of Jagerndorf, 10. Albert VVallenstein Duke of Fridland, and divers other of late dayes.

Scholars of note the elder times afforded none, nor the middle many; learning being here so rare in the middle of the eighth Centurie, that Vigilius Bishop of Saltzburg was condemned of heresie, for holding that there were some Antipodes. In the next age there flourished Rhabanus Maurus, Haimo of Halberstade, VValafrians Strabus, men learned for the times they lived in. And in the following times, Ockam a stout defender of the rights of the Empire against the encroachments of the Pope; Otho Frisingensis the Historian, Albertus Magnus, the Philosopher, of which last it is said that he made the Statua of a man, which with the help of artificiall Engines could speak articulately; and was the work of 50 yeares. Then in the dayes of our Grandfathers, we have 1. Martin Luther, that great instrument of the reformation; 2. Philip Melanchthon his Coadjutor in that worke, but of more excellent parts, and farre better temper: thence called the Phenix of that Age. 3. Joachim Camerarius, a great friend of Philip; 4. Martin Chemnitius, a solid and laborious writer; 5. Flacius Illyricus the chiefe Authour of the Magdeburgian Centuries and Father of the Rigid Lutherans; 6. Sebastian Munster, an industrious Cosmographer, and a learned Linguist; 7. Silburgius, and 8. Buxdorfius, as great Linguists as hee: not to descend to further instances in those, who have so filled the Marts of Francfort in these later times.

But the greatest excellency of this people lyeth in the Mechanicall part of learning, as being eminent for many Mathematicall experiments, strange water-workes, medicinall extractions, Chymistry, and the Art of Printing, and inventions of like noble nature, to the no lesse benefit then Admiration of the World. Amongst which I cannot choose but instance in that work of Regiomantanus, an excellent Mathematician and a cunning Artizan, spoken of by Keckerman, who at the coming of the Emperour Maximilian to the City of Nuremberg, made a wooden Eagle, which flew a quarter of a mile out of the Town to meete him, and being come to the place where hee was, returned back of its owne accord, and so accompanyed him to his lodging. A thing if true (as the Relator was a man of too much gravity to abuse the World with an untruth) exceedingly beyond that Miracle of a flying Dove, for which Archytas is so famed amongst the Antients exceeded oenly by himselfe in a like invention, which was that of an Iron flye, (the greater Miracle of Art, because lesse in quantity) which at a Feast, to which hee had invited some of his especiall friends, flew from his hand about the room, and returned againe; as is affirmed by Peter Ramus. Expressed thus by Divine Du Bartas,

Once as this Artist more with mirth then meat
Feasted some friends, whom he esteemed great,
From his learn'd hand an Iron flie flew out,
And having flown a perfect Round, about,
With wearyed wings return'd unto her Master,
And as judicious on his arm he plac'd her.
O divine wit that in the narrow Womb
Of a small flie could find sufficient room
For all those Springs, Wheels, Counterpoise, and chains,
Which stood in stead of life, and spur, and reins.

And amongst these I reckon Bertholdus Swart a Franciscan Fryer, the inventer (though by accident) of the fatall instrument, the Gun. Studious in Chymistrie, he made mingled dryed earth, sulphur, and some other ingredients, which he had put into a Mortar, covered with a stone: and striking fire to light a candle, as the night came on, a spark by chance fell into the mortar, and catching hold of the Sulphur and other minerals with great violence blew up the stone wherewith it was covered. Amazed at which he made triall severally of these ingredients to find out which of them it was which produced that effect, which having discovered he caused an iron pipe to be made, crammed it with Sulphur, Saltpetre and stones; and putting fire to it, saw with what violent noise and fury it discharged it self. This invention hee is said to have first communicated to the Venetians, anno 1330, or thereabouts: who having been often vanquished by the Genoys, and driven almost to a necessity of yeelding to them, by the help of their Guns, (Bombards they were then called) gave unto their enemies a notable discomfiture. And this was the first battell that ever those warlike pieces had a part in: which not long after, put to silence all the engines and devices, wherewith the Antients were wont to make their batteries. The next that made use of this instrument, were the inhabitants of the Baltick

Sea; and not long after them, the Engliſh, at the ſiege of Calice, anno 1347. about which time, they began alſo to be uſed in Spain. The French, it ſeemeth, learned the uſe of them from the Engliſh: and the firſt benefit received by them, was the death of that famous Leader, Thomas Montacute, Earl of Salisbury; who at the ſiege of Orleance was ſlain with a great ſhot, anno 1425. The Turks are beholding for them, to the wars they had with the Venetians; beholding I ſay, for notwithſtanding the harm received by them at firſt, yet afterwards growing expert in managing of them, they gave unto Uſſan Caſſanes, and Hyſmael, two of the moſt mighty Emperours of Perſia, two memorable overthrows, by the help of their great Ordnance only. The Portugals were in this Art the Tutors to the Perſians: for as Solyman the Turkiſh Emperour objected againſt them, they not only aided Tamas the Sophi, with certain Harcubuciers, but alſo ſent him workmen to ſhew him the uſe and making of Artillery. Theſe great pieces at the firſt invention were rude, unwieldy, and charged with ſtone bullets only: but by degrees they came to that perfection, both for the wall and the hand, which they now have. Whether now Archery or Gunning be to be preferred, I ſtand not here to determine; only this I am ſure of, that victories have been of late purchaſed with leſſe expence of bloud, and life, then ever formerly. But of this Theame more perhaps hereafter, when we ſhall come to take the Parthian Archery into conſideration.

The Religion of this Country it is not eaſie to name, conſidering ſo many are here allowed; Jewes being intermixt with Chriſtians; and theſe divided into Papiſts and Proteſtants; the latter alſo ſubdivided into Lutherans, Calviniſts, &c. The Chriſtian faith firſt planted here, if Dorotheus Biſhop of Tyre be of any credit, by S. Thomas ſurnamed Didymus one of the twelve. But being there is little truſt unto his Relations, the beſt way were to ſay with the Magdeburgians and the Martyrologies, that the Germans had not all the ſame Apoſtle: that the Goſpell was firſt preached amongſt the Rhætians and Vindelici, by S. Lucius of Cyrene; amongſt thoſe of Noricum by S. Mark; by S. Creſcens at Mentz, S. Clemens at Mets in Lorrain; all of them Apoſtolicall men, and of the number of the 70. after that by S. Maternus at Colen, and by S. Eucherius at Triers. That the faith was planted very early in theſe countries, Irenæus the renowned Biſhop of Lyons, anno 170. is ſufficient evidence; who takes notice of it: and that it proſpered very well and took very good root, appeareth by the Biſhop of Ments, Triers, Wormes, Spires, Baſil, and Strasbourg, ſubſcribing to the Councell of Colen in the reign of Conſtantius the ſon of Conſtantine the Great, anno 347. But the light hereof being extinguiſhed for a time by thoſe barbarous nations who fell upon theſe out-parts of the Roman Empire; began to ſhine again, on the converſion of the French, in all parts of this countrey: the Conqueſts and example of this puiſſant Nation giving great incouragement thereunto. In which as thoſe of other Countries doe not want their honour, ſo the greateſt part thereof belongs to the Engliſh Saxons: Willibrod the firſt Biſhop of Vtrecht, Willibald of Aichſtat, Swibert of Virden, Willibald of Breme, and ſpecially Boniface the Archbiſhop of Mentz, being moſt gloriouſly fortunate in that ſacred ſervice. The Moravians, Bohemians, and others farther off, came not in till afterwards. Not fully converted to the faith, they began to ſuck in the corruptions of the Church of Rome; diſcerned and oppoſed by John Huſſe, and Hierome of Prague, Bohemian Divines: who by reaſon of the marriage of King Richard the ſecond of England, with the daughter of Wenceſlaus Emperour and King of Bohemia, had opportunity to be acquainted with the preachings of Wiclef, the points of whoſe Doctrine they approved and propagated. But theſe two being burnt at Conſtance by the decree of that Councell, their followers in Bohemia would not ſo give over: but after many ſufferings and much bloudſhed obtained at laſt a toleration of the Emperour Sigiſmund their King: more able to make good his word in his own dominions, then he had been to ſave the two Martyrs from the fire at Conſtance, to whom he had granted his ſafe conduct for their comming and going. In this condition they remained, under the name of thoſe of the Sub utraq; or Caliſtini, becauſe of their Adminiſtring the Sacrament in both kindes, till the riſing of Luther: who juſtly offended at the impious and unwarrantable Aſſertions of Frier Tekel, and others of the Popes Pardon-mungers; firſt oppoſed their doings, and after queſtioned that authority by which they acted: falling from one point to another, till he had ſhaken the foundations of the Roman Fabrick. Of the ſucceſſe of his undertaking we ſhall ſpeak more punctually in the Dukedome of Saxony, the place of his birth, the Scene of this great Action, and the proper Sphere of his Activity. Suffice it now to ſay, that his doctrine was ſo well approved of, that the Dukes of Saxonie, Brunſwick, Lunenbourg, Wirtenberg, Mecklenberg, and Pomerania; the Marqueſſe of Branderbourg, the Lantgraves of Haſſia, and moſt of the Free and Imperial Cities did adhere unto it, who from their Proteſtation made at Spires (the Imperiall Chamber) to that effect, anno 1529. had the name of Proteſtants. The next year following they delivered in the Confeſſion of their faith at Auſpurg, a City of Suevia, thence called Confeſſio Auguſtana; authorized, or tolerated at the leaſt, after a long war with variable ſucceſſe on both ſides, by the Emperour Charles the fift at the Pacification made at Paſſaw, anno 1552. and afterwards more fully at Ausbourg, (where their Confeſſion had firſt been tendred) anno 1555.

In the mean time aroſe up Zuinglius amongſt the Switzers, of whoſe both Doctrine and ſucceſſe we have ſpoken there. Theſe not communicating Councels went two ſeverall waies, eſpecially in the points of Conſubſtantiation and the Reall preſence, not reconciled in their times, nor like to be agreed upon amongſt their followers. For Calvin, riſing into the eſteem and place of Zuinglius added, ſome Tenets of his own to the former doctrines, touching Predeſtination, Free-will, Univerſall Grace, Finall perſeverance (points fitter for the Schooles then a popular Auditory) by which the differences were widened, and the breach made irreparable: the cauſe being followed on both ſides with great impatience, as if they did not ſtrive ſo much for truth, as victory. And of the two thoſe of the Lutheran party ty seemed more violent (though the other was altogether as irreconcilable) who could not choose but stomach it to see themselves undermined and blown by a new form of doctrine, not tolerated in the Empire but under colour of conformity to the Confession of Ausburg. For Zuinglianisme being entertained amongst the French, a busie and active people, spread it self further in few years then it was propagated by the Switzers (men of the same temper with the Dutch) in all times before. Insomuch as it did not only prevail in France, but by the reputation of Calvin, and the diligence of his followers, was wholly entertained in the Kingdome of Scotland, the Netherlands, and even in Germanie it self; in which it got footing in all the territories of the Counts Palatines of the Rhene, in some of the Lantgraves of Hassia, in the Imperiall City of Strasburg, many of the Hanse-towns, and amongst other Princes and Free Cities of inferiour note. The rest of Germanie containing the Patrimoniall Estates of the house of Austria, the Dukedomes of Bavaria and Lorrain, the territories of the three Spirituall Electours, and of all the other Bishopricks in the hands of the Clergie, some of the Marquesses of Baden, part of the subjects of Cleve, and but three of the Imperiall Cities (and those small ones too) that is to say, Gmund, Uberlinque, and Dinekell-Spuell (unlesse some more be added by the late great successes of the house of Austria) remain in their obedience to the See of Rome: yet so that there be many Protestants in Bohemia, Austria, and in other the Estates of the Popish Princes; as there be Papists in the Free Cities of Frankford, Nurenberg, Ulm, Aken, and some other places, besides the late increase of them in both Palatinates.

As for the Government of their Churches those that continue in obedience of the See of Rome, are under the old form of Archbishops and Bishops: co-evall in all Germanie (as in most places else) with the faith it self. The Calvinists (by which name the Zuinglianist now also passeth, if not eaten out) submit themselves for doctrine, discipline, and formes of worship, to Calvins Modell, whereof we have spoke more at large when we were in Geneva. And for the Lutherans, they have divided the Episcopall function from the Revenues; giving those last to some of their younger Princes, with the title of Administrators of such a Bishoprick; the function or jurisdiction to some of the more eminent Clergie, with the title of a Superintendent, assigning to them a priority both of place and power before other Ministers; which they enjoy for term of life, together with some liberall maintenance in proportion to it. In other things, as habit and title of dignitie, they differ not at all from the other Ministers: and over them in place of Archbishops they have their generall Superintendents; all of them of each sort accomptable to the supreme Ecclesiastical Consistory (as formerly to the Provinciall or Nationall Synod) made up of Counsellors of State, and the heads of the Clergie: so that the form is much the same as in elder times, the greatest Alteration being in the names; and that no other in a manner then by changing the old Greek word Episcopus, into the new Latine word Superintendens: both signifying an Overseer though in different languages. And so ex Græcis bonis, Latinas fecere non bonas, in the Poets words: which is in brief the totall of the Innovation. And as they do conform thus far to the elder times in form of government, so do they also come up to them in their formes of worship, retaining still a setled and prescribed Liturgie for all their Churches, most of the holy dayes observed in the former Ages, the Crosse in Baptisme, kneeling at the Communion, and many other innocent and significant Ceremonies, commended to the Church by most pure Antiquitie. In point of maintenance as defective as the Calvinists are, few of their Ministers having Tithes, most of them pensions or stipends, and those small ones also, seldome exceeding two or 300. Guldens, besides wood for fewell, corn and some other necessaries.

Now because mention hath been made of the Hanse-towns and Imperiall Cities, we are to understand that the Cities of this Countrey are of three sorts. 1. Such as are holden in possession by some of the Princes in way of inheritance, part of their patrimony and estates, as Heidelberg, Vienna, Munchen, Wittenberg, &c. 2. Such as are held originally of the Empire it self, which are called Free Cities for their great Prerogatives of coyning money, and governing themselves by their locall Ordinances; Imperiall in regard they know no Lord or protectour but the Emperour only, to whom they pay two third parts of such contributions as are assessed in the Assemblies or generall Diets, and 1500. Florens yearly for themselves and their territories. They are in number about 60. many of which are of a fair and large estate, such as are Nurenberg, Ausburg, Ingolstade, Spires, Wormes, &c. Of which thus Guicciardine. Those (saith he) are called Free Cities, which acknowledging by a certain determinate tribute the authority of the Empire, do notwithstanding in all other things govern themselves after their own laws, not seeking to amplifie their territories, but defend their Liberties. 3. The third sort is of those which are called Hanse-towns, or Hansteden, that is, (say some) Anzeesteden, Towns upon the Sea; such as those were who first entred into this confederacy, but at this time the name extends to many inland Cities, and of no great trading, joyned with them in a league for their common defence and preservation. A league made first against the Danes, and the Earls of Holst by some of the Maritime Towns bordering next unto them, that is to say, Lubeck, Hambourg, Rostock, Wismar, Stralesund, and Luneburg: but afterwards many other of the Imperiall Cities and Towns of trade, associated with them in an offensive and defensive league against all enemies whatsoever. In number about 72. those of Livonia and Prussia being taken into the reckoning, many of which are able to put to sea 150. good sayle of ships: such as lie more within the land contributing in money or otherwise to the common charge. First hanselled by Waldomar the 3. of Denmark, whom they vanquished in a navall battell. After that growing into credit, and driving a great trade in most parts of Christendome, they enjoyed many large and ample priviledges, whersoever they came: called amongst us sometime by the name of Easterlings from their Easterly dwellings; and Merchants of the Steel-yard from the place where they ſtowed their commodities; and Guilda Teutonicorum in regard of their nation, for the moſt part Dutch. But the Engliſh learning ſo much wit at the laſt as to make uſe of their own ſhipping, they began here by little and little to decay; and are now almoſt worn out of memory with us, though ſtill of good eſteem and credit in other Countries.

The principall Rivers hereof are 1. Danubius, or the Danow, which riſing out of Nigra Sylva, or Schwartzen Wald as the Germans call it, at a little Village of Schwaben called Don Eſchingen, about two Dutch miles from the ſhores of the Rhene, paſſeth through Schwaben, Bavaria, Auſtria, &c. by the Cities of Ulm, Regenſperg, Paſſaw, Vienna, Rab, Buda, and Belgrade, beyond which it beginneth to be called Iſter, by which name moſt generally known amongſt the Grecians: and receiving into its channell, from the long tracts of the Alpes, the Sarmatian and Carpathian mountains, about 60. navigable Rivers, beſides leſſer Brooks, diſgorgeth his full ſtomach by ſeven ſeverall mouths (the names whereof we ſhall finde in Dacia) into the lap of the Euxine ſea; the whole length of his courſe 1500 miles. Inſomuch as we may ſay with a modern Poet, Cedere Danubius ſe tibi Nile negat.

O ſeven-mouth'd Nile, I plainly ſee,
Danow will ſcarce give way to thee.

2. Rhene, of whoſe originall and courſe we have ſpoke more fully when we were in Belgium; which running from Switzerland through Germany and Belgium, after a courſe of 800. miles, emptieth it ſelf into the German Ocean. The like doth alſo the 4. Elb (Albis) after a journey of more then 400 miles; ariſing about the lower skirts of Bohemia, and paſſing by Magdeburg and Brunſwick, and ſo betwixt the Dukedome of Holſtein (now part of Denmark) and the reſt of Germany. 4. Odera, which hath its fountain in the hithermoſt parts of Moravia, and after it hath run its courſe through Brandenburg and Pomerania, of ſome 300. miles in length falleth at laſt into the Baltick ſea. 5. Viſurgis or the Weſer, which iſſuing out of the hils of Turingia runneth through Haſſia and Weſtphalen, to the City of Breme, not far from which it fals into the German Ocean. 6. Viſtula, or the Wixel, which riſing out of the Carpathian mountains betwixt Poland and Hungarie, firſt paſſeth by Cracovia the chief City of Pole, then betwixt Pomeren and Pruſſia, and ſo into the Baltick ſea: the ancient boundary of this Countrey dividing it from Sarmatia Europæa. 7. Mænus, or the Maine, which hath its ſpring in the mountains of Bohemia, and paſſing by the Cities of Bamberg, and Weirtzberg, is received into the Rhene beneath Francford. 8. Amaſus or the Ems, which hath its fountain near Paderborn in Weſtphalia, and paſſing between the two Friſelands falleth into the German Ocean not far from Emden.

Chief mountains of this mighty Countrey, beſides the Alps ſpoken of before, which run in a long tract betwixt it and Italy, are 1. Abnoba, now called Schwartze wald, (the preſent name both of this Mountain and the Forreſt of Martiana which doth overſhadow it) out of which riſe the ſprings of Danow, and the Neccar, two principall Rivers of this Country. 2. The Sudetæ, incircling Bohemia, covered with the woods called anciently Gabreta and Luna, now called the Wolds of Paſſaw and Behaimer from the places adjoyning. 3. Cretius in Auſtria, now called Culemberg, the ancient bounds betwixt Pannonia and Noricum, two Roman Provinces. 4. Vogeſus, commonly called Vauge, and by ſome French writers Le Mont de Faucities, which encircling Lorrain divideth it on the Eaſt and South from Elſats and the County of Burgundie. As for the Forreſts of this Countrey, beſides thoſe ſpoken of already, that of moſt note was the Forreſt of Hercinia (of which all the reſt were but limbs or branches) the beginning whereof was about the borders of Switzerland and Alſatia, from thence running Eaſtward along the courſe of the Danow unto Tranſilvania, and thence declining on the left hand through the vaſt Countries of the Lituanians, Moſcovites, and Ruſſes, in which laſt there are ſtill many vaſt deſerts of it; the greateſt part thereof in Germanie being long ſince conſumed; in place whereof are many goodly cornfields and wel-built Cities. A wood ſo formidable to the Romans that they durſt never venture to ſearch the end of it: the length thereof after the end of ſixty daies journey being undiſcoverable, and the further ſearch into it quite laid aſide.

Theſe Boundaries and Landmarks being thus deſcribed, we ſhall the better follow the Chorographie of this great continent, according to the ſeverall Principalities and Eſtates therein: having firſt taken a ſurvey of the ancient condition of it, with ſo much of the ſtory as concerns the whole, before it came to be divided into ſo many hands. The Countrey firſt planted by the poſterity of Gomer, who deſcending from the Mountains of Albania, their firſt ſeat, in memory thereof firſt called Gomerini, after Cimmerini, by which name known to Pliny, Ptolemy and others of the ancient writers: removed into the more fruitfull plains of Phrygia, and there built the City Cimmeris which Pliny ſpeaks of. But that ſmall Province proving of too narow a compaſſe to contain his Off-ſpring, and the adjoyning Countries being taken up in the former Plantations, they removed unto the Northweſt of the Euxine ſea, where we finde a City of their building called Cimmerium, mentioned both by Pliny and Strabo; and the adjoyning ſtraight or Fretum, called by the name of Boſphorus Cimmerius, by the Greeks and Latins. Driven from theſe dwellings by the more powerfull Scythians, they ſpread themſelves into the Weſt, where they began to be called Cimbri: and by that name, and under thoſe of the Ambrones, and Teutones, ſeverall branches of them, intended an invaſion and conqueſt both of Gaul and Italy: wherein they had prevailed in all probability, niſi iſti ſecum Marius certaſſet, had not Marius happned to have lived in that Age; by whom diſcomfitted and deſtroyed. That theſe Gomerians or Cimbri, were the first inhabitants of Gaul, Germany, and all the nations of the North and West of Europe, is generally agreed upon by all the learned; divided into severall nations, and those also subdivided into lesser tribes, and more obscure families: amongst which those of Teutones, or Tuiscones, from which the Dutch do so affect to derive themselves, might be some of the principall there setled, and not well pleased with that desert dwelling, such of them as dwelt nearest to the Rhene passed over that River; and beating the Gauls further up into the Countrey, possessed themselves of their dwellings: enjoying them (till conquered by Julius Cæsar) without any Rivall. But Cæsar, moved with the complaints of the Gauls, and the insolencies of Arioviſtus a king of the Germans (for by that name for the Reasons aforesaid the Romans called them) marched into their Quarters: the Roman Legionaries being so affraid of this dreadfull Enemy, ut testamenta passim in principiis scriberentur, (saith the Historian) that many of them made their testaments at the Gates of their Camp, before they fell upon the Enemy. Vanquished by Cæsar, and Arioviſtus being fled over the Rhene, the Romans by command of their Generall made a bridge over the River, and rather terrified then conquered the neighbouring Germans; more fully brought into subjection by Drusus the adopted son of Augustus Cæsar, from thence called Germanicus; by whom the Rhæti and Norici, then lying out of the bounds of Germany, (now included in it) were subdued also. So that the whole conquests of the Romans upon this Countrey, as it is now bound, contained no more then the Provinces of Germania and Belgica prima, with part of Germania Secunda, belonging unto the Dioceſe of Gaule, the greatest part of the two Rhætia's, being under the Dioceſe of Italy; Noricum Mediterraneum and Ripense, with some part of Pannonia, parts of the Dioceſe of Illyricum: none of them lying within the bounds of the ancient Germanie. For the Germans did not endure the yoke so long, as to be brought within the number of the Roman Provinces. Provoked with the lust and insolencies of Quintilius Varus, who succeeded Drusus in that charge, they set upon him under the conduct of Arminius, a chief Prince amongst them; kill him and utterly cut off three Legions. After which defeat Augustus laid aside the affairs of Germany, confining his Empire within the Rhene, which Drusus had extended to the banks of the Ocean. Hac clade factum, ut imperium quod in littore Oceani non steterat, in ripa Rheni fluminis staret, saith the Historian. Nor did the Romans only forbear to revenge this losse, by making a new war upon them; but seemed more carefull to defend themselves against their invasions, then to incurre the hazard of a new defeat: quartering eight Legions with their severall wings and Aides on the shores of the Rhene, and four upon the Banks of the Danow; to keep these people from incroaching on the Romans Provinces. But the fatall period of that Empire, drawing on apace, the French, Burgundians, Almans and other Dutch nations break through those Guards, dispossesse the Romans of all Gaul, Rhætia, and Noricum, which they share amongst them: till in the end, the French prevailing over the rest, extend their Empire over all the modern Germanie; chiefly performed by the valour of Charles the Great, created Emperour of the West by the people of Rome, and crowned with the Imperiall Crown by Pope Leo the 4. on Christmasse-day, anno 801. So that now the old Prophecie of the Druides, concerning the removing of the Empire into the West, came to be accomplished; though Tacitus in his time accounted it for a vain and idle prediction. For when Civilis raised a Rebellion amongst the Batavi (the Hollanders and parts adjoyning) against Vespasian, then newly made Emperour: possessionem rerum humanarum, Transalpinis gentibus portendi, Druidæ canebant; the Druides prophecied of the translation of the Empire to the Transalpine nations. Accomplished, as before is said, in the person of Charles the Great, King of France and Germany, by whom divided, (for the better ordering or Governance of it, into West-France, or West-reiks, in the barbarous Latine of those times called Westrasia; containing the modern France, and so much of the Netherlands as lyeth on the French side of the River Maes, and Osten-rich (i. e. the Eastern Kingdome) in the Latine of those times Austrasia, containing so much of the modern Germany and Pannonia, as was possessed by the French, with the rest of the Netherlands: this after subdivided into the Kingdomes of Lorrain and Germany, whereof the first contained all Germany within the Rhene, together with the Belgick Provinces before described, the Counties of Flanders and Artois excepted only; the Kingdome of Germany taking up the rest. For by Ludovicus Pius the son of Charles the great Empire of his Father was parcelled out into many members, as Italie, France, Burgundie, Lorrain, and Germany; distributed amongst his sons and nephews with the title of Kings: By means whereof the Kingdomes of Germany and Lorrain united in the person of Lewis the Ancient, in little time were alien'd from the house of Charles, and left off to be French; possessed by the great Princes of Lorrain, Saxonie, Schwaben, and Bavaria; by whom dismembred into many principalities and inferiour states, all passing under the accompt and name of the Dutch or Germans. The Kings and Emperours of which here follow.

Cimbri,

The KINGS and EMPEROURS of GERMANIE.

Anno Chr.
801	1	Charles the Great Emp. K. of France and Germanie.
815	2	Ludovicus Pius, King of France, Germanie, and Emperour of the Romans.
841	3	Lewis surnamed the Ancient, second son of Ludovicus Pius, King of Germanie, to which anno 876. he united that of Lorrain also.
	4	Charles the Grosse, son of Lewis the Ancient, reigned joyntly with Caroloman and Lewis his elder Brethren, after their deaths sole King of Germany. Anno 880. he succeeded Ludo- vicus Balbus in the title of Emperour, continued unto his Succeſſours; and during the minoritie of Charls the Simple, by a faction of the French Nobility, was choſen King of France: the whole eſtate of Charls the Great becoming once again united in the perſon of one Soveraign Prince.

891 5 Arnulph, the naturall ſon of Caroloman, the brother of Charls, King of Germanie, and Emp.

903 6 Lewis, or Ludovicus IV. (Lewis the brother of Charls and Caroloman being reckoned for one) King of Germanie and Emperour.

913 7 Connade the ſon of Conrade, the brother of Lewis the 4. the laſt Prince of the iſſue of Charls the Great. After whoſe death the Francones and Saxons, ſeeing Charls the Simple, King of France, overlaid by the Normans, took that advantage to transferre the Empire to themſelves, and they made choice of Henry Duke of Saxony to be their Emperour. A worthy Prince, by whom ſome Nations of the Sclaves, the Hungarians, and part of Lorrain were ſubdued, or added to the Empire.

920 6 Henricus, ſurnamed Auceps, or the Fowler, Duke of Saxonie. 12.

938 9 Otho, ſurnamed the Great, the ſon of Henry Emperour and King of Italie. 36.

974 10 Otho, II. ſon of Otho the firſt Emperour and King of Italie. 10.

984 11 Otho III. ſon of Otho the 2. Duke of Saxonie (and the laſt of that houſe which had the title of Emperour and King of Italie.) After whoſe death, all right of ſucceſſion being diſclaimed, the Emperours became Elective, but for the moſt part wholly ingroſſed or Monopolized (ſince the Failer of the houſe of Saxonie) by the Dukes of Franconia, Suevia, Bavaria, and Auſtria, notwithſtanding the libertie or freedom of Election pretended to by the Electors. The buſineſſe firſt projected in the Court of Rome, to make the Emperours leſſe powerfull, and diſtract the Germans, whom they feared, into ſides and factions: confirmed by a decree of Pope Gregory the fifth, being a Native of that Country. The Electors only ſix in number, that is to ſay,

1. The Archbiſhop of Mentz, Chancellour of the Empire.
2. The Archbiſhop of Colen, Chancellour of Italie.
3. The Archbiſhop of Triers, Chancellour of France.
4. The Count Palatine of the Rhene, Arch-Sewer.
5. The Duke of Saxonie, Lord Marſhall; And
6. The Marqueſſe of Brandenburg, Lord Chamberlain.

Upon equalitie of voices, the Duke (but now King) of Bohemia, was to come in for the 7. who by Office was to be Cup-bearer at the Coronation. For upon Coronation dayes, or dayes of like ſolemnitie, theſe Offices are performed only, and then performed in this manner. Before the Palace gate ſtandeth an heap of Oats ſo high that it reacheth to the breſt of the horſe on which the Duke of Saxonie rideth, bearing in his hand a ſilver wand and a ſilver meaſure, both which together weigh 200 marks: then ſitting ſtill upon his horſe he filleth up the meaſure with oates, ſticketh his wand in the Remainder, delivereth the meaſure of Oats to ſome of his ſervants which ſtand next him, and ſo attendeth the Emperour into the Court. The Emperour being entred and ſate down at the Table, the three ſpirituall Electors ſtanding orderly together, ſay Grace before him. Then cometh the Marqueſſe of Brandenburg on horſe-back alſo, with a ſilver baſin in his hand, full of water (the baſin of the weight of 12 marks of ſilver) and a fine clean towell on his arm, which alighting down he holdeth forth unto the Emperour. Then comes the Count Palatine of the Rhene, mounted on his horſe, with four ſilver Platters full of meat) every one of the weight of three marks) which alighting alſo, he carrieth and ſetteth down upon the table. And finally the Duke (or King) of Bohemia, on horſe-back (as the others were) with a Napkin on his Arm, and a covered cup of the weight of 12 marks, entreth the Great-hall, alighteth from his horſe, and giveth the cup unto the Emperour to drink. But we muſt know that theſe ſervices are ſeldome or never (eſpecially of late times) performed by the Electours in perſon. It is enough if they ſend their Embaſſadours to do it, or ſubſtitute ſome one or other of the Emperours Court to perform it for them.

The election is uſually holden at Francfort on Menus, whither the Electours or their deputies come, upon the day appointed by the Biſhop of Ments, whoſe office it is to aſſemble the Princes. In their paſſage into Francfort, they are guarded by every Prince, through whoſe territories they paſſe. Their attendants muſt not exceed the number of 200 horſe-men, whereof 50 only muſt be armed. When they are all met, they goe to S. Bartholomews Church; where after Maſſe ſaid, the ſpiritual Electors laying their hands on their breaſt, and the temporall on the book, ſhal ſwear to chooſe a fit temporall head for the people of Chriſtendom. If in the ſpace of 30 days they have not agreed, then muſt they eat nothing but bread and water, nor by any means go out of the citie, til the greater part have agreed on a man, who ſhall forthwith be acknowledged King of the Romans. The Election being finiſhed, & the partie choſen, the inauguration was anciently holden, 1. at Aken in Gulick, where the new elected Emperor received the ſilver crown for Germany, 2. at Millain, where he received his iron crown for Lombardie; 3. at Rome, where he received the golden crown for the Empire. But thoſe journeys unto Rome and Millain have been long laid by, the Emperours holding their Election to be ſtrong enough enough to make good their Title to that honour, being meerly titular. The form of which Election, the priviledges of the Princes Electours, and other fundamentall constitutions of the German Empire; we find summed up in the golden Bul of Charls the 4. by whom first promulgated anno 1359.

1002 10 Henry II. surnamed the Saint, Duke of Bavaria, the first Emperour elected according to the constitution of Gregory the fift.

1025 13 Conrade II. Duke of Franconia, surnamed Salicus.

1040 14 Henry III. surnamed Niger, the son of Conrade.

1056 15 Henry IV. son of Henry the third, in whose dayes the Popes began to usurpe authority over the Emperours: insomuch as Leo the ninth having received the Popedom at the Emperours hands, repented himself of it, put off his Papall vestments, went to Rome as a private person, and was there new chosen by the Clergie. This done by the perswasion of a Monke called Heldebrand, who being afterwards made Pope by the name of Gregory the 7. excommunicated this Henry, the first Prince that was ever excommunicated by a Pope of Rome: from which time till the year 1254. there were continual wars and thunders betwixt them and the nine following Emperours; some of them being excommunicated, some forced to put their necks under the feet of the Pope; others to quit the care of the Common-wealth, and betake themselves unto the wars of the Holy-Land, leaving the Pope to doe what he list in Germanie.

1106 16 Henry V. son of Henry the 4. armed by the Pope against his father, whom he had no sooner succeeded in the Empire, but the Pope excommunicated him, for being too stiffe in the busines of investitures, and raised up the Saxons against him: by whom vanquished, and otherwise afflicted by the Popes practises, he was forced to submit unto his commands; and was the last Emperour of the house of Franconia.

1125 17 Lotharius Duke of Saxonie, seised on the Empire without any election, reconciled unto the German Princes by the means of S. Bernard. He settled the affairs of Italie in two journies thither, 13.

1136 18 Conrade III. son of Frederick, the first hereditary Duke of Sweve, or Schwaben, and fifteen son unto Henry the fifth, vanquished Henry surnamed the Proud, Duke of Saxonie and Bavaria; and going to the holy wars with Lewis King of France discomfited the Turks near the Banks of Meander. 15.

1153 19 Frederick, surnamed Barbarossa, Duke of Sueve, crowned at Rome by Adrian the 4. and not long after excommunicated by Pope Alexander the 3. to whom he was fain at last to submit himself, the Pope insolently treading on his neck. He went after to the Holy Land, (where he dyed) having discomfited the Turks in three great battels, 39.

1190 20 Henry VI. son of Frederick King of Sicil, in right of Constance his wife, crowned by Pope Celestine, who employed him in the wars of the Holy Land; in his journey towards which, he dyed at Messina. 8.

1198 21 Philip Duke of Sueve, brother of Henry the 6. excommunicated by the Pope (who loved not this Familie) by whose means Otho the son of Henry the Lion, Duke of Saxonie, was set up against him. The occasion of great wars among the Germans, reconciled by marriage of Otho with a daughter of Philip. 9.

1207 22 Otho IV. son of Henry surnamed the Lyon, Duke of Saxonie and Bavaria, crowned at Rome by Pope Innocent the 3. by whom not long after excommunicated, for taking into his hands some towns of Italie which belonged to the Empire: vanquished in Brabant by the faction raised up against him, he relinquished the Empire to his Competitor.

1212 23 Frederick II. King of Sicil and Naples, son of Henry the 6. having settled Germanie disposed himself for the wars of the Holy Land, where he recovered the possession of the Realm of Jerusalem; excommunicated by the Pope at his return into Italie, not long after poisoned.

1250 24 Conrade IV. son of Frederick, the last Emperour of the house of Schwaben. After whose death, the Empire being distracted by the Popes practises into many factions, each faction chose an Emperor or King of the Romans: so that at one time there were elected, Henry Earl of Turingia, William Earl of Holland, Alfonso King of Castile, the renowned author of the Alfonsive Tables, and 1254 25 Richard Earl of Cornwall, brother of Henry the 3. of England, the best-monyed man of all his time, supposed therewith to buy the suffrages of the Archbishop of Colen, and Electour Palatine, by whom he was elected and crowned King of the Romans, anno 1254. and after he had dealt in the affairs of the Empire 6 years, he returned into England, where he dyed. During these battels, and the times since Henry the fourth, the Popes had in a manner forced the Emperours to abandon Italie, so that Rodolphus who succeeded, sold all his rights in Italie to the fairest chapman. Nor did the craft of the Popes rest there, but extended into Germanie also: where by arming the Princes against the Emperours, and raising the Prelates to the dignitie and estate of Princes, he made the Empire of small power and consideration. Made smaller yet by the unworthinesse and and weakneſſe of ſome of the Emperours, who to get that honour for themſelves, or to leave it after them to their ſons, diſmembred from the ſame many towns and fair poſſeſſions, given by them to the Electors for their votes and ſuffrages: by means whereof the Princes grew in time ſo ſtrong, that there were few of them who durſt not undertake a warre againſt their Emperors. And this appeareth by the Example of Charls the fifth, who though the moſt mighty and moſt puiſſant Emperour which had been in Germanie ſince the death of Charls the Great, yet found himſelf ſo over-matched by theſe ruffling Princes, that he was willing to reſign the Empire to his brother Ferdinand. But to proceed; after an interregnum of 12 years from the Exit of Richard Earl of Cornwall, the title was at laſt accepted by 1273 26 Rodolph Earl of Habsburg, a petite Prince, (others of greater Eſtates and Fortunes not daring to take up the honour) the Raiſer of the preſent Auſtrian Familie.

1292 27 Adolph Earl of Naſſaw, who ſerved in perſon under King Edward the firſt of England againſt the French; for which diſreliſhed by the Germans, he was encountred and ſlain near the Citie of Spires.

1298 28 Albert Duke of Auſtria, ſon of Rodolphus the Emperour, to whom Pope Boniface the 8. gave the Realm of France, of which he had deprived King Philip the Fair. But Albert would not meddle out of Germanie, and did nothing in it.

1308 29 Henry Earl of Luxembourg made a journey into Italie to recover the rights of the Empire (where an Emperour had not been ſeen in 60 years) ſuppoſed to be poiſoned in the Chalice by a Frier at Benevent a town of the Popes. 6.

1314 30 Lewis Duke of Bavaria, crowned at Aix in the wonted manner, oppoſed by Frederick Duke of Auſtria, choſe by another Faction, and crowned at Bonna, a town of the Archbiſhop of Coleno, but being defeated, Lewis remained ſole Emperour, excommunicated by Pope John 22. 33.

1378 32 Wenceſlaus King of Bohemia, and Earl of Luxembourg, deformed and vicious, depoſed by the German Princes. 22.

1400 33 Rupertus Elector Palatine paſſed into Italie for the recovery of the Dukedome of Millain, ſold by Wenceſlaus; but was well beat by John Galeazes, and ſo returned. 10.

1410 34 Jodocus Barbatus, Marqueſſe of Moravia, uncle to Wenceſlaus.

1411 35 Sigiſmund, brother of Wenceſlaus, King of Hungarie and Bohemia, and Earl of Luxembourg, crowned at Rome on Whitſunday, 1432. travelled exceedingly for eſtabliſhing the peace of Chriſtendom, diſtracted at that time with three Popes at once, a great promoter of the Councell of Conſtance.

1439 36 Albert II. Duke of Auſtria, ſon in law of Sigiſmund, whom he ſucceeded in all his eſtates and titles excepting Luxembourg. 1.

1440 37 Frederick III. Duke of Auſtria, the ſon of Erneſt of Auſtria, and next heir of Albert the 2. procured the calling of the Councell of Baſil for the peace of Chriſtendome; travelling for that cauſe to Rome, where declared Emperour, anno 1442. 54.

1494 38 Maximilian, ſon of Frederick, Duke of Auſtria, who firſt united the Eſtates of Burgundie to the houſe of Auſtria. A Prince that undertook many great Actions, but went thorough with none. 25.

1519 39 Charls V. King of Spain, ſon of Philip King of Spain, and Archduke of Auſtria, ſon of Maximilian by the Lady Mary of Burgundie. A puiſſant Prince who had priſoners at the ſame time the French King, and the Pope of Rome. He ruined the League made by the Proteſtants at Smalcade, took priſoners the Electour of Saxony, and the Lantgrave of Haſſia, drave the great Turk from Vienna, won the Kingdom of Tunis, and in the end reſigned all his Eſtates and dyed in a Monaſterie. 39.

1558 40 Ferdinand, Archduke of Auſtria, the brother of Charls, King of Hungarie and Bohemia, elected King of the Romans by the procurement of Charls, anno 1531. Upon whoſe reſignation he was choſen Emperour, anno 1558. 7.

1565 41 Maximilian the ſon of Ferdinand, elected King of the Romans in the life of his Father, anno 1562. ſucceeding in the Empire after his deceaſe.

1577 42 Rodolphus, the eldeſt ſon of Maximilian, had great wars againſt the Turk, with whom in the year 1600 he concluded a peace; but being undermined by his brother Matthias, was forced to ſurrender to him the Kingdoms of Hungarie and Bohemia, and to content himſelf with Auſtria and the Empire only. Theſe eight laſt Emperours were all of the order of the Garter. 36.

1612 43 Matthias brother of Rodolphus K. of Hungarie, Bohemia, and Archduke of Auſtria; in whoſe time were ſown the ſeeds of that terrible war, which had almoſt deſtroyed the Empire. Having no children of his own, he procured Ferdinand of Gratz, to be declared Succeſſor into his Eſtates.

1619 44 Ferdinand of Gratz, Archduke of Auſtria, ſon of Charls of Gratz, one of the younger ſons of Maximilian the 2. ſucceeded Matthias in all his Eſtates and titles. A Prince more zealouſly affected to the See of Rome then any of his Predeceſſors, and a great enemy of the Proteſtant Religion; occaſioning thereby that long and bloudy war in the Empire of Germanie, not yet fully ended.

1637 45 Ferdinand III. ſon of Ferdinand the 2. broke the great power of the Swedes, (called in for the ſupport of the German liberty, & againſt the violent reſolutions of his Father) at the battle of Norlingen, the 12. Emperour of the houſe of Habsburg, and the 9. of the houſe of Auſtria without intermiſſion. The cauſe of which is to be attributed to Charls the fift, who procured in his life time that his brother might be choſen Rex Romanorum, as his ſucceſſour. Now Rex Romanorum is defined to be one, who is already ſo farre eſtated in the Empire, that on the death, depoſition, or reſignation of the preſent Emperour, he is immediately to ſucceed. This definition may paſſe, though there be no neceſſity of the ſucceeding of the Rex Romanorum into the Empire. For Charls the fift, though he made his brother King of the Romans, had no ſmall hopes to have left his ſon Philip his ſucceſſour in the Empire: for fear of which, it was thought by many that his brother lent D. Maurice a helping hand to drive him out of Germany. The reaſon why Charls did inſtitute this Rex Romanorum, was (queſtionleſſe a deſire to perpetuate the Soveraignty in his own houſe: but his pretences were, 1. Becauſe he having the command of many Nations, he could not alwayes be preſent in Germany. 2. The troubled State of Chriſtendome, by reaſon of Luthers preaching, eſpecially there. 3. The violent power of the Turks, who now began to be nigh neighbours unto them. 4. The late Rurall war raiſed by the Boores, and ſcarce yet thoroughly extinct. And 5. The imminent diſobedience in every part of the Empire, ſeemed to require a Prince both of power and title to aſſiſt him in the Government of it. By theſe ſuggeſtions he effected his deſign therein; but hereby changed in a manner, the Imperiall ſtile. For whereas the firſt Emperours of the houſe of Charls the Great, were Emperours of the Romans and Kings of Germanie: the later Emperours of the houſe of Charls the fift, may not improperly be called Emperours of Germanie and Kings of the Romans. Tis true indeed, that the underſtanding and wiſe D. of Saxonie through all theſe fair pretences truly ſaw the main plot; which was to take Germanie (as Galba, in his excellent Oration to Piſo, ſaid of the Roman Empire) unius quaſi familiæ hæreditatem, and therefore he firſt flatly denyed to yeild to any ſuch election. Then he motioned that there might be an act made to prohibit the continuance of the Imperial authority, longer in one family, then for 3 ſucceſſions. But prevailing in neither, he left the Electors, by whom Ferdinand was choſen, and not long after crowned at Aken or Aquiſgrane in Cleveland, the 16 of January, anno 1531. This policie hath been ever ſince continued by his ſucceſſours; and the Germans are the more willing to hearken to it, becauſe the Auſtrian Princes are Natives of this Countrey, and able to back out the Empire in its compleat Majeſtie.

And to ſay truth, it is but need that ſome great Prince or other be elected to it, who by the power and reputation of his own eſtate may preſerve the honour of the Empire; confined in a manner within Germany, and there ſo weakened by the alienating of whole Countries from it (ſome titulary acknowledgement excepted onely, that it is nothing in effect, but magni nominis umbra, the ſhadow of a mighty body, a meere empty title. For if we looke upon the preſent ſtate and condition of it, we ſhall finde it otherwiſe too weak to ſupport the great and ſwelling title of the Roman Empire. For as for the Empire it ſelf it hath ſome Countries reputed as parts of it, which yet acknowledge no ſubjection, as Belgium, Switzerland, and Denmark: Some doe acknowledge a kind of ſubjection, but the Princes of them come not to the Imperiall Diets, as the Dukes of Savoy and Lorrain, and ſome of the Italian Potentates. Finally, ſome both confeſſe the Emperour to be their Soveraign, and that they owe ſervice to his Courts, which are the Princes and Cities of Germany onely; but thoſe ſo priviledged, ſo exempted from his commands, ſo abſolute and incontrollable in their own eſtates, that they care little for his power, and not much (if any thing) for his perſon: of which we ſhall ſpeak more hereafter, when we come unto the form of the publick Government. In the mean time if we would know by what occaſions the Empire became ſo infeebled; it may be ſaid, that the reaſons and occaſions of it have been very many. As the firſt, the weakneſſe and improvidence of the Caroline race, diſmembring from it many powerfull and wealthy Provinces, reſerving onely a bare Homage, and ſome ſlight acknowledgement. 2ly, The cunning of the Popes, who knowing that they could not wax ſtrong in Italy, if they did not weaken the Emperours eſtate in Germany, firſt wreſted out of their hands the Inveſtiture of the Biſhops, Abbots, and other Eccleſiaſticall preferments: who being now made their owne creatures, were ſo increaſed both in revenue and power by little and little, and fortified with ſo many immunities, that ſome of them grew in time to be Free Eſtates, all of them Princes of the Empire. 3ly, But fearing that this might not bring the Emperours low enough, they baited them with continuall factions and perpetuall broils; which put them to a neceſſity of making what friends they could, though they paid very dearly for them: and taking up what moneys they could of the wealthier Cities; paying them in exemptions and Royall priviledges, when they could not otherwiſe cancel or diſcharge the debt. 4ly, And unto this, the making the Empire Elective gave no little help, few of them looking on the Empire but as Tenants of it for term of life; and therefore were more likely to diſcharge ſuch debts by impairing the Publick Patrimonie, which they had no hold in, then to diminiſh any thing of their own eſtates.

Cleveland. eſtates. 5ly, But being the title of Emperour was the greateſt honour, which any of that Nation could be capable of, and ſuch as by good husbandry might be made beneficiall unto their poſterity, (as we ſee what good uſes have been made of it by the Auſtrian family ever ſince the time of Rodolph of Habſpurg): who would not part with ſome of the Imperiall rights to advance his owne houſe to an equall greatneſſe. 6ly, A thing which the Electours underſtood ſufficiently, and therefore were reſolved to make the beſt of the market, knowing that the commodity could be bought of none but themſelves: as in the Election of Wenceſlaus ſonne of Charles the 4th, of whom it was but aſk and have, what they had a minde to.

By theſe and every of theſe meanes the Body of the Empire came to be divided into many Eſtates, and thoſe Eſtates to be made abſolute and independent as before is ſaid. The principall whereof, which being deſcribed will make up the Chorographie of this great Continent, are thoſe of 1. Cleveland, 2. of the Eſtates of the three ſpirituall Electors, 3. the Palatinate of the Rhene, 4. Alſatia, 5. Lorrain, 6. Suevia or Schwallen, 7. Bavaria, 8. Auſtria and its appendixes, 9. The confederation of Wederaw, 10. Franconia, 11. Wittenberg, and 12. Baden, 13. the Palatinate of Northgoia, or the Upper Palatinate, 14. Bohemia, and the incorporate Provinces, 15. Pomerania, 16. Mecklenberg, 17. the Marquiſate of Brandenberg, 18. Saxonie and the Members of it, 19. the Dukedomes of Brunſwick and Lunenburg, 20. the Lantgravedom of Haſſia, 21. VVeſtphalen, 22. Eaſtfriſeland. Such leſſer States as being abſolute and free, are of leſſer moment, ſhall be reduced (together with the Imperiall Cities) to thoſe ſeverall Provinces, in which they are included, or out of which they were taken. As for the Province of Holſtein or Holſatia, though it be Imperiall, and in which reſpect by ſome accounted as a Province of Germany: yet being under the command of the King of Denmark, and by all Writers reckoned as a part of that Kingdom; I ſhall there ſpeak of it. Some of theſe are thus cenſured by Aubanus a late writer. They of Suevia (ſaith hee) are whores; they of Franconia Raviſhers and Buggers; they of Bohemia Heretiques; thoſe of Bavaria Theeves, they of Saxony Drunkards; they of Friſeland and Weſtphalia Swearers; and they of the Palatinate, Gluttons. But I hope more charitably of them all then ſo. I know there is another diviſion of this Countrey, made by the Emperour Maximilian at the Diet of Colen, anno 1522. who for the better raiſing both of men and money for all Publick ſervices, cauſed it to be divided into the ten Circles of 1. Lower Saxony, 2. Upper Saxony, 3. VVeſtphalia, 4. of the Rhene, 5. of the four Electours of that part, 6. Franconia, 7. Suevia, 8. Bavaria, 9. Auſtria, and 10. Burgundie. But that before propoſed being the more particular I ſhall follow that, according to the order before laid down, beginning firſt with thoſe which together with the Belgick Provinces and the Dukedome of Lorrain, contained antiently the Provinces of Belgica and Germania prima; and ſome part of Germania ſecunda; and made up the Kingdome of Auſtraſia ſtrictly and ſpecially ſo called.

CLEVELAND.

CLEVELAND, or the Eſtates of the Duke of Cleve, before diſmembred and divided betwixt the Competitors for the Dukedome on the death of the laſt Duke hereof, anno 1609. contained the Dukedomes of Cleve, Gulick, and Berg, and the Earldome of Mark or March, all lying in a ring together. And though theſe two laſt lye on the other ſide of the Rhene, and ſo not properly within the old precincts of the Kingdome of Lorrain, or any of the Roman Provinces before named: yet being they belonged all to the ſame Prince, not parted by the interpoſition of other Countries, they ſhall be handled here together as the ſame Eſtate.

1. The Dukedome of CLEVE, properly and diſtinctly ſo called, hath on the Eaſt the Countries of Mark and Berg, with ſome part of VVeſtphalen; on the Weſt Guelderland, and ſome part of Limbourg: on the North the Earldome of Zutphen, and the land of Overyſſell; and on the South Gulick and the land of Colen. So called from Cleve the chief town of it.

The Countrey very fruitfull both for Corn and paſturage, well ſtocked with Cattell of all ſorts, for neceſſarie uſe and pleaſure; good ſtore of Fowle, both tame and wilde: bleſſed alſo with an healthy air, and in a word, with all things needfull for the life of man: well watered with the Rhene, the Roer, the Duſſell, the Ezſat, and the Nirſt, common to this and the reſt of the incorporate Provinces.

Places of moſt importance in it are firſt Cleve (in Latine Clivia) ſo called becauſe built on the ſides of three little hils (which the Latines call Clivi), gently deſcending towards the Banks of the Rhene, which not far off divides it ſelf into ſeverall channels. An antient town, and of great note in former times, as appeares by many old foundations, and other monuments of Antiquity, continually digged up in the fields adjoining, but chiefly by an old foreſquare Tower, built on the higheſt of the three hils, of great height and ſtate; founded by Julius Cæſar as a bulwork againſt the Germans inhabiting the further ſide of the River. For proof of which beſides the old tradition conſtantly maintained, there is an Inſcription on the Gates of the Dukes Palace, neer adjoining to it, which ſaith anno ab Urbe DCXCIIX. C. Julius Dictator, his partibus ſubactis, hanc Arcem fundavit. i.e. that in the yeare 698 from the building of Rome, Julius Cæſar the Dictator, having ſubdued thoſe parts of the Countrey, cauſed this Tower to be built. 2. Santen, on the banks of the Rhene, a town of great antiquity, as the ruines of it doe declare; ſuppoſed by Pighius to bee the Trajan a Colonia of the Antients. 3. VVeſel (in Latine Veſalia) a fair and rich town, ſeated on the confluence of the Rhene with the river of Lippe, which riſing in VVeſtphalia doth here loſe it ſelfe: of great great note for a Colledge of ſecular Canons, built here by Eberard the ninth Earl, anno 840 or thereabouts, and an hoſpitall liberally endowed for old impotent perſons, founded by Henry de Baers the Dukes Chancellour. A town not ſubject to theſe Dukes though within the Dukedome, being reckoned an Imperiall City and one of the Hanſe Towns; now neither ſo Imperiall nor ſo Free, as formerly: poſſeſſed firſt by the Spaniard with a Garriſon of 3000 men, (at the beginning of the war of Cleve) by D. Lewis Velaſco; and from them taken by the States of the United Provinces, anno 1628. 4. Burich, on the French ſide of the Rhene, over againſt Weſel, amongſt goodly corn fields and pleaſant paſtures. 5 Duisberg, or Tuitebberg, in Latine called Teuto-burgum, a town of the antient Germans, (as the name importeth) ſituate on the Rhene, betwixt the Angra and the Ruer, two noted Rivers. A town formerly of great treding, and notably well built, Imperiall, and one of the Hanſe, but ceaſed to be Imperiall when ſold by Rodulph of Habſpurg to Theodorick the ninth of that name Earl of Cleve, and together with 6 Cravenburg, another town of this Dukedome, but of leſſer note. 7 Emmerick on the Rhene, a well frequented town, remarkable for a very fair School. 8 Rees, 9 Griet, and 10 Grietbuſen, all upon the Rhene. 11 Calcar, a town more within the land, but not far from the River, grown wealthy by the trade of cloathing, and the beſt beere or ale in all theſe parts, ſold thence aboundantly into the Countrey round about. Not far from whence, at a place called Auf de Baern, it is ſuppoſed that Cæſar Germanicus built his bridge over the Rhene, when he went from Vetera Caſtra againſt the Marſi, a nation of Germany. 12 Gennep upon the Niers or Nirſi, not far from its influx into the Maes, which together with Duiſſeck and Riexwald were bought of Sigiſmund the Emperour by Adolph the firſt Duke of Cleve for a great ſum of money.

South of the land of Cleve, betwixt it and Colen, lyeth the County of MUERS, extended all along on the bankes of the RHENE, a diſtinct State, the Earle of which is ſubject to no other Prince, but the Emperor only: ſo called from Muers the chief town of it, ſituate on the French ſide of the Rhene over againſt Duyſburgh. Next Towns to which are 2. Orſay, 3. Angut; of which little memorable. A ſmall territory, but in a very fruitfull ſoil. The neighbourhood whereof to the land of Colen (to which it ſerveth as an Outwork upon that ſide) preſerving it in former times from the Dukes of Cleve; who otherwiſe, no doubt, either by Arms or marriage had been maſters of it; as they were of the adjoyning Provinces on both ſides of the River.

2. GULICK-LAND, or the Dukedome of Gulick, hath on the Eaſt the County of Muers, and the land of Colen; on the Weſt Guelderland and Limbourg; on the North Cleve, and on the South the reſt of the land of Colen. The Aire and Soil much of the ſame nature as in Cleve; ſave that here is a greater plenty of Woad for dying, and a better breed of Horſes then in the other.

Places of moſt importance in it, are 1 Gulick, in Latine Juliacum, (whence the French call it Juliers) known by that name in the Itinerary of Antoninus; ſufficient proof for the Antiquity thereof, but not otherwiſe famous. Seated upon the River Roer; the chief ſeat heretofore of the Dukes of Gulick, before the uniting hereof with Cleve: and ſince the diſſolution of that Eſtate poſſeſſed ſometimes by the States of the United Provinces, and ſometimes by the Spaniards; called in by the Competitors to aſſert their Titles. 2 Duerin, on the ſame River, the Marcoduram of the old writers; and of late memorable for the long ſiege which it held againſt Charles the fift, in his wars againſt William Duke of Cleve and Gulick for the Dukedom of Guelders. 3. Munſter Eyphels (in Latine, Monaſterium Eyphalie) ſo called to diſtinguiſh it from Munſter of Weſtphalen, pleaſantly ſeated in a valley begirt with mountaines not far from the ſpring or fountaine of the river Erfat. 4 Caſter ſo called of a ſtately and magnificent Caſtle built for defence of this part of the Countrey. 5 Berken on the river Erp. 6 Meroden beautified with a ſtrong Caſtle, which gives name to an honourable and antient family. 7 Enskereh. 8 Berklen, &c.

There is alſo within the limits of this Dukedome, the famous town of Aix, as the French, or Aken, as the Germans call it: famous of old times for the hot Bathes both within and without the town; whence it had the name of Aixt or Aquen, (in Latine, Aquiſgranum) ſituate on the edge of Limbourg, in a fruitfull ſoil; but the buildings nothing anſwerable to the fame of the place, inhabited for the moſt part by Smiths and Braſiers, who drive the greateſt trade herein: working continually on iron and other metals, with which they are ſupplyed aboundantly out of Liege and Limbourg. The town Imperiall, but under the protection of the Dukes of Cleve: at the expiration of which family, under colour of ſome quarrels about Religion, it was ſeiſed on, and garriſoned by Marquis Spinola, for the King of Spain. Of great fame formerly for the death and ſepulture of Charles the great, by whom made one of the three Seates of the Weſtern Empire, and deſigned by him to be the place in which the King of the Romans ſhould receive his Crowne for the Kingdome of Germany, at the hands of the Archbiſhop of Colen. The town ſuppoſed to be formerly that wintring Campe of the Romans, called in Tacitus Vetera, which was taken by Civilis in the beginning of his rebellion againſt Veſpaſian; during which warres it is often mentioned by the Writers of thoſe times. They were built and ſtrengthened by Auguſtus, the better to keep under the Germans: quippe illis hybernis obſideri premique Germanias Auguſtus credideraat; as Tacitus. At this day this Towne and Iriers are reputed famous for holy reliques: here being ſaid to be among others the bearing cloth wherein our Saviour was wrapt, when he was in his ſwadling clouts; which the Emperour ſolemnly worſhippeth at his inauguration. Concerning the ambition which the Papiſts have to bee thought poſſeſſours of theſe reilques: See I beſeech ſeech you how pitifully they have mangled the head of S. John Baptiſt. They of Amiens brag that they have his face, and ſo do they of S. John D'Angeli. The reſt of his head is at Malta, yet is the hinder part of his ſcull at Namur, and his brain at Novum Roſtovienſe. Another part of it is at Maurienna, another piece at Paris, his jaw at Weſel, his ear at S. Flowres, his fore-head and hair at S. Salvadores in Venice, another piece of his head is at Noyon, and another at Luca, yet is his whole head intire and unmaimed in S. Sylveſters Church at Rome: and ſo no doubt is this bearing-cloth at more places then one.

But to return again to Gulick; firſt made an Earldom in the perſon of Euſtace brother of Godfrey of Bovillon Duke of Lorrain, who ſeiſed upon it, as his part of the Eſtate, on the death of Godfrey, his elder brother being abſent in the Holy-Land. In the perſon of William the 4. of that name, it was made a Marquiſate, advanced unto that honour by the Emperour Lewis of Bavaria, anno 1329. created not long after Duke of Gulick, by Charls the 4. anno 1356. His two ſons, William and Reynold, both Dukes ſucceſſively, dying without iſſue: the Eſtate fell to Adolphus Duke of Berg, or Mont, as the next heir male, anno 1423. and finally together with that of Berg, was added to the Dukedome of Cleve by the marriage of Mary heir hereof, with John the 3. Duke of Cleve, with which conjoined till the expiration of that noble familie; whereof more anon.

As for the Eſtates of Berg and March, they had one originall, begun by two Brothers, the ſons of Theodorick Lord of Teiſterbant, of the houſe of Cleve; out of which houſe as they deſcended, ſo into that they finally were again reſolved as their firſt materials. Of theſe two brothers Adolphus being the Elder, was by the Emperour Henry ſurnamed the Fowler, made Earl of Altena, anno 930. or thereabouts: and Eberard the younger by the ſame Emperour made Earl of Berg. But Eberard entring a Monaſterie of his own Foundation, left his eſtate and Earldome of Berg to the elder brother. United thus into one eſtate, they became again divided betwixt the ſons of Adolph the 3. of that name, and fourth Earl of Altena and Berg. Engelbert the younger ſon enjoying the eſtate of Berg, and Eberard the elder ſucceeding his father in that of Altena. How they became united to the houſe of Cleve, wee ſhall ſee hereafter, having firſt looked over the Chorographie or Deſcription of them.

3. The Dukedom of BERG, bounded on the Eaſt with Weſtphalen, and the Countrie of March; on the Weſt with the Rhene from Weſel up as high as Colen, by which parted from the Dukedome of Cleve; on the North with the River Lippe, which ſeparates it from the reſt of Cleve; and on the South with the Land of Colen. So called from the hillineſſe of the Countrie, Berg in Dutch ſignifying an hill, (as Bourg doth a Town or Burrough) from whence the Earls and Dukes hereof are called Montenſes in Latine, and Les Contes, and Ducs de Mont in French. The Countrie for the moſt part, in the Vales eſpecially, yeelds a great ſtore of the beſt wheat, and conſequently of the pureſt bread; and in the hill Countries rich mines of Coale, wherewith they doe ſupply their neighbours.

Chief places in it are, 1 Duſſeldorp, ſo called of the River Duſſel, upon which it is ſituate, the River not far off falling into the Rhene. 2 Adenbourg built by Eberard the firſt Earl of Berg, the ſeat of him and his ſucceſſours, till removed to Duſſeldorp. 3 Keiſerſwerd, ſituate on the Rhene, belonging anciently to the Empire, but bought for a great ſum of mony of Charls the 4. by John Earl of Cleve. 4 Mulheim, on the Rhene alſo, juſt againſt Colen on the other ſide of the water, fortified in the year 1614. and made the Receptacle of the Proteſtants of that Biſhoprick, prohibited the free exerciſe of Religion in their own dwellings; but razed not long after by Marquis Spinola on complaint made by thoſe of Colen to the Emperour Matthias. 5. Stelt, or Steltium, on the Roer, amongſt the Coale mines. 6. Angermond, on the mouth of the River Angra, as the name imports. 7. Eſſen or Eſſendia, on the borders of the Countie of March, once an Imperiall, but under the protection of the Earls of Berg. Of moſt note for a Monaſterie here built by Alfride the 4. Biſhop of Hildeſheim for 52 Nuns and 20 Canons, liberally endowed, and having great command on the Dorps adjoining.

How Berg at firſt was made an Earldom, how joined unto Altena, and disjoined again, hath been ſhewed before. No ſooner made a State diſtinct, but it was added to the patrimonie of the Earls of Gulick by the marriage of Earl William with the daughter and heir of Berg. Parted again betwixt William and Adolphus ſons of Gerrard the 2. anno 1247. the firſt ſucceeding in the Earldom of Gulick, and the laſt in Berg. During this partage made a Dukedom in the perſon of William the firſt of that name, by Wenceſlaus the Emperour, anno 1389. whoſe ſon Adolphus as next heir ſucceeded in the Dukedom of Gulick, anno 1423. How both were added unto Cleve, hath been ſaid alreadie.

	11	Adolphus III. the son of William the first Duke of Berg, succeeded also unto Rainold the last Duke of Gulick, dying without issue, 1423.
1434	12	Gerrard IV. of Berg, and V. of Gulick, son of William, and brother of Adolphus.
1475	13	William V. of Berg, and VI. of Gulick, son of Gerrard.
1511	14	Marie daughter and heir of William Dutchesse of Gulick and Berg, conveyed the whole Estate in marriage to John the 3. Duke of Cleve, and Earl of March, continuing in that Familie till the expiration of it in the person of John William the last Prince hereof, anno 1610.

4 The Earldom of MARCH or MARK, hath on the East and North Westphalia, on the West the Dukedom of Cleve, on the South that of Berg or Mont. So called as being seated in the Marches of Westphalen, out of which it was taken. The Countrie for the most part like the rest of Westphalen, more fit for pasturage then corn; woodie and yeelding store of pawnage to those heards of swine, with which it plentifully abounds.

Chief places in it are, 1 Werden upon the River Ruer, on the edge of Westphalia, the people whereof get great wealth by grazing of Cattle. 2 Soest (in Latine, Sustatum) for wealth and greatnesse not inferiour to any in Westphalen, (except Munster only) consisting of ten parishes, and lording it over many rich and pleasant Villages. Anciently it belonged to the Bishops of Colen, but in the year 1444. did voluntarily yeild it self to the Duke of Cleve, (being then Earl of March also) and by Duke John the 4. courageously defended against those Prelates. 3 Arusberg, a fine and pleasant site, used for a retiring place by the Electours of Colen, unto whom it belongs. 4 Dortmond, (in Latine, Tremonia) a Countie anciently of it self, and held immediately of the Empire, possessed by the Trotmanni, a tribe of the Suevians, from whence first called Trotmania, and at last Tremonia. 5 Blancostein, built commodiously by Adolphus the fift of that name, and first Earl of March, as was also 6 Ham or Hammone. 7 Unna, of which nothing memorable. 8 Altena, the first title of the Earls of this house, before they assumed that of the Earls of March, assumed first by Adolphus the 4. on the Conquest of some Lands in the Marches of Westphalen, continuing in that Familie till united with Cleve.

As for the Earldom or Dukedom of CLEVE, out of which it was taken, and to which the rest of those estates did in time accrew; it was one of the most ancient Estates or Principalities in these parts of the world: continuing in a direct line for the space of 900 years held by them of the Kings of France, and afterwards of the Kings of Lorrain, till the incorporating of that Kingdom with the German Empire. Begun first by Elias Grullius, companion to Charls Martel, in his wars against the Frisons, Saxons, and Bavarians, whose son Theodorick added hereto by marriage the Countie of Teisterbant, containing containing the Towns and Seigneuries of Altena, in Weſtphalen, as alſo of Bomel, Heuſden, Buren, Culemberg, in the Belgick Provinces. By Baldwin the ſixt Earl was added the territory of Twentzen, (in Latine, Regio Tuentana) given him by Ludovicus Pius; by Theodorick the fift, the town and Seigneurie of Duiſlake, ſetled upon him on his marriage with Mathilda, the heir thereof: by Theodorick the 9. the County of Hulkenrade, near Nuys, in the land of Colen: together with the towns of Duysburg, and Culembourg, bought of Rodolphus Habſpurgenſis: by John his ſon the town and territory of Keiſarſwerd, bought of Charles the 4. By Adolph the 29. Earl, the Earldome of March, formerly taken out of it, was again united: by Adolph his ſucceſſour, (made the firſt Duke hereof by the Emperour Sigiſmund, anno 1417.) the Lordſhips of Gennep. Duiffels, and Reixwald, bought of the ſaid Emperour; together with the County of Ravenſtein, the Towns of Leoburg, Limers, and Hatteren, for the ranſome of William Duke of Berg, and other noble perſons taken priſoners by him anno 1397. by John the firſt Duke of that name, the Town and territory of Soeſt; and finally by John the 3. the Dukedomes of Berg and Gulick, as heir thereof by his mother Mary, ſole daughter and heir of William the fift and ſixt, the laſt Duke thereof. To which great height this ancient and noble family had not long attained, and thereby made themſelves and their ſons and daughters fit matches for the greateſt Princes: but it pleaſed God to bring it to its fatall end, and by that means to diſſipate this brave eſtate in the hands of ſtrangers: as ſhall be ſhewed in the Concluſion of this Catalogue of him ſucceeded on the death of his Uncle John to the Earldome of Cleve; inaugurated thereunto by Charles the 4. Cleve.

1389 30 Adolph II. of Cleve, and VIII. of March, created the firſt Duke of Cleve by the Emperour Sigiſmund at the Councell of Conſtance, anno 1417.

1443 31 John III. ſon of Adolph, Duke of Cleve, Earl of March, and Lord of Ravenſtein.

1481 32 John II. of the rank of Dukes, and the IV of the Earls.

1521 33 John III. Duke of Cleve and Earl of March, &c. by deſcent from his Father; and Duke of Gulick and Berg in right of his wife, daughter and heir of William the laſt Duke thereof.

1539 34 William ſon of John the 3. and Mary his wife, daughter and ſole heir of William the laſt Duke of Gulick and Berg: father of the Lady Anne of Cleve, one of the wives of Henry the 8. of England. He contended very ſtrongly againſt Charles the fift for the Dukedome of Gueldres, but being too weak for ſo great an Adverſary, made his ſubmiſſion to him at Venlo, and ſo ſaved his eſtates.

1584 35 John William, ſon of the former William, during the life of Charles Frederick his elder brother, was Biſhop of Munſter; on whoſe death, anno 1575. he reſigned that dignity, and in the end ſucceeded his Father in his whole eſtates; which he managed with great piety and prudence tilll the year 1610. and then died iſſueleſſe. The laſt of that ancient and noble family of the Dukes of Cleve. After whoſe death, much quarrell and contention grew about the ſucceſſion, betwixt the ſeverall competitors and pretenders to it: of which the principall were 1. Leopold Archduke of Auſtria, pretending an inveſtiture from the Emperour Rodolphus, to whom for want of heirs males, the eſtate was ſaid to be eſcheated. 2. John George, Duke of Saxonie, deſcended from Sibyll, daughter of Duke John the third: at whoſe marriage with John Frederick the Electour of Saxonie an. 1535, it was ſaid to have been ſolemnly agreed upon, that on the failing of the heirs males of Cleve, the iſſue of that marriage ſhould ſucceed therein. 3. John Sigiſmund the Electour of Brandenburg, in behalf of his ſon, George William, Duke of Pruſſia, by the Lady Anne his wife, eldeſt daughter of Albert of Brandenburg Duke of Pruſſia, and of Maria Leonora, the eldeſt ſiſter and next heir of the Duke deceaſed. 4. Wolfgangus Guliehnus Palatine of Newburg, ſon of Magdalen the younger ſiſter of that Mary, who claimed the eſtate as neareſt kinſman one degree to the ſaid laſt Duke. And though the right ſeemed moſt apparently on the ſide of Brandenbourg; the Eſtate in tayle pretended by the Duke of Saxonie, being formerly cut off by Imperiall authority: and that pretended to by the Duke of Newburg, not of force in Germanie; yet being that Leopold was in Armes, and had already forced a poſſeſſion of moſt part of the Countrey; the two Princes of Brandenbourg and Newburg ſoon agreed the controverſie, and by the help of the Proteſtant Princes their Confederates, recovered the greateſt part of it from the hands of Leopold. But the Palatine of Newburg not content with his partage, firſt married with a daughter of the Duke of Bavaria, then reconciled himſelf to the Church of Rome; called in the Spaniſh Armes under the command of Marquiſſe Spinola, to abet his quarrell: which made George William, ſon of the Elector of Brandenbourg, and the Lady Anne, to call in the Forces of the States, under the command of Maurice Earl of Naſſaw after Prince of Orange. The iſſue of which war was this, that Spinola poſſeſſed himſelf of Weſel, Aken, Mullheim, Puſſeldorp, and moſt other places of importance in Berg, and Gulick; and the States got into their power the Towns of Gulick, with Rees and Emmerick, in the Dukedome of Cleve; and almoſt the whole County of Mark. And though they both pretend to keep them for the uſe of thoſe Princes in whoſe cauſe they ſtand: yet when ſuch ſtrong parties keep the Stakes, it is moſt eaſie to determine who will win the game: ſuch alterations as have hapned in the chance of war, by the reciprocall winning and loſing of ſome Towns on both ſides, not much conducing to the benefit of the rightfull Princes.

2. The Eſtates of the three ELECTOR-BISHOPS.

Adjoyning to the Eſtates of Cleve are thoſe of the Spirituall Electors of the Empire of Germanie, Colen, Ments, and Triers; not ſo contiguous and conterminous as thoſe of Cleveland, and therefore to be laid out ſeverally by their metes and boundaries: And firſt for

1. COLEN-LAND, or the Eſtate of the Archbiſhop and Elector of Colen, is bounded on the Eaſt with the Dukedome of Berg, from which divided by the Rhene; on the Weſt with Gulick; on the North with Cleve it ſelf and the County of Muers; and on the South extending to the land of Triers. The ancient Inhabitants hereof were the Vbii, in former times poſſeſſed of the Countreys of Berg, and March; but being warred on by the Germans bordering next upon them, they were by the Clemency of Agrippa, then Lievtenant of Gaul, received into protection, and by him placed along the French ſide of the Rhene, as well for defence of the borders of the Roman Empire, as for their own ſecurity againſt that Enemy. Won from the Romans by the French in the reign and under the conduct of Childerick, anno 412. or thereabouts; and from the French by the Emperour Otho the firſt, anno 949.

Colen.
Mentz.

Since that time, the City of Colen hath remained Imperiall, and of late times incorporated amongſt the Hanſe-towns: but the territory near unto it, and a great part of Weſtphalen, ſubject immediately to the Biſhop, much of the lands which formerly belonged to the Kingdome of Lorrain, being conferred upon this See by the Emperour Otho the ſecond at ſuch time as the Dukedome of Lorrain was erected by him. The Biſhops See firſt founded here by S. Maternus, one of the Diſciples of S. Peter; as hath been conſtantly affirmed by old tradition: but howſoever an Epiſcopall See without all queſtion in the time of Conſtantine: Maternus, Biſhop hereof, ſubſcribing amongſt others to the Councell of Arles anno 326. And being Colen was in thoſe times the Metropolis of the Province of Germania Secunda the Biſhop had the power of a Metropolitan, according to the rule and obſervation ſo often mentioned. Afterwards when the Empire was made Elective, theſe Biſhops, with their brethren of Mentz and Triers, were made three of the ſeven, which were to nominate and elect the ſucceeding Emperour: after which time it is no wonder that they grew both in power and Patrimony.

Places of moſt importance within this Electorate, are 1. Bonn, ſituate on the banks of the Rhene, in the moſt pleaſant and fruitfull place of all the Countrey; the ordinary reſidence of the Archbiſhop, whoſe houſe or Palace here, is ſaid to be one of the faireſt in all Germanie. By Tacitus called Bonna, and ſometimes Caſtra Bonnenſia, the wintering Camp in his times, of the ſixt Legion. 2. Nuys, by the ſame writer called Noveſium, (Niveſia by Antoninus) ſeated on the Erp, not far from its fall into the Rhene; the break-neck of the glories of Charles Duke of Burgundie: who being reſolved to get this town into his hands, as a convenient paſſe in to Germanie, lay ſo long before it, that he loſt the opportunity of joyning with King Edward the 4. of England, whom he had purpoſely invited to the war of France; and yet was fain to go without it. By means whereof he grew ſo low in reputation, that he was undermined by the French, defied by the Lorrainer, forſook by the Engliſh, baffled by the Switzers, and at laſt overthrown and ſlain by that beggerly nation. 3. Ernace, or Andernach, by Marcellinus called Antenacum, one of the ten Garriſons erected by the Romans on the banks of the Rhene, to ſecure their Province from the Germans: the other nine, being Confluenz, Boppart, Wormes, Bing, Zabern, Altrip, Selts, Strasburg, and Waſſenberg. 4. Lintz, ſeated on the ſame River alſo. 5. Sontina, a town of good repute. 6. Zulp, now a village of no eſteem but for the Antiquities of it, by Tacitus and Antoninus called Tolbiacum; moſt memorable for the great victory which Clovis the firſt Chriſtian King of the French (upon a vow made in the heat of the fight to embrace the Goſpell) obtained againſt the whole power of the Almans, never preſuming after that to invade his territories. 7. Rhineburg, commonly called Berck, the moſt northern town of all the Biſhoprick, ſituate on the Rhene (as the name imports) there where the lands of this Biſhop, as alſo of the Dukes of Cleve, and the Earls of Muers, meet upon a point. A Town which for theſe 60. years hath been of little uſe or profit to the right owner, poſſeſſed ſometimes by the Spaniards, ſometimes by the confederate States; for each commodiouſly ſeated, as opening a paſſage up the River, and receiving great cuſtomes on all kinde of Merchandiſe paſſing to and fro. But having finally been poſſeſſed by the Spaniard from the year 1606, till 1633, it was then regained for the States by Henry of Naſſaw Prince of Orange; with the loſſe of no more then 60. men: there being found in the Town 30. Braſſe peeces of Ordnance, 70. barrels of powder, with victuals and ammunition of all ſorts thereunto proportionable. 8. Colen, ſituate on the Rhene, firſt built by the Ubii before mentioned, and by them called Oppidum Ubiorum: afterwards in honour of Agrippina (daughter of Germanicus, and wife of Claudius) who was here born, made a Roman Colonie, and called Colonia Agrippina; and ſometimes by way of eminency Colonia only; thence the name of Colen. A rich, large, populous, and magnificent City, containing about five miles in compaſſe; in which are numbred 19 Hoſpitals, 37 Monaſteries of both Sexes, 30 Chappels of our Lady, 9 pariſhes, and 10 Collegiate Churches, beſides the Cathedrall, being a Church of vaſt greatneſſe, but of little beauty, and not yet finiſhed: the Metropolitan whereof is Chancellour of Italy, the ſecond of the three Electors; and writes himſelf Duke of Weſtphalen and Angrivaria. Nigh to this Town did Ceſar with incredible expedition make a bridge over the Rhene, which more terrified the barbarous enemy, then the reports of his valour: ſo powerful is laborious induſtry, that it overcometh all dyſaſters, and maketh the moſt unpaſſable waters yeeld to Heroick reſolutions.

In this Town alſo are ſaid to lie the bodies of the three wiſemen, which came from the Eaſt to worſhip our Saviour; vulgarly called the three Kings of Colen. The whole ſtory is at large written in tables, which are faſtned unto their Tombes. The pith whereof is this. The firſt of them called Melchior, an old man with a large beard; offered Gold as unto a King; the ſecond called Gaſper, a beardleſſe young man, offered Frankincenſe as unto God: The third called Balthaſar, a Blackmoor with a ſpreading beard, offered Myrrhe as unto a Man ready for his Sepulchre. That they were of Arabia, the tale ſaith, is probable; firſt, becauſe they came from the Eaſt, and ſo is Arabia in reſpect of Hieruſalem: and 2. becauſe it is ſaid in the 72 Pſalme, The Kings of Arabia ſhall bring gifts. As for their bodies, they are there ſaid to have been tranſlated by Helena, the mother of Conſtantine, unto Conſtantinople; from thence by Euſtorgius, Biſhop of Millain, removed unto Millain; and finally brought hither by Rainoldus, Biſhop hereof, anno 1164. This is the ſubſtance of the hiſtory; which for my part I reckon among the Apocrypha, (except it be their comming from ſome part of Arabia) but have no leiſure in this place to refell the Fable.

2 Next to the Biſhoprick of Colen lieth the land of TRIERS, extended all along the courſe of the Moſelle, from the Dukedome of Lorrain on the South, to the influx of that River into the Rhene at the City of Confluentz, where it bordereth on the Land of Colen: and being bounded on the Eaſt with Luxemburg, as on the Weſt with ſome part of Francovia. The Countrey towards Lorrain, and Luxembourg, somewhat wilde and barren; more fruitfull about Triers it ſelf, and the bank of the Rhene; in all parts generally more pleaſant then profitable, the greateſt riches of it lying in woods and Minerals. The Biſhops See here firſt erected by Eucherius, a Diſciple and follower of S. Peter. The reality whereof, not only teſtified by the Martyrologies, but by Methodius a writer of approved credit; who addes Valerius and Materntus for his next ſucceſſours; the line Epiſcopall continuing till the Councell of Arles anno 326, Agritius Biſhop of Triers ſubſcribing to the Acts thereof. From this time forwards and before the Biſhop had the reputation and authority of a Metropolitan, the City of Triers being anciently the Metropolis of Belgica prima, within which it ſtands: increaſed exceedingly by being made one of the three Electors of the Spiritualty, though the laſt in order, and Chancellour to the Emperour for the Realm of France; the fortunes of which Realm it followed, till wreſted from it, with the reſt of the Kingdome of Lorrain, by the German Emperours. Triers.

Places of moſt importance in it, are 1. Confluents, now Cobolentz, the Confluentes of Antoninus, ſo called becauſe ſeated on the confluence or meeting of the Rhene and the Moſelle; the ſtation anciently of the firſt Legion. A populous and well-built town; and ſeated in a pleaſant and fertill Countrey. 2. Embretſtein, over againſt Cobolentz, on the other ſide of the Rhene, beautified with a ſtrong Caſtle of the Biſhops, mounted upon a lofty hill, which not only gives a gallant proſpect to the eye, but commands both the Town and River. 3. Boppart, ſeated on the Rhene, and called ſo quaſi Bonport, from the commodiouſneſſe of the Creek (upon which it ſtandeth) for the uſe of ſhipping: one of the forts (as Confluents before mentioned was) erected by the Romans on the Rhene for defence of Gaul againſt the Germans; occaſioning in time both Towns. It was once miſerably waſted by Richard Earl of Cornwall and King of the Romans, becauſe the Biſhop of Triers agreed not unto his Election; but ſoon recovered of thoſe hurts. The ancient name hereof in the Itinerarie of Antoninus, is ſuppoſed to be Bodobrica: pawned to the Biſhops of Triers by Henry the 7. and not yet redeemed. 4. Sarbrucken, on the edge of Lorrain (by Antoninus called Pons Sarvix) ſeated on the River or Brook called Sar, (whence it had the name) at the fall thereof into the Moſelle, poſſeſſed at the preſent by a branch of the houſe of Naſſaw (but Homagers of this Electour) entituled hence according to the Dutch faſhion, Counts of Naſſaw in Sarbruck. 5. Veldents, and 6. Belſtern on the Moſelle; of which nothing memorable. 7. Treves, or Triers, in Latine Treveris, the principall City of the Treveri, who poſſeſſed this tract: ſeated upon the Moſelle alſo; the Metropolis of the Province of Belgica Prima, and honoured with the reſidence of the Vicar or Lieutenant Generall, for the whole Dioceſe of Gaul: by conſequence the ſeat of a Metropolitan when it ſubmitted to the Goſpell. Of ſuch antiquity, that it is ſaid to have been founded 150. years before the City of Rome: of no great beauty of it ſelf, and as little trading: the River not being capable of ſhips of burden; and the air generally ſo cloudy and inclined to rain, that it is by ſome called merrily Cloaca Planetarum. It paſſed ſometimes among the number of Imperiall cities, but now acknowledgeth the Elector for the Lord thereof; by whom made an Univerſity, one of the ancienteſt in all Germanie, and of as much reſort for the ſtudy of good Arts and Sciences, as the beſt amongſt them. 8. Obert-Weſel, or Veſalia Superior, ſo called to diſtinguiſh it from Weſel in the Dukedome of Cleve, which is Veſalia inferior, or the Vnder-weſel: the furtheſt place of this diſtrict, ſeated on the Rhene, not far from Baccharach, a Town of the Palatinate, of no great note, but that it is accompted for a Town Imperiall.

3. The Biſhoprick of MENTZ, is not laid out by bounds and limits as the other; becauſe the Patrimony and eſtate thereof doth not lie together: diſperſed for the moſt part about Franconia, intermixed with the Lands and Towns of the Princes Palatine, the Biſhops of Wormes, Spires, and others. So that the temporall Eſtate of this Electour is every way inferiour unto thoſe of Triers and Colen; ſuperiour unto both in place and dignity: he being the firſt in rank of the whole Electorall Colledge, Chancellour for the Empire, and in all meetings ſitteth at the right hand of the Emperour. The Biſhops See firſt placed here, as ſome report, by S. Creſcens, one of the Diſciples of S. Paul, of whoſe being ſent by him into Gallia (for ſo the Ancient writers underſtand Galatia) the Apoſtle ſpeaketh 2 Tim. 4. Though others with more probability ſeat him at Vienna in Daulphine. But whether it were here or there, certain it is that anciently this City was a See Epiſcopall, Martin the Biſhop hereof ſubſcribing to the Acts of the Councell of Colen anno 347. And if a Biſhop, certainly a Metropolitan Biſhop, this City being in thoſe times the Metropolis of the Province of Germania Prima. But Chriſtianity being worn out of theſe parts of Germanie, by the conqueſts of the French, Alemans, and other infidels; was again reſtored in this tract by Boniface, an Engliſhman, the firſt Archbiſhop of Mentz of this new plantation, (in and about the time of Pepin, ſurnamed the Groſſe, Maire of the Palace to the French Kings, and father of Martell) who for the Orthodoxie of his doctrine, and the number of Churches planted by him, hath been deſervedly honoured with the title of the Apoſtle of Germanie.

Towns of moſt note belonging to the Biſhops hereof are 1. Mentz it ſelf, the Mogumiacum of the Antients, ſo called from the River of Maine formerly Mogus and Moganus in the Latine; now better known by the name of Manus) oppoſite to the fall whereof into the Rhene it was built of old, ſo having the command of both Rivers: for that cauſe made the ſeat of a Roman officer, commonly called the Duke of Mentz, who had a charge of the Frontiers, and eſpecially of thoſe ten Garriſons planted on the banks of the Rhene, ſpoken of before. Stretched out in great length on the River ſide, but not of anſwerable breadth: well built and populous towards the water, in other parts not ſo well inhabited. The publick buildings generally very large and beautifull, the houſes built according to the old Roman modell; the moſt magnificent whereof is the Biſhops Palace, who is the immediate Lord both of the Town and Territory, extended on both ſides of the Rhene, fruitfull in all naturall commodities, and abounding with moſt excellent wines. Of good note alſo for an Univerſity here founded by Theodorick, one of the Electours: but eſpecially for the Art of Printing which was here invented, or perfected at the leaſt, and made fit for uſe. 2. Bing ſeated on the Rhene, another of the Garriſon towns erected by the Romans on the banks of that River. In a ſmall Iſland of which, not far from this town, is a Tower, or Caſtlelet, called the Mouſeturn, i. e. the tower of Mice: built by one Halto, (or Hanno) Archbiſhop of Mentz, anno 900, or thereabouts. Who in a yeer of great ſcarcity pretending to relieve the poor people oppreſſed with Famine, cauſed them to be gathered together into an old barn, where he burnt them all; ſaying they were the Rats and Mice which devoured the Corn. After which barbarous act he was ſo perſecuted by thoſe Vermin, that to avoid them, he was fain to build a Palace in the midſt of the Rhene; whither the Rats and Mice followed him, and at laſt devoured him. 3. Lauſteine. 4. Hatford. 5. Oxenford. 6. Alderburg. 7. Middleburg. 8. Carloſtadt, the birth-place of Caroloſtadius, of great note in the time of Luther. 9. Biſchoffſtein. 10. Koningsberg, (mons Regius in Latine) the birth-place of Johannes de Monte Regio, a famous Mathematician, as appeareth by his Comment upon Ptolemies Almageſt, moſt of theſe in Frankenland, but of this Electorate.

3. The PALATINATE of the RHENE.

The PALATINATE of the RHENE is ſituate wholly in Franconia; bounded upon the Eaſt with the Dukedome of Wirtenberg, and ſome part of Franconie; with the reſidue thereof, and the River Main upon the North; on the South with Elſats, or Alſatia; and on the Weſt, with the land of Triers: extended in length from Coub to Gemerſheime, north and ſouth 72 miles; and in breadth from Sweibrucken to Lauden, eaſt and weſt 90 miles.

It is called alſo the Lower Palatinate, to difference it from the Palatinate of Bavaria, which is called the Upper: the Palatinate of the Rhene, becauſe lying on the banks of that famous River. The whole Country is ſaid to be the moſt pleaſant part of all Germany, ſtored with all ſorts of fruits and metals, abounding with thoſe cool wines, which growing on the banks of the Rhene, have the name of Rheniſh, adorned with many goodly Towns both for ſtrength, populouſneſſe, and beauty; and finally, watered with the famous Rivers of the Rhene, and the Neccar. Chief Towns hereof, 1. Moſpach, a pretty neat town on the banks of the Neccar, and a Prefecture, not far from the borders of Wirtenberg; 2. Ladenberg, neer the influx of the ſame River into the Rhene; the moiety whereof was bought by Rupertus Emperour and Palatine, of the Earls of Hohenloe, anno 1371. the other moiety belonging to the Biſhop of Wormes. 3. Winheime, a ſmall town not far from Ladeberg, belonging once to the Arch-biſhop of Mentz, but on ſome controverſie ariſing about the title, adjudged unto the ſaid Rupertus, and his heires for ever. 4. Scrieſſen in the ſame tract, well ſeated, but not very large, ſold with the Caſtle of Straluberg to the ſaid Rupertus, by Sifride (or Sigifride) of Straluberg, the right heir thereof, anno 1347. 5. Heidelberg, on the right ſhore of the Neccar (going down the water) compaſſed on three ſides with Mountains, and lying open onely towards the Weſt, which makes the air hereof to be very unhealthy. The chief beauty of it lyeth in one long ſtreet, extended in length from Eaſt to Weſt: on the South-eaſt ſide whereof is a fair and pleaſant Market-place; and not far off a very high mountain called Koningſtall (that is to ſay, the Kingly Seat) upon the middle aſcent whereof is the Caſtle, where the Princes Electours uſe to keep their Courts; and on the very ſummit or top thereof, the ruines of an old Tower blown up with gun-powder. A town of no great bigneſſe, nor very populous, there being but one Church in it, which was uſed in the time of my Author for Prayer and Preaching: the reſt being either ruined, or imployed unto other uſes, if not repaired again ſince the Spaniards became maſters of it, for more frequent Maſſes. Howſoever it hath the reputation of being the chief City of this Palatinate: not long ſince furniſhed with a great and gallant Library, which for choice, and number of Books (eſpecially Manuſcripts) was thought not to be fellowed in all Europe, (till matched, if not over-matched by the famous Bodleian Library of Oxford:) moſt of them to the great prejudice of the Proteſtant cauſe, being carryed to Rome, and other places of that party, when the town was taken by the Spaniards, anno 1620. Finally for the town it ſelf, it was once part of the poſſeſſions of the Biſhop of Wormes; from whom it was taken by the Palatines; it is now famous, for being the ſeat of the Palſgraves, the ſepulchre of Rodolphus Agricola, and for an Univerſity founded by the Emperour, and Palatine Rupertus, anno 1346. 6. Bacchurach, on the banks of Rhene, ſo called quaſi Bacchi ara, for the excellent wines. 7. Coub on the other ſide of the water; near unto which is the old and fair Caſtle called Pfalts, from whence the name Pfaltſ-grave, or Palſgrave, ſeemeth to ſome to have been derived. 8. Openheim, a ſtrong town, which together with Keiſers, Lauterne and Ingelheim, were given to the Palatines by Wenceſlaus: and after ſetled on them, by Rupertus the Emperour and Palatine, for 100000 Florens, anno 1402. 9. Cruintznacke, called antiently Staurone ſus. 10. Frankendale; lately a Monaſtery onely, but being peopled by ſuch of the Netherlands, which to avoid the fury of Duke Alva, fled hither; is now a town of principall ſtrength. 11. Germerſheim, and 12. Manheim, a well fortified town, ſeated on the confluence of Rhene and Neccar.

On

On the Eaſtern part of the Country ſtandeth 13 Laden, ſituate on the little River Tiberus, the furtheſt bound of the Palatinate towards the North-eaſt, there adjoyning to the reſt of Frankenland. And on the weſt ſide the Townes of 14 Newſtat, 15 Keiſars Lautern, in Latine called Cæſarea Lutra, once a town Imperiall, from which, and from its ſituation on the River Luter, it received this name. 16. Sweibrucken, the title of a younger houſe of the Paltsgraves, whom the Latine writers call Principes Bipontani: the French, the Princes of Deuxponts. 17. Simmeren on the north-weſt point of it, where it meets with the Diſtrict of Triers; the title of another Branch of the Palatine Family, called the Dukes of Simmeren. In all there are contained within this Palatinate 24 walled Towns, and 12 fair Palaces of the Prince: moſt of which they have added to their eſtate within little more then 400 yeers. Such excellent managers have they been of their own eſtates, ſo potent in ordering the affaires of the Empire both in war and peace; and ſo ingraffed themſelves into the moſt noble Families of Germany, that I may well ſay with Irenicus, Non eſt alia Germaniæ familia, cui plus debeat nobilitas. Palatinate, of Rhene.

Within the limits of this Country, and intermingled with the lands of the Princes Palatine, are the Biſhopricks of Spires and Wormes; both ancient, and of great Revenue, but feudataries for a great part of their eſtates to theſe Electors. Of theſe more towards the head of the Rhene, ſtands the City of Spires, by Ptolomy called Neomagus, from the newneſſe of the building when that name was given; by Antoninus, Civitas Nemetum, from the Nemetes, who poſſeſſed this tract; and ſometimes Spira, by which name it doth ſtill continue. A town Imperiall, and antiently a Biſhops See; Teſſis the Biſhop hereof ſubſcribing to the Acts of the Councell of Colen, anno 347. A neat Town, and very delectably ſeated. Of great reſort by reaſon of the Imperiall Chamber, the ſoveraign Court of Judicature of all the Empire; capable of Appeals from the Tribunals of all the Princes, and free States thereof. A Court which firſt followed the Emperour in all his Removes (as antiently the Kings Bench in England) by Maximilian the Emperour firſt made Sedentary, and fixt at Frankfort; removed after to Wormes, and finally to this City by Charles the fift. Sufficiently famous in that the name of Proteſtants was here taken up, given to the Princes, and free Cities following the Reformed Religion, upon their legall Proteſtation here exhibited. More down the water in the ſame ſhore thereof, ſtands the City of Wormes, one of thoſe built upon the Rhene, for defence of Gaul againſt the Germans; by Ptolomy called Borbegomagus; by Antonine, Civitas Wormenſis, whence the modern name; but generally Civitas Vangionum, from the Vangiones the old inhabitants of thoſe parts, whoſe chief City it was. A town Imperiall as the former, and a See Epiſcopall as that is, and as ancient too; Victor the Biſhop hereof ſubſcribing to the Acts of the Councel of Colen before mentioned. A town to be obſerved for the firſt appearance which Luther made before Charles the fift, (the Imperiall Chamber then being holden in this City) who being diſſwaded from that journey by ſome of his friends, returned this reſolute anſwer to them, That goe he would, though there were as many devills in the town, as there were tiles on the houſes. Chief towns belonging to theſe Biſhops, are 1 Udenheim, a town belonging to the Biſhop of Spires, whoſe reſidence it ſometimes is: conveniently ſeated for the command of the Country, and therefore upon ſome deſigne which was then in hand, fortified ſtrongly by the Biſhop. But this new Fortification being begun in a time of peace, gave great occaſion of diſtruſt to the neighbouring Princes; who interpoſed with Frederick the fift, then Prince Elector (of whom held in chief) to cauſe the Biſhop to deſiſt from the finiſhing of it. Which when he refuſed to doe, pleading a Placard from the Emperour Matthias to compleat the work; the Prince Electour, with the reſt of the Confederates, beat it down by force: for this contempt, cited to Spires the Imperiall Chamber, in which it was alſo reſolved to proceed ſuddenly, and ſeverely to their condemnation. One of the chief motives which occaſioned that unfortunate Prince, to entertain the offer of the Crown of Bohemia; and conſequently a chief cauſe of the German wars. In managing whereof this town was thought ſo commodious, that Marquis Spinola cauſed the works to be raiſed again, made it the ſtrongeſt hold in all thoſe Countries, and cauſed it to be called by the name of Philipsberg. 3. Rotenberg originally belonging to the Biſhops of Spires, but of late times poſſeſſed by the Princes Palatine. Others of leſſer note I forbear to mention.

The firſt Inhabitants of this Country on the French ſide of the Rhene, were the Nemetes, and Vangiones ſpoken of before; on the other ſide, the Intuergi. Firſt conquered by the Romans, and from them conquered by the French; of whoſe Empire it remained a part, till diſmembred from it at the erection of the Kingdome of Lorrain, in the fall whereof it was annexed to the Empire of Germany. By little and little got into the hands of the Princes Palatine, who being originally Officers of the Emperours houſhold (ſuch as the Maires of the Palace to the French Kings at the firſt inſtitution) had firſt the honour of Counts Palatine beſtowed upon them; and afterwards the place of an Electour in the choice of the Emperour. But where their Eſtate then lay, where they fixed their dwelling, and what provinces or people they had ſubject to them, a nullo inveni ſcriptum, I could never find any good Record to build on, ſaith the learned Munſter: their habitation and poſſeſſion in and of theſe parts, (acquired for the moſt part by Armes and Money) not being above 450 years ſtanding at the utmoſt. Likely it is, they had their reſidence for the moſt part in the Emperours Palace, living upon their rents, (as other great officers of Court in theſe later times) the dignity and authority of ſo great a place ſeeming ſufficient to content them: but called Count Palatines of the Rhene, becauſe their Juriſdiction and Authority lay moſt eſpecially in thoſe parts of the Empire which were towards that River: Afterwards on the marriage of Otho, the ſecond of that name Duke of Bavaria, with Gertrude, the daughter of Henry the Elector Palatine; this office with the Electorall dignity fell into

that houſe, poſſeſſed at that time of thoſe parts of Francon'a, which not long after on the dividing of that eſtate betwixt Rodolphus and Ludovicus, the ſon of Ludovick the 2. Electour Palatine, and Duke of Bavaria, made up this Palatinate. A State which ſuddenly received a great augmentation, partly by the care and good husbandry of Rupertus, Emperour and Electour Palatine; partly by the weakneſſe and ambition of Wenceſlaus Emperour and King of Bohemia; and partly by the valour of Frederick, the Prince Electour. Of theſe the firſt bought in the townes of Winheim, Ladeberg, and Scrieſſen, with the Caſtle of Stralnberg, with their lands and territories. The ſecond gave unto the Palatines for their voices in his election, three ſtrong towns of the Empire, viz. Keiſars Lauterne, Ingelheim, and Openkeim: and the laſt took in battle, anno 1452. the Earl of Wirtenberg, the Marqueſſe of Baden, the Biſhop of Spires, and the Archbiſhop of Mentz, and ranſomed them on what condition he pleaſed. More particularly the Earl of Wirtenberg (for it was not yet erected into a Dukedome) payed for his ranſome 100000 Florens; the Biſhop of Mentz redeemed himſelf for 450000 Florens. The Biſhop of Spires gave for his liberty, the towns of Rottenberg and Werſaw: and the Marqueſſe of Baden yeelded up in lieu of his freedome, the Country of Spanheim, of which Cruitznack is a part; the towns of Beſiken, and Binheim; the right which he pretended to Eppingen, a town over againſt Gemerſheim; and his royalties between this Gemerſheim and Selts a town of Alſatia, in fiſhing and hunting. So having brought theſe Princes unto their Eſtate; let us next take a view of thoſe who have ſucceſſively enjoyed both the State and Title, as far as we can goe by the light of Story.

ELECTORS Palatine of the RHENE.

A. Ch.

1. Henry Count of Palatine in the time of Otho the third, by whom ordained to be one of the ſix Electors.
2. Sigefride, the ſonne of Adelheild, wife of this Henry the Electour, by a former huſband.
3. Ezeline and Conrade, ſonnes of Sigefride.
4. Ludolfus, ſon to Ezeline.
5. Conrade, Elector Palatine in the time of Henry the fift.
6. Frederick, ſonne to Frederick Duke of Schawben, Nephew to the Emperour Conrade the third.
7. Henry II. ſurnamed the Lyon, Duke of Saxonie and Bavaria.

1195 8. Henry III. ſonne of Henry the Lyon, and husband of Clementia, daughter of Conrade Duke of Schawben, and Elector Palatine.

9. Henry IV. ſonne of Henry the third, in the life of his Father; the laſt Elector Palatine of the nomination and appointment of the Emperour, the dignity from hence forwards becoming hereditary.

10. Otho, Duke of Bavaria of that name the ſecond, Electour Palatine of the Rhene, in right of Gertrude his wife, ſiſter and next heir of Henry the fourth, whom he ſucceeded in the Electorall dignity, confirmed therein by the Emperour Frederick the ſecond.

1269 11. Ludovicus Electour Palatine, and Duke of Bavaria, the ſon of Otho.

1294 12. Rodolphus the eldeſt ſon of Lewis or Ludovicus, ſucceeded his Father in the Palatinate and Electorall dignity: Northgoia, or the Palatinate of Bavaria, being added to his part, to make even the ſcale; his younger brother Ludovicus ſucceeding in Bavaria.

1315 13. Adolphus, ſurnamed the Simple, reſigned the Electorall dignity to his brother Rodolphus, as the fitter man to undertake it.

1327 14. Rodolphus II. on the reſignation of Adolphus.

1337 15. Rupertus, the brother of Rodolphus the ſecond, founder of the Univerſity of Heidelberg, anno 1346.

1385 16. Rupertus II. ſonne of Adolfus the Simple.

1398 17. Rupertus III. elected Emperour in the place of Wenceſlaus King of Bohemia, anno 1406, made Knight of the Garter by King Henry the fourth.

1410 18. Ludovicus II. ſurnamed Cæcus, and Barbatus, married Blanch, daughter to King Henry the fourth of England.

1439 19. Ludovicus III. ſon of Lewis the ſecond.

1451 20. Frederick, brother of Ludovicus, during the minority of Philip his ſaid brothers ſonne, ſucceeded in the Electorall dignity; and added much to that Eſtate by his perſonall vertue.

1478 21. Philip, the ſonne of Lewis the third, pretended to the Dukedome of Bavaria in right of Margaret his wife; but after a long, and bloudy war forced to go without it.

1508 22. Ludovicus IV. ſon of Philip.

1544 23. Frederick II. brother of Lewis the ſift, who firſt introduced the Reformed Religion into the Palatinate.

1556 24 Otho-Henry, ſon of Rupertus the Brother of Frederick, and Lewis the laſt of the direct line of this houſe of Bavaria. Palatinate.

1559 25 Frederick III. Duke of Simmeren, deſcended from Stephen Palatine of Zweybruck or Bipont, younger ſon of the Emperour Rupert, ſucceeded on the deceaſe of Otho-Henry without iſſue.

1576 26 Ludovicus V. ſon of Frederick the third, a munificent benefactour to the Univerſity of Heidelberg.

1483 27 Frederick IV. ſon of Lewis the fift, married Ludovica, or Loiſe, daughter of William, and ſiſter of Maurice, Princes of Orange.

1610 28 Frederick V. married the Princeſſe Elizabeth daughter of James, King of Great Britain. In danger of being proſcribed for demoliſhing the works of Udenheim he accepted the Crown of Bohemia, but worſted at the battle of Prague, and warred upon by the Bavarian and the Spaniard, he loſt both that, and his own native Eſtates and Dignities; of which deprived by Ferdinand the prevailing Emperour: the Lower Palatinate being aſſigned over to the King of Spain, the Vpper Palatinate with the Electorall dignity to the Duke of Bavaria. Reſtored to the poſſeſſion of the moſt part of his Country, by the power of the Swedes, he dyed at Mentz, November 19. 1632.

1632 29 Charles Ludovick, the heir both of his Fathers Eſtates, and misfortunes too, not yet admitted to his honours (contrary to the fundamentall conſtitutions of the Empire, by which the ſons of the Electours and other Princes are not involved in the guilt of their Fathers offences) but in fair hopes to be reſtored thereto in part, by the Facifications made at Munſter this preſent year, 1648. which I pray God to proſper for the peace of afflicted Chriſtendome.

The Religion of this Country hath much varied ſince the firſt Reformation, eſtabliſhed by Frederick the ſecond, according to the forme and doctrine of the Confeſſion of Auſpurg: the doctrine and diſcipline of Calvin being introduced by Frederick the third; the Lutherans formes reſtored again by Lewis, or Ludovick the fift; after his death exchanged by Frederick the fourth for that of Calvin; as more conducing to the ends of ſome needy Statiſts, who could not otherwiſe raiſe their fortunes then by invading the Tithes and Glebe, and other poor remainders of the Churches Patrimony. Of which the Clergie being univerſally deprived throughout this Country, and reduced to miſerable ſhort ſtipends by the name of a Competency, became ſo contemptible, and neglected by all ſorts of men, that at the laſt the Church of the Palatinate was in the ſame condition with the Church of Iſrael under the reign of Ieroboam; when Prieſts were made out of the meaneſt of the people. And for the Government of their Churches, though moulded to the Genevian plat-form, as neer as might be; yet were thoſe Princes loath to leave too much power in the hands of the Elderſhips; and therefore did appoint ſome ſuperiour officers to have an eye on them, whom they called Inſpectores & Præpoſitos, their power being much the ſame with that of the partieular Superintendent amongſt the Lutherans; and over them a ſtanding Conſiſtory conſiſting of three Miniſters, and as many Counſellers of State, of the Princes nominating, who in his name were to take care of all things which concerned the Church. A temperament for which they were beholding to Eraſtus, a Doctour of Phyſick in the Univerſity of Heidelberg, who made this Pill to purge Presbytery of ſome Popiſh humours, which ſecretly lay hid in the body of it. But this whole modell is now changed, and the Religion of the Church of Rome reſtored in moſt parts of the Country, ſince the conqueſt of it by the Spaniard, none being publickly authorized and allowed but that.

But to return again to the Civill State, and the Concernments of theſe Princes, The Palſgrave hath many prerogatives above the Electours of either ſort. He taketh place of the Duke of Saxony, and Marqueſſe of Brandenburg; becauſe Henry the Palatine, was deſcended of Charles the great: for which cauſe he is alſo in the vacancy of the Empire, Governour of the Weſtern parts of Germany; in which office he had power to alienate, or give offices, to take fealty and homage of the ſubjects; and which is moſt, to ſit in the Imperiall Courts, and give judgment of the Emperour himſelf. And look whatſoever ſhall in the vacancy of the Empire, be by the Palatines enacted, that the new Emperours are bound by Oath to confirme, and ratifie.

The Revenues of theſe Princes were conceived to be about 100000 l. per annum: nor could they be ſuppoſed at leſſe; the ſilver Mines about Amberg onely in the upper Palatinate, yeelding 60000 Crownes a yeer, and the paſſage of one Bridge over the Rhene about 20000 Crowns more; beſides the demeaſne Lands, and the Lands of the Church incorporated (ſince the Reformation) into their Eſtate.

The Armes hereof are Diamond, a Lyon Topace, Armed and Crowned Ruby.

Elſats.

4. ALSATIA.

ALSATIA or ELSATS, as the Dutch call it, is bounded on the East with the Rhene, which parteth it from the Marquiſate of Baden, and ſome part of Schwaben; on the West with the Mountain Vauge, or Vogeſus, which ſeparateth it from Lorrain; on the North with the Palatinate; on the South (where it groweth very narrow) with a point of Switzerland. A Country for the pleaſantneſſe and fertilitie of it, inferiour to none in Germanie; called therefore Elſats, (as ſome think) quaſi Edelſats; that is to ſay, a noble Seat: derived more probably by others from the river Ill, the only River of note in all this tract, and called ſo, quaſi Ill-ſats, the ſeat or ſituation on the River Ill.

It is divided generally into the Lower and higher, to which the Countrie called Sungow may come in for a third. The LOWER ALSATIA is that which bordereth on the Palatinate, ſo called becauſe further off from the Mountains, and down the water in reſpect of the courſe of the Rhene. A Countrie ſo aboundantly fruitfull in wine and corn, (with which it furniſheth ſome parts of Germany, and not a few of the neighbour Countries) that it is generally called Germanie nutrix, or the nurſe of Germanie; by Wimphelegius the Epitome or Abſtract of it. Chief towns therein are 1 Straſburg, ſo called from the multitude of Streets (the Dutch call them Strats) anciently Argentoratum, and then Argentina, from the Roman Exchequer, or Receipt here kept in the time of their greatneſſe; or from ſome Mines of ſilver which were found about it. A ſtately, rich, and populous Citie, well ſtored with publick garners and cellars of wine, againſt times of dearth: Situate on the two Rivers Ill and Bruſch, where they both fall into the Rhene; by which and by the helps of Art very ſtrongly fortified: deſigned from the firſt foundation for a Town of war, this being another of the towns which the Romans built to defend the Rhene againſt the Germans. Now an Imperiall Citie, and a See Epiſcopal, the Biſhop whereof is Lord of the Lower Alſatia; the Church Cathedral, one of the faireſt in all Germanie: much famed for a Clock of moſt admirable workmanſhip, and a Steeple of as curious a frame as that, mounted 574 foot in height, the higheſt of any in Chriſtendome, higher by 40 foot then the Steeple of S. Pauls in London, before the firing of it. Of this thus ſaith the Poet in Adrianus.

Urbs præclara ſitu, ripis conterminа Rheni,
Maxima cui celſæ metiuntur mœnia turris.

Strasburg on Rhenes inamell'd banks doth lie,
Whoſe Tower even bids defiance to the skie.

2 Zabern, or Elſatz Savern, the Taberna of Antonine and Marcellinus, another of the old Roman Garriſons, deſtroyed by the Almans, and repaired again by Julian the Apoſtata then Emperour. Now the chief place of Reſidence for the Biſhops of Strasburg, and well frequented in regard of the Courts of Juſtice kept by his Officers in this Citie for the Lower Alſatia. 3 Altrip, ſo called from Alta ripa, from the high banks of the river on which it is ſeated; another of the Towns or Forts which the Romans like politick conquerours built on the Weſt ſide of the Rhene, to prohibit the incurſions of the barbarous Nations, as was alſo 4 Selts, ſeated on the Rhene betwixt Strasburg and Zabern; and 5 Weiſſenberg, more towards the Palatinate, now a town Imperiall, but ſeated on the river Lutra not far from its fall into the Rhene; encompaſſed with little hils and delightfull groves, the River gently waſhing the walks thereof, and adding much to it both of ſtrength and beautie. 6 Hagenaw, between Selts and Strasburg, but not ſo neer unto the Rhene as either of them, firſt walled by Frederick Barbaroſſa anno 1164. and ſince that time of great importance for command of the Countrie: but ſeated in a landie and unfruitfull ſoil, frequented chiefly heretofore by the old Lantgraves of Elſats for the commodities of hunting. More from the Rhene, 7 Stechfield, corruptly ſo called for Steffansfield, from the Monaſterie of S. Stephen there founded. 8 Haſle on the Bruſch, &c.

Places of moſt importance in the HIGHER ALSATIA, are 1 Rufach on the river Ombach, belonging to the Biſhops of Strasburg, of old called Rubeacum, from the red colour of the earth, well built, invironed with a double Suburb; in ancient times of great reſort by the Roman Nobilitie, much taken with the fruitfulneſſe and pleaſures of it: and well inhabited at this day, as is all the Countrie round about it, by reaſon of their vigorous proceedings againſt Theeves; from whence the Germans have a Proverb, that the old gallows at Ruffach is made of oak. 2 Enſheim or Enſiſheim, on the river Ill, anciently the ſtation of the tenth Legion, and then called Aruncis; now of moſt note for the ſupreme Court of juſtice there held for Briſgow, Sungow, and this part of Alſatia, by the Archdukes of Auſtria, the chief Lords thereof. 3 Colmar, an Imperiall Citie, raiſed out of the ruines of old Argentaria, deſtroyed by Attila and the Huns: well built and ſituate almoſt in the very Navell of Alſatia, not above an hours journey from the foot of the Mountains, but in a fruitfull and rich ſoil both for corn and paſturage, the Countrie hereabouts being very well watred with the Louch, Duro, Fecht, and Ill. 4 Schleſtad, in the modern Latine, Seleſtadium, but by the ancients called Elcebus, the ſtation at that time of the 19. Legion, afterwards of great fame for a Church here built by Hildegardis Dutcheſſe of Schwaben, anno 1044. according to the pattern of the Temple of Hieruſalem: which in tract of time became the richeſt Monaſterie in all theſe parts. Situate in a very fertile and delightfull ſoil, having the Rhene on the one ſide, and ſome ſpurs of the Mountaine Vauge ſhadowed with Groves of Cheſnuts upon the other: walled in the time of Frederick the 2. about the year 1216. and on the Eaſt defended with impaſſible fenns. 5 Gebwiſer, and 6 Watweil, both ſeated near the aforeſaid Mountains, and both ſubject to the Abbat of Murbach. 7 Keiſersberg, 8 Turchein, two Imperiall towns, but not otherwiſe memorable; as neither are many of the reſt, but for name and number; there being reckoned within this ſmall Province of Elſats, (not including Sungew) 46 Cities and Townes begirt with walls, beſides Caſtles, Forts and Villages, almoſt innumerable; and amongſt them more Free and Imperiall Cities, then in any one Province of the Empire.

The Southern part of Elſats bordering on the Canton of Baſil, is commonly called by the name of Sungow, in Latine, Sungovia, and Sungeia: but in former times the Dukedom of Pfirts, from Pfirt the chief town of it, and the Dukes ſeat: the Countrie very plentifull in corn and wine (as the reſt of Elſats) affording good ſtore of each to the neighbouring Switzers. Chief Townes hereof, are 1 Mulhauſen on the river Ill, heretofore under the command of the Biſhops of Strasburg, as were alſo Keiſersberg, and Colmar, but being taken in by Rodolph of Habſpurgh, after his advancement to the Empire it was made Imperiall, and is now confederate with the Switzers. 2 Beſort, remarkable for a Colleglate Church there founded by the Earls of Pfirt, in which lye buried 13 Earls, and as many Counteſſes. 3 Malz-munſter, ſo called from a Monaſterie of Nuns there founded by Malo a Prince of the old Almans. 4 Thann, a neat Town beautified with the fair Caſtle of Engleberg, mounted upon the top of a lofty hill. 5 Morſ-munſter, ſo named of an ancient Monaſterie there founded by the Earls of Pfirt, moſt of them great builders of Religious houſes. 6 Altkirk, not far from the head of the river Ill. 7 Pfirt it ſelf, ſeated on the Ill not far from Altkirk, in a countrie heretofore over-grown with Woods and Ferreſts, whence it had the name; called by the French le Pais de Ferrette (corruptly for le Pois de Forreſt) by the Dutch moulded into Pfirt: by which name (of the Countie of Ferretts) it is called by Philip de Comines, and other French writers, and by that name was pawned by Sigiſmund the Archduke, to Charls Duke of Burgundie, made by that means too near a neighbour to the Switzers, as it proved in fine.

Weſtward hereof, betwixt it and the Countie of Burgundie, lyeth the Towne and Earldome of Montbelgard (Mont is belligardium in the Latine) united by the marriage of Henrica, daughter and heir of Henry the firſt Earl hereof anno 1396. to the houſe of Wirtenberg. Chief Townes whereof, are 1 Clorewang, 2 Paſſewang, 3 Grans, all antiently beautified with Caſtles; and 4 Montbelgard, a Town of great ſtrength, proud of a Caſtle Royall on the top of a fair and lofty Mountain, whence it took that name; once the ſeat of its proper Earls, as after of the Princes of the houſe of Wirtenberg: but now both Town and Caſtle in the power of the French, who after their good luck in the Dukedom of Lorrain, cauſed a good Garriſon of their own to be put into them, anno 1633. under pretence of keeping them for the Children of a Brother of the Duke of Wirtenbergs, to whom the inheritance belonged.

The antient Inhabitants of this tract were the Triboohi, with parts of the Nemetes and Rauraci; firſt conquered by the Romans, then ſubdued by the Almains, after by the French, and by them made a part of the Kingdome of Lorrain: in the full of which Kingdom it was reckoned for a Province of the German Empire. Governed for the Emperours by Provinciall Earls, in the Dutch language called Landgraves, at firſt officiarie only, and accomptable to the Emperours under whom they ſerved; in the end made hereditarie and ſucceſſionall unto their poſteritias. The firſt hereditarie Landgrave ſaid to be Theodorick, in the reign of Otho the third; after whoſe death the Empire being made elective, gave the Provinciall Governours ſome opportunities to provide for themſelves. In his male-iſſue it continued till the reign of Frederick the 2. who began his Empire anno 1212, and dyed anno 1250. during which intervall this Eſtate was conveyed by daughters to Albert the 2. Earl of Habſpurg, Albert Earl of Hohenburg, and Lewis Earl of Ottingen. Rodolph of Habſpurg ſon of this Albert, afterwards Emperour of the Germans, marrying with Anne the daughter of the Earl of Hohenlhe, became poſſeſſed alſo of his part of the Countrie: which added to his own, made up the whole Upper Elſats, continued ſince that time in poſſeſſion of the houſe of Auſtria deſcended from him. The third part comprehending all the Lower Alſatia, was not long after ſold by the Earl of Ottingen to the Biſhop of Strasburg, whoſe Succeſſours hold it to this day, aſſuming to themſelves the title of the Landgraves of Elſats. But as for Sungow or the Countie of Pfirt, that belonged anciently to the Princes of the houſe of Schwaben: in the expiring of which potent and illuſtrious Familie, by the death of Conradine the laſt Duke, anno 1268. that great eſtate being ſcattered into many hands, it was made a diſtinct Earldom of it ſelf. And ſo continued till the year 1324. when Ulrick the laſt Earl dying without iſſue male, left his eſtate betwixt two daughters, whereof the one named Anne, conveyed her part in marriage to Albert Duke of Auſtria, ſurnamed the Short, Grandchild of Rodolphus the Emperor before mentioned; the other named Urſula, ſold her moietie to the ſaid Albert for 8000 Crowns. Since that it hath been alwayes in the poſſeſſion of the Dukes of Auſtria, (ſave only for the time in which it was pawned or mortgaged, together with Alſatia, to the Duke of Burgundie) governed in Civill matters and points of Judicature, by the Parliament, or Court of Enſheim in the Upper Elſats.

Lorrain.

5. LORRAIN.

The Dukedom of LORRAIN, is bounded on the East with Elſats; on the West with the Country of Barrois in France, (belonging to the Dukes hereof, and the reſt of Champagne; on the North with Luxembourg, and the land of Triers; and on the South with the County of Burgundy: from which and from the Province of Elſats parted by the Vogeſus or Vauge, wherewith incompaſſed on thoſe ſides. Aſſigned unto Lotharius, eldeſt ſon of Lewis the Godly, with the ſtile of a Kingdome: from thence called Lot-reich by the Dutch, Lot-regne by the French, from which the modern name of Lorrain, and the Latine, Lotharingia, are to fetch their Pedegree.

The Countrey is in length about four dayes journey, almoſt three in breadth: much overgrown with Forreſts, and ſwelled with Mountains; the ſpurs and branches of Vogeſus, and the once vaſt Wilderneſſe of Ardenne; yet ſo ſufficiently ſtored with all manner of neceſſaries, that it needeth no ſupply out of other places. Some lakes it hath which yeeld great quantity of fiſh; one more eſpecially 14 miles in compaſſe, the fiſh whereof yeelds to the Dukes coffers 20000 l. yeerly, it affordeth alſo divers metals, as Silver, Copper, Tin, Iron, Lead, in ſome places Pearls: Calcidonians alſo of ſuch bigneſſe that whole drinking cups are made of them; and a matter of which they make the pureſt glaſſes not to be paralleld in Europe. They have alſo a goodly breed of Horſes, equall to thoſe of Barbary, or the courſer of Naples.

The people by reaſon of their neighbourhood to, and commerce with France, ſtrive much to imitate the French in garb and faſhion; but one may eaſily ſee that it is not naturall; and have much in them alſo of the Dutch humour of drinking, but far more moderately then the Dutch themſelves: Generally they are a politick and an hardy Nation; not otherwiſe able to have held their eſtate ſo long againſt the French Kings and the Princes of the houſe of Burgundy. They lived very happily in former times under their own Dukes, not being at all oppreſſed with taxes; which made them very affectionate towards the Prince; and uſefull unto one another. Their language for the moſt part French, as in Artois, Luxembourg, Triers, and other of the bordering Provinces, members of the French Monarchy in former times: not ſo refined and elegant as is ſpoke in France; nor ſo corrupt and courſe as that of Montbelgard, and the the County of Burgundy.

The rivers of chief note, are 1. Marta, or the Meurte, which receiving into it many Rivers, and paſſing with a ſwift ſtream by the wals of Nancie, glides along fairely for a good ſpace within ſight of the Moſelle, into which at laſt it fals near Conde. 2 Moſa, the Meuſe or Maes, whoſe ſpring and courſe hath been already deſcribed in Belgium. 3 Moſelle, famous for the deſigne which Lucius Verus Governour for the Emperour Nero, had once upon it. For whereas it ariſeth in the mountain Vauge, not far from the head of the river Soaſne, and disburdeneth it ſelf into the Rhene at Confluence: he intended to have cut a deep channell from the head of this unto the other; ſo to have made a paſſage from the Ocean to the Mediterranean: the Soaſne emptying it ſelf into the Rhoſne (a chief River of France) as the Moſelle doth into the Rhene. 4 Selle, which mingleth waters with the Moſelle not farre from Mets. 5 Sora. 6 Martane. 7 Voloy, others of leſſe note; all of them plentifull of Salmons, Perches, Tenches, and the beſt ſorts of fiſh: as in their Lakes great ſtore of Carps, ſome of them three foot long and of excellene taſt.

Principall Cities are in it are 1 Mets, by Ptolemie called Divodurum; Metis, & Civitas Mediomatricum by Antoninus, the chief City of the Mediomatrices who poſſeſſed this tract. Seated in the pleaſant plain at the confluence of the Sore and Moſelle: the Royall Sea, in former times, of the French Kings of Auſtraſia, hence called Kings of Mets; long before that a Biſhops See, as it ſtill continueth. 2 Toul, the Tullum of Ptolemie, the Civitas Leucorum of Antoninus, ſo called from the Leuci, the Inhabitants of it, and the tract about it: pleaſantly ſeated on the Moſelle, and antiently honoured with a See Epiſcopall. 3 Verdun, an antient Epiſcopall See alſo, the Civitas Verodonenſium of Antoninus, ſeated on the Meuſe or Maes: the Biſhop whereof, as alſo thoſe of Mets and Toul (being the onely ones of this Countrey of Lorrain) acknowledge the Archbiſhops of Triers for their Metropolitan. All of them in the number (heretofore) of Imperiall Cities, poſſeſſed of large and goodly territories, and of great revenue: but taken by the French King Henry the ſecond, anno 1552. during the wars between Charles the fift and the Proteſtant Princes of Germany, under colour of aiding them againſt the Emperour. And though Charles tryed all wayes to recover them to the Empire againe, and to that end maintained a long and deſperate ſiege againſt the City of Mets: yet was the Town ſo gallantly defended by the Duke of Guiſe, that he was fain to raiſe his ſiege, and goe off with diſhonour. Since that, they have been alwayes under the ſubjection of France; a Parliament being erected at Mets for the eaſe of the people, as in other Provinces of that Kingdome.

Of ſuch Towns as immediately belonged to the Duke of Lorrain, the principall are Nancey, not great, but of a pleaſant and commodious ſite: well watered by the river Meurte or Marta; and fortified better then before, in the year 1587. on occaſion of a great Army of the Germans paſſing into France to aid the Proteſtants: moſt commonly the Dukes ſeat, and famous for the diſcomfiture which Charles Duke of Burgundy here ſuffered with the loſſe of his life. 2. St Nicolas, a town ſo populous, well ſeated, and neatly built; that were it walled, it would hardly yeeld preceedency to Nancie. It took name from the body of Saint Nicolas, here buryed, whose reliques have purchased no small reputation and riches to this town. 5 Vaucoleur, the birth-place of Joane the Virgin, to whose miracles and valour, the French attribute the delivery of their countrey from the power of the English: but being at last taken prisoner, she was by the Duke of Bedford then Regent of France, condemned and burned for a Witch. Of which crime I for my part doe conceive her free. Nor can I otherwise conceive of her and her brave exploits, then of a lusty lasse of Lorrain, tutored and trained up by the practise of the Earl of Dunois commonly called the Bastard of Orleans; and so presented to Charles the seventh, French King, as if sent immediately from Heaven. A project carryed on of purpose (as the most intelligent of the French writers say) pour fair revenir la courage aux Francois, to revive the drooping spirits of the beaten French, not to bee raised againe but by help of a miracle. Upon the sight of her Statua on the bridge of Orleans, a friend of mine did adventure on a copy of verses in her commendation, too long to be inserted here; but they ended thus.

She di'd a Virgin; 'Twas because the earth
Bred not a man whose valour and whose birth
Might merit such a blessing. But above
The Gods provided her an equall Love,
And gave her to Saint Denys. She with him Protects the Lilies, and their Diadem.
You then about whose Armies she doth watch,
Give her the honour due unto her match.
And when in field your standards you advance,
Cry loud, Saint Denys and Saint Joan for France.

Townes of lesse note are 4 Pont a Moson, so called from a bridge on the River Moson with a small Universitty. 5 Vandemont which gave a title of an Earl to a younger branch of the house of Lorrain. 6 Neauf-Chatteau, on the edge of the Countrey towards Barrois. 7 Amance, seven leagues on the South of Mets, sometimes the Chancery of Lorrain. 8 Riche Court, neer the Lake called Garde-lake, out of which floweth a River which runs into the Meurte. 9 La Mothe, seated on a River which fals presently into the Moselle. 10 Charmes, the place of treaty between the Duke of Lorrain and the Cardinall of Richelieu, the result whereof was the surrender of the town of Nancie, and by consequence of all the Dukedome into the hands of the French, Septemb. 1633. Of lesse note there are 1 Saint Die, 2 Saint Hippolit, 3 Bouquenon, and 4 Saverden; the first towns of this Dukedome taken by the Swedes, anno 1633. in the warre against Lorrain. 5 Saint Miel, 6 Oden-Chasteau, 7, Mirecour; all taken the same yeere by the French, in the prosecution of that war, before the treaty at Charmes. 8 Romberville, 9 Espinul, 10 Gerbreviller, &c.

The old Inhabitants of this Countrey were the Mediomatrices, and the Leuci spoken of before, together with the Vindonenses, all of them conquered by the Romans, under whom this Countrey and the District of Triers made up the whole Province of Belgica Prima. From them being taken by the French with the rest of Gaule, it was made a Kingdome, the Provinces of Germania Prima & Secunda, (containing all the parts of Germany before described, and so much of the Netherlands, as lye on the Westside of the Rhene) being added to it, called first from the Eastern situation by the name of Austenreic or Austrasia the portion of Theodorick the fourth sonne of Clovis the first Christian King of the French, from the chief City of his Kingdome called the King of Mets, whose successours follow in this order.

The KINGS of AVSTRASIA or METS.

514 1 Theodorick the base sonne of Clovis the Great vanquished the Turingians, and extended his Kingdome as far as Hassia and Turingia, as we call them now, 537 2 Theodebert the sonne of Theodorick, repulsed the Danes infesting the coasts of the Lower Germany; and added Provence (taken from the Gothes of Italy) unto his Estates.

548 3 Theobaldus the sonne of Theodebert, subdued the Almans, and added much of their Countrey to his own Dominions.

555 4 Clotaire King of Soissons the youngest sonne of Clovis the Great, succeeded Theobald in this Kingdome, as afterwards his brother Childebert in the Realm of France, anno 560. uniting in his person the whole French Dominion.

565 5 Sigebert the sonne of Clotaire, vanquished the Hunnes, then falling into his Estates: killed in his Tent by the practises of Fredegond, the wife of Chilperick King of France.

577 6 Childebert the sonne of Sigebert, successour to his Uncle Guntrum in the Realm of Orleans.

598 7 Theodebert the II. the sonne of Childebert, vanquished and outed of his Kingdome by Clotaire the second of France: from whose eldest sonne Sigebert descended the illustrious family of the Earls of Habsburg.

Lorrain.

617 8 Clotaire the II. King of France, on the death of Theodebert King of Auſtraſia, and his brother Theodorick King of Orleans, the ſole King of the French.

9 Dagobert, in the life of his Father King of Mets or Auſtraſia, whom he ſucceeded, at his death, in the Realm of France.

645 10 Sigebert II. the eldeſt ſon of Dagobert, made choiſe of this kingdome, for his part of the whole French Empire; therein preferring it to Weſt-France, or France it ſelf, which he left to Clovis the 2. his younger Brother. He brought the Suevians to obedience and ſubdued the Sclaves.

656 11 Childebert II. ſon of Grimoaldus, Mayre of the Palace to Sigebert, was by the power of his Father made King of Mets; Dagobert the ſon of Sigebert being ſhorn a Monk, and ſent into Scotland.

12 Clovis the 2. King of the French, having vanquiſhed and beheaded Grimoald, diſpoſſeſſed Childebert of the Kingdome, which he took himſelf.

662 13 Childerick the 2. ſon of Clovis, after the death of Clotaire his elder Brother, ſucceeding in the Kingdome of France united all the French Dominions into one Eſtate. In which condition it remained (but with ſome inlargement of the bounds) till the partition made by and amongſt the Children of Lewis the Godly; the name of Auſtraſia or Eaſt-France, being extended by Charles the Great, over all Pannonia, and ſo much of Germanie as was under the command of the French. In which diviſion, Lewis the 2. ſonne, ſurnamed the Ancient, being inveſted in the Kingdome of Germanie, or ſo much of Eaſt-France or Auſtraſia as lay on the Eaſt ſide of the Rhene: Lotharius the eldeſt ſonne had for his ſhare the title of Emperour, and therewith Italy, Provence, Burgundie, and ſo much of Auſtraſia or Eaſt-France, as lay on the French ſide of the River. Afterwards ſubdivided into three Eſtates; Italie with the title of Roman Emperour, being given to Lewis the eldeſt ſon, to Charles the youngeſt Provence, with the Kingdome of Burgundie; and to Lothaire the ſecond ſon Auſtraſia on this ſide of the Rhene, from hence called Lot-reich, Lot-regne, and Lotharingia, as before was ſaid. But Lothaire dying without iſſue, the Kingdome of Lorrain containing all the Netherlands (except Flanders and Artois) and all the parts of Germanie before deſcribed, became divided betwixt the Kings of France, and the German Emperours: each taking to themſelves the title of Kings of Lorrain, the River Meuſe or Moſa parting their poſſeſſions. But in the end, after much viciſſitude and interchangeableneſſe of affairs; both Princes laid aſide the title of Kings; incorporating ſo much as they held hereof into the reſt of their Eſtates: Otho the third of Germanie, and Lewis the fift of France, being the laſt that pleaſed themſelves with that broken title. In the mean time, this Countrey of Lorrain it ſelf, together with ſome part of the Land of Triers, Bovillon, Gulick, Luickland, and Brabant, being taken out of the reſt, were by Otho the ſecond made a Dukedome, anno 981. and by him given with the title of Duke of Lorrain, to Charles of France, ſon of Gerberge his Aunt by Lewis the 4. ſurnamed Tranſmarine, ſon of Charles the Simple. Charles thus advanced by his Uncle, and finding himſelfe wholly neglected by Lothaire the French King, his brother, ſhewed himſelf ſo alienated from the French, and wedded to the Germans, that the French after the death of his Nephew Lewis the fift (whoſe next Heire he was) rejected him, and choſe Hugh Capet for their King. Otho the ſon of this Charles, dying without iſſue, left his eſtate to Geofrey Earl of Ardenne, Bovillon, and Verdun, (his near kinſman by the mothers ſide) from whom the Dukes of Lorrain doe derive themſelves. From Hermingrade the daughter of Charles deſcended the Lady Iſabel of Hainalt, wife of Philip the 2. King of France, thereby uniting the bloud of Pepin and Hugh Capet, to the great content of Lewis the 9. her Nephew: of whom it is ſaid that being a man of a tender conſcience he never joyed in the Crown of France, till it was proved that he was deſcended by his Grand-mother, from Charles of Lorrain, whom Hugh Capet had unjuſtly diſpoſſeſſed. But to return again to the Dukes of Lorrain, I find not any great improvement made of the Eſtate by any of them, more then the adding of the Dutchy of Barr in France by Rene Duke of Anjou, and titularie King of Naples; but on the contrary a great weakning and diſtraction of it by the Dukes hereof: Luickland and the Dukedome of Bovillon being ſold unto the Biſhop of Leige, by Godfrey, ſurnamed of Bovillon, after King of Hieruſalem: Brabant torn from it by Geofrey Earl of Lovain in the time of Baldwin brother of Godfrey, and Gulick-land, by Euſtace the brother of Baldwin; the Biſhops of Triers not being negligent all this while, of the opportunity: ſo that we have no more to do, but to preſent the Reader with the Catalogue of

The DUKES of LORRAIN.

1470	24	Nicolas ſon of John.
1473	25	Rene II. ſon of Frederick Earl of Vandemont, and of Violant or Yoland daughter of Iſabel and Rene the firſt; the Vanquiſher of Charles of Burgundie at the battell of Nancy.
1508	26	Anthony ſon of Rene the 2.
1544	27	Francis ſon of Anthony.
1545	28	Charles the II. ſon of Francis.
	29	Henry ſon of Charles married Katharine, ſiſter to Henry the 4. of France.
1624	30	Francis brother of Henry.
1630	31	Charles Nephew to Francis by his brother the Earl of Vandemont, and ſon-in-law to him by the marriage of his daughter and heir ſucceeded by a mixt title of deſcent and marriage. Being reſolved to hold it in his own right, he put away his wife and daughter of Francis, and took another to his bed which he better fanſied: puniſhed not long after by the loſſe of his whole eſtate, for immediately he ingaged himſelf in the wars of Germanie, in behalf of Ferdinand the 2. But being beaten by the Swedes at the battell of Pfaffenhofen in the County of Hanaw, he loſt a great part of his Countrey to the Victors, who purſued him home. And on the other ſide Lewis the 13. of France, picking a quarrell with him for receiving the Monſieur his brother, and the marriage of the Monſieur with the Lady Margaret the Dukes ſiſter, deprived him of the Dutchy of Bar: and falling into Lorrain with a puiſſant Army, at ſuch time as the Swedes were there, compelled him to put into his hands the City of Nancie, and by conſequence all the reſt of his Eſtates, Septemb. 1633. ſince which time the Duke hath never been reſtored thereto (for ought I can hear) nor hath any thing left him in it but the Town of La Mothe (if that) together with a good cauſe, many hearts, and an invincible courage.

The Armes of Lorrain are Or, a Bend Gules, charged with 3 Larks Argent. But herein I finde Bara an old Herald, to differ from Paradine the moſt exact Genealogiſt of the French nation. For Bara chargeth the Bend not with 3 Allovettes Larks, as Paradine doth, but with 3 Allerions: which are in Blazon ſmall Birds wanting beaks, feet and legs. Of this laſt opinion, is the moſt worthy Antiquary Camden Clatencieux: who withall telleth us, that when Godfrey of Bullogne was at the ſiege of Hieruſalem, ſhooting at S. Davids tower there; he broached three feetleſſe birds, called Allerions upon his arrow, and thereupon aſſumed this armes.

The revenues of the Prince are 700000 Crowns: whereof 200000 ariſe from the cuſtomes of the ſalt made in his Countrey; and the other 500000, from his Coronet lands. He is an abſolute Prince, and giveth for his device, an armed hand comming as it were from Heaven, and graſping a naked ſword: to ſhew that he holdeth his eſtate by no other tenure, then God and his ſword: the only hope, at this time, of the preſent Duke. For though he be accompted a Prince of the Empire, and his Dukedome reckoned for a part of the fift Circle thereof, which is called the Circle of the Rhene; yet he neither comes unto the Diets, nor holds himſelf bound by any of the orders and decrees which are made therein, as the reſt of the great Princes of Germanie: his neighbourhood to the French formerly ſecuring his eſtate againſt any force the Empire durſt bring againſt him for thoſe neglects.

Sueuia.

6. SVEVIA or SCHWABEN.

The Dukedome of SVEVIA or SCHWABEN, according to the ancient limits and extent thereof, was bounded on the North with Frankenland, and the Lower Palatinate; on the South with the Switzerland, and the Alpes of Tirol; on the East with the River Lech, parting it from Bavaria; and on the West with the Rhene, dividing it from Sungow and both Alsatia's. But now the Dukedome of Wirtenberg, the Marquisate of Baden, and other lesser estates being taken out of it; it is contracted and restrained within narrower bounds: having on the East Bavaria, on the West the Dukedome of Wirtenberg, and so much of the Rhene, as serveth to divide it from Sungow and the Upper Elsats; on the North Franconia or Frankenland; and on the South a little of the Rhene, with some part of the Switzers.

The Countrey for the most part mountainous and hilly, overspred with some spurs of the Alpes, and the Woods of Nigra Sylva, or Swartzenwald; recompensed notwithstanding with great plenty of springs and Rivers, (and amongst them the Neccar and the renowned Danubius) which do issue from them: which makes the Vales hereof to be very fruitfull, sufficiently stored with all necessary provisions. Nor are the woods and mountains so unprofitable, but that besides the great plenty of fewell, and the pleasures of hunting, they doe afford some Mines of iron, and other metals.

The people in regard of their mountainous situation, more fierce and warlike then the rest of the Germans; and so accompted of by Plutarch in former times: industrious in severall Trades and Manufactures, especially in the weaving of linnen Cloth, which is made here in great abundance: and who, by reason they have so much in them of the South, are supra modum in Venerem proni, as Aubanus tels me, at least more given to Venus then the other of the Germans are; the women also being said to be very forwards in this kinde; as tractable and easie as the men could wish them.

The whole is generally divided into the Hegow lying next to the lake of Constance; the Algow extending to Bavaria; Brisgow upon the West of the River Rhene; and North-Schwaben on the northern side of Danubius. Principall Cities in the HEGOW, are 1. Lindaw, situate like an Iland in the Lake of Constance, encompassed almost with the waters thereof, but joyned to it with a Causey of 290 paces long: one of the Free or Imperiall Cities; made so for money, by the Emperour Frederick Barberossa, anno 1166. 2. Buchorn, and 3. Vberlingen, on the same lake, both Imperiall also: 4. Scaff-haussen, seated on both sides of the Rhene, not farre from the efflux thereof out of the lake Cell, (so called from a town of that name belonging to the Archdukes of Austria: but anciently by the name of Lacus Venetus:) and near those dreadfull fals or Cataracts of that River no lesse then 50 cubits downwards with great noyse and violence. For which cause all vessels that go down the Rhene, are fain to unlade themselves, and by Carts to carry their goods to this Town, where they imbark them again. Which as it yeeldeth great benefit unto the Town by tols, and imposts, so doth it alwayes keep it stored with abundance of Barks and other vessels; whence it hath the name of Scaff-haussen, that is to say, the house of Skiffes, or the Town of Ship-boats. The Town conveniently seated amongst rich pastures, and sweet groves on both sides of the River, not without some pleasant hils, and those well planted with vines, near adjoyning to it: Imperiall, but now a Canton of the Switzers, as hath there been shewn. 5. Arbon, upon the lake it self (the Arbor Felix of Strabo) belonging to the Bishop of Constance. 6. Mersburg, the ordinary seat and residence of the Bishop of Constance, Lord of the most part of this Tract, on the same lake also. 7. Constance it self, situate on both sides of the Rhene, where it issueth out of the lake, called from hence the Lake of Constance; but by the Dutch, Boden-zee, from the Castle of Bodmin; by Plinie and other Ancients Lacus Acronius, and Brigantinus, made by the confluence of the Rhene and some other Rivers falling out of Switzerland. The Town Imperiall, an Episcopall See, and a flourishing Emporie. Famous for the Councell here holden anno 1414. of great renown as well for the multitude and quality of the people which were there assembled, as for the importance of the matters which were therein handled: The people of most note there assembled were Sigismund the Emperour, 4 Patriarchs, 29 Cardinals, 346 Archbishops and Bishops, 564 Abbats and Doctors, 10000 secular Princes and noble men, 450 Common Harlots, 1600 Barbers, and 320 Minstrels and Jesters. The businesse there handled was first the pacifying of a Schisme in the Church, there being at that time three Popes, (or rather Anti-Popes) Gregory the 12. resident at Rome, John the 23. at Bononia, and Bennet the 13. in Spain; all three deposed by the Councell, and Martin the 5. made sole Pope, by the unanimous consent of the Councell; declaring both by matter of fact, and by a publick Constitution here made and ratified, that a Councell is above the Pope. The other main businesse was the proceeding against John Hus, and Hierome of Prague, (spoken of before) both which notwithstanding the Emperours safe conduct, were here condemned of Heresie, degraded, and burnt. Now the manner of degrading a priest is this. (I hope to be excused for this digression.) The party to be degraded is attired in his priestly Vestments; holding in the one hand a Chalice full of wine and water, and in the other a guilt plate (or Paten as they call it) with a Wafer. Then kneeling down, the Bishops Deputy first taking from him all those things, commands him to say no more Masses for the quick and dead. 2 Scraping his fingers ends with a piece of glasse, he commandeth him from that time forth not to hallow any thing: and 3 stripping him of his priestly habit, he is clothed in a lay attire, and so delivered over to the Secular Magiſtrate. But to return again to the City of Conſtance, being proſcribed by Charles the fift for refuſing the Interim, and not able to withſtand ſuch forces as were raiſed againſt them, they put themſelves under the Protection of Ferdinand, then King of the Romans, and brother of Charles. But herein they fell out of the Frying-pan into the fire, as the ſaying is. For Ferdinand being poſſeſſed of the Town, ſeiſed on the common Treaſury, and upon all Records and writings which belonged unto them; ſet out an Edict that all the Miniſters within eight daies ſhould depart the City, and that no Citizen from thenceforth ſhould wear any weapon. And ſo inſtead of a Protectour he became their Maſter.

Chief Cities in the part hereof lying towards Bavaria, which is called the ALGOW, are 1. Buchaw, on the lake called Feder-zee, a Town Imperiall. 2. Ravenſpurg, a Free City ſeated amongſt mountains, whereof one hangeth over it, the River Ach running by it in a bed ſo narrow, that not able to receive the waters which fall down from the hils, it much endamageth all the Countrey by frequent Landfloods. 3. Woongen (the Nemavia of Antoninus) Imperiall alſo. 4. Kempten, the Campodunum of Strabo; and 5. Mimmegen, the Druſomagus of Ptolemy, both Imperiall Cities, the laſt about three miles in circuit, populous, rich and very well traded. 6. Pfullendorf, 7. Zeukirk, 8. Bibrach; all three Imperiall; the laſt ſuppoſed to be the Bragodurum of the Ancients. 9. Auſburg, on the River Lech, looking into Bavaria, firſt made a Roman Colony by Auguſtus Cæſar, and by him called Auguſta Vindelicorum. The principall City in thoſe times of the Vindelici, a potent people of this tract. A City of great wealth and ſtate, containing about nine miles in circuit; and very ſtrongly fortified, by nature on the Eaſt and North where the ground lies low, and under water, and on the Weſt and South by Art. The buildings for three parts of it are of clay and timber, but on the Weſt part ſeated on an hill built of Free-ſtone ſix or ſeven ſtories high; in which are many fair houſes of the principall Citizens, and many ſtately Palaces which belong to the Fuggars a family of very great (almoſt Princely) Revenues, poſſeſſed of many goodly dwellings both in the City and the Suburbs, and adjoyning territories: who though they have of late obtained the honour of Barons in regard of their wealth, ſtill keep themſelves (contrary to the cuſtome of Germanie, where traffick is counted a diſgrace to a Noble man) to the trade of Merchandiſe. The publick Edifices of it very decent, eſpecially the Cathedrall Church, a majeſtick building; the other Churches, ten in number, and the Religious houſes correſpondent to it. Of old time Ceres was here worſhipped, from whence (or from the fruitfulneſſe of the ſoile) the City gives a ſheaf of corn for the Armes thereof: ſince their converſion unto Chriſtianity made a Biſhops See. Deſtroyed by Attila and his Hunnes, it was after built more beatifully then it had been formerly; at laſt made Imperiall, and the Miſtreſſe of as large a territory as moſt Cities of Germany. Famous for the confeſſion of faith, exhibited in this place to Charles the 5, by the Proteſtant Princes, hence called Confeſſio Auguſtana, anno 1530. 2 For the Interim or mixt forme of Doctrine, containing ſome points of Proteſtantiſme, but moſt of Popery, here tendred to both parties by the ſaid Emperour (but received by neither) to be ſubſcribed to and obſerved till the differences could be ſetled by a Generall Councell; And 3 for the publick allowance here given by Decree of all the States of the Empire to the Proteſtant party, to profeſſe openly their Religion without any impeachment; anno 1555. a Limitation only laid on the Eccleſiaſticks, that if they changed their Religion they ſhould loſe their preferments, which were to be beſtowed on others more addicted to the See of Rome.

In the third part hereof called BRISGOW, lying on the Eaſt of the River Rhene, and the Weſt of Wirtenberg, places of moſt importance are 1 Friburg, upon the Trieſſe and other ſtreams deſcending from the mountains of Swartzen-wald under which it lyeth: founded by Berchthold Earl or Duke of Zeringen (the Caſtle of Zeringen once the chief ſeat of thoſe Princes, being then near adjoyning to it) in the reign of Henry the 5 Emperour anno 1112 or thereabouts: Famous in thoſe daies for ſilver-mines, now for an Univerſity here eſtabliſhed, anno 1459. and being in preſent eſtimation the chief of the Countrey. 2 Offenbach, 3 Gengenbach, both upon the Kintrich, and both Towns Imperiall; the firſt ſo named from Offa an Engliſh Saxon, the Apoſtle of theſe parts of Germanie. 4 Hachberg, which gives the title of a Marqueſſe to the Marqueſſes of Baden, who are Lords thereof. 5 Zel, once Imperiall, but of late times belonging, as doth alſo 6 Badenwille, to the Marqueſſe of Baden. 7 Waldſhut upon the Rhene, in a barren, cold, and mountainous Countrey, but well ſtored with woods. 8. Briſach, by Antonine called Mons Briſiacus, a garriſon in his time againſt the incroaching Almains; and ſituate at that time on the French ſide of the Rhene; the courſe of the River being ſince turned on the other ſide, where now it runneth. Built Caſtle-wiſe on the top of a round hill, in which there is alſo a ſtrong Tower or Fortreſſe, raiſed by Berchthold the third, for defence of the place, otherwiſe ſtrong enough by its own naturall ſituation, and might be made impregnable but for want of water, which is all drawn from one deep well in the heart of the Town, or brought with great charge and trouble from the Rhene, which runs underneath it. The Town fair, populous, and well built; once of moſt note in all the Countrey, from hence called Briſac-gow, or Briſe-gow; but after the building of Friburg by Berchthold the 4, it grew by little and little to be leſſe frequented, the other being ſeated more conveniently for trade and buſineſſe.

Finally in the fourth and laſt part hereof called NORTH-SCHWABEN, becauſe on the North ſide of the Danow, the places moſt obſervable are 1 Gmand, on the Rheems; 2 Dinkel-Spuell on the Warnitz, two Imperiall Towns; which with Vberlinque or Werlingen, (all three but mean in building, territory or eſtimation) ſpoken of before, are the only three Imperiall Cities in all Germanie, which totally adhered unto the doctrines of the Church of Rome. 3 Boptingen on the Egra, an Imperiall City; 4 Norlingen on the ſame River but in a low and mooriſh ground, yet of great reſort, populous, and well traded. Moſt memorable for the great defeat here given the Swedes by Ferdinand the third, now Emperour, at his firſt entrance on the Government: in which Bannier, one of the principall commanders of that nation, was ſlain on the place, Guſtavus Horn, another of as great eminence, taken Priſoner, their whole forces routed: and thereupon ſo ſtrange an alteration of the affairs of Germanie which they had almoſt wholly conquered (though not for themſelves) that the Palatinate, not long before reſtored to its proper owner, was again poſſeſſed by the Spaniards, Frankenland by the Imperialiſts; and the remainder of the Swedes forced to withdraw into their holds on the Baltick ſeas, anno 1637. 6 Rotweil, not far from the head of the Neccar, an Imperiall City, and a Confederate of the Switzers. 7 Donawerdt, ſeated on the confluence of the Donaw and the Werdt, whence it had the name; moſt commonly called only Werdt, an Imperiall Town: the habitation of John de Werdt, once a Brewer herein, but afterward a chief Commander of the forces of the Duke of Bavaria in the late German wars. 8 Villengen, on the Bregen a ſmall river falling into the Danow; a Town belonging to the Princes of the houſe of Auſtria. Not far from which ſtands 9 Furſtenberg, an ancient Caſtle, the Earls hereof are Princes of the Empire, and Lords of a great part of the Countrey; in a Village of whoſe called Don-Eſchingen is the head of Danubius. 10 Ulme, an Imperiall City, ſituate on the meeting of the Blave, the Iler, and the Danow: the principall City of North-Schwaben, about 6 miles in compaſſe, rich, populous, well fortified, and ſtored with an Armory, for Ordnance and all manner of Ammunition not inferiour to any in Germanie. The Town but new, taking its firſt riſe from a Monaſtery here founded by Charles the Great, which after grew to be a great City; and took the name of Ulme from the Elmes about it. At firſt it belonged unto the Monkes, of whom having bought their freedome in the time of Frederick the third it became Imperiall. The Danow hereabouts begins to be navigable, having ſo violent a ſtream that the Boats which go down the water uſe to be ſold at the place where they land; it being both difficult and chargeable to bring them back again. Not far hence on the banks of the Danow lye the Suevian Alpes, and amongſt them the old Caſtle of Hohenberg, the Lord whereof, on the ruine of the houſe of Schwaben, became poſſeſſed of a great eſtate here, and in upper Elſats, ſold afterwards to Rodolph of Habſpurg, the founder of the now Auſtrian Family.

The ancient Inhabitants hereof were the Brixantes, Suantes, Ruguſci, and Calucones, who together with the Vindelici (of whom more hereafter) and other tribes of the Rhæti, (of whom ſomewhat hath been ſaid before in the Alpine Provinces) poſſeſſed themſelves of that Countrey which lyeth betwixt the River Inn and the head of the Rhene Eaſt and Weſt, Danubius and the Alps of Italy North and South. Within which compaſſe are the greateſt part of the Griſons, the Dukedomes of Schwaben and Bavaria, on this ſide the Danow; and part of the County of Tirol; and not a few of the Cantons of Switzerland. Subdued by Druſus and Tiberius Nero, ſons-in-law of Auguſtus, it was made a province of the Romans; divided into Rhætia Prima, taking in all the Countries from the Rhene to the Leck or Lycus; and Rhætia Secunda, lying betwixt the Leck and the River Inn, which by another name was called Vindelicia. By which accompt all Schwaben on the South ſide of the Danow was part of the Province of Rhætia Prima, continuing ſo till vanquiſhed and ſubdued by the Almans, in the time of Valentinian the third, Emperour of the Weſtern parts. As for the Almans who ſucceeded in poſſeſſion hereof, they were originally ſome tribes and families of the Suevi, the moſt warlike nation of the Germans, inhabiting upon the banks of the River of Albis: who jealous of Cæſars great ſucceſſes, brought againſt him 430000 fighting men, of which 80000 were ſlain, and many drowned. They uſed to ſtay at home, and go to the war by turnes, they which ſtayed at home, tilling the land; to whom the reſt returning, brought the ſpoil of the Enemies. But after which blow, we hear little of them till the time of Caracalla, the ſon of Severus; during whoſe reign, deſcending towards the banks of the Rhene and the Danow, and mingling with other nations as they paſſed along; they aſſumed firſt the name of Almans, either from that promiſcuous mixture of all ſorts of men; or (as I rather think) from Mannus, the ſon of Tuiſco one of the great and National Gods of the Germans. And though well beaten by him at their firſt comming down, near the River Mœnus; and afterwards more broken by Diocletian, who ſlew at leaſt 60000 of them at one time, in Gaul: yet never left they to infeſt the Provinces of the Empire which lay neareſt to them; till in the end following the tract of the Hunns who had gone before them, and beaten down many of the Forts and Garriſons which were in their way, they made themſelves Maſters of Rhætia Prima, Germania Prima, and part of Maxima Sequanorum, containing beſides the Countries ſpoken of before, Alſatia, and ſo much of the Lower Palatinate as lies on the French ſide of the Rhene. But quarrelling with the French their next neighbours (of whoſe growth and greatneſſe they began to be very ſenſible) they were firſt vanquiſhed by Clovis the firſt Chriſtian King of the French, in that great and memorable fight at Zulph, near Colen: and afterwards made wholly ſubject to the Conquerour; by whom oppreſſed with an heavy and laſting ſervitude. About this ſame they returned again to their old name of Suevians: their eſtate being erected into a Dukedome, called many times the Dukedome of Almain; and when ſo called, divided into the upper Almain, comprehending the Countrey of the Griſons, with ſome parts of Switzerland, and Tirol; and the Lower or the Proper Almain, which contained the reſt of the Eſtates of the ancient Almans, called for the moſt part by the name of the Dukedome of Suevia or Schwaben, and finally tranſmitting that name to this Province only, the beſt part thereof. Theſe Dukes at firſt officiary only, removable at the will of the Emperour, and accomptable to him: not ſeldome many at one time, eſpecially whileſt under the command of the French: ſome of them being Dukes of the Upper, and others of the Lower Almain. So that there is no great certainty of their ſucceſſion, nor much care to be taken in ſearching after it; though otherwiſe men of great Authority and Command in their ſeverall times. The moſt remarkable amongſt them was Rudolph, Earl of Reinfelden, and Duke of Schwaben, (deſcended from the Earls of Habsburg) in the reign of Henry the fourth, againſt whom he was choſen Emperour by the practiſe and procurement of Pope Hildebrand: but overcome and wounded at the battell of Eyſter, he died not long after of his wounds, with great repentance for rebelling againſt his Soveraign. After his death, ſome Provinces being diſmembred from it, and other leſſer eſtates firſt erected out of it: it was made Hereditary in the perſon of Frederick, Baron of Hohenſtauffen, ſurnamed the Antient, by the munificence and bounty of the ſaid Henry the fourth, whoſe daughter Agnes he had married. His ſucceſſours follow in this order. Suevia.

The DUKES of SCHWABEN.

1 Frederick the ancient, the firſt Hereditary Duke of Schwaben.
2 Frederick with the one eye, ſon of Frederick the Ancient.
3 Frederick III. ſurnamed Barbaroſſa, ſon of Frederick with the one eye, Duke of Schwaben, and Emperour, he ſucceeded the Emperour Henry the fift, in the Dukedome of Franconia; and left the ſame unto his ſucceſſours.

1190 4 Frederick IV. ſecond ſon of Barbaroſſa, his elder brother Henry ſucceeding in the Empire, by the name of Henry the ſixt.
5 Conrade, brother of Frederick the fourth.
6 Philip, brother of Conrade, after the death of Henry the ſixt, elected Emperour.

1207 7 Frederick V. ſon of Henry the ſixt, elected Emperour by the name of Frederick the ſecond, King of Naples and Sicil alſo in right of his mother.

1250 8 Conrade II. ſon of Frederick the fift, King of both Sicils, and Emperour of Germany, after the death of his Father, poiſoned as was ſuppoſed by his baſe brother Manfred, who ſucceeded in his Kingdom of Sicil.

1254 9 Conradine, the ſon of Conrade, purſuing his right unto the Kingdomes of Naples and Sicil, was overcome and taken priſoner by Charles of Anjou ſucceſſour unto Manfrede in thoſe eſtates; and by his command beheaded at Naples, anno 1268. After whoſe death (being the laſt of that powerfull and imperiall Family) this vaſt Eſtate was brought unto a ſecond diſmembring, and divided amongſt the Biſhops, Princes, and Free Cities hereof: of which laſt there are more within the old Precincts of this Dukedome, then in all Germany beſides. So that beholding it in the firſt and ſecond dilapidation, we finde many goodly Patrimonies and fair Eſtates (beſides what belongeth to the Cities and Epiſcopall Sees) to have been raiſed out of the ruines of this great Dukedome: that is to ſay, the Dukedomes of Zeringen and Wirtemberg, with the Marquiſate of Baden, diſmembred from it, when conferred on Frederick of Hohenſtauffen; the Earldomes of Pfirt, Hohenberg, and Friburg, (beſides a great improvement of the Earldome of Hapsburg) advanced out of the ſecond ruine. How Pfirt and Hohenberg were united to the houſe of Auſtria, hath been ſhewn already: and what becomes of Wirtenberg, and Baden, ſhall be ſhewn hereafter. Here it is onely to be noted, that the Family of Zeringen poſſeſſed of almoſt all Briſgow, and great part of Switzerland, owe their Originall to Berthilo, or Berthold, a younger ſon of Guntram the firſt Earl of Hapsburg. Which being extinguiſhed in the perſon of Berthold the fift, (who dyed the ſame day in which the Emperour Rodolph of Hapſburg was born) anno 1218. the rights hereof deſcended on the Earls of Friburg, the principall City of that Country. Eggow, the laſt Earl of which houſe being overlaid by his undutifull and rebellious Subjects, ſold his eſtate therein ſo 12000 Ducats to Albert and Leopold, Dukes of Auſtria, ſons of Albert the Short, whoſe ſucceſſours enjoy all Briſgow to this very day.

The Armes of Schawben were Argent, 3 Leopards Sable.

7. BAVARIA.

BAVARIA is bounded on the Eaſt with Auſtria, on the Weſt with the river Leck, or Lycus, which parts it from Schawben; on the North with Northgoia, or the Vpper Palatinate, and on the South, with the Earldome of Tirol, and Carinthia. It containeth the whole Province of Rhætia Secunda, and ſo much of Noricum Mediterraneum, as now makes up the Biſhoprick of Saltsburg: and by a diſtinct name was called Vindelicia, as being the ancient habitation of the Vindelici, ſo named from the two Rivers aria. Rivers of Vindis and Lycus (now the Werd and the Leck) upon which they lived. According whereunto it is thus verſified by a German Poet.

Reſpicit & late fluvios Vindimque, Lycumque,
Miſcentes undas, & nomina Littoris; unde
Antiquam Gentem, populumque, Urbemque vocarunt
Vindelicam.———

In Engliſh thus:

Vindis and Lycus, floods of noted Fame,
He next beholds, mingling their ſtreames and name,
To which the old Vindelici doe own,
The name both of their Nation, and their Town.

Meaning by their Town, as I conceive, Auguſta Vindelycorum, their Metropolis or Capitall City. But after ſuch time as the Boii or Boiarians had driven out the Romans, and got poſſeſſion of this Country, the name of Vindelicia, and Rhætia ſecunda, grew into diſuſe: that of Boiaria ſucceeding in the place thereof, mollified or corrupted into Bavaria the preſent name of the Country amongſt the Latines; but by the Dutch called Bayeren, by the French Bavier.

The whole divided into three parts; the Higher, lying towards the Alpes of Tyrol; the Lower, extending all along the banks of the Danow and the Diſtrict of Saltzburg, ſituate betwixt the Inn and the Dukedome of Auſtria: all three much over-ſpread with woods and forreſts, remainders of the Hercinian forreſt deſcribed before. But more particularly the Higher lying towards the Alpes is cold and barren, affording no wines, and but little corn: the Lower being more fruitfull, and better planted, for ſome parts (eſpecially about Regensberg, and Landſhut, inferiour unto none in Germany, for the richneſſe and pleaſantneſſe of the ſituation. Of the Diſtrict of Saltzburg we ſhall ſpeak by it ſelf; becauſe by ſome not reckoned as a part hereof. In all, great quantity of fenell for the fire, and of Timber for building; no leſſe of Swine fatted in the woods, and ſent away by numerous herds into other Countries.

The Chriſtian Faith firſt preached here amongſt the Boiarians, by Rupertus Biſhop of Wormes, driven from his See by Childebert, King of the French, anno 540. or thereabout, and here made the firſt Biſhop of Saltzburg: corrupted at this time with the Leaven of the Church of Rome, to which this Country (ſetting aſide the Imperiall Cities) is more intirely devoted, then any other in Germany.

Principall Cities in the Higher, are 1 Munchen, (in Latine Monachium) the Dukes ſeat; ſeated on the Iſer, or Iſarus, in a very ſweet and delightly ſoil, among ponds and groves, daintily interlaced with pretty Riverets, and inriched with many excellent Gardens: that of the Duke being hardly to be paralleld in all this Continent. Firſt founded by Henry Duke hereof in the time of Otho the firſt, anno 972. now grown a large and populous City: the publick buildings, as Churches, Turrets, Libraries, the Senate-houſe or Guild-hall, and common Market-place, of ſuch excellent Structure, that they ſerve not onely for uſe and Ornament, but for Admiration. Amongſt them none more eminent then the Library in the Ducal Palace, wherein is conceived to be 11000 Volumes, the moſt part of them Manuſcripts. A town made choice of by Maximilian the now Duke of Bavaria to be the receptacle of the ſpoiles got by him in the wars of Germany: here being found (at ſuch time as the town was taken by the King of Sweden) 140 braſſe Peeces (beſides other great Guns) hid under the ground; one of the which was charged, inſtead of Powder and Shot, with 30000 Crowns in Gold. 2 Landsberg, upon the Leck, or Lycus, neer the Alpes of Tirol, once of great ſtrength, becauſe a Frontire towards Schwaben; but proving a dangerous neighbour to the Swediſh Garriſon planted in theſe parts during that war againſt the Duke of Bavaria, was by them taken and diſmantled; and is now an open Village onely. 3 Martenwald, now a place of note or beauty, heretofore the Inutrium of Ptolomy ſeated near the Alpes. 4 Fridberg, well fortified by Duke Ludovick, or Lewis the ſecond, for a bulwark againſt thoſe of Ausburg.

In the LOWER Bavaria, there firſt offers it ſelf to conſideration, the town of 1 Rain, ſeated on the Leck, not far from the fall thereof into the Danow: memorable for the skirmiſh neer to it betwixt the Swedes and Bavarians, at the firſt paſſing of the Swediſh forces over that River: in which John Earl of Tilly, ſo famous for his long and fortunate conduct, received his deaths wound, of which he died at Ingolſtad within few weeks after. 2. Newburg upon the Danow, not far from Rain; the firſt town of Bavaria taken in by the Swedes, after the ſaid defeat of Tilly. 3. Ingolſtad, ſaid to be built by a Tribe, or Nation of the Sueves, called Angeli, and thence called Angeloſtadium, or Angleſtade: firſt made a City by Ludovick of Bavaria, Duke and Emperour; and in the yeer 1410 made an Univerſity, much priviledged by Duke Lewis, or Ludovick the fift, and Pope Pius the ſecond. A town ſo ſtrongly fortified both by Art and Nature, that it ſeemes impregnable: and indeed proved ſo to Guſtavus the late King of Sweden: who here found the firſt check to his proſperous fortunes, being forced to raiſe his ſiege without endangering it, and finde work elſewhere. 4 Regensberg (in Latine Ratisbona) on the Danow alſo, where it receives the River Regen, when it hath its name: built in the place of Tiberiva or Auguſta Tiberii, ſo called of a Colonie brought hither by Tiberius Cæſar, about the time of our Saviours paſſion: afterwards called Rhætopolis, or the Citie of the Rhætians, the chief of Rhætia ſecunda. At this time a fair, rich, and populous Citie, beautified with an infinite number of Churches and Religious Houſes; anciently an Epiſcopall See: and of late made the ordinarie place for the generall diets of the Empire. In former times the ſeat of the Kings and firſt Dukes of Bavaria, then made Imperiall; and now mixt, or both. For being ſtill Imperiall, at the leaſt in name, it was ſeiſed on unexpectedly by the now Duke of Bavaria, when the Swedes firſt got footing within his Dominions, held by him with a very ſtrong Garriſon, after the loſſe of Munchen his chief place of reſidence, till at laſt won from him by the Swedes, anno 1633. 5 Paſſaw, by the modern Latiniſts, Patavia; but by ſome thought to be the Boiodurum of Ptolomie, then a Roman Garriſon. Seated on the Danow, where it meeteth with the Inn, and the Ils: by which divided into three towns, Paſſaw, Innſtade, and Ilſtade: the whole Compoſitum being a rich Fair, and well-traded Citie. A See Epiſcopall and ſubject immediately to the Biſhop, as chief Lord hereof, who hath his dwelling in the Caſtle of Oberhuſen, adjoining to that part hereof which is called Ilſtade. A place remarkable for many meetings and conſultations of the German Princes: eſpecially for that of the year 1552, in which all former quarrels being laid aſide, the Proteſtants were firſt permitted the free Exerciſe of their Religion, by the conſent and edict of Charls the fift, who had moſt laboured to ſuppreſſe it. More in the land is 6 Friſing, on the ſwelling of a fine round hill neer the River Ambra which runs beneath it; called anciently Fraxinum: conceived to be built by ſome of the Preſidents or Lieutenants for the Roman Emperours: honoured with an Epiſcopall See about the year 710. one of the Biſhops whereof commonly called Otho Friſengenſis, was the beſt Hiſtorian of his time. 7 Landſhut, upon the river of Iſar, in the richeſt and moſt pleaſant countrie of all Bavaria; a beautifull and well-built Citie, the work of Lewis Duke hereof in the year 1208. adorned with a Church of moſt curious building for the ſervice of God, and a magnificent Palace for the uſe of the Duke. 8 Freiſtet, the only Imperiall town, (except Regensburg) in all this Dukedom. The whole number of Cities and great towns in both Bavaria's is ſuppoſed to be 80; that is to ſay, 34 Cities, 46 great towns: of which theſe the principall.

The Biſhoprick or Diſtrict of Saltsburg being the third part of Bayeren or Bavaria (according to our former diviſion of it) extendeth from the Inn, or Oenus, towards the confines of Auſtria. The ſoil hereof rockie, drie, and barren, excepting ſome few valleys only, as ſeated in the midſtſt of the Julian Alps: the habitation heretofore of the Norici Mediterranei, of whom more hereafter. The principall town hereof is Saltzburg, ſeated upon the river Saltzach, whence it had the name: raiſed out of the ruines of Juvania placed hereabouts by Antoninus, the ſtation of a cohort of Roman Souldiers belonging to the firſt Legion. An Alpine citie ſtrongly ſituate amongſt the Mountains, but no leſſe beautifull then many of the lower grounds. The Royall ſeat of ſome of the Bavarian Kings, after of the Archbiſhops hereof, the moſt powerfull Prelates for Revenue and juriſdiction of any in Germanie: the See firſt fixed here by Rupertus or Ruthertus the firſt Apoſtle of theſe parts ſpoken of before; whoſe image or impreſſe is ſtamped to this day on the coins of this Biſhoprick. At the time when Luther firſt endeavoured a Reformation, Cardinall Matthæus Langius was Biſhop here, who did ingenuouſly confeſſe that the Maſſe did not want its faults, that the Court of Rome were much corrupted, and the lives of Prieſts and Friers fit to be reformed: Sed quod miſellus Monachus omnia reformet, id non eſſe tolerabile: but that ſuch a ſorrie fellow as Luther ſhould attempt the work, that by no means to be indured. 2 Newkirch, on the ſame River, near the head thereof. 3 Rotenbourg, on the Eaſt ſide of the Inn bordering on Bavaria. 4 Traunſhaim, upon the river Traun, riſing out of the Lakes. 5 Wildeſmet, one of the fartheſt Northwards; and 6 Biſhops-ſtoffe, one of the moſt Southern in all this tract.

The firſt Inhabitants of Bavaria (excluding the Diſtrict of Saltsburg) were the Vindelici, as aforeſaid: a people ſo reſolvedly bent to maintain their freedome againſt the incroachments of the Romans, that when Druſus the ſon-in-law of Auguſtus, and father of Germanicus Cæſar, made war upon them, the very women thereof took the alarm, & deficientibus telis, infantes in ora militum adverſa miſerunt; and when their darts were ſpent, threw their young infants (ſaith the Hiſtorian) at the heads of the Romans. After them in the declining of the Empire, ſucceeded the Bojarians, ſome of the many tribes of the Boji, the moſt diffuſed and the multitudinous Nation of Gaul and Germanie. Originally of Gaul, inhabiting in the Dukedom of Bourbon, from whence ſome of them paſſed with the Senones and others of the Gauls, to the further ſide of the Alps, (in reſpect of them) where they tooke up the Countrie near the head of the Po. Wearied with long wars againſt the Romans, and by them deprived of half their Country; ſome of them paſſed into Germanie, and mingled themſelves with the Tauriſci, then dwelling in thoſe parts which we now call Stiermark: others advancing further, thruſt themſelves into the Norici, (of whom more anon) and ſome retired themſelves into the ſhelters and faſt places of the Hircinian Forreſt. Driven from this laſt by the Marcomanni, they fell into the countries of the Hermanduri and Noriſci, (now the Upper Palatinate) who mingling into one Nation with them, took the name of Bojarians; and by that name firſt known in the time of Clovis, the fift King of the French: by whoſe perſwaſion, in the 17 year of Anaſtaſius Emperor of the Eaſt, they paſſed over the Danow, and poſſeſſed themſelves of Vindelicia, or the ſecond Rhætia, with ſome part of Noricum, to which they gave the name of Bojaria, as before was ſignified. Governed firſt by Kings (as all Nations were) of whom we meet with none but Aldigerius (and he the laſt of that race) ſlain, fighting on the ſide of the Almans againſt the French, at the great battell of Zulp, near Colen: after which made ſubject to the Conquerours, as their neighbours and confederates the Almans were; but ſuffered to live under the command command and government of their own Princes by the name of Dukes. Of these from Theudo the son of Aldigerius, to Tassilo the last Duke, outed of his estate and honours by Charls the Great, for conspiring with the Lombards against him, are reckoned fifteen Dukes in all: whose names (for there remaineth little of them but the emptie names) we shall subjoine in the ensuing Catalogue of the DUKES of the BOJARIANS.

493	1	Theodo son of Adalgerius the last King; from whose younger brother Utilo, descended Pepin the Father of Charls the Great.
511	2	Theodo II. surnamed the Great.
537	3	Theodebert.
	4	Theodo III. the first Christian Prince of the Bojarians.
565	5	Tassilo, son of Theodebert.
598	6	Garibaldus.
612	7	Theodo IV.
630	8	Tassilo II.
650	9	Theodo V.
	10	Theodebert II.
	11	Theodo VI. son of Grimoldus the brother of Theodebert the second.
708	12	Grimold.
	13	Hugobert, brother of Grimold.
735	14	Utilo.
765	15	Tassilo III. the last Duke of the Bojarians. Of whom more anon.

Amongst these few of any note, but 1 Theodo the first, son of Adalgerius, who abandoning the name of King, because lesse pleasing to the French who had newly conquered them, assumed that of Duke: and passing over the Danow, extorted the whole Province of Rhætia secunda, with part of Noricum, from the Romans, anno 508. or thereabouts. 2 Theodo the second, named the Great, for his great and many victories against the Romans, whom he outed of all Noricum and Vindelicia; and whatsoever they held on the Dutch side of the Alps. 3 Theodo the 3. of that name, and the 4. in number of the Dukes, converted with his people to the Christian Faith, by the preaching of Rupertus before mentioned, anno 580. 4 Tassilo the 3. of that name, and the last of their Dukes of the race of Adalgerius, or of the old Bojarian bloud: who being deposed by Charls the Great, the whole countrie became immediately subject to the French, governed at first by their Lieutenants. Dismembred from the French Empire by Lewis the Godly, it was made a Kingdom (Pannonia being added and united to it) by whom conferred on Lotharius his eldest son, who was afterwards Emperour of the Romans: after his death possessed by the Kings of Germanie, but as a distinct Kingdom both in name and title, till the decease of Lewis the son of Arnulph the last, of the direct line of Charls the Great. He being dead and the Bavarians loth to be made a subject Province to the Kingdome of Germanie, one Arnulph of the issue of the said Charls, with the generall liking of the Bojarians, took upon himself the title of King: but being opposed therein by Conrade the brother of Lewis, Emperour and King of Germanie, as also by Henry the first who succeeded: he changed the title of King into that of Duke; the Founder of the present house of

1 Arnulph of the house of Charls the Great, first Duke of Bavaria.
2 Eberhard son of Arnulph, deposed by Otho the 1.
3 Berchthold, the brother of Arnulph, confirmed in the estate by the said Emperour Otho. After his death this Dukedome was transferred for 17 successions from one great Familie to another, according to the power and pleasure of the present Emperour; in manner following.
4 Henry brother of Otho the 1.
5 Henry II. son of the former Henry.
6 Henry III. surnamed the Saint, son of Henry the 2. the first Emperour who came in by election, according to the Order made by Pope Gregory the 5.
7 Henry IV. surnamed Hezzel, brother to Cunegund the renowned wife of Henry the Saint; by whom preferred to this Dukedom, and by him deposed.
8 Henry Guelph son of Robert Earl of Altorfe in Schwaben (of the strange Originall of which Familie we shall speak in Saxonie) made Duke by the Emperour Conrade the 2.
9 Guelpho, son of Henry Guelph, or Henry the 5.

10 Ernest

11 Henry VI.
12 Cuno, accuſed of conſpiracie, and diſplaced by Henry the 3. to make room for 13 Henry VII. ſon of the ſaid Emperour Henry the 3. whom he ſucceeded in the Empire by the name of Henry the 4.
14 Agnes, the mother of the ſaid Henry the 4. by the gift of her ſon.
15 Otho by the gift of the Empereſſe Agnes, depoſed not long after by Henry the 4.
16 Welpho III. ſon of Coniza the daughter of Guelph the 2 by Azon an Italian Marqueſſe, made Duke hereof by the ſaid Emperour Henry the 4.
17 Welpho IV. ſon to Welpho the 3.
18 Henry VIII. ſurnamed the Proud, brother of Guelpho the 4. by the marriage of Gertrude daughter of Lotharius the 2. Duke of Saxonie alſo. Deprived of both by the Emperour Conrade the 3.
19 Leopold, ſon to Leepold the 4. Marqueſſe of Auſtria, made Duke by the ſaid Conrade the 3.
20 Henry IX. brother of Leopold, after Marqueſſe, and at laſt Duke of Auſtria.
21 Henry X. ſurnamed the Lyon, ſon of Henry the Proud, reſtored by the Arbitrement of Frederick Barbaroſſa (the Duke of Auſtria being otherwiſe ſatisfied) by whom not long after proſcribed and deprived of both his Dukedoms. After which this eſtate became fixed and ſettled, in the perſon and poſteritie of 1180 22 Otho of Wittlesbach, lineally deſcended from Arnulph the firſt Duke, advanced unto this honour by Frederick Barbaroſſa, ſenſible of the too great power of the former Dukes: the whole extent of this eſtate being reduced by this time to the limits of the modern Bavaria, and the Palatinate of Northgoia.
1183 23 Ludovick, or Lewis ſon of Otho.
1231 24 Otho II. ſon of Lewis, who by marrying Gertrude the ſole daughter of Henry Count Palatine of the Rhene, brought the Electorall dignitie into the houſe of Bavaria.
1290 25 Henry Duke of Bavaria and Count Palatine of the Rhene, the ſonne of Otho the 2.
1812 26 Ludovick or Lewis II. brother of Henry, Duke of Bavaria, and Elector Palatine of the Rhene.
1294 27 Ludovick, or Lewis III. ſecond ſon of Lewis the 2. ſucceeded in the Kingdom of Bavaria; Rodolph the eldeſt ſon, ſucceeding in both Palatinates, and the Electoral dignitie. He was afterwards elected and crowned Emperour, known commonly by the name of Ludovicus Bavarus.
1347 28 Stephen the eldeſt ſon of Ludovick the Emperour; William and Albert his two brethren ſucceſſively enjoying the Earldoms of Hainalt, Holland, &c. in right of their mother.
1375 29 Stephen II. ſon of Stephen the 1. his brothers Frederick and John ſharing with him parts the eſtate.
1413 30 Ludovick II. ſurnamed Barbatus, depoſed and impriſoned by his own ſon Ludowick, who yet died before him without iſſue.
1147 31 Henry II, ſon of Frederick the ſecond brother of Stephen the 2. ſucceeded on the death of Ludovicus Barbatus.
1450 32 Ludovick V. ſurnamed the Rich, who baniſhed the Jews out of his eſtates, and ſeiſed their goods; the ſon of Henry the 2.
1503 34 Albert III. ſon of a former Albert, Nephew of John of Munchen, by his ſon Erneſtus: which John was youngeſt brother to Stephen the 2. who by the power and favour of Maximilian the Emperour, ſucceeded unto George the Rich: the cauſe of a long and unhappy war betwixt the Electors of the Rhene and Dukes of Bavaria: the worſt whereof, beſides the loſſe of this Eſtate, fell upon the Palatines, proſcribed and outed of their Country upon this quarrell; but upon their ſubmiſſion reſtored again.
1508 35 William the ſon of Albert the 3.
1577 36 Albert IV. a great Champion of the Doctrines and Traditions of the Church of Rome, and ſo extreamly affected unto the Jeſuites, that he built Colledges for them at Landsberg, Ingolſtade, and Munchen, his three principall towns.
1579 37 William II. ſon of Albert the 4. as zealous as his Father in the cauſe of the Church of Rome: in which exceeded very much by 38 Maximilian, eldeſt ſon of William the 2. who chiefly out of the ſame zeal ſided with Ferdinand the 2. in the wars of Germanie, anno 1620. and took upon him the conduct of the Armies of the ſaid Emperour againſt Frederick Count and Electour Palatine, choſen

Austria.

King of Bohemia. In which having done great ſervice to the Imperiall and Romiſh intereſſe, he was by the ſaid Ferdinand inveſted in the Upper Palatinate, called anciently (but not more properly then now) the Palatinate of Bavaria: together with the Electorall dignitie: this laſt conferred at firſt upon him but for term of life in the Diet at Regensberg, 1623. the Electors of Mentz, Saxonie, and Brandenbourg, proteſting againſt it; but afterwards in the Diet at Prague anno 1628. conferred upon him and his heirs for ever, to the great prejudice of the Princes of the Palatine Familie, who by reaſon of their ſimultaneous inveſtiture with the firſt of their houſe, are not to be deprived of their eſtates and dignities for the offence of their Fathers: the puniſhment not being to extend beyond the perſon of the offender. But notwithſtanding their pretentions and allegations, the Duke is ſtill poſſeſſed of the title and dignitie, confirmed therein by the concluſions of the Treatie of Munſter: a new Electorate being to be erected for the Palatine Princes.

The Arms of this Duke are Lozenges of 21 peeces in Bend, Argent, and Azure.

The ARCHDUKEDOME of AUSTRIA.

The Archdukedome of AUSTRIA reckoning in the incorporate Provinces and Members of it, is bounded on the Eaſt with Hungarie and a part of Sclavonia; on the Weſt with Bavaria, and ſome parts of the Switzers and the Griſons; on the North with Bohemia and Moravia; and on the South with Hiſtria, and ſome part of Friuly in Italie. Within which circuit are contained the ſeverall Provinces of Auſtria, properly ſo called, Stiria, Carinthia, Carniola, and Tirol: the qualitie of the whole will be beſt diſcerned by the Survey of particulars.

The ancient Inhabitants of the whole were the Norici, of the Romans, parted into the leſſer Tribes of Sevates, Alauni, Ambiſontii, Ambilici, and Ambidrauni: ſubdued by Druſus, ſon in law to Auguſtus Cæſar, and made a Province of the Empire. After by Conſtantine the Great, divided into Noricum Mediterraneum, comprehending the Countries of Carinthia, Carniola, Stiria, and ſome parts of Tirol, with the Biſhoprick or Diſtrict of Saltsburg; of which Solyun was the Metropolis or Capitall Citie: and Noricum Ripenſe containing only Auſtria and thoſe parts of Bavaria which lie Eaſtward of the River Inn, extended all along on the banks of the Danow. Known by no other names while poſſeſſed by the Romans; from whom being conquered by the Avares and other Nations; it gained thoſe ſeverall names and appellations ſpecified before.

1 AUSTRIA, properly ſo called, hath on the Eaſt the Kingdome of Hungarie, from which parted by the River Rab; on the Weſt, Bavaria; on the North the Bohemian Mountains towards the Weſt, and on the other ſide the Teya, which ſeparates it from Moravia; on the South, Stiria, or Stiermarck, called by the Dutch, Oſtenreich, and contractedly Ooſtrich, that is to ſay, the Eaſtern Kingdom (a part aſſuming to it ſelf the name of the whole) this being the extreme Province of Eaſt-France, or the Eaſtern Kingdom of the French: in the barbarous Latine of thoſe times called by the name of Auſtraſia, whence the modern Auſtria.

The air is generally very healthie, and the earth as fruitfull; yeilding a plentifull increaſe without help of compoſt, or other ſoiling; and of ſo eaſie a tillage to the husbandman, that on the North ſide of the Danow it is ploughed and managed by one horſe only. Exceeding plentifull of grain, and abundant in wine, with which laſt it ſupplyeth the defects of Bavaria: great ſtore of Saffron, ſome proviſion of ſalt: and at the foot of the Mountains not far from Haimbourg, ſome Ginger alſo. Nor wants it Mines of ſilver, in a large proportion. Divided by the River Danow into the Lower and the Higher: that lying on the North ſide of the River, towards Bohemia and Moravia, this on the South ſide towards Stiermark.

Places of moſt importance in the HIGHER AUSTRIA, are 1 Gmund, ſeated on a Lake called Gemunder See, bordering on Bavaria at the efflux of the river Draun, which ariſeth out of it. 2 Lints, ſeated on the confluence of the ſaid Draun, with the famous Danow, the Aredate of Ptolemie: A town before the late wars almoſt wholly Proteſtant, but then being put into the hands of the Duke of Bavaria, began to warp a little to the other ſide. 3 Walkenſtein on the Ens or Aniſus, near the borders of Stiermark. 4 Ens, on the fall of that river into the Danow; raiſed out of the ruines of Laureacum, ſometimes the Metropolis of the Noricum Ripenſe, the Station at that time of the ſecond Legion: afterwards an Archbiſhops See, made ſuch in the firſt planting of Chriſtianity amongſt this people by S. Severine, anno 464. On the reviver whereof, ſuppreſſed by the Hunnes, Bojarians, and others of the barbarous Nations, by the diligence and preaching of S. Rupertus, the Metropolitan dignitie was fixt at Saltzburg. 5 Waidhoven, near the head of the river Ips. 6 Ips, ſeated at the influx of that river, and from thence denominated, the Geſodunum of Ptolemie and other ancients. 7 Newſull, on a great Lake ſo named. 8 Wels, on the main ſtream of the Danubius. 9 Haimburg, on the confluence thereof, and the river Marckh: Near to which at the foot of the Mountains now called Haimburgerberg (from the town adjoining) but anciently named Mons Cognamus, is ſome ſtore of Ginger: a wonderfull great raritie for these colder Countries. 10 Newstat, first called so from the newnesse of it, being built of late. 11 Vienna, by the Dutch Wien, the principall of all these parts by Ptolemie called Juliobona, Vindebona by Antonine; the station in their times of the tenth Romen Legion, of whose being setled here there are many Monuments both within the City and without. Seated it is on the bankes of Danubius, well built both in regard of private and publike edifices: each private house having such store of cellarage for all occasions, that as much of the Citie seems to be under the ground, as is above it. The streets for the most part spacious, and all paved with stone, which makes them very clean and sweet in the midst of winter: fenced with a mighty wall, deep and precipitious ditches on all parts of it; and many Bulwarkes, Towers, and Ramparts, in all needfull places: the wals hereof first raised with some part of the money paid unto Leopold Duke of Austria, for the ransome of King Richard the first of England, taken prisoner by him as he passed homewards through this Countrey from the Holy Land. Esteemed at this day the strongest hold of Christendom against the Turkes, and proved experimentally so to be in that most notable and famous repulse here given them, an. 1526. At what time 200000 of them under the conduct of Solyman the Magnificent besieged this City; but by the valour of Frederick the second, Electour Palatine of the Rhene, and other German Princes gallantly resisted and compelled to retire, with the losse of 80000 souldiers. Nor doth the strength hereof so diminish the beauties of it, but that it is one of the goodliest townes in all the Empire, the residence for these last ages of the Emperours: made an University by the Emperour Frederick the second, revived, and much advanced by Albert Duke of Austria, anno 1356. Adorned with an Episcopall See, many magnificent Temples and stately Monasteries; but above all with a most sumptuous and Princely Palace, wherein the Archdukes and Emperours use to keep their Courts; built by Ottacar, King of Bohemia, during the little time he was Duke of Austria. In the middle ages, as appeares by Otho Frisingensis, it was called Fabiana: but being ruined by the Hunnes, and again reedified, was first called Biana, (the first syllable omitted by mistake or negligence) from whence the Dutch Wien, and the Latine Vienna.

We should now take a view of the townes and Cities in the LOWER AUSTRIA, if there were any in it which were worth the looking after. The Countrey having never beene in the hands of the Romans, hath no town of any great antiquity, nor many new ones built or beautified by the Austrian Princes, since it came into their possession: the onely one of note being Crems or Cremia, on the left hand shoar of Danubius, going downe the water. 2. Kets, on the River Tega bordering on Moravia; ; and 3. Freistat, at the foot of the Mountaines on the skirts of Bohemia. The old Inhabitants of this tract are supposed to be the Quadi, in that part which lyeth next to Bohemia; the Marcomanni in those parts which are next Moravia: who intermingled with the Boii, and united with them into the name of Bojarians, wonne from the Romans the whole Province of the Second Rhætia, and so much of Noricum, as lyeth betwixt the Inn and the Ens: leaving the rest to the Avares, who possessed that and the two Pannonia's, extorted also from the Romans in the fall of that great and mighty Empire.

But these Bojarians being conquered by Clovis the Great, and the Avares driven out of Pannonia by Charlemagne; both Provinces became members of the French Empire, till the subduing of Pannonia by the Hungarians. To oppose whom, and keep in peace and safety these remoter parts, some Guardians or Lords Marchers were appointed by the Kings and Emperours of Germany, with the title of Marquesses of Ostreich. At first Officiary onely, but at last hereditarie, made so by the Emperour Henry the first, who gave this Province to one Leopold, surnamed the Illustrious, the sonne of Henry Earle of Bamberg, of the house of Schwaben; and there withall the title of Marquesse, anno 980. This Marquisate was by Frederick Barbarossa raised to a Dukedome, 1158. Henry being the first Duke, whose brother Leopold took Richard the first of England, prisoner, in his returne from Palestine: for whose ransome hee had so much money, that with it he bought Stiermark together with the Counties of Neobourgh, and Lintz; and walled Vienna. His sonne Fredericus Leopoldus, was made King of Austria, by the Emperour Frederick the second, anno 1225. Eleven yeares he coutinued in this dignity, at the end of which hee was spoiled of his royall ornaments by the same hand, for denying his appearance at the Emperours summons, unto whom for some outrages, he had been complained of. Finally he died in the yeare 1246. leaving two daughters. His sister named Margaret was marryed unto Ottocar, sonne to Primislaus King of Bohemia: his eldest daughter, Gertrude, to the Marquesse of Baden; and Agnes, the second unto Henry Duke of Carinthia. Ottocar pretending the right of his wife, tooke to him the Dukedome of Austria, which hee kept after the death of his wife, till the year 1228. in which he was vanquished and slaine by Rodolphus the Emperour. Rodolphus then gave it to Albertus his sonne, whose wife Elizabeth, was daughter to Meinhard Earl of Tirol sonne of Duke Henry of Carinthia, and of Agnes daughter of Frederick Leopold: Margaret, the sister; and Gertrude, the other daughter of this Frederick, dying issueless. By this marriage Albert had the Dukedome of Austria, Stiria, and Carinthia, with the Earledomes of Tirol and Carniola. By whom it was first raised to the title of Arch-Duke, is not yet agreed. Some attribute it to Rodolphus of Habspurg, at the investiture of his son Albert into these Estates, anno 1298. Others to Charles the fourth, advancing to that honour Rodolph the Ingenious; anno 1360. Some make it to be first given to Albert Duke hereof in the year 1430. and others post it lower to the marriage of Philip sonne of Maximilian of Austria and the Lady Mary of Burgundy, with Joan Princesse of Spain. But by whom soever given at first, it is now the constant and hereditary title of all this Family: the successive Princes whereof, from the first investiture, follow in the ensuing Catalogue of Austria.

The MARQESSES, DUKES, KINGS, and ARCH-DUKES of AUSTRIA.

	27	Ferdinand III. ſonne of Ferdinand the ſecond, now living anno 1648. Archduke of Auſtria, King of Hungaria and Bohemia, and Emperour of the Germans: Of whoſe eſtate and the Concomitants thereof, we ſhall ſay more, when we have took a view of the reſt of the Provinces.

2. STIRIA, or STIERMARK, is bounded on the North with Auſtria, on the South with Carinthia; on the Eaſt with Hungary, and on the Weſt with Carniola. Extended in length 110 miles, but in breadth not above 60, or thereabouts. The reaſon of the name we ſhall have anon.

Towns of moſt conſequence, 1 Gratz, ſeated upon the River Mur, and the chief of the Province, from which the third branch of the houſe of Auſtria (ſince the time of Ferdinand the firſt) was called De Gratz, and had the Government of the Countrey for their part of that Patrimonie. A town once full of Proteſtants, and thoſe ſo ſtrong, that they could neither be forced out, nor hindered from from the free exercise of their Religion, till the year 1598, in which Margaret the late Queen of Spain, sister to the Archduke Ferdinand du Gratz, was by the Citizens solemnly entertained; with whom entered so many souldiers that the City was taken, and 14 Ministers of the Reformed Religion presently banished. 2 Racbelspurg, and 3 Pruck, both situate also on the Mur. 4 Stechaw, an Episcopall See seated on the Dra, or Dravus, a well known River, not far from the fall of the Mur into it. 5 Petaw, the Petovio of Antoninus, seated somewhat higher upon the Dravus. 6 Lamboch the Ovilabis of Antoninus, on the Dravus also. 7 Voitesperg, upon the River Kainach. 8 Cely, the Celeia of Pliny, not else observable. 9 Canisia, a well fortified place, and the strongest Bulwark of these parts against the Turk.

The whole Countrey mountainous and hilly, generally overspread with the spurs and branches of the neighbouring Alpes, and rich only in minerals; was antiently the habitation of the Taurisci (part of the Norici) from whom it took the name of Steirmark: the Germans calling that a Steir, which the Latines call *Taurisc*us, or a little Bullock. By which account Steir-mark, is nothing but the borders or Marches of the Taurisci, the utmost bounds of their possessions, as indeed it was: laid to Pannonia in the distribution of the Roman Provinces, it was called Valeria, in honor of Valeria the daughter of Diocletian. But once dismembred from the Empire, it fell upon the name of Steir-mark, with reference to the Taurisci, spoken of before. First made an Earldom in the person of one Ottocarus advanced unto that honour by the Emperor Conrade the second. Leopold the fourth from this Ottocarus, (two other Ottocars intervening) was made Marquesse of Stier-mark, and his sonne Ottocar the fourth was made Duke, by the Emperour Frederick Earbarossa. But being without hope of issue, and infected with the uncurable disease of the Leprosie, he sold this Countrey to Leopold the fist of Austria; bought with some part of that vast summe of money which he extorted for the ransome of King Richard the first, continued ever since in the possession of this potent Family: but so that it hath many times beene assigned over for the portion of the younger brethrens: as namely to Leopold the ninth of that name, one of the younger sonnes of Albert the short; Ernest the youngest sonne of that Leopold; and lastly to Charles the youngest sonne of Maximilian the second, called Charles of Gratz, father of Ferdinand the second, successour to Matthias in Austria it self, and all the rest of the Estates incorporate with it: not like to be so impolitickly dismembred from the chiefe of the house, as in former times.

2 CARINTHIA, by the Dutch called Karnten, is bounded on the East with Steir-mark and the River Levandt; on the West with the District of Saltzburg and the River Saltzach; on the North with Austria it selfe; and on the South with Carniola, and the River Dravus, which having its originall in the skirrs hereof passeth through these Austrian Provinces into Hungary, and falls at last into the Danow. The Countrey being situate in in the worst part of the Alpes, is generally poore and barren, except onely in minerals: extending all along the Dravus, for the length of 100 English miles, and 47 in breadth betwixt that River and the Mur by the which it is bounded.

Places of principall note in it are 1. St. Veit, or Sancti Viti, the chief town of the Countrey, situate at the meeting of the Glan and the Wunics, two small Rivers, adorned with a spacious market place, and a beautifull Conduit. 2 Vittach, seated on the Dravus in a pleasant valley, encompassed about with rocks; the houses hereof adorned on the outside with painted stories, very delightfull to behold. 3 Gurch, a small Town, but an Episcopall See. 4 Clagnfoot, on the Lake called Werd-Zee; a well fenced place, called antiently by the name of Claudia. 5. Wolsperg upon the Lavands, so neer to Steir-mark that it is by some reckoned for a Town thereof. 6 Lavamundt on the same border, an Episcopall See; situate at the influx of that River into the Dravus. 7 Freisach, a town of much antiquity, seated on the Oleza. 8 Spittall, &c.

The strange and observable ceremonies, with which the Archdukes of Austria are acknowledged Dukes of Carinthia; take here out of Munster. In the meadowes adjoining to the Town of S. Veit, a certain countrey-man to whom that office of inheritance belongeth, sitteth on a Marble stone there being, holding in his right hand, a cow with a black calf; and in his left hand, a mare as lean as a rake. Then cometh the new Duke, attired in a plain rustick habit, his Courtiers attending him in their richest apparell: at whose approach, the Country-man above mentioned, demandeth, What hee is that so majestically cometh thitherward: and the people answer, that it is the future Duke. Hee againe asketh, whether he be a just Judge, and one that will maintaine the liberty of the countrey, and sincerity of the Religion: the people answer, he will: then he asketh, by what right he will displace him of his marble seat: to whom the Steward of the new Dukes house replyeth, hee shall give thee 60 pence in silver, the cattell now standing by thee, the cloathes which he hath at this time on, and thy house shall ever be free from taxe and tribute. This fellow upon this, taking the Duke by the hand, and bidding him to be a good Prince, giveth him a gentle cuffe on the eare, setting him on the marble stone, and taking away the cattell, departeth. This done, the new Duke goeth to Saint Vites Church; and having done his devotions, putteth off his rustick weedes, and dresseth himself in clothes befitting a Prince: for such after their ceremonies he is acknowledged.

4. CARNIOLA, by the Dutch called Krain, is environed with Sclavonia, East: Friulo, West; Carinthia, North; and Istria, South. The chief Towns are, 1 Newmarckt, 2 Esling, 3 Marsperg, Pogmocke, and 5 Saxenfelt, all upon the Savus; which arising in this Countrey, runneth through the very middle of it, and after falleth into the Danow. 6 Laibach, seated on a small River of the same name, by Ptolemie called Pamportum, but by Pliny Nauportus: famous in old Mythologie for the transport

Carniola. port of the ſhip called Argo, wherein Jaſon and his Comrades brought the Golden Fleece; who coming out of Pontus on the Euxine Sea, took their courſe up the Danow, ſo into the Savus, then into this town, hence carryed over land into the Adriatick, from thence ſayling into Greece, where they firſt began the undertaking. 7 Goritz called antiently Noreja, or ſeated in the place where Noreja ſtood, is ſituate on the River Liſontio, an Italian water, which not far off falleth into the Adriatick. A town of ſo much note, that antiently it was an Earldome, and in the diviſion of the Eſtate of Meinard Earl of Tirol (to whom it formerly belonged) it was given to Albert his ſecond ſonne, with the ſtyle and title of Earl of Goritz continuing in his houſe till the yeare 1500, when on the death of Leonard the laſt Earle hereof, it deſcended upon Maximilian the firſt, as next heire unto it.

The firſt Inhabitants of both theſe Provinces of Kruin, and Karnten, were the Carni, of Pliny and other Antients, who make them part of Venetia, the tenth Region of Italy: but afterwards in the diſtribution of the Roman Provinces caſt into Noricum, and made a member of the Dioceſe of the Weſtern Illyricum, but ſubject or ſubordinate rather to the Præfectus Prætorio of Italy. From them not onely the Alpes adjoining had the name of Carnicæ; but theſe two Countries had the names by which now they goe. United of long time in the perſons of the Dukes of Karnten, of whom the firſt mentioned upon good record was Henry ſonne to Berchthold a Noble man of Bavaria, in the time of the Emperour Otho the third; by whom advanced unto this honour and eſtate; diſpoſed of in ſucceeding times at the will of the Emperours, and given from one family unto another as their fancies ſerved them. Not fixed in any houſe, till it came to Henry the ſonne of Engelbert, Preſident or Prefect of Hiſtria: in which family it continued under this Henry and his brother Engelbert, Ulric the firſt, Henry the ſecond, Herman and Ulrick the ſecond, the laſt Prince hereof: who being old and without children ſold his eſtate herein to Oſtocar King of Bohemia and Duke of Auſtria: by whom theſe Countries were ſurrendred unto Rodolphus of Habſpurg, on the concluſion of the peace which was made between them. And though Rodolphus gave Carinthia to Mainard Earl of Tirol, (in right of whoſe daughter Elizabeth, Albert the ſonne of Rodolph was poſſeſſed of Auſtria) on the death of Henry the ſonne of Mainard without iſſue male, it fell (according to the contract) unto Albert the Short eldeſt ſonne of Albert and Grandchild of Rodolphus: continuing ever ſince in that family, though not alwayes in the chief houſe of the Dukes of Auſtria.

TIROLIS is bounded on the Eaſt with Friuly and Marca Trevigiana; on the Weſt with the Griſons, and ſome part of Switzerland; on the North with Bavaria; and the South with Lombardie. Extended over the greateſt part of the Alpes Rhæticæ, and ſome part of the Juliæ: yet intermixt with many rich and fruitfull valleys, thoſe ſpecially which lye on the bankes of the Inn and the River of Adiſe. Nor are the hils ſo void of profit unto the Inhabitants, but that they afford good ſtore of metals digged out of them; eſpecially of Braſſe and Silver, which laſt have yeelded to the Archduke 230000 Crowns yearly.

Towns of moſt note 1 Oeniputs, or Inſpruch, ſeated on the Inn or Oenus, which gave denomination to the ſecond branch of the houſe of Auſtria, deſcended from Ferdinand, the ſecond ſonne of the Emperour Ferdinand: the houſe of Gratz iſſuing from Charles the third ſonne of that Emperour. Moſt memorable for the haſty flight of Charles the fift, upon the news that Duke Maurice whom he had lately made Electour of Saxonie, was coming againſt him with his Forces: which ſo terrified him, that he fled away by torch-light, with ſome few of his followers, the reſidue of his Court (moſt of which were perſons of great eminency) trudging in the dark on foot, with the Black Guard and the Skullerie: the Town being many times the Reſidence of the Dukes of Auſtria, who have here a very Royall and magnificent Palace. And to ſay truth, the town deſerveth to be ſo honoured; amongſt pleaſant Meadows, ſpacious cornfields, and ſhady mountaines ſweetly ſeated: the houſes fairly built of ſtone, enriched by the Courts of Judicature here ſetled for all the Countrey, and provided of a gallant Armorie. 2 Trent (Tridentum it is called in Latine) ſituate in the confines of Germany and Italy; for which cauſe the Inhabitants ſpeak both languages. Built on the bankes of the River Atheſis or Adice; honoured with an Epiſcopall See, but made more famous by the Councell which was there begun by Pope Paul the third, anno 1545. againſt the Lutherans: For 22 yeares together before their meeting, daſhed by one Pope and intimated by another, advanced by Charles the fift upon worldly Policies, and for as worldly policies retarded by the Court of Rome for 18 years after this firſt Convention of it, at ſundry times, aſſembled, ſuſpended, and diſſolved. And finally when fixed here ſeriouſly by Pope Pius the fourth, anno 1562. managed with ſo much art and cunning by the Papall partie, that nothing was determined among the Prelates, but what had formerly been reſolved on, in the Roman Conclave, and certified accordingly by eſpeciall Poſts: occaſioning that moſt bitter jeſt of one of the Hungarians Biſhops who was preſent at it, that the Holy Ghoſt was ſent unto them in a Cloak-bag from Rome. The effects of which Councell, ſo artificially carryed on by the ſtrength of wit, I cannot better deſcribe then in the words of the Hiſtory of it, which are as followeth. This Councell, deſired and procured by godly men to re-unite the "Church which began to be divided, hath ſo eſtabliſhed the Schiſm, and made the parties ſo "obſtinate, that the diſcords are irreconcileable. And being managed by Princes for Reforma-"tion of Eccleſiaſticall Diſcipline, hath cauſed the greateſt deformation that ever was ſince Chriſtianity did "begin: and hoped for by the Biſhops themſelves to regain the Epiſcopall Authority, for the moſt "part uſurped by the Pope, hath made them loſe it altogether, bringing them into greater "ſervitude. On the contrary, feared and avoided by the See of Rome, as a potent meanes to "moderate the exorbitant power thereof, mounted from ſmall beginnings by divers degrees, to

" ned ſubject unto it, that it was never ſo great, nor ſoundly rooted. So far the words of the Hiſtory. The next of note is, 3 Falkenſtein, remarkable for mines of Braſſe; as 4 Hal upon the Inn for Salt-witches; and 5 Schwas for the richer mines of Silver. 6. Malk, near the head of the River Athеſis. 7 Follen, upon the borders of Italy, by the people whereof called Folgiano, and Bolſano. 8 Tirol, an ancient Caſtle, the firſt ſeat of the Earls or Governours hereof, and giving name for that reaſon, to the Country adjoyning.

The Earls hereof, were at the firſt no other then Provinciall Officers; when made Proprietaries, I am yet to ſeek. The firſt of whom we have any certainty was Mainard, Earl of Tirol and Goritz, who dyed in the yeer 1258, leaving his Earldomes to that Mainard, who by Rodolfus Habſpurgenſis was enfeoffed with the Dukedome of Karnten. But Henry the ſonne of this laſt Mainard, dying without iſſue male, his daughter Margaret, by the conſent of all her people, ſetled her eſtate therein on the ſonnes of Albert, called the Short: continuing ever ſince in the houſe of Auſtria, though ſometimes made the portion and inheritance of the younger Princes. By Ferdinand the firſt, it was given in Appennage to his 2d ſon Ferdinand ſurnamed of Inſpruch for that reaſon: who by marrying with Philippina a Burgers daughter of Augsburg, ſo diſpleaſed his Brethren, that to buy his peace of them, and enjoy his own content with her, it was finally agreed upon amongſt them all, that Tirol ſhould not deſcend upon his Children of that venter. In purſuance whereof, after his deceaſe, Tirol fell to the houſe of Gratz: his eldeſt ſon Charles being made Marqueſſe of Burgh, and Andrew his youngeſt Cardinall of Brixia.

The Armes of theſe Earls when diſtinct from the houſe of Auſtria, were Argent, an Eagle Sable, membred Or. Thoſe of Carinthia, united for a time unto them (as before was noted) being Argent, three Lions Leopards Sable.

Thus have we ſeen by what means all theſe Provinces belonging unto ſeverall Lords, became united and incorporated into one eſtate. Beſides which, there was added to it by Rodolph of Habſpurg, all the Vpper Elſats, the Caſtle and Territory of Hapſpurg it ſelf, with many fair Eſtates amongſt the Switzers, by Albert the Short, the Country of Sungow, and by his ſonnes the Advocateſhip of Friberg, or the Country of Briſgow. So that theſe Princes are undoubtedly the greateſt for power and patrimony of any in Germany; and would be of a great revenue, if the ill neighbour-hood of the Turkes did not put them to continuall charges, and make the borders of the Country to be thinly planted, and not very thorowly manured. Howſoever, it is thought that they may yeild yeerly two millions of Crowns and upwards to the Arch-dukes Coffers.

The Armes of theſe Princes are Gules, a Feſſe Argent, aſſumed by Marqueſſe Leopold at the ſiege of Acon, or Ptolemais in the Holy land; becauſe his holy Armour being covered with blood, his Belt onely remained white. The Armes thereof in former times having been ſix larkes Or, in a field Azure, ſuppoſed to have been taken by the firſt Marqueſſes, becauſe they poſſeſſed thoſe ſix Provinces, for defence of which the tenth Legion called Alauda, had been fixed at Vienna.

And now we are to take our leave of the Roman Empire, which we ſhall meet withall no more till we come to Hungary; the Countries on the north ſide of Danubius, and the Eaſt ſide of the Rhene, being almoſt aſſoone abandoned, as conquered by them. So that in our ſurvey of theſe northern Countries, we are not like to finde ſuch matter of Antiquity as we had before, but muſt content our ſelves both with Towns and Villages of a later date, and a leſſe continuance. In which we ſhall begin with thoſe Countries which lie on the other ſide of Rhene, bordering on the Eſtates of Cleveland and the Biſhop-electors; and ſo proceed on Eaſtward till we come to the furtheſt parts of Germany, and the confines of Hungary; afterwards turning to the North till we meet with Denmark, which is the next of all to be conſidered.

The poſſeſſion of this town much controverted between the Earls of Naſſaw, and

Wederaw. the Lantgraves of Heſſen. But finally, ſurrendred by Count William of Naſſaw (father of William Prince of Orange) unto Philip the Lantgrave, in the time of Charles the fift, for the ſumme 600000 Crowns: the houſe of Naſſaw notwithſtanding retaining it amongſt their Titles. 3. Herborn, a ſmall Univerſity or Schola Illuſtris, founded of late by the Earls of Naſſaw: in which Piſcator was Divinity Reader, and Alſtedius (both famous in their times) proteſſour for the Arts and Sciences. 4 Idſtein, lying ſouth to Catzenelbogen; and 5. Wisbad, directly ſouth of Idſtein, betwixt that and the Meine; theſe have the title and poſſeſſions of the ſecond branch of this Family. 6. Weilborough on the Lou, not far from Wetzelver, which gives Title to the third branch of this houſe, called the Earls of Naſſaw in Sarbruck and Weilborough.

As for the Princes of the houſe of Naſſaw, they are very ancient: Otho of Naſſaw being made Earl of Guelderland in the yeer 1079. Another Otho of this houſe, but proceeding from a different branch of it, dying anno 1190. the founder of the preſent Family of the Princes of Orange; and of the houſe of Wisbad and Idſtein, out of which deſcended Adolphus Earl of Naſſaw choſen Emperour, in the yeer 1292. By the marriage of Engelbert the ſixt Earl of this houſe of Dillingberg, with Mary daughter of Philip, Lord of Breda in Brabant; they came firſt to be poſſeſſed of Eſtates in the Netherlands: and by the marriage of Henry, great Grand-child of this Engelbert, with Claude of Chalons, they got the Principality of Orange in France. A family as much honoured for the perſonall merit of the Princes of it, as any other in Europe: of whom we have already given a Catalogue, in the deſcription and ſtory of Provence.

Bordering on Franconia, or Frankenland, lyeth the County of HANAW, ſo called from the Chief town of it: in which the places of moſt note, are 1 Hanaw it ſelf, in Latine called Hanovia, honoured with a Schola illuſtris alſo; and much inriched by the trade of Printing, with which they uſe to furniſh annually the Marts of Frankefort, diſtant from hence about ten Dutch miles. 2. Pfaffenhoſen, of no note formerly, but like to be remembred in the ſtories of ſucceeding times for the great defeat there given to the Duke of Lorrain, July 31. 1633. who loſt his whole Forces, all his Ordinance, Ammunition, and baggage; and which was worſt of all, his Country, taken in part from him by the Conquering Swedes, who followed him cloſe into his home; but wholly by the French King upon that advantage. 3 Lichteberg, which gives title to a ſecond branch of the houſe of Hanaw, called the Lord of Lichteberg. A family of good eſteeme, ſince the time that Otho of Hanaw was ennobled with the title of Earl thereof, which was about the yeer 1392. before that Princes of the Empire; and after that advanced unto greater fortunes, by the addition of the Barony of Minzeberg, in the perſon of Philip the firſt Earl of the County of Rheineck, in the perſon of another Philip the third of that name, great Grand-child of the former Philip; and finally, of the Lordſhip and eſtate of Lichteberg, accrewing to this houſe by the marriage of a third Philip, the youngeſt ſonne of Reynard the third Earl hereof, with Anne the daughter and heir of Ludovick, Lord of Lichteberg; the title and poſſeſſion of the ſecond branch of the houſe of Hanaw, called Lords of Lichteberg, and Hocſenſtein, and Earls of Bitſch; this laſt being an eſtate in Lorrain, accrewing to them by the marriage of a fourth Philip, (the fift in name and order of the houſe of Lichteberg) with Margaret, ſole daughter and heir of Ludovick the laſt Earl thereof.

Betwixt the Counties of Naſſaw, and Hanaw, on both ſides of the River Lou, lies the Earldome of SOLMS, the firſt Earl whereof (of whom there is any good Conſtat) was Henry, honoured with this title, anno 1220. But being I finde them in the Catalogue of the Counts Imperiall made before that time, I muſt conclude them to be ancienter then the date aforeſaid; though that ſufficient to ennoble a far greater Family. By the marriage of Conrade the ninth from Henry firſt with Elizabeth one of the daughters of William of Naſſaw Prince of Orange, and after with the widow of the Earl of Egmond, they came to be of ſuch Authority amongſt the Netherlands, as to be priviledged with a place and ſuffrage in the Councell of the States Generall: there ſettled at the preſent in their greateſt honour, eſpecially ſince the marriage of Henry of Naſſaw Prince of Orange with a daughter of Earl Conrade by his ſecond wife; the mother of William of Naſſaw, now Prince of Orange, and husband to the Princeſſe Mary, the eldeſt daughter of Great Britain. But beſides their Eſtates there, they are poſſeſſed in this tract of 1 Branufels, which gives title to the firſt branch of the houſe of Solms. 2 Croneberg, the poſſeſſion of the ſecond branch of this Family; and 3 Solms, on the north ſide of the Lou, the root of both.

Of the Imperiall Cities in this Confederation, the firſt is Friberg, called for diſtinction ſake, Friberg in Wederaw, to difference it from another Town of that name in Briſgow: ſituate in the midle of delicious and moſt fruitfull elds: and memorable for the ſtout reſiſtance which it made to Adolphus of Naſſaw, at that time Emperour: who when he could not get it by force, or famine, obtained it by fraud; and put to death no leſſe then 40 of chief Nobility, whom he found in the Caſtle. So hated for that bloody fact, that he was ſhortly after deprived of the Empire, and ſlain in fight by Albert of Auſtria his Competitor. The ſecond of the two is Wetzelaer, ſeated on the Lou, where it meets with the Dille, which riſing neer Dillengberg, a town of the Earl of Naſſawes, doth here loſe its name into the greater. A town Imperiall, confederate with Frideberg, and the Princes before mentioned, for maintaining their common liberties, and the Religion publickly profeſſed amongſt them, being that of the Reformed Churches of Calvins Platform.

Franconia

10. FRANCONIA.

FRANCONIA or FRANKENLAND, is bounded on the East with the Vpper Palatinate, and part of Voitland; on the West with the Confederates of Wederaw, and part of the Rhene; on the north with Haſſia, and Thuringia, and on the ſouth with the Palatinate of the Rhene, and ſome part of Schwaben, ſo called from the French, Franci, or Francones, in whoſe poſſeſſion it was, when they were firſt known unto the Romans; the Reſidence of their Dukes or Princes in this noble Province, appropriating the name unto it. Called alſo Francia Orientalis, to difference it from the Realm of France, which lay more towards the Weſt.

The Country on the out-parts overgrown wholly in a manner with woods and forreſts, and environed almoſt with Mountains, parts of the old Hercinian Wolds; is within, pleaſant, plain, and fruitfull; ſufficiently plentifull both of corn and wines, but abundantly well ſtored with Rape, and Licoras, and yeilding good paſture for Cattell: ſo that we may compare it to a fine piece of Cloth, wrought about with a courſe liſt; or an excellent fine piece of Lawn, with a canvaſſe Selvage.

Chief Rivers of it, are 1 The Main, or Mænus, which running thorow the midſt of it, is received into the Rhene below Frankfort: 2 The Sala, whence the adjoyning French had the name of Salii; and Conrade, Emperour of the Germans, the ſurname of Salicus. 3 Radiantis; 4 Sinna; 5 Tubero; 6 Æſtus, &c.

The People of it are ingenious, patient of labour, ſtrong of body, and very induſtrious, not ſuffering any to be idle that can earn his living of what ſort ſoever. The off-ſpring of the ancient French, who having over-maſtered Gaul, and the parts adjoyning, left here the ſeminary of their ſtrength, and a ſtock of their antient Princes: Marcomir, brother of Pharamond the firſt King of the French, governing in theſe parts as Duke, and leaving the eſtate and title unto his poſterity. The catalogue of which Princes, take in order thus:

326	1	Genebaldus, the ſon of Dagobert, deſcended from the old Regal ſtock of the Sicambri, united with other Dutch nations about 60 or 70 yeers before in the name of Frankes, having ſubdued thoſe parts which lay towards the River Mœnus: became the firſt Prince of the Eaſtern Frankes, or Lord of Francia Orientalis.
356	2	Dagobert, the ſonne of Genebaldus, who added the Diſtrict of Triers unto his Eſtates.
377	3	Clodoveus, or Ludovicus, the ſonne of Dagobert.
398	4	Marcomir, the ſonne of Clodoveus, who extended his Dominion Eaſtwards towards Bavaria and Bohemia.
402	5	Pharamund, or Waramund, the ſonne of Marcomir, the firſt of this line which took unto himſelf the title of King of the French: on the aſſuming whereof, (aiming at matters of more importance) he left Franconia or Eaſt-France, with the Title of Duke to his brother Marcomir.
419	6	Marcomir, the brother of Pharamund.
423	7	Prummeſſer, by ſome called Priamus, the ſon of Marcomir.
435	8	Genebaldus II. the ſon of Prummeſſer.
455	9	Sunno, the ſon of Genebald the ſecond.
478	10	Clodomirus, or Luitomarus, the ſon of Sunno.
515	11	Hygobaldus, the ſon of Clodomir, who became a Chriſtian, and added Wormes and Mentz unto his Eſtates.
541	12	Helenus, by ſome called Hermericus, a Chriſtian alſo, who paſſing over the Rhene, ſubdued that tract bordering betwixt Triers and Lorrain, which the Dutch call Weſterich.
571	13	Gotofridus, the ſon of Helenus, a Chriſtian alſo, but not able to perſwade his people to the ſame belief.
595	14	Genebaldus III. the ſon of Gotofrede.
615	15	Clodomir II. the ſon of Genebald the third.
638	16	Heribert, the Nephew of Clodomir the ſecond.
668	17	Clodoveus, or Clovis II. the Couſin-german of Heribert.
680	18	Gosbertus, the ſon of Clovis the ſecond.
706	19	Gosbertus II. the ſon of Gosbert the firſt.
720	20	Hetavus, the ſon of Gosbert the ſecond, the laſt Duke of Franconia of this line. Who dying without without iſſue male, anno 740. bequeathed it at his death to Pepin, who afterwards was King of France, Father of Charles the great; according to a former contract made between thoſe Princes: and Charles no ſooner had it in his poſſeſſion, but he beſtowed the greateſt part of it on Burchard the firſt Biſhop of Wurtzburg, anno 752. made Biſhop of that City by Boniface, Arch-biſhop of Mentz (the firſt Apoſtle of this People) but a yeer before. The Biſhops of Wurtzburg by this grant were poſſeſſed hereof, as long as any of the houſe of Charls the Great did poſſeſſe the Empire. But his poſterity failing in the perſon of Conrade, anno 910. Otho the firſt (who next but one ſucceeded Conrade) inveſted Conrade, husband to Luitgardis his daughter, with this Country, giving him withall the title of Duke of Francony. Four Princes of this houſe poſſeſſed it: that is to ſay, this Conrade ſurnamed Salicus, and after him three Henries, father, ſon and nephew, ſucceſſively enjoying the Imperiall dignity, by the name of Henry the third, fourth, and fift. This Henry, the laſt Prince of the male line of Conrade, dying without iſſue, Franconia fell to Frederick Barbaroſſa, Duke of Schwaben, as next heir to Henry by the Lady Agnes his Siſter, married to Frederick the Antient Duke of Schwaben, the grand-father of Barbaroſſa: But that houſe being alſo extinct in the perſon of Conradine, anno 1268. and no one heir pretending to the rights thereof; the Biſhops of Wurtzburg challenged it on the former grant: content to let ſome great ones have a part of the ſpoil, that he and his ſucceſſours might enjoy the reſt. By means whereof it came to be divided betwixt the Biſhops of Wurtzburg, Bamberg, Mentz, the Electour Palatine of the Rhene, (for antiently the Palatinate and the Biſhoprick of Mentz were but parts of Frankenland) the Marqueſſe of Onolsbach, the Earls of Swartzenberg, Henneberg, and Hohenloe, and as many of the Free or Imperiall Cities, as are ſeated in it. Thus every one did gather ſticks when the great Oak fell: the title of Duke of Francony remaining notwithſtanding to the Biſhops of Wurtzburg.

1. WVRTZBVRG, the Metropolis of Franconia, the ſeat and reſidence of the Biſhop who is Titulary Duke hereof, is ſituate on the Mein, or Mœnus, in a pleaſant plain environed with Meadowes, gardens, and fruitfull mountains; and very well fenced with walls, trenches, bulwarks, and other Arts of modern fortification: well peopled, and for the moſt part handſomely and neatly built. Paſſing over the Bridge built of free ſtone on many large and ſpacious Arches, you come unto a fair and pompous (though ancient) Caſtle; the ordinary dwelling of the Biſhop: and yet ſo ſtrong that the many vain attempts of the Boores and Citizens, apt to pick quarrells with their Prince, made it thought impreguable; to which the ſituation of it on the top of an hill, added ſome advantage. but it proved otherwiſe when beſieged by the King of Sweden, anno 1631. who after a ſhort, but ſtout reſiſtance, took it by aſſault. Other townes of moſt note which belong to the Biſhops of Wurtzburg, are 2 Forchein, where it is ſaid that Pontius Pilate was born. 3 Gemand, at the meeting of the Meine, and the Sal, or Sala; 4 Chronac; 5 Staphelſtein; 6 Hockſtad, of which little memorable.

But to return unto the Biſhop as chief Lord of all; he is called in the refined Latine of theſe times, Herbipolitanus, but commonly Wurtziburgenſis; differing in ſound, but not in ſenſe: For Wurtzburg is no other then a town of Worts, ſituate amongſt plants and gardens, as before is ſaid; and Herbipolis, made up out of ſeverall languages, doth ſignifie no more then a City of Herbs. By whom the Epiſcopall See was here firſt erected, and how the Biſhops hereof came to be intituled unto their Eſtates, hath been ſhewn already. The manner how the new Biſhop is admitted, and the old interred, may be worth our knowledge. On the deceaſe of the former Biſhop, the Lord Elect attended with a great train of horſe is to make his entrance. Aſſoone as coming within the Gates, he alights off his horſe, and putteth off his robes, and being attired in a poor and deſpicable habit, begirt about with a rope, bare-headed alſo, & bare-footed, he is conducted by the Earls of Henneberg, Cuſtel, Wortheim, and Reineck, to S. Saviours Church, being his Cathedrall. The Dean and Canons there meeting him, ask him what he would have: to which he modeſtly replyeth, that though unworthy, he is come to diſcharge the office unto which he is called. Then the Dean thus, I admit thee in the name of this whole Chapter, committing to thy care this Church of Saint Saviours, and the Dukedome thereunto belonging, in the name of the Father, Son, and holy Ghoſt. Which done, he putteth on his Epiſcopall habi . yeth Maſſe, and from thence paſſeth to his Caſtle, where he gives entertainment to all the Company. The living Biſhop thus inveſted, proceed we next unto the buriall of the dead, whoſe body being embowelled, is kept in the Chappell of the Caſtle, his heart preſerved in a veſſell of glaſſe. The next day he is carried to the Monaſtery of Saint James, holding a Crozier Staffe in his right hand, and a ſword in his left; buried with which the next day after, in the Church of S. Saviour. As for the Revenues of the Biſhop, they muſt needs be great; the Biſhop hereof, in the time of Charles the fift, compounding for his peace with Albert, Marqueſſe of Brandenbourg, at the price of 220000 Crownes in ready money, and entring into bond to pay all his debts, which amounted to 350000 Crowns more: by which we may partly gueſs at the richneſſe of his Exchequer, and partly at the greatneſs of his Intrada.

2. The ſecond great Lord of Franconie is the Biſhop of BAMBERG, a City ſeated on the Mein, not far from Wurtzburg: the little River Regnite falling there into it; ſuppoſed by Mercator to be the Granionarium of Ptolemy, and to have took this new name from the hill Baba (ſo called from Baba, daughter daughter of Otho Duke of Saxon, and wife of Albert once Earl hereof) upon which it is situate: the right name being Babemberg (remember that Berg in Dutch signifieth an Hill) and contractedly Bamberg. A City delectably seated amongst mountaines and pleasant gardens, and in a soil exceeding fruitfull of all necessaries, and yeelding Liquorice in great plenty: the birth-place of Joachimus Camerarius, one of the great lights of Germany, and a See Episcopall, the Bishop of which is exempt from the power of his Metropolitan, subject immediately to the Pope, and Lord of many fair towns and territories in this Countrey; but much diminished since the time of Charles the fift; the Bishop thereof then being, giving to Marquesse Albert above mentioned for a cessation from arms, anno 1530. no lesse then 60 of his Lordships (most of which fall unto the share of the Marquesse of Onaldsbach) besides the tutelage or Guardianship of his Wards and Clients. Of those which are remaining in the hands of the Bishops, the principall are 1 Gragingliac, 2 Schleistat. Franconia

3. The third great Lord to be considered is the Marquesse of Onaldsbach or Ansbach, who is Master of no small part of this Countrey; but his Estate (as those of the other German Princes) confused and intermixt with his neighbours. His chief Townes, 1 Onaldsbach or Ansbach, the usuall residence of these Marquesses, and the birth-place of most of their children. 2 Hailbrun, on the edge of Wirtenberg; walled in about in the yeare 1085. and honoured with some publick Schools there founded by Marquesse George Frederick, anno 1582. 3 Pleinfelt, not far from Nuremberg. Such places as they hold in Voiteland, we shall meet with them there.

These Marquesses are of the puissant family of Brandenbourg, by whom this fair estate was wrested from the Female heirs of Wolframius, the last Lord hereof: the first who did enjoy this Estate and Title being Marquesse George Frederick the sonne of Albert Marquesse and Elector of Brandenbourg called the Achilles of Germany; the Father of Albert the first Duke of Prussia, and of George, the first Marquesse of Jagendorf; and Grandfather of that Marquesse Albert, who in the dayes of Charles the Fift so harassed this Countrey. But his male-issue by Casimir his eldest sonne failing in that Albert, anno 1557. it returned to the Electorall house, and by Sigismund, a late Elector was given to Joachim Ernestus, one of his younger brethren; who by the Princes of the Vnion for defence of the Palatinate was made chief Commander of their Forces, anno 1620. A charge in which it was supposed that he carryed himself neither so faithfully nor so valiantly, as he should have done, being much condemned for suffering Spinola with his Army to passe by unfought with, when hee had all advantages that could be wished for, to impede his march: the greatest part of the Palatinate being lost immediately upon that neglect: and by degrees the rest of the Vnited Provinces, either taken off from their engagement, or ruined for adhering to it with too great a constancie. To him succeeded his son Christian now possessed hereof.

As for the other secular Princes which have any considerable estates in this Countrey, they are the Earls of Henneberg, Hohenloe, Rheineck, Castell, Wortheim, Horpach, and Swartzenbourg, together with the Lords of Lemburg, and Rheichisberg; all of them named so from the chiefe town of their Estates, and all those townes enriched with some suitable territorie. Of these the Earles of Henneberg, Rheineck, Castell, and Wortheim, are Homagers to the Bishop of Wurtzburg, and are to doe him service at his Inthronization: the Earldome of Rheineck being now united to that of Hanow, as was shewn before; and that of Henneberg most famous in that one of the Earles hereof was Father of that incredible increase of children (as many as there be dayes in the yeares) produced at one birth by the Lady Margaret his wife, sister of William Earle of Holland and King of the Romans. A Family of as great Antiquity as most in Germany, fetching their Pedegree as high as to Charles the Great, without help of the Heralds. But they of greatest power and parentage amongst them, are the Earls of SCHWARTZENBVRG, deriving themselves from one Witikindus, of the house of Saxony: who fighting for his Countrey against the French, anno 779. was taken prisoner, carried into France, and there baptized at the perswasion of Lewis the Godly, sonne of Charles the Great, Witikindus his sonne and successour, being baptized at the same time also by the name of Charles, was the first Earl of Swartzenburg, a Castle of his owne building on the edge of Turingia, anno 796. whose posterity doe still hold the same, but much improved in their Estates by marriages and other accrewments. A race of Princes which have yeelded many of great influence in the affairs of Germany: amongst them Guntber Earl of Schwartzenburg, elected Emperour of the Romans against Charles the fourth, by Rodolph Elector Palatine, Ericus Duke of Saxony, Ludovick Marquesse of Brandenburg, and Henry Archbishop of Mentz. By which last solemnly inaugurated at Aken (or Aquisgrane) anno 1349. But being unworthily poysoned by his Competitour, though he dyed not of it, yet he was made so weak and unfit for action, that he was forced to surrender his pretentions to his mortall enemy, receiving in compensation for his charges 22000 marks in silver, and some towns in Turingia.

Of the Imperiall Cities, which share amongst them the remainders of Frankenlandt, the principall are 1 Frankford on the Meine, so called from its situation on the River Meine, to difference it from Frankford in the Countrey of Brandenburg; Divided by the River into two parts, joined together by a bridge of stone, the lesser part, situate on the right hand shore of the River, being called Saxen-hausen, the greater part, properly called Frank-ford, seated on the other; both under one Magistrate, and both together making up a fair, rich, populous, and well traded town; of great both riches and repute, by reason of the famous Marts here held in the midst of Lent and September yearly; and the Election of the Emperour or King of the Romans as occasion is. The City of a round form, compassed with a double wall, beautified with some walkes without the town on the banks Franconia. bankes of the River amongſt Vineyards, meadowes and ſweet groves: called thus, as ſome ſay, from Francus the ſonne of Marcomir, ſuppoſed to be the founder of it; or a Francorum vado, as the Ford of the Francks, before the building of the bridge. 2 Schweinfort, on the Meine alſo, in a fruitfull ſoil. 3 Rotenburg on the River Tuber. 4 Winsheim. Here is alſo the town of 5 Koburg, which belongeth to the houſe of Saxony, and gives title unto ſome of the younger Princes of it, called from hence Dukes of Saxen-koburg. And hereto may be added 6 the fair City of Nurenburg, conceived by moſt to be within the Vpper Palatinate: but by the Emperor Maximilian made a member of the Circle of Franconie, in regard moſt of the Eſtates and poſſeſſions of it lie within this Countrey. Of which indeed they have ſo plentifull a ſhare, that when Maurice Electour of Saxony, and his confederates had driven Charles the fift out of Germany, Marqueſſe Albert before mentioned (whoſe ſword was his beſt Revenue) picking a quarrell with this City, burnt no leſſe then an hundred Villages belonging to it, 70 Manours and Farmhouſes appertaining to the wealthier Citizens, 3000 Acres of their Woods: and after all this havock made of their eſtate, compelled them to compound with him for 200000 Crownes in Money, and ſix peeces of Ordinance. But being the City it ſelfe ſeems rather to belong to the other Palatinate, wee ſhall there meet with it.

Amongſt theſe Prelates, Princes and Imperiall Cities is the great Dukedome of Franconia, at this time divided; the title ſtill remaining in the Biſhop of Wurtzburg, and ſome part of the Countrey: but both the Countrey and the title of Duke of Francony, not long ſince otherwiſe diſpoſed of. For the Swedes having taken Wurtzburg anno 1631. as before is ſaid, together with the City of Bamberg, and all the Towns and Territories appertaining to them, conferred them upon Bernard Duke of Saxon-Weymer, with the ſtyle and title of Duke of Franconia. Inaugurated therein in the Cathedrall Church of Wurtzburg, July 19. 1633. the Nobility and Gentry of the Countrey doing homage to him, and all the Magiſtrates and Officers of the ſeverall Cities taking the oaths of Allegiance: the new Duke alſo making Oath, that he would carefully maintain them in their rights and Priviledges. In the ſolemnities of which day, the firſt great Gun diſcharged in the way of triumph, broke in the going off without any hurt done but the wounding of one ſouldier onely. An omen that all this ſolemn Act would prove but a Pageant, and break in pieces at the firſt giving fire unto it. And ſo accordingly it did: the victory at Norlingen, which followed not long after this, putting the Biſhops once more into their poſſeſſions, and leaving nothing to the new Duke but an hungry title. And therefore leaving both the old and new Titular Dukes, wee will here adde the Catalogue of thoſe who were Dukes indeed, and had together with the title the full poſſeſſion of the Countrey.

DVKES of FRANCONIA of the DVTCH or GERMAN RACE.

974	1	Conradus ſurnamed Salicus, created Duke of Franconia by Otho the firſt, whoſe daughter Luitgardis he had marryed: after the death of Henry the ſecond, elected Emperour by the name of Conrade the ſecond, anno 1025.
1040	2	Henry the ſonne of Conrade, Duke of Franconia, and Emperour by the name of Henry the third.
1056	3	Henry II. of Franconia, and IV. of the Empire.
1106	4	Henry III. of Franconia, and the V. of the Empire.
1125	5	Frederick (ſurnamed) Barbaroſſa Duke of Schwaben, Nephew of Frederick the Antient, Duke of Swevia, and of Agnes his wife, the ſiſter and next heir of Henry; ſucceeded in the Empire after the death of Conrade the third his Uncle, anno 1153.
1190	6	Frederick the ſecond ſonne of Barbaroſſa II. Duke of Franconia and Schwaben.
	7	Conrade II. brother of Frederick the ſecond, ſucceeded in both Eſtates.
	8	Philip the younger brother of Conrade, ſucceeded in both Dukedomes after his deceaſe; and on the death of Henry the ſixt his eldeſt brother, was elected Emperour, anno 1198.
1207	9	Frederick III. of Franconia, and the V. of Suevia, ſonne of the Emperour Henry the ſixt, whom hee ſucceeded in the Kingdome of Naples, and Sicil, anno 1202. and on the death of Otho the fourth, anno 1212. was elected Emperour, of that name the ſecond.
1250	10	Conrade III. of Franconie, the II. of Schwaben, and the IV. of the Empire, the ſon of Frederick the third, whom he ſucceeded in al his Titles and Eſtates.
1254	11	Conradine ſonne of Conrade the third, Duke of Franconia and Schwaben; diſpoſſeſſed of his Kingdomes of Naples and Sicil by Manfred, the Baſe Brother of his Father; and finally beheaded by Charles of Anjou, who ſucceeded Manfred in thoſe Kingdomes, anno 1268. After whoſe death this royall houſe being quite extinguiſhed; the Biſhops of Wurtzburg did again reſume the title of Dukes of Franconia; content to let ſome of the greater Lords and Prelates which lived neer unto him, to ſhare in the poſſeſſion of it, as before was noted.

11. WIRTENBERG,

These I have joined together though distinct Estates, because both of them taken out of the great Dukedome of Schwaben, erected both about one time, and lying very close in a round together: bounded upon the East and South with the Schwaben properly so called; on the North with the lower Palatinate; on the West with the Rhene, and that part of Schawben which is called Brisgow parted asunder by the Mountainous ridge of hils called Schwartzwall; Wirtenberg lying on the East side thereof, and Baden betwixt it and the Rhene.

And first for WIRTENBERG, the air thereof is very healthy, neither too hot in Summer, nor too cold in Winter: the soil thereof near Swartzenwald lying on the West, and the Alps of Swevia, on the South, of it self barren and unprofitable; but in some places by the industrie of the Ploughman, made to yeild good corn. But in the middle parts thereof which lye towards the Neccar, little inferiour for fruitfulnesse both of corn and wine, unto any in Germanie; besides some silver mines near Wiltberg, and about Puellach, a small Town, such abundance of brasse, that the Foundation of the houses seem to be laid upon it.

It took this name from the Castle of Wirtenberg, the first seat of the Princes of it, as that did from the Intuergi, inhabiting the Dutch side of the Rhene; or the Virthungi, as Beatus Rhenanus thinketh mentioned by Trebellius Gellio in the life of Aurelianus, to which the word Berg being added for a termination, made it first Tuergin-berg, or Virthung-berg, and after Wirtenberg.

Places of most importance in it, are 1 Stutgard, the Dukes seat, a fair, rich, and populous town, and the chief of the Dukedome; seated in a pleasant and fruitfull Plaine not farre from the Neccar, yeilding a quantity of wine almost incredible. 2 Tubingen, on both sides of the Neccar, united into one with a fair stone Bridge. A Town well built, situate in a very rich soil, and finally adorned with an Universitie here founded by Eberhard the first Duke of Wirtenberg, anno 1477. in which Leonardus Fuchsius that great Herbarist and Restaurator of Physick, was once a Professour of that Facultie. 3 Constat, upon the Neccar also, not far from which on the top of an hill, stands the old Castle of Wirtenberg before mentioned. 4 Wietberg, of great esteem for its Mines of silver. 5 Archingen, inhabited chiefly by Jews. 6 Schorndorf upon the Reems, much resorted to by reason of the hot baths there; as is also 7 Newnburg, on the Entz. 8 Heidenheim, 9 Grieningen, 10 Marbach, of which little memorable. There are also within the limits of this Dukedom many Towns Imperiall, as 1 Wimpsen, and 2 Haibrum, on the Neccar. 3 Gepping, upon the river Vils. 4 Weil, 5 Reutling, on the Neccar also, made Imperiall by Frederick the 2. anno 1240. otherwise of no great note but for the Paper mils. 6 Esling.

The first Inhabitants hereof, were the Charitni of Ptolemie, and part of the Intuergi spoken of before, made subject with the rest of these parts to the Almains, after to the French, and finally a member of the great Dukedom of Schwaben. From which dismembred in the time of Henry 4. after the dangerous war raised against him by Duke Rodolphus, advanced by the practise of Pope Hildebrand to the Throne Imperiall; it came to have Princes of its own: the first Earl being Conrade in the year 1100, by the grace and favour of the said Emp. Henry. Increased by the addition of the Earldom of Montbelguard and many other accrewments it was made a Dukedom in the person of Eberhard the 6. by Maximilian the 1. anno 1495. The Earls and Dukes whereof follow thus in order:

The EARLS and DUKES of WIRTENBERG.

	1	Conrade the first Earl
	2	Ulrick, son of Conrade.
	3	John son of Ulrick.
	4	Lewis son of John.
	5	Henry son of Lewis.
	6	Eberhard son of Henry.
	7	Ulrick II. son of Eberhard.
	8	Eberhard II. son of Ulrick.
1325	9	Ulrick III. son of Eberhard.
1344	10	Eberhard III. son of Ulric.
1392	11	Ulric IV. son of Eberhard.
	12	Eberhard IV. son of Ulric.
1417	13	Eberhard V. son of Eberhard the 4. by his marriage with Henrica, or Henriette, daughter of Henry Earl of Montbelguard, added that Earldom to his house.
1419	14	Lewis or Ludovick II. son of Eberhard the 5.
1456	15	Eberhard VI. son of Lewis, Founder of the Universitie of Tubingen, created by Maximilian the 1. the first Duke of Wirtenberg, anno 1495. He deceased without issue, anno 1496.

Wirtenberg

1496	16	Eberhard VII. ſon of Ulric, the younger brother of Lewis the 2. ſucceeded on the death of Eberhard his Couſin German.
1504	17	Henry the brother of Eberhard the 7.
1519	18	Ulric V. ſon of Henry the 2. expulſed out of his Dukedom by Charls the 5. for the ſack of Reutling an Imperiall Citie; and his Eſtate conferred on Ferdinand of Auſtria, the brother of Charls; but after 15 years exile, reſtored to his Dukedom by Philip Lantgrave of Haſſia. He reformed Religion, and liberally endowed the Univerſitie of Tubingen.
1550	19	Chriſtopher the ſon of Ulric the 5. a follower of his Fathers ſteps in Reformation of the Church, and Advancement of Learning.
1568	20	Ludivick or Lewis III. ſon of Chriſtopher.
	21	Frederick ſon of George Earl of Montbelgard the brother of Ulric the 5. made Knight of the Garter by Queen Elizabeth, anno 1597.
	22	John-Frederick ſon of Frederick the 1.
	23	John-Eberard, eldeſt ſon of the former Duke, anno 1649.

The Revenues of this Duke are ſuppoſed to be equall unto thoſe of the Electors Palatine, ſpoken of before; and were it not for the ſilver mines in Saxonie, little inferiour to thoſe of that Duke. But for proviſions of war, (excepting Powder only) he is meanly furniſhed. A main defect conſidering the ill terms he ſtands in with the Imperiall Cities, betwixt whom and the houſe of Wirtenberg, there have been alwayes open wars, or ſecret jealouſies.

His Arms are Or, 3 Attires of a Stag born Palie-barrie, Sable.

As for the Marquiſate of BADEN, lying on the Weſt ſide of Schwartzenwald, betwixt it & the Rhene, it is for the moſt part, except towards thoſe Wolds, a very pleaſant and fruitfull Countrie; and much of the ſame nature, with the reſt of Wirtenberg, ſo called from Baden, a neat Town, where the Marqueſſe keeps his ſeat in Winter: ſo named from the hot Baths there, as is alſo Baden (called for diſtinction ſake, the Vpper Baden) amongſt the Switzers: in which reſpect the Citie of Bath in Somerſetſhire, had antiently the name of Caer-Baden alſo. Of theſe Baths it is ſuppoſed that there are in this Citie at the leaſt 300. profitable for many diſeaſes and exulcerate ſores, drawing a great reſort of people from the neighbouring Countries. This is the chief Town of this Marquiſate, from whence the Princes have the Title of Marqueſſes of Baden. The next to this is 2 Durlach, or Turlach, which gives title to a ſecond branch of this houſe, called ſometimes Marqueſſes of Durlach only, but commonly the Marqueſſes of Baden-Durlach. 3 Liebenzel, amongſt the hils of Schwartzenwald, famous for hot medicinall Springs. 4 Lichtall, remarkable for a Monaſterie, the buriall place of the firſt Marqueſſes. 5 Gerſpach, in the very heart of that Mountainous tract. 6 Pfortheim, adjoyning to the Wood Hagenſchein, a branch of Schwartzenwald. 7 Rötelen, 8 Badenwile, and 9 Suſenburg, all ſeated in the Vpper-Baden, being that part hereof which lies next to Briſgow. 10 Milberg, beautified with a fair Caſtle, the uſuall retiring place of theſe Princes in the heats of Summer.

This Marquiſate being alſo taken out of the great Dukedom of Schwaben was founded in the perſon of Herman, of Verona in Italie, who deſerving well of the Emperour Henry the 5. was by him ſettled in ſome Lands about theſe parts, anno 1120. and after marrying with the daughter of an Earl of Baden was by the Emperour Frederick Barbaroſſa created the firſt Marqueſſe of Baden, anno 1155. The Eſtate was after much increaſed by the addition of the Earldome of Hochberg, and the Appendixes thereof, in Schwaben; into which Chriſtopher the 13. Marqueſſe hereof, ſucceeded on the death of his Couſin Philip the laſt Earl of Hochberg; both Princes deſcending originally from two brothers: of which the eldeſt in right of the Lady Judith his wife, was Earl of Hochberg; the ſecond by the favour of the ſaid Frederick Barbaroſſa, was made Marqueſſe of Baden. They were Maſters alſo of many fair Eſtates in the Lower Palatinate, which the Palatines of the Rhene (as was there ſaid) are ſince poſſeſſed of. Other particulars ſhall be ſhewn (if occaſion be) in the enſuing Catalogue of

The MARQUESSES of BADEN.

1253	1	Herman the firſt Marqueſſe.
	2	Herman II.
	3	Herman III.
	4	Herman IV.
1281	5	Rodulph, ſon of Herman 4.
1295	6	Herman V. ſon of Rodolph.
	7	Rodolph II. ſon of Herman the 5.
1356	8	Frederick, ſon of Rodolph the 2.
	9	Rodolph III. ſon of Frederick.
1372	10	Barnard, ſon of Rodolph.
1431	11	James ſon of Barnard.
1453	12	Charls ſon of James; the firſt of theſe Marqueſſes which was poſſeſſed of the Countie of Spanheim in the Lower Palatinate, deſcending on this houſe by Matild wife of Rodolp the 2.
1475	13	Chriſtopher ſon of Charls, who after the death of Philip the laſt Marqueſſe of Hochberg, ſucceeded alſo in that eſtate.
1515	14	Barnard ſon of Chriſtopher, his brother Erneſt ſucceeding in that of Hochberg.
	15	Chriſtopher

15 Chriſtopher II. ſon of Barnard, his elder brother Philibert, and Philip ſon of Philebert dying in the life of Barnard. Northgoia.

16 Edward ſon of Chriſtopher, intending the ſale of his Eſtates to pay his debts, was forcibly deprived of all by 17 Erneſt Marqueſſe of Hochberg, nephew of Erneſt above mentioned; who by that means not only preſerved the Marquiſate of Baden, but united that of Hochberg again unto it; and removed his ordinarie ſeat to Durlach.

18 George, brother of Erneſt, Marqueſſe of Baden and Hochberg.

19 Frederick, the ſon of George born in the year 1594. ſucceeded his Father in both Eſtates; and (if living) hath a ſonne called alſo Frederick, to enjoy them after him.

NORTHGOIA,

OR

The UPPER PALATINATE.

The Countrie of NORTHGOIA, ſo called from the Northern ſituation of it in regard of Bavaria, is ſometimes alſo called the Palatinate of Bavaria, becauſe anciently belonging to that Eſtate; but generally Ober Pfalts, or the Upper Palatinate, to difference it from the Lower. It is bounded on the Eaſt with Bohemia, on the Weſt with Franconia, and part of Schwaben; on the North with Voiteland; and on the South with Bavaria. The Countrie for the moſt part ſomewhat rough and mountainous, rich principally in mines of iron, which it yeeldeth in moſt places, and ſome of ſilver about Amberg, extended from Haimbourg to the edge of Bohemia 80 miles, and from the hill Felchtelberg in the edge of Voiteland to Weiſenberg near the banks of the Danow 68 miles.

Obſervable things touching this Province, are chiefly two. Firſt that out of the Mountain Felchtelberg before mentioned, ariſe 4 Rivers running to the four quarters of the world; that is to ſay, the Eger towards the Eaſt, the Mein or Mœnus towards the Weſt, the Sala or Saltza to the North, and the Nab Nabus to the South, ſo that it may be probably thought to be the higheſt hill in all Germanie. 2 That in the Southweſt corner of it are two little Rivers, the one called Almul which falleth into the Danow, and the other Rednitz which runs into the Mein, and finally into the Rhene: between the heads whereof, being not much diſtant, Charls the Great once began to dig a Channel for making a paſſage out of the Rhene into the Danow. In which work he employed many thouſand men: but partly by exceſſe of rain, and partly by ſome ſtrange affrightments (all which they did in the day being undone in the night) he was fain to deſiſt. Some parts of the intended water-courſe are to be ſeen near Waſſenburg, ſpoken of before, which ſtandeth in the middle way betwixt both Rivers.

Chief places of this Country which belong to the Electorall Familie, are 1 Amberg, on the River Vils, enriched chiefly by the commoditie of iron digged out of the neighbouring hils, and here faſhioned into all ſorts of Utenſils, and thence conveyed in great abundance to the parts adjoining: but prouder of its mines of ſilver then thoſe veins of iron, affording to the Princes Coffers 60000 Crowns yearly. 2 Monheim, in the midſt of a fruitfull valley, near a wood of Juniper. 3 Newburg, upon the River Swartzach, which gives title to the ſecond branch of the Palatine houſe, called the Count Palatines of Newburg; competitours with the Marqueſſe of Brandenbourg for the Dukedom of Cleveland. 4 Kelhaim, at thee meeting of the Danow, with the river Almul. 5 Cham, on the edge of Bohemia, near the river Regen, which paſſing thence falleth into the Danow near the Citie of Regenſberg. 6 Caſtell, where the Electors for the moſt part hold their Reſidence, when they are in this Country. 7 Awerbach, 8 Saltsbach, 9 Weiden, 10 Newmarckt.

There are alſo in this Country ſome towns belonging to the Lantgraves of Luchtenberg, one of the four old Lantgraves of the Empire: the other three being Duringen, Haſſia, and Alſatia: ſo called from Luchtenberg an old Caſtle, ſituate on a loftie hill not far from Pfriemd, the chief town and ordinary ſeat of theſe Lantgraves, ſeated on the river Nab, 2 Gronſfelden, 3 Schonhuffen, an ordinary paſſe and baiting-place in the way from Prague to Nurenberg.

But the chief Citie of this Country, and perhaps of Germanie, is Nurenberg it ſelf, Norimbega in the modern, but Noricum in the ancient Latine. So called from an ancient Caſtle called Caſtrum Noricum, the ruines of which are ſtill remaining encompaſſed with a deep but drie ditch, now of no uſe nor ornament to the Citie at all; but reverenced for its antiquity as the mother of Nurenberg. The Caſtle ſaid by ſome to be built in the time of Claudius Cæſar; more probably by ſome of the Norici, who terrified with the Invaſion of Attila, in the decline and waine of the Roman Empire, relinquiſhed Bavaria, where before they dwelt, and paſſed over the Danow, there to provide themſelves of a ſafer dwelling. Conquered by the Bavarians, it became together with their Conquerours, ſubject to the French: in the time of Lewis the 3. it became Imperiall, and was walled and fortified during the reign of Charls the 4. From that time it encreaſed ſo faſt both in wealth and beauty, that it is counted the greateſt and wealthieſt City in all this Continent, there being reckoned in it 11 ſtone bridges for paſſage over the river Pegnits, which runneth through it; 12 Conduits of freſh water, 13 common Baths, 116 publick Wels, and 128 Streets. Of figure ſquare, environed with a triple wall of 8 miles in circuit, and plentifully ſtored with all ſorts of Ammunition. The Marqueſſes of Brandenburg in former times were the Burgraves of it, an office of great power and juriſdiction; but ſold for a good ſum of mony by Frederick the 3. anno 1414. Albert, his ſon attempting to recover the old office again, beſieged the town, having no leſſe then 17 Princes on his ſide, and yet could not force it. That for an Argument of its ſtrength. A proof and evidence of the wealth of it we have ſeen before, in that great havock made of their Towns and Villages, and the great ranſome they were put to by another Albert, ſpoken of in Franconia. And it adds much unto the commendation of the people, that this great wealth is gotten by their indefatigable induſtrie: the town being ſituate on a barren and ſandie ſoil, and deſtitute of thoſe helps which commonly a navigable River brings into a City: thoſe great poſſeſſions which belong to the State hereof, being gotten out of the fire, as the ſaying is, by their continuall working of iron and other manufactures; occaſioning a reſort hither of Merchants from all parts of Germanie. Other Towns of chief note within this Palatinate, are 1 Altorf, where the Nurenbergers Founded an Univerſity for the ſtudy of all Arts and Sciences, anno 1575. 2 Erſpruck, a great Town and well ſeated, belonging to the State of Nurenberg alſo. 3 Eiſted (Aichſtadium in the Latine) an Epiſcopall See, ſituate on the River Almul. 4 Waſſenburg, an Imperiall City on the borders of Schwaben. Here was alſo in this Province (if not ſtill remaining) the town of Winsberg, memorable for the piety and gallantry of the women of it. For the Town being beſieged and diſtreſſed by the Emperour Conrade the 3. for ſiding againſt him with the Guelfs then Dukes of Bavaria, no other conditions could be gotten at the ſurrendrie of it, but that the women might have leave to depart in ſafety, and carry all their Jewels with them. Which being obtained they took their husbands on their backs, and ſo left the Town: and by that noble act ſo moved the affections and compaſſion of the angry Prince, that he ſpared the Town, and gave them all a generall pardon. It is ſaid by ſome, that the odious names of Guelfs and Gibelines (with which the peace of Chriſtendome was ſo long diſtracted) took their beginning at this ſiege: the firſt ſo called from Guelfo, brother of Henry the Proud, Duke of Bavaria, in whoſe cauſe they fought; the other from Veibling, (the French and Italians ſpeak it Gueibling) a Town of Frankenland, in which that Emperour was born. Another originall hereof we had in our deſcription of the State of Florence: but I take this to be the more probable of the two, though neither certain.

The ancient inhabitants here were the Nariſci of Tacitus. Afterwards ſome of the Norici fearfull or grown impatient of the Roman yoak, came over the Danubius to them, and built that famous Caſtle called Caſtrum Noricum, where now ſtands Nurenberg. Overpowered by the Boji, and uniting with them in the name of Bojarians they followed the fortunes of Bavaria, till the year 1339. when Ludovick the Emperour and Duke of Bavaria, on the partition of the eſtate betwixt him and Rodolphus his elder brother, relinquiſhed it for ever to the houſe of the Palatines. Returned for the preſent to the Dukes of Bavaria, on whom conferred together with the Electorall dignity by the Emperour Ferdinand the 2. in recompenſe of the great ſervice don him by Maximilian the now Duke thereof, in the war of Bohemia, and the great charge he had been at in the reduction of that Kingdome to the houſe of Auſtria. How long it will continue thus is known only to God the diſpoſer of all things. Yet neither the Bavarians formerly, nor the Palatines ſince have been ſo fully Maſters of it, but that the Landgrave of Luchtenberg and the Citie of Nurenberg have put in for a ſhare.

The Arms of which great and puiſſant Citie are Azure, an Harpie diſplayed, crowned, crined, and armed, Or.

13. The KINGDOM of BOHEMIA.

The Kingdom of BOHEMIA, containing Bohemia it ſelf with the incorporate Provinces, is bounded on the Eaſt with Poland and Hungarie; on the Weſt with the Upper Palatinate, Voiteland, and Miſnia; on the North with the Marquiſate of Brandenberg, and ſome part of Miſnia; and on the South with Auſtria and Bavaria. It comprehends in it beſides Bohemia it ſelf, the Marquiſate of Moravia, with the Dukedoms of Sileſia and Luſatia.

1 BOHEMIA, encompaſſed about with woodie Mountains, part of the Hercynian, is bounded on the Eaſt with Moravia, on the Weſt with the Vpper Palatinate, and Voiteland; on the North with Miſnia, Luſatia, and ſome part of Sileſia; on the South with parts of Bavaria and Auſtria. It took this name from the Bemi, or Boiemi, the old Inhabitants hereof, of whom more anon: and containing in compaſſe about 550 Engliſh miles.

The ſoil is indifferently fruitfull, and enriched with mines of all ſorts, except of gold. Tinne they have here in good plenty, the mines whereof were firſt found out by a Corniſh man, baniſhed out of England, anno 1240. which diſcovery of Tinne in theſe parts, was, as ſaith my Author, in magnam jacturam Richardi Comitis Cornubiæ, (he meaneth that Richard which was afterwards King of the Romans:) and no marvail, for in thoſe times there was no Tinne in all Europe, but in England. Wood they have here good ſtore; and in ſome of their Forreſts a Beaſt called Lonie, which hath hanging under its neck a bladder full of ſcalding water; with which, when ſhe is hunted, ſhe ſo tortureth the Dogs, that ſhe eaſily eſcapeth them. Of corn they have ſufficient for their own uſe, and ſometimes alſo an increaſe above their ſpending, wherewith they do ſupply their neighbours of the Upper Palatinate:

but they want wine, the Air here being too ſharp and piercing to produce a good Vintage. And it yeelds alſo ſtore of Saffron no where to be bettered; with plenty of medicinable drugs. Bohemia

The principall Rivers hereof, are 1 the Elb, or Albis, having here its ſpring; of whoſe courſe we have ſpoken elſewhere, 2 Egra, 3 the Muldaw or Muldavius, and 4 the Warts; all three exonerating themſelves into the Elb, which runneth through the midſt of the Country.

The Kingdome is not (as others) divided into Counties and Provinces; but into the Territories and poſſeſſions of ſeverall Lords; who have great authority and command over their Vaſſalls. The figure of the whole in a manner, Circular, the Diameter whereof reacheth every way ſome 200 miles: containing in that compaſſe 700 Cities, walled Townes and Caſtles; and (as ſome ſay) 30000 Villages. Inhabited by a people given to drink and gluttony; and yet valiant, and with ſenſe of honour: this laſt belonging to the Nobility and Gentry; the former to the common people; but more moderately then moſt others of the German Nations. All of them, Princes or Plebeians, rich, poor, noble and baſe, uſe the Sclavonian language, as their mother tongue.

The chief Bohemian Captain that ever I read of, was Ziſca; who in eleven battels fought in the defence of the Huſſites, againſt the Pope and his confederates; prevailed and went away victorious: inſomuch, that at his death he willed the Bohemians to flea him, and make a drumme of his skin; perſwading himſelf, if they ſo did, they could never be overcome. A fancie like to that of Scipio African, and Vortimer, King of Britain, ſpoken of before. Scholars of moſt note, John of Hus, and Hierome of Prague, two eminent Divines, of whom more anon.

The Chriſtian faith was firſt here preached by one Borſinous, anno 900, or thereabouts: Borzivoius, the 8 Duke from Crocus was the firſt Chriſtian Prince; and next to him Wenceſlaus the ſecond. This laſt moſt cruelly murdered by Boleſlaus, his brother, at the inſtigation of Drahomira, an obſtinate Heathen, mother to them both: who having cauſed the Miniſters of the Lord to be butchered, and their bodies to lie unburied for two years together, was ſwallowed, coach and all, in that very place where their bodies lay. Confirmed by this prodigy, they continued conſtant in the Faith to this very day; though not without the intermixture of ſome notable vanity. For one Picardus coming out of the Low-countries, drew a great ſort of men and women unto him, pretending to bring them to the ſame ſtate of perfection, that Adam was in before his fall; from whence they were called Picards, and Adamites. They had no reſpect unto marriage; yet could they not accompany any woman, untill the man coming to Adam, ſaid unto him; Father Adam, I am inflamed towards this woman: and Adam made anſwer, Increaſe and multiply. They lived in an Iſland which they called Paradiſe, and went ſtark naked; but they continued not long: for Ziſca hearing of them, entred their fooles Paradiſe, and put them all to the ſword, anno 1416. But to make amends for this folly, they were exceeding zealous of the Reformation. For much about the ſame time the works of Wickliffe were brought into Bohemia, by a certain ſcholar who had been Student in the Univerſity of Oxford; which hapning into the hands of John Huſſe, and Hierome of Prague, two men whereof the Country may worthily boaſt, wrought in their hearts a deſire to reforme the Church: A buſineſſe which they proſecuted ſo earneſtly, that being ſummoned to the Councell of Conſtance, they were there condemned for Hereticks, and burned, anno 1414. yet had their doctrine ſuch deep root in the hearts of the people, that it could never be deſtroyed by the Tyrannies of war or perſecutions (though both were uſed) to this very day, (multitudes of the Profeſſours of it living in this Kingdome under the names of Caliſtini, and Sub utraque, as before is ſaid) though perfected by the writings of Luther, Melanchthon, Calvin, and ſuch other of the Proteſtant Doctors as travelled in the work of Reformation.

The firſt Inhabitants hereof, of whom there is any good record, were the Benni, whom Pomponius Mela placeth in this tract, with the addition of Gens Magna: By Tacitus they are called Boiemi, who makes them the deſcendents of thoſe Boii (a Gallick nation) who, to avoid the ſervitude which they feared from Rome, put themſelves into theſe Hercynian deſerts; which from them was called Boiohemum, and by which name it occurs in Velleius Paterculus. And though the Marcomanni firſt, and the Sclaves and Croatians afterwards became maſters of it; theſe laſt continuing their poſſeſſion to this very day: yet it retaineth ſtill the name of Bohemia, amongſt the Latines; as that of Bohemerland amongſt the Dutch.

Places of moſt importance in it, are 1 Budweis, (conceived to be the Marobodurum of Ptolemy) a town towards Auſtria. 2 Auguſt, neer the head of the Elb. 3 Tabor, a ſtrong Town built by Ziſca, to be a retreat for the Huſſites. 4 Jaromir; and 5 Molmuck, both upon the Elb. 6. Littomiſſell, an Epiſcopall See, bordering on Moravia. 7 Pilſen, the laſt town of this Kingdome which yeilded to the prevailing Imperialiſts, in the late long war about that Crown: and then alſo betrayed to Count Tilly for a ſome of money, by ſome of the Souldiers of Count Mansfield, who was then abſent, and had ſo long defended it againſt the Enemy. 8 Elbogen, much eſteemed for the hot medicinable Bathes, ſituate on the River Egra. 9 Egra, ſo called of the ſame River, on which (neer to the borders of the Upper Palatinate) it is ſtrongly ſituate: a large fair City, containing three miles in compaſſe; Imperiall once, but ſold by the Emperour Ludovicus Bavarus to John, King of Bohemia for 400000 marks of Silver: in compaſſe leſſe, for ſweetneſſe of the place, elegancy of the buildings, pleaſantneſſe of ſite, and richneſſe of ſoil, ſuperiour far to Prague it ſelf. 10 Prague, the Metropolis of the Kingdome, ſituate in the middeſt thereof, on the River Muldaw: conſiſting of four ſeverall Townes, each of which hath its ſeverall Cuſtomes, Lawes, and Magiſtrates. The principall is called the Old Town, adorned with many goodly buildings; a ſpacious Market-place, and a ſtately Counſell-houſe: the ſecond called the New Town, ſeparated from the Old, by a Ditch of great depth, and wideneſſe. The third, called the Little Town, is divided from the Old, by the River Muldaw, joyned to it by a beautifull Bridge conſiſting of 24 Arches: and in this part thereof is the hill Rachine; on the ſides of which are many fair and ſtately houſes belonging to the Nobility, over-looked by the ſtrong Caſtle of S. Wenceſlaus (ſituate on the top thereof) a magnificent Palace, wherein the Bohemian Kings, and the later Emperours have kept their Reſidence. The fourth town is that of the Jewes, who have here five Synagogues, and live according to their own Law. The whole City rather large then fair, the ſtreets being in winter very dirty, of ill ſmell in the ſummer; the buildings for the moſt part of clay and timber, clapt up together without Art, and of little beauty. And though incompaſſed with walls and Ditches, it is conceived to be but an open town (ſo poor and weak are the defences) inſomuch that whoſoever is maſter of the Field, will be maſter of the City alſo. And yet beſides the honour of being the Royall Seat; it hath alſo of long time been an Archbiſhops See, and by Charles the fourth Emperour, and King of Bohemia made an Univerſity. Neer unto this town was fought that memorable battell, between the Duke of Bavaria, and Count Bucquoy, Lieutenant for the Emperour Ferdinand the ſecond, with 50000 men on the one ſide; and Frederick newly elected King of Bohemia, with the Prince of Anhalt, the Count of Thurne, and 30000 men on the other ſide. It was fought on the eight of November, ſtylo novo, wherein (ſuch was the unſearchable will of God) the victory fell unto the Imperials: the young Prince of Anhalt, Thurne, and Saxon Weimar, with divers others, being taken priſoner; the Bohemian Ordinance all ſurpriſed, Prague forced to yeeld unto the enemy, and King Frederick with the Queen, compelled to flie unto Sileſia; a moſt lamentable and unfortunate loſſe, not to this people onely, but to the whole cauſe of Reformed Religion: yet is it not unworthy of our obſervation that this great battell was fought upon a Sunday, the 8 of November, about the time of the morning Prayer: in the Goſpell appointed for which day (being the 23 after Trinity Sunday) is that famous paſſage, Reddite CÆSARI, quæ ſunt CÆSARIS, i.e. Render unto Ceſar, the things which are Ceſars; which ſeemed to judge the quarrell on the Emperours ſide.

But whether of the two Pretendents had the juſter Cauſe, may beſt be ſeen by convaſſing the Records of that State and Nation (for the ſucceſſe of War is no ſtanding Rule for meaſuring the equity, and juſtice of the cauſes of it: by which it will be clearly ſeen, that ſince the erecting of this Kingdome by the Sclaves or Croatians, it hath been evermore diſpoſed at the will of the Emperour, or by election of the States and People. But I intend not at the preſent to diſpute that point, but only to lay down the ſtory of the Kings and People, as in other places; ſince the firſt coming of the Sclavi. A Nation not known by that name till the time of Juſtinian; at what time they inhabited on the banks of the Iſter, but on the further ſide thereof, oppoſite to Illyricum and Thrace, imperiall Provinces. Grown famous by their good ſucceſſes againſt that Empire, their name was taken up by the reſt of the Sarmatians of Europe; who either wanting room, or not liking of their colder Countries, paſſed on more Weſtwards: and by degrees poſſeſſed themſelves of thoſe parts of Germany, which formerly had been inhabited by the Almans, Burgundians, and Boiarians; but were then either quite forſaken, or but ill inhabited by the drawing down of thoſe people to the Roman Provinces, which they beeter liked. Divided at, or after their coming thus far weſt, into four main bodies; that is to ſay, the Winithi, poſſeſſed of the (now) Marquiſates of Brandenbourg, Miſnia, and Luſatia, as alſo of the Dukedomes of Mecklenburg and Pomerania; the Moravians, inhabiting in Moravia, the Lower Auſtria, and the Upper Hungary; the Poles, poſſeſſed of Poland, and the Dukedome of Sileſia; and finally the Bohemian Sclaves, confined within the limits of that Kingdome onely. Under what forme of Government they lived at their firſt coming hither, is not certainly known: but being ſetled in theſe Countries of Poland and Bohemia: it was not long before they were erected into ſeverall Kingdomes, occaſioned by the coming of a new body of Sclaves, Croatians, and others of thoſe ſcattered Nations, under the conduct of Zechius, a great Prince amongſt them, who about the yeer 640. together with his brother Leches was baniſhed Croatia for a murther. And being very acceptable to the Sclaves of Bohemia, who looked upon him as a Prince of their own Original extraction, one of the ſame Language, Lawes or Cuſtomes that themſelves were of, they admitted him to be their Chief, or ſupreme Governour, by what ſoever name he was called at firſt: in honour and memory of whom, the Bohemians in their own language doe call themſelves Zechians. After his death, the State relapſed again into a confuſed Anarchie, till the yeer 670. at what time not reſpecting the Progeny of Zechius, the founder of their Common-wealth and firſt eſtate, they faſtned upon Crocus, a man of good eſteem amongſt them, and elected him to be their Duke. Crocus vir juſtus, & magnæ apud Bohemos opinionis Princeps electus eſt, as Bertholdus telleth us. Crocus being dead, the Bohemians elected Libuſſa, his youngeſt daughter; and of her government ſoon wearied, they made choice of Primiſlaus for their Prince, and made him husband to Libuſſa. A man taken from the Plough (as their ſtories tell us) to eſpouſe the Princeſſe: it being ordered and agreed on by her many Suiters, that he (whoſoever he was) before whom an horſe purpoſely let looſe, did firſt make a ſtand, ſhould be the Husband of the Lady, and have the government of the State. The Horſe firſt makes a ſtand before Primiſlaus, being then at plough (having perhaps ſome Mare in his Teeme;) and he accordingly is received and admitted their Prince. Theſe with the other Dukes from the time of Crocus the firſt Legiſlator of the Bohemians, take in order thus.

1061 20 Vratiſlaus, brother of Sbitignæus, whom for his manifold deſerts, the Emperour Henry the 4. created the firſt King of Bohemia, anno 1608. whoſe Succeſſors take thus out of Bertholdus and Dubravius.

The KINGS and DUKES of BOHEMIA.

A. Ch.

1086 1 Vratiſlaus, the brother of Spitigneus, Duke of Bohemia, was by Henry the 4. at Metz created King.
2 Conrade, brother to Vratislaus, notwithſtanding that his brother had 3 ſons, was elected Duke of Bohemia.
3 Brecislaus, ſon to Vratislaus, the two ſons of Conrade being rejected, is by the Bohemians choſen Duke.
1100 4 Boriworius the 4. ſon of Brecislaus, is choſen by the Bohemians, his eldeſt brothers then all living.
1109 5 Sutopulcus, Couſin german to Boriworius, by the conſent and favour of the people, depoſed Boriworius, and cauſed himſelf to be elected in his place.
6 Vladislaus II. brother to Boriworius, preferred by the people to the throne, before Otho the brother, and Henry the ſon of Sutopulcus, the laſt Prince.
7 Sobeslaus, brother to Vladislaus, promoted to the State before the ſonne of Vladislaus.
1159 8 Vladislaus III. ſon to Vladislaus the 2. (the four ſons of Sobeslaus omitted) is choſen and crowned the ſecond King of Bohemia by Frederick the Emperour, but depoſed by the States, becauſe he was not by them formerly elected, according to their priviledges and cuſtoms.
9 Vldericus the third ſon of Sobeslaus, his elder brethren yet living, was by the people elected in the room of Vladislaus and his ſon Frederick: whom the Emperour Frederick had by force eſtabliſhed in the throne.
10 Sobeslaus II. ſecond ſon to Sobeslaus, was by Frederick above named expelled; and he alſo by the Bohemians.
11 Conrade, Grandchild to Otho the brother of Sutopulcus, elected by the Bohemians in place of Frederick: between which two Princes there was continuall war.
12 Wenceslaus, Uncle unto Conrade, and ſon of Otho aforeſaid, was preferred before many nearer the ſucceſſion. Him Primislaus expelled; but fearing his return, quitted Prague.
13 Henry Biſhop of Prague, a ſtranger to the bloud, was by a generall conſent elected Duke.
14 Vladislaus IV. brother to Primislaus the ſon of Wenceslaus, being put by, ſucceeded Henry, and ſoon after reſigned.

Bohemia.

1199 15 Primiſlaus, elected by the Bohemians, and by the Emperour Philip, crowned the 3. King of Bohemia at Mentz, was brother to Uladiſlaus the 4.

1248 16 Ottocarus, notwithſtanding that Wenceſlaus his elder brother had been crowned in his Fathers life time, was acknowledged King. He was ſlain in battle by Rodolphus the Emperour.

1278 17 Wenceſlaus II. ſon to Ottocarus.

1284 18 Wenceſlaus III. ſonne to Wenceſlaus the laſt of the Bohemian Princes of the maſculine race.

1304 19 Rodolphus, ſon to the Emperour Albertus, is by the potencie of his Father, and the election of the States ſeated on the Throne, being otherwiſe a ſtranger to the bloud-royall of Bohemia.

1305 20 Henry Duke of Carinthia, husband to Anne the ſecond daughter of Wenceſlaus the 2. is choſen by the Bohemians: but being weary of his Government, they elect John Earl of Luxenbourg. Finally, Henry was murdered by one of his Nephews.

1311 21 John Earl of Luxenbourg, ſonne to Henry the 7. Emperour and husband to Elizabeth youngeſt daughter to Wenceſlaus the 2. is elected, the Lady Anne yet living.

1346 22 Charls ſonne to John, and Emperour of that name the 4. the Author of the Golden Bull.

1362 23 Wenceſlaus IV. Emperour, alſo in whoſe time the troubles of the Huſſites, and the valour of Ziſca was famous.

1418 24 Sigiſmund, brother to Wenceſlaus, maketh himſelf King by force, and at his death commendeth Albertus Duke of Auſtria, the huband of his daughter Elizabeth, unto the States of the Kingdom.

1437 25 Albertus Duke of Auſtria elected upon the commendation of Sigiſmund by the Bohemian Lords.

1440 26 Ladiſlaus, ſon to Albert, who being the brother of two ſiſters, commended yet one George Pogibrachius unto the States as fitteſt to ſucceed him.

1458 27 George Pogibrachius, neither by affinity or conſanguinity of the bloud, ſucceeded. And he though he had three ſons, yet for the benefit of his Country, he adviſed the Nobles after his death to elect their King from Poland.

1471 28 Ladiſlaus II. ſon to Caſimire King of Polond, and to Elizabeth, the younger daughter of Albert Duke of Auſtria, the iſſue of Anne the elder ſiſter ſtill living; elected King of Bohemia.

1516 29 Ludovicus ſon to Ladiſlaus, elected and crowned by the means of his Father, then living, King of Hungary alſo.

1526 30 Ferdinand, Archduke of Auſtria, brother to Charls the 5. and husband to Anne ſiſter to Ludovicus, by his letters reverſall, acknowledged that he was choſen King of Bohemia not of any right, but of meer free-will, according to the liberties of that Kingdome.

1565 31 Maximilian eldeſt ſon of Ferdinand, was in his Fathers life time, and at his ſuit, elected King, anno 1540. into which he actually ſucceeded on his Fathers death.

1575 32 Rodolphus Emperour of Germanie, and eldeſt ſon to Maximilian, elected King.

1608 33 Matthias brother to Rodolphus, was at the joint ſuit of them both, nominated and appointed King of Bohemia by the generall conſent of the States, during his brothers life time, anno viz. 1608. which denomination they both proteſt in their letters reverſall, ſhould not be to the prejudice of the liberties and ancient cuſtoms of that kingdom.

1618 34 Ferdinand II. Archduke of Auſtria, of the houſe of Grats, was by Matthias adopted for his ſon, and declared Succeſſour to the Crown of Bohemia, but never formally and legally elected: for which cauſe amongſt others, he was by the States rejected in like caſe as Uladiſlaus the 3. had formerly been.

1621 35 Ferdinand III. ſon of Ferdinand the 2. elected King of Bohemia during the life both of his Father and of Frederick, the Prince Electour alſo; after whoſe death he ſucceeded in this kingdome both in right and fact; King of Hungarie alſo, Archduke of Auſtria, and Emperour of Germanie, now living, anno 1648. more moderate in his Counſels then his Father Ferdinand, and more inclinable to peace; (though honoured with a more ſignall victorie againſt the Swedes in the battell of Norlingen, then his Father Father was in all his life;) which the Concluſions made at Munſter are ſufficient proof of. Moravia.

Of the Revenues, Arms, and other things which concern this Kingdom, we ſhall ſpeak hereafter, when we have took a view of the reſt of the Provinces which are incorporated into it.

2 MORAVIA is bounded on the Eaſt with Hungarie, on the Weſt with Bohemia, on the North with Sileſia, and on the South with the lower Auſtria, and the river Teia: fenced on the Weſt by the Woods and Mountains of Bohemia, parts of the Hircynian Forreſt; on the North by ſome ſpurs or branches of it called Aſciburgius by Ptolemie, on the two other ſides open like an half moon, or ſemi-circle. The moſt fruitfull place of corn in all Germanie, and hath no ſmall ſtore of Frankincenſe, which contrarie to the nature of it, groweth not on a tree, but out of the earth: and that too (which addes much to the miracle, if Dubravius do report it rightly) in the ſhape and figure of thoſe parts which men and women do moſt endevour to conceal.

The former inhabitants of this Province were the Marcomanni, and part of the Quadi, againſt whom, when M. Antonius the Emperour made war, he had unawares run himſelf into ſuch a ſtraight that his army was environed with Mountains one way, and enemies the other. To this (as calamities ſeldom go alone) was added the extraordinary heat and drought then being. To the Emperor thus put to his plunges, came the Captain of his Guard, telling him that he had in his army a legion of Chriſtians (Melitens he calleth them) which by prayer to their own God could obtain any thing. The Emperour ſendeth for them, deſiring them to make ſupplication for the Army; which they did, and God almighty that never turneth a deaf ear to the prayers of his ſervants, when they are either for his glory, the Churches, or their own good, ſcattered and vanquiſhed the Quadi with thunderſhot and artillery from heaven, and refreſhed the faint and dying Romans with many a gentle and pleaſing ſhowre. This miracle purchaſed to that legion the ſurname of κεραυνοβόλος, i. e. the thunderer; and induced the Emperour to honour men of that holy profeſſion, and to make an end of the fourth perſecution, A. Ch. 174. Thus Xiphilinus hath it in his Dion; which coming from the pen of an Heathen, as his Author was, is of more credit in a matter of ſuch concernment unto Chriſtianity then if it had proceeded from Socrates, Sozomen, or any other Eccleſiaſticall Writer.

Places of moſt note herein, are 1 Olmuntz, on the River Marck (or Mora) the chief town of the Countrie, and a ſmall Univerſitie, near which out of the hill Odenberg bordering on Sileſia, ſpringeth the great river of Odera, whoſe courſe we have before deſcribed. 2 Brinn, on the river Schwats, the ſeat of the ancient Marqueſſes. 3 Radiſch, and 4 Cremſer, both upon the Marck or Mora. 5 Zwaim on the Teia; 6 Niclasberg (Mons Nicolai in the Latine) bordering on the Lower Auſtria. 7 Iglaw, 8 Newberg, 9 Weiskorchem, 10 Boſerlitz, of which little memorable. 11 Gradiſco, near to which (and to this place onely) the Frankincenſe is found to grow in the ſhape and forme before mentioned.

The old Inhabitants hereof (as before is ſaid) were the Marcomanni and the Quadi; after them that Tribe or Nation of the Sclaves, who from their habitation on the river Mora, called themſelves Moraviani, and the Country which they dwelt in by the name of Moravia (the Dutch call it Merheren.) Extended at that time over all the Lower Auſtria, to the banks of the Danow on the South, and as far as to the river Tibiſcus i (overſpreading a great part of the Vpper Hungarie) towards the Eaſt. Governed at the firſt by their own Kings, the firſt, whoſe name occurs, being Raſtai, in the time of the Emperour Lewis the Godly, by whom taken Priſoner, and his Realm made Tributarie to the Empire. After him ſucceeded Harmodurus, and then Suantopulcus, in whoſe time the Moravians and other Nations of the Sclaves, received the Goſpel, by the preaching of Cyril and Methodius two Grecian Doctours: officiating all divine ſervices in the Sclavonian or vulgar Language. For which being after called in queſtion by one of the Popes, they returned no other anſwer then this (and enough in that) Omnis Spiritus laudet Dominum. It is written that every thing which hath breath ſhould praiſe the Lord. Suantobegius ſon to Suantopuleus, ſucceeded next, depoſed or rather beaten out of his Countrie by the Emperour Arnulph, for denying the accuſtomed tribute. A Prince of great ſpirit, and of as great command, having at one time under him, not Moravia only, according to the largeſt limits, but Sileſia, Bohemia, and Polonia alſo. Arnulph not able otherwiſe to effect his purpoſe, called in the Hungarians (though at that time Pagans) by whoſe help the Moravian was ſubdued, and his Kingdom ſhattered into pieces; ſeiſed on by the Hungarians, Poles, and other Nations: and finally reduced to the preſent limits. Afterwards it was made a Marquiſate, (but by whom we finde not) one of the Marqueſſes hereof being Jodocus Barbatus, elected Emperour anno 1410. After whoſe death Sigiſmund his next heir, Emperour and King of Bohemia, gave it to his ſon-in-law Albert Duke of Auſtria, anno 1417. who in the end ſucceeded him in all his Eſtates, ſince which time it hath alwayes gone along with the Crown of Bohemia.

The Arms of the old Dukes or Princes of it, were Azure, an Eagle chequered Or and Gules, membred and langued of the ſame.

2 SILESIA, (or SCHLESI, as the Dutch call it, is bounded on the Eaſt with Poland, on the Weſt with Luſatia, on the North with Brandenburg, and on the South with Moravia. Wholly encompaſſed with Mountaines, except towards the North; which lets in a ſharp aire upon them them: the midland parts being full of Woods, but withall of Mineralls.

Chief Cities are Jagendorſe, or Jegerndorſe, of late the Patrimony of John Georgius of the family of Brandenbourg, commonly called the Marqueſſe of Jagendorſe. The lands and Eſtates in his poſſeſſion, firſt given by Ladiſlaus King of Bohemia, to George ſurnamed Pius, one of the ſonnes of Frederick of Brandenbourg, the firſt Marqueſſe of Auſpach of this houſe, for the many good ſervices hee had done him. But his poſterity being extinct, they fell to the ſaid John Georgius, brother to Sigiſmund the Electour: proſcribed by Ferdinand the ſecond, for adhering to the partie of Frederick Prince Elector Palatine: A Prince of great note and activeneſſe, in the beginning of the late German & Bohemian wars. 2 Munſterberg, which gives the title of Duke to the poſterity of George Pogebraccio, once King of Bohemia advanced by him unto this honor and a fair Eſtate. 3 Glatz or Gletz, the laſt Town of Bohemia, which held out for Frederick the Electour againſt that Emperour. 4 Glogaw, a ſtrong Town on the River Odera. 5 Nieſs, on a River ſo named, an Epiſcopall See. 6 Breſlaw, in Latine Vratiſlavia, ſo called from Vratiſlaus, the founder of it, once one of the Dukes of this Province, by whoſe procurement it was made an Epiſcopall See, anno 970, or thereabouts. It is ſituate on the River Odera, all the water wherein could not ſave it from being burnt down to the ground, anno 1341. but it was preſently reedified with fair Free ſtrone, and is now one of the prettieſt Cities (for the bigneſſe of it) in all Germany: fair, populous, and well contrived with open and even ſtreets; the chief of the Countrey. 7 Oppolen, on the Odera alſo, well fortified both by Art and nature, barricadoed by the River on the Weſt, and on the Eaſt with good out-workes, ſtrong walls, and a fair Caſtle. 8 Straten, 9 Reichenbach, both made Townes of war, ſince the beginning of the Bohemian troubles.

There are alſo within this Province the two Seigneuries of Prignitz, and Croſſen, ſo called from the chief Towns thereof, belonging to the Electour of Brandenbourg: the two Dukedomes of Oſwitz and Zator, appertaining to the Crown of Poland: as alſo the Dukedome of Lignitz, and Sueinits, all of them bearing the names of their principall Towns; of which two laſt, Sueinits is in the immediate poſſeſſion of the Kings of Bohemia, and Lignitz hath a Duke of its own, but an Homager and Tributary of that King.

The firſt two Inhabitants hereof were the Marſigni, Burii, Gothini, and ſome part of the Quadi. In the partition of the Eaſtern parts of Germany amongſt the Sclaves, laid unto the Dukedome or Kingdome of Poland; continuing part thereof till the time of Vladiſlaus the ſecond, who being driven out of his Kingdome by his brethren, was by the mediation of Frederick Barbaroſſa, eſtated in this Countrey, to be held under the Soveraignty of the Kings of Poland. Divided betwixt his three ſons, and afterwards ſubdivided amongſt their poſterities according to the ill cuſtome of Germany, it became broke at laſt into fourteen Dukedomes, of 1 Breſlaw, 2 Oppolen, 3 Ratibor, 4 Ceſſin, 5 Bethom, 6 Glogaw, 7 Segan, 8 Olents, 9 Steinaw, 10 Falkenbourg, 11 Sweinits, 12 Lignitz, 13 Oſwits, and 14 Zator. Of all which onely the two laſt doe remain to Poland; the five firſt being made ſubject to the Kings of Bohemia, by Wenceslaus the ſecond, the five next by King John of Luxenbourg; Lignitz remaining in the poſſeſſion of a Proprietary Duke (as before was ſaid) and Sweinits given to Charles the fourth Emperour and King of Bohemia, by the will and Teſtament of Boleſlaus the laſt Duke: all Schleſi by this means, (except the two Dukedomes of Oſwitz and Zator) being added to the Crown of Bohemia: of which it is rather an incorporate then a ſubject Province.

4. LUSATIA, by the Dutch called Lauſnitz is bounded on the Eaſt with Sileſia, on the Weſt with Miſnia, on the North with Brandenbourg, and on the South with Bohemia. The countrey rough and full of Woods, yet plentifull enough of corn, and of ſuch fruits as naturally ariſe out of the earth: So populous and thick ſet with people, that though it be but a little Province, it is able to arme 20000 Foot, as good as any in Germany. Moſt commonly it is divided into the Higher and the Lower; the firſt confining on Bohemia, the laſt on Brandenburg.

Places of moſt note in the higher Lauſnitz, are 1 Bautſen, (Badiſſinum the Latines call it) the firſt Town attempted and taken in by the Duke of Saxony, when he took upon him the execution of the Emperors Bann, againſt Frederick Elector Palatine, then newly choſen King of Bohemia: The poor Prince in the mean time in an ill condition, the Saxon being the head of the Lutheran; and the Bavarian chief of the Popiſh partie, arming both againſt him: So jealous are both ſides of the active and reſtleſſe Calvinian ſpirit; as to leave no means unaſſaied for the ſuppreſſing of it. Seated it is upon the Spre, and for the moſt part is the ſeat of the Governour for the King of Bohemia. 2 Gorlitz, upon the River Niſſe, which gave the title of Duke to John brother of Sigiſmund Emperour and King of Bohemia, and Father of Elizabeth the laſt Dutcheſſe of Luxembourg, before it fell into the hands of the Dukes of Burgundie. A fine neat Town, well frequented, and ſtrongly fortified: founded about the yeare 1231. and not long after ſo conſumed by a mercileſſe fire, anno 1301. ut ne unica domus remanſerit, as my Authour hath it, that there was not one houſe left of the old foundation. But it was preſently rebuilt in a more beautifull form, and more ſtrong materialls, then before it was: both publick and private buildings very neat and elegant. 3 Zittaw, on the ſame River bordering on Bohemia. 4 Lauben, 5 Lubben, 6 Camitz, of which little memorable, but that together with the former they make up thoſe ſix townes which are confederate together in a ſtricter league, for their mutuall defence and preſervation, but under the protection, and with the approbation of the Kings of Bohemia. Then in the LOWER Luſatia there is 7 Sprenberg, ſo named from its ſituation on the River Spre, which runneth through the whole Countrie, and in antient times was called Sueve, ſuppoſed by ſome (and not improbably) either to give name to the Suevians, or to take it from from them; that potent Nation, inhabiting originally betwixt this and the Elb. 6 Trabelt upon the Niſſe. Gottbuſe upon the Spre, or Suevus, which together with ſome part of the Lower Luſatia belongs unto the Marqueſſes of Brandenbourg. Brandenbourg.

The firſt Inhabitants hereof are by ſome ſuppoſed (and but ſuppoſed) to be the Semnones of Tacitus; in the partition of theſe parts of Germany amongſt the Sclaves, made ſubject to the Winithi, or Venedi, the greateſt and moſt ſpreading Nation of all theſe People. When, and by whom firſt made a Marquiſate, I am not able to ſay for certain; but ſure I am it hath beene very much given to the change of Maſters. It had firſt a Marqueſſe of its own. Conrade the Marqueſſe hereof, who dyed in the yeare 1156. being by the Emperour Henry the fift made Marqueſſe of Miſnia, added it unto that Eſtate: remaining for ſome time united to it. After, being ſeized on by the Poles, it was ſold by Frederick the ſecond, Marqueſſe and Electour of Brandenbourg: who keeping Cotthouſe and ſome other Townes bordering next upon him, in his own poſſeſſion, ſurrendered the reſt on compoſition to George King of Bohemia: claiming it from a Grant made by Henry the fourth to Vratiſlaus the firſt Bohemian King, anno 1087. A grant on which no poſſeſſion followed, unleſſe it were the Homage and acknowledgement of the Princes of it, holding it afterwards of that Crown, as the Lord in chief.

Thus have we brought theſe four Provinces into the power and Poſſeſſion of the Kings of Bohemia: remaining ſtill diſtinct in their Laws and Governments (as ſeverall limbs of the great body of the Sclaves, made up into one Eſtate) though joined together in the perſon of one ſupreme Governour: who is ſeverally admitted and acknowledged by each Province diſtinctly, for it ſelfe; and not by any one of them in the name of the reſt. Out of all which ſo laid together, there may be raiſed the ſumme of three millions of Crowns yearly, for the Kings Revenues, towards the detrayment of all charges.

The Armes of this Kingdom are Mars, a Lyon with a forked tail, Luna, crowned Sol. Which Arms were firſt given by Frederick Barbaroſſa to Vladiſlaus the third, made by him King of Bohemia, in regard of the good ſervice hee had done him at the ſiege of Millan. And though Vladiſlaus was depoſed by the States of that Kingdome, becauſe never formally and legally elected by them: yet his ſucceſſours keep thoſe Armes to this very day.

14. BRANDENBOVR.

The Marquiſate of BRANDENBOURG, is bounded on the Eaſt with the Kingdome of Poland; on the Weſt with Mecklenbourg and the Dukedome of Luneburg; on the North with Pomerania, and on the South with Miſnia, Luſatia, and Sileſia; ſo called from Brandenbourg the chief Town of it, and becauſe once the Marches of the Empire againſt the Sclaves, divided afterwards into the Old, the New, and the Middle Marches, according as they were extended further towards Poland by little and little, as the Emperours were able to get ground of thoſe potent people.

The Countrey containeth in length from Eaſt to Weſt 60 Dutch or 240 Italian miles, and is of correſpondent breadth; the whole compaſſe making up 540 miles of the laſt accompt. Within which tract are comprehended 55 Cities or walled Townes, 80 Townes of trade, Mark-ſtecken, or Market Townes, as they commonly call them; 38 Caſtles or Manſion-houſes of Noblemen, 17 Monaſteries, and 10 Parkes well ſtored with beaſts of game: the Countrey otherwiſe (conſidering the extent thereof) but thinly inhabited, nor well provided of neceſſaries, excepting corn, of which theſe North-Eaſt Countreys afford very great plenty.

1 ALTEMARK, or the OLD MARCK, ſo called becauſe the antient Marches of the Empire againſt the Sclaves, lyeth betwixt Lawenbourg and the Elb, with which it is bounded on the Eaſt. Chief Townes thereof, 1 Tangermond, on the Elb, where it receives the River Tanegra, or Augra, honoured ſometimes with the Reſidence of Charles the fourth. 2 Stendall, the chief of theſe Old Marches. 3 Soltwedel, divided into two Townes, the old and the new. 4 Gardeleben, fortified with the ſtrong Caſtle of Elſbimpe. 5 Oſterberg. 6 Senhunten, ſaid by ſome but falſely to be ſo called from the Senones, whom they would make the old Inhabitants of this Country (by all good Writers made to be originally a Gallick Nation.) 7 Werb, of which little memorable.

In the MIDDLE-MARCHES or VPPER MARCH, lying betwixt the Elb and the River Odera; the Towns of moſt note are 1 Butzaw, a Commendatarie of the Templars in former times. 2 Spandaw upon the Spre, a well fortified peece. 3 Oderburg, called ſo from that River, on which it is ſituate: remarkable for a ſtrong Caſtle built by Marqueſſe Albert the ſecond, at which all paſſengers by water, are to pay their Toll. 4 Brandenbourg on the River Havel, a Biſhops See, the Seat of the Lords Marchers in former times, taking name from hence. By ſome ſaid to be built by Brennus Captain of the Gaules; more truely by one Brando a Prince of the Frantonians, anno Ch. 140. 5 Frankefort (for diſtinction ſake named) ad Oderam, on which River ſituate; the ſoil about it being ſo plentifully ſtored with Corn and Wines, that it is not eaſie to affirm whether Bacchus or Ceres bee moſt enamoured of it. It was made an Univerſitie by Marqueſſe Joachim, anno 1506. and is alſo a flouriſhing and famous Emporie, though not comparable to that of the other Frankefort ſeated on the Meine. 6 Berlin, the ordinary Reſidence of the Marqueſſe ſituate on the River Spre, (or Suevus) which riſing in Luſatia falleth into the Albis. 7 Havelbourg on the River Havel, a Biſhops See, who acknowledgeth the Archbiſhop of Magdebourg for his Metropolitan.

3. In Brandenbourg.

3. In the NEWMARCK, extending from Odera to the borders of Poland; and called so, because last conquered, and added to the account of the German Empire, there is Custrine, a very strong and defensible town, seated on the two Rivers Warta and Odera; fortified with great charge by John, sonne of Marquesse Joachim, and by him intended for his seat. 2 Sunnerberg; and 3 Landsberg, both upon the Wart. 4 Soldin, in former times the chief of this Marck. 5 Berlinch, or New Berlin: and 6 Falkenberg, a strong town, and fortified with as strong a Castle towards Pomerania.

The first inhabitants of this Country, were the Varini and Naithones, part of the great nation of the Suevians: and after them, the Helvoldi, Wilini, Beirani, and other Tribes of the Winithi, the greatest nation of the Sclaves, who possessed themselves of it. But Brandenbourg being wonne from them by the Emperour Henry the first, anno 920. (at what time the Gospell was first preached amongst them) the Country hereabouts was given by him to Sigifride, Earl of Ringelheim, (eldest sonne of Theodorick the second Earl of Oldenburg) a valiant Gentleman, with the title of Marquesse, or Lord Marcher, anno 927. conditioned that he should defend those Marches (the old Marck, as they now call it) against the Sclaves. These Marquesses at the first Officiary, and at the appointment of the Emperour, and to him accomptable. Sigard the fourth from Sigefride, governing here for Otho the third, was the first Electour of these Marquesses; and Eudo the second of that name, and third from Sigard, the last that held this honour at the Emperours pleasure: that dignity after his decease being made Hereditary in the person of Albert of Anhalt, surnamed Ursus, by the Emperour Frederick Barbarossa, which Albert having very much enlarged his border by the conquest and extermination of the Sclaves, caused their unpeopled Country to be planted with new Dutch Colonies out of Holland, Zealand, Flanders, and those parts of the Netherlands. The house of this Albert being extinct in John the fourth, it was given by the Emperour Lewis of Bavaria, to Lewis his sonne; by Otho, the brother of that Lewis, sold for 200000 Ducats unto Charles the fourth, by Sigismund, the son of Charles to Iodocus, Marquesse of Moravia: but afterwards being redeemed again, it was by the said Sigismund conferred on Frederick Burgrave of Nurenberg, in recompense of his faithfull service in the wars of Hungary and Bohemia. In his posterity it remaineth, but much increased in power and patrimony, by the additions of the Dukedome of Prussia, Cleve, Gulick, and Berg, the Marquisates of Auspach and Iagendorfe; the Earldome of Marck in Westphalen, now a part of Cleveland; the Lordships of Prignits and Crossen in Silesia, the towns of Hoff, and Colmebach in Voiteland, with the County of Rapin, and the town and territory of Cothus in the Lower Lusatia. Insomuch that this is now the most powerfull Family in all Germany. The Marquesses hereof from Albert, the son of Urse, follow in this order.

The MARQUESSES of BRANDENBVRG.

A. Ch.

927 1 Sigifride, Earl of Ringelheim, made the first Marquesse of this border, by the Emperour Henry the first.
2 Gero, by the appointment of Otho the first.
3 Bruno, Earl of Within, created Marquesse hereof by the same Emperour.
4 Hugh, the son of Bruno, by the favour of Otho the third.
5 Sigard, the brother of Hugh, made by the same Emperour, the first Marquesse Elector.
6 Theodorick, the son of Sigard, outed of his command by Mistivoius, one of the Princes of the Sclaves, named Obotriti.
7 Udo, Earl of Soltwedel (the Sclaves being beaten and expulsed) created Marquesse and Elector by Conrade the second.
8 Udo II. son of Udo the first, proscribed by Henry the fourth for joyning with Rodulph Duke of Schwaben in the war against him.
9 Primislaus, King of the Obotriti (the Ancestour of the Dukes of Mecklinbourg) advanced unto these honours by the said Henry the fourth, and by him held unto his death. After which, made hereditary by the Emperour Frederick Barbarossa, in the person of Albert of Anhalt, the son of Vrsus.
1152 10 Albert of Anhalt, the first Hereditary Marquesse; father of Barnard, who was created Elector and Duke of Saxony, in the place of Henry surnamed the Lyon, by the Emperour Frederick Barbarossa.
11 Otho, son of Albert.
12 Otho II. son of Otho the first.
13 Albert II. brother of Otho the second.
14 John, son of Albert the second.
15 John II. son of John the first.
16 Conrade, brother of John the second.
17 John III. son of Conrade.
18 Waldemar, brother of John the third.
19 Waldemar II. Nephew of Waldemar the first by his brother Henry.
20 John IV. brother of Waldemar the second, the last Marquesse of the house of Anhalt; the Marquisate escheating to the Empire for want of heires.

21 Lewis of Bavaria created Marqueſſe and Elector of Brandenburg by his father the Emperour Lewis of Bavaria, on the ſaid eſcheat. Brandenbourg.

22 Lewis II. ſurnamed the Roman, on the reſignation of his brother ſucceeds in the Marquiſate and Electorall dignity.

23 Otho, brother to Lewis the firſt and ſecond, who ſold the Marquiſate, and Electorall dignity to Charles the fourth.

24 Wenceſlaus, ſon of Charles the fourth, afterwards King of Bohemia, and Emperour of the Romans.

25 Sigiſmund, brother of Wenceſlaus, Emperour of the Romans, King of Hungary and Bohemia, Earl of Luxenbourg; who ſold this Marquiſate to Iodocus, Marqueſſe of Moravia; and having afterwards redeemed it, conferred the ſame on 1417 26 Frederick Burgrave of Nurenberg, ſolemnly inveſted herein at the Councell of Conſtance, anno 1414. for which inveſtiture he paid unto the Emperour the ſumme of 400000 Crownes.

1440 27 Frederick II. ſon of Frederick the firſt, to whom the Emperour Frederick the third gave the Dukedome of Pomeren.

1470 28 Albert, brother of Frederick the ſecond, called the Achilles of Germany, relinquiſhed to Bugeſlaus the 10th. the poſſeſſion of Pomeren, but his ſucceſſours ever ſince have retained the Title, and kept on foot their pretentions to it. From Frederick his ſecond ſon, deſcended Albert, the firſt Duke of Pruſſia, Frederick the firſt Marqueſſe of Auſpach, George the firſt Marqueſſe of Jagendorfe, and Albert called the Alcibiades of Germany, who ſo haraſſed Franconia in the dayes of Charles the fift.

1486 29 John, ſon of Albert.

1499 30 Joachim, ſon of John, who founded the Univerſity of Frankford, anno 1506. and authorized the Reformation of Religion in his time begun.

1535 31 Joachim II. ſon of Joachim the firſt.

1571 32 John-George, ſon of Jocahim the ſecond.

33 Joachim-Frederick, ſon of John-George.

34 John Sigiſmund, ſon of Joachim Frederick, who had to wife the Lady Anne, daughter of Albert-Frederick, the ſecond Duke of Pruſſia, and of Mary Eleanor his wife, eldeſt daughter of William the firſt, Duke of Cleve, Gulick, &c.

1620 35 George-William, ſonne of John Sigiſmund, and the Lady Anne, claiming in her right, the Dukedomes of Cleve, Gulick, and Berg, the Earldomes of Marck, and Ravenſpurg, and the ſeigneury of Ravenſtein; which he poſſeſſed a while, divided with his couſin Volfgangus Palatine of Newberg, ſon of Magdalen the younger ſiſter of Mary Eleanor. But falling out about their partage, the Palatine of Newberg called in the Spaniard; and this Marqueſſe the Confederate States of the Netherlands; who have hitherto ſhared the moſt part betwixt them. After the death of Bugeſlaus the laſt Duke of Pomerania, he was to have ſucceeded alſo in that eſtate, then poſſeſſed by the Swedes. Of the agreement made between them, and the great accrewment thereby following to the houſe of Brandenburg, we ſhall ſpeak more there.

The Religion of this Country, is for the moſt part according to the form and doctrine of Luther: firſt introduced and authoriſed by Marqueſſe Joachim the firſt. In which eſtate it continued till the breach betwixt the preſent Elector, and the Palatine of Newberg. At which time the Palatine having married a daughter of Bavaria, the moſt potent Prince of the Popiſh party, reconciled himſelf to the Church of Rome, the better to aſſure himſelf of the aid of Spain: and this Elector having married a ſiſter of Frederick the fift, Elector Palatine, the moſt potent Prince of the Calviniants, declared himſelf to be of that party and opinion, the better to aſſure himſelf of the aids of Holland, anno 1614. But when, on the perſwaſions of his wife, he ſet out an edict for ſuppreſſing the Lutheran formes, and authoriſing the Calvinian onely throughout his dominions, (which was the yeer 1615) the people of this Marquiſate roſe in Armes againſt him: the difference being thus compoſed, that the Lutheran formes onely ſhould be uſed in the Churches of Brandenburg, for the contentation of the people: and the Marqueſſe have the exerciſe of his new Religion, for himſelf, his Lady, and thoſe of their opinion, in his private Chappells.

The Territories of this Family, are the greateſt as before is ſaid, of any in Germany; but a great part of it is very barren, and his ſubjects in thoſe parts as poor as the Country: much of his new acceſſions yeilding little but the titles onely. So that neither in Revenue or Power he is able to keep rank with the Duke of Saxony: his ordinary Revenue hardly amounting at the utmoſt to 200000l. per annum, which is but half of the receipts of the Duke of Saxony.

The Armes hereof are Argent, an Eagle Gules, membred and beaked Or.

Pomerania.

15 POMERANIA.

POMERANIA is bounded on the East with Prussia, from which parted by the River Wesel or Vistula; on the west with Mecklenburg, divided from it by the River Bartze; on the North with the Baltick Sea, extended on the Coast hereof for the space of 200 English miles, and on the South with the Marquisate of Brandenbourg, so named from the Pomortzi, or Pomerani, a nation of the Sclaves, to whose share it fell; or from the situation of it on the Sea shore, as the word in the Sclavonian doth seeme to import.

The Country is for the most part plain, abundantly fruitfull in Corn, carried hence to Dantzig, and transported thence to all parts of Christendome, in their times of scarcity, yeilding also good store of pasturage, and great heards of Cattell; with plenty of butter, cheese, honey, and some reasonable quantities of flax. Populous, and those people of strong constitution, as living under a sharp, and piercing air. The whole divided into the Continent, and the Ilands; the Continent into the Upper Pomeren, bordering upon Mecklenburg, extended from the Bartze, to the River Odera; the Lower reaching from the Odera, to the borders of Prussia.

Chief places in the UPPER, are 1 Barth, at the mouth of the River Bartze, taking name from thence, a well traded town, and many times the seat of the Dukes of this hithermost Pomeren. 2 Wolgast, upon the Baltick sea, over against the Isle of Vsedom, the chief of this part of Pomeren, from whence the Dukes hereof are called the Dukes of Pomeren-Wolgast: the first town taken in by Gustavus Adolphus King of Sweden, in his famous war for relief of Germany, anno 1630. 3 Straelsund, a town of great trading, and much resort, seated upon the same sea also, opposite to the Isle of Rugen; a town of great name in the course of the German Warres. 4 Grisphwald, on the same sea, betwixt Wolgast and Straelsund, made an Universitty, anno 1456. 5 Anclaw, upon the River Pone. 6 Tribsca, situate on a lake out of which the said River hath its course.

Then in the LOWER Pomeren, there is Camin, an Episcopall See, situate on the Baltick shore, over against the Isle of Wollin. 8 Colberg, a strong town on the same shore also, at the fall of the Persant into the Sea. 9 Costin, the last Sea-town of this tract, lying towards Prussia. 10 Stargard, on the Ina, more within the land; as is also 11 Griffenberg upon the Rega; and 12 Stetin, on the Odera, once a poor fisher-town, now the Metropolis of this part of the Country, rising to this greatnesse (after the embracing of Christianity) by the fall of Wineta, formerly the chief Mart-town of all these parts. The ordinary seat of the Dukes of the Lower Pomerania, the Dukes of Pomeren of Stetin, as for distinction sake they are used to call them.

The Ilands hereunto pertaining, are those of Rugen, Wallin, Vsidom, touched upon before; but now more punctually to be handled. That of most note is RUGEN, over against Straelsund, from which divided onely by a narrow street. In length seven Dutch miles, and as much in breadth; so that the compasse of it, if it were exactly round, would amount to 20 German, or an hundred Italian miles: and yet once bigger then it is, but in the year 1309, by the force of an outrageous tempest, a great part of it lying towards the South-east, as far as to the Ile of Buden (then conjunct hereto) was torne away, and sunk so deep into the bottome of the Sea, that now the greatest ships that be sail over it. The Iland plentifull of Corn, the Granary of Straelsund, as they call it commonly; and reasonably well stored with Cattell: full of Bayes, Creeks, and winding shores, with many and vast Promentories thrusting into the Sea; which gives them great increase of fishing. Antiently it belonged to the Crown of Denmark, till given by Waldemar the third to Bugislaus and Barnimus, Dukes of Pomeren; continuing ever since part of that estate. The chief town of it is called Berga, situate in the midst of the Iland, but not containing above 400 Families; others of lesse note and estimation, being 2 Sugart, 3 Vick, 4 Bingst, &c. small towns compared with Villages upon the Continent, but the best they have. And yet so populous is the Iland, that they are able to arme 7000 good fighting men, if there be occasion.

The second of the three, in repute and bignesse is that of Wollin, situate over against Camin, so called from Wollin the chief town (Julinum it is called in Latine) made an Episcopall See by Wartislaus, the first Christian Prince of this nation, upon the sackage of this City he removed to Camin. A town which once so flourished in Traffick, that it gave place to none but Constantinople; the Russians, Danes, Saxons, Vandals, &c. having here their particular streets. But being miserably sacked by Waldemar, King of Denemark, anno 1170. most of the trade hereof was removed to Lubeck, since which time it never could come neer its former glories. The last in reputation is that of USEDOM, seated betwixt both, not far from Wolgast; so called from Usedom, the chief town in it, of which little observable. All three the habitation of the antient Rugii, who under Odoacer, King of the Heruli, subverted the Western Empire, conquered Italy, and made themselves masters of it, till subdued by the Gothes. Those which remained in these Ilands became after subject to the Sclaves, and had once Kings of their own: the first whose name occurs in story, being Crito, the son of Ratze, a puissant Prince, extending his Dominions into Holst, Ditmarsh, and the City of Lubeck, which he built; about the year 1100, afterwards beautified and inlarged by Adolph the second Earl of Holst; by some esteemed the Founder of it. But his issue male failing in the yeer 1326, it fell by compact made between them, to the Dukes of Pomeren, to whom these Islands ever since have continued subject.

And

And as for Pomeren it ſelf the old Inhabitants thereof were part of the Rugii before mentioned, the Reudigni, Longi-nani, and Longi-Diduni, with parts of the Heruli and Burgundians: into whoſe void roomes the Pomortzi and other Tribes of the Winithi, (the moſt potent Nation of the Sclaves) did in fine ſucceed; extending their Dominion to the bankes of the Viſtula, which to difference it from Pomeren, was called Pomerella. But that part of it being given by Meſtovinus the laſt Prince thereof dying without iſſue, anno 1295. to Primiſlaus Duke of Poland: the name and power of the Princes or Dukes of Pomerania, became confined within the bounds before laid downe. The firſt Prince of it whom we meet with on good record, was one Barnimus, of the noble Gryphonian family, anno 933. whoſe Grandſon Suantiborus, commanded over all this tract. But his Dominions being parted betwixt his ſonnes, Bugiſlaus who had Pomerella, retained the language and old cuſtoms of the Sclavonians, Wartiſlaus, who poſſeſſed the reſidue, conformed himſelf to the Laws and Language of the Saxons; the Countrey by that means accounted for a part of Germany: added unto the Empire and accompt thereof in the time of Frederick Barbaroſſa, by whom Bugiſlaus and Caſimir, ſonnes of Wartiſlaus were made Princes of the Empire, and Dukes of Pomeren. The Eſtate being afterwards divided betwixt Bugiſlaus and Otho, ſonnes of Barnimus the firſt, and the houſe of Otho failing in the perſon of Otho the third; that part hereof was given by the Emperour Frederick the third, to Frederick the ſecond, Marqueſſe and Electour of Brandenburg: the cauſe of much contention amongſt theſe Marqueſſes and the other houſe of the Dukes of Pomeren; but thus agreed upon at laſt, that both Princes ſhould continue the Armes and title, the poſſeſſion of it to be yeelded to the Duke of Pomeren, on the failing of whoſe iſſue male, it ſhould deſcend upon the heirs of the houſe of Brandenburg. The ſucceſſion of theſe Princes followeth in this order. Pomerania.

The DVKES of POMERANIA.

1 Wartiſlaus the firſt Chriſtian Prince of the Pomeranians, baptized by Otho Biſhop of Bamberg, anno 1124.

1118 2 Bugiſlaus ſonne of Wartiſlaus created by Frederick Barbaroſſa, the firſt Duke of Pomeren.

1188 3 Bugiſlaus II. ſonne of Bugiſlaus, planted the void parts of Pomeren with Saxon Colonies.

1282 4 Barnimus ſonne of Bogeſlaus the ſecond, after whoſe death Pomeren was divided into two Principalities.

DUKES of Wolgaſt.

1277 5 Bugiſlaus II. ſonne of Barnimus.
1319 6 VVartiſlaus ſonne to Bugiſlaus.
1326 7 Barnimus II.
1365 8 VVartiſlaus II.
1394 9 Barnimus III.
1405 10 VVartiſlaus III.
1456 11 Ericus ſonne of VVartiſlaus.

DUKES of Stetin.

1277 1 Otho Duke of Pomeren Stetin.
1345 2 Caſimir ſonne of Otho.
1368 3 Caſimir II. ſonne of Caſimir.
1374 4 Suartiborus brother of Caſimir.
1413 5 Caſimir III. ſonne of Suantiborus,
1433 6 Joachim ſonne of Caſimir.
1451 7 Otho III. ſon of Joachim, dyed without iſſue, anno 1464.

12 Bugiſlaus III. commonly called the tenth, the younger Princes of both houſes making up the tale, ſucceeded Otho the third in that part of Pomeren, uniting ſo the whole into one eſtate.

1523 13 George ſonne of Bugiſlaus the tenth.

1531 14 Philip ſonne of George, in whoſe time the Reformation made by Luther was admitted into Pomerania.

1583 15 Bugiſlaus IV. but the 13. in the Dutch accompt, ſonne of Philip his younger brother, Erneſtus Ludovicus having that of Stetin for his ſhare.

16 Bugiſlaus V. and 14 ſonne of Bugiſlaus the fourth born in the year 1580. ſucceeded in Pomeren of VVolgaſt, as Philip Julius ſon of Erneſtus Ludovicus did in that of Stetin. After whoſe death Bogiſlaus became Lord of all Pomerania, in a fair way to have loſt all to the prevailing Imperialiſts, had not the timely coming in of the King of Sweden ſtopped their violent Progreſſe. But Bogiſlaus dying without iſſue in the time of the war, and in him the male iſſue of the houſe of Bugiſlaus the tenth being quite extinguiſhed George VVilliam Marqueſſe and Electour of Brandenbourg put in his claime for the Eſtate, according to the compact and agreement ſpoken of before. Betwixt whom and the Swedes (who under colour of aiding the laſt Duke had poſſeſſed themſelves of all the ſtrong places in the Countrey) it was accorded and concluded at the Treaty of Munſter that all the Higher Pomerania, with the Iſles of Rugen and VVollin, and the town of Stetin, ſhould from thencefourth belong to the Crown of Sweden, the Lower Pomeren to be enjoyed by the houſe of Brandenbourg, ſo long as the male iſſue laſteth; on default whereof that alſo to be added unto that Crown; the Armes and Titles to be uſed by both promiſcuouſly. And in regard the Marqueſſe of Brandenbourg was to part with the Upper Pomeren for the contentation of the Swedes, (without which no firm peace could be made in Germany) it was alſo there agreed upon, that the temporall eſtates of the Biſhopricks of Halberſtade, Minden, and Camine, together with that of Magdeburg (after the deceaſe of the preſent Biſhop) ſhould be for ever added to the poſſeſſions of that houſe; the Marqueſſes and Electors of it to bee thenceforth entituled Dukes of Magdeburg, Princes of Halberſtad and Minden. But what will be the iſſue of theſe concluſions futures time muſt ſhew.

The Armes of Pomeran, are A Gryphon.

The Dukedome of MECKLENBVRG, is bounded on the Eaſt with Pomerania, on the Weſt with Holſtein, a Province of the Kingdome of Denemark; on the North with the Baltick Sea, and on the South with Brandenbourg, and Saxen-lawenburg. So called from Mecklenburg, or Megalopolis, (both names in ſeverall languages of the Dutch and Greeks ſignifying a great City) a great town of that name here being in the time of the Heruli and the Vandals (the old Inhabitants of theſe parts) whoſe chief City it was, but on their leaving of this Countrey, decayed to nothing. The Countrey of the ſame nature as Pomerania, and was rich in corn.

Places of moſt importance in it are 1 VViſmar, a noted Port on a Creek or Bay of the Baltick Sea; raiſed out of the ruines of old Mecklenburg before mentioned, about the year 1240. the Haven hereof capable of the greateſt veſſels, to which it gives a ſafe and aſſured Station, whence the name of VViſmar; the word ſignifying in the Sclavonian language idem ac certum mare (as my Author hath it) as much as a quiet or ſafe Sea. Now one of the Hanſe Towns, and being it lies conveniently for the uſe of the Swedes, alloted to that Crown by the treaty of Munſter, the Duke of Mecklenburg being in recompenſe thereof to have the temporaries of the Biſhopricks of Swerin, and Ratzenburg. 2 Swerin, ſeated upon the South ſide of the Lake ſo named, an Epiſcopall See, and honoured with giving the title of a Baronie to the Dukes of Mecklenburg. 3 Malcaw, firſt walled by Niclot, Prince of the Vandals, anno 1270. 4 Ratzenburg, an Epiſcopall See, ſpoken of before. 5 Roſtoch, the next in reputation of all the Hanſe towns, to Lubeck and Dantſick. Large, rich, and much frequented by all ſorts of Merchants, in compaſſe almoſt ſix Engliſh miles, ſituate on the River VVarn neer the fall thereof into the Baltick. Honoured with an Univerſity here founded by John Duke of Mecklenburg, an. 1419. the firſt Profeſſors in it being brought from Erdford in Saxony. 6 Stargard, which once gave the title of Duke to the younger Princes of this houſe. 7 Sarentine, memorable for a Nunnery there founded by Duke Magnus the ſecond. 8 Lau, built and fortified by Duke Henry the ſecond, as an out-work to Roſtock, which he had lately bought of Chriſtopher then King of Denmark. 9 Sternberg, of which little memorable. 10 Fridland, on the edge of Pomeren not far from Stargard, which gave the title of Duke to Albert of Wallenſtein, after that called Duke of Fridland, that eminent and proſperous Commander of the Imperiall Forces, in the late war of Germany: but miſerably murdered after all his ſerviees by command of the Emperour. 11 Fitebtell, both pleaſantly and ſtrongly ſeated on the edge of a Lake. 12 Damin, a ſtrong Town on the Marches of Brandenburg.

The antient Inhabitants of this Country were the Vandals, with the reſt of the Heruli, and Burgundians. But the Burgundians being reckoned as a part of the Vandals were not much took notice of (till their irruptions on the borders of the Roman Empire made them more conſiderable) the Princes of theſe Nations uſing no other title then Kings of the Heruli and Vandals. Of theſe the firſt is ſaid to be one Anthyrius ſonne of an Amazonian Lady, who learned his firſt rudiments of warfare under Alexander the Great. Out of his loins deſcended a long race of Kings, amongſt whom Rhadaguiſe, who together with Alarick the Goth, invaded Italy, (I know not by what warrant) is accounted one. Gunderick the ſeventeenth of theſe Kings, weary of ſo cold a dwelling, paſſed towards the South, and having haraſſed Gaul and Spain, ſhipped himſelf over the Straits of Gibralter, and erected the Kingdome of the Vandals in Africk; whoſe ſucceſſors we ſhall meet with there. By Vitalaus the youngeſt ſonne of Genſericus the ſonne of Gunderick, the line of theſe Princes is continued, who after mingling with the Obotriti, and other of the Sclaves, ſucceeding into the void places of the Vandals, left off the title of Kings of the Vandals, and called themſelves Kings of the Heruli and Obotriti: continuing it to Pribiſlaus or Primiſlaus the ſecond, who wrote himſelf Pribiſlaus Dei gratia Herulorum, Wagriorum, Circipanorum, Palumborum, Obotritorum, Kiſſinorum, Vandalorumque Rex. Making herein a generall muſter of thoſe tribes of the Sclaves and Heruli, which remained under his command. But he being vanquiſhed by Henry ſurnamed the Lyon, Duke of Saxony and Bavaria, the title of King was laid aſide; his ſucceſſours contenting themſelves with that of Princes. Divided betwixt Henry and Niclot, the Nephews of Pribiſlaus by his ſonne Henry into two Eſtates, Henry aſſuming to himſelfe the title of Prince of the Obotriti, and Niclot, that of Prince of the Vandals. But the poſterity of Niclot failing in VVilliam the laſt of that line, anno 1430. his title with the lands thereunto belonging, fel to Henry the fat, the fourth Duke of Mecklenbourg, to which honour Albert and John the ſonnes of Henry the fourth, descended from the elder house, had beene advanced by the Emperour Charles the fourth at Prague, Anno 1348. The succession of which family from Pribislaus take in order thus. Mecklenb.

The PRINCES of the HERVLI, and DUKES of MECKLENBVRG.

1158	1	Pribislaus the last King, and first Prince of the Heruli, after their subjection to the Saxons; restored to this title and his former estate by the bountifull conquerrers, to be held under the right and homage of the house of Saxony.
1179	2	Henry sonne of Pribislaus, baptized with all his people in his fathers life time, by the perswasion of Henry Duke of Saxony and Bavaria; by whom restored to their Estates.
	3	Henry II. sonne of the former Henry; dividing the estate with his brother Niclot.
1228	4	John surnamed the Divine, so called because created Doctor of Divinity in the University of Paris, whither he was sent by his Father to learn good Arts.
1260	5	Henry III. surnamed of Hierusalem, because of his expedition thither against the Saracens.
1302	6	Henry IV. surnamed the Lyon, for his valour and undaunted constancie.
1319	7	Albert and John the sonnes of Henry going to Prague with a Princely train, to attend on the Emperour Charles the fourth, were by him created Princes of the Empire, and Dukes of Mecklenberg, anno 1348.
1380	8	Magnus sonne of Albert.
1384	9	John sonne of Magnus, the founder of the University of Rostock, anno 1419.
1423	10	Henry V. surnamed the Fat, who on the death of William the last Prince of the Vandals, succeeded into his Estate.
1447	11	Magnus II. sonne of Henry, founder of the Cathedrall Church of Rostock.
1503	12	Albert II. sonne of Magnus the second.
1547	13	John-Albert sonne of Albert the second, endowed the University of Rostock with the lands of some dissolved Monasteries and authorised in his Estates, the Reformation of Religion begun by Luther.
1578	14	John III. sonne of John-Albert.
1592	15	Adolph-Frederick, and John-Albert, sonnes of John the third, dispossessed hereof by the Emperour Fernand the second, anno 1528. their Estates with the title of Duke of Mecklenberg, being conferred on Albert of Wallenstein Duke of Fridland. Who had not long enjoyed the Title, when Gustavus Adolphus King of Sweden, the Asserter of the liberties of Germany, restored it to the proper owners. The heirs to whose Estates is Gustavus Adolphus, the onely sonne and heir of John-Albert, the other of these two being without issue.

17. The DUKEDOME of SAXONIE.

The Dukedome of SAXONIE reckoning in the Estates and Provinces united to it, and now in possession of those Dukes, is bounded on the East with a part of Bohemia, Lusatia, and some part of Brandenbourg, on the West with Hassia, on the North with the Dukedome of Brunswick, and on the South with Franconia, and some parts of Bohemia. So called because the Patrimony and possession of the Dukes of Saxonie, who since the proscription and deprivation of Duke Henry surnamed the Lyon, anno 1180. in some or other of these Countries have had their fixed seat and habitation. It containeth the distinct Provinces of 1 Turingia, 2 Misnia, 3 Voiteland, and 4 Saxony properly and specially so called.

1 TVRINGIA, is bounded on the East with Misnia, and a part of the River Saltza; on the West with Hassia; on the North with the Wood Hartz, and Saxony specially so called; on the South with the mountainous Forrest of Duringer-Wald, by which parted from Frankenland. So called from the Turingians, the antient Inhabitants hereof, communicating their name to the place they dwelt in.

The Countrey environed round about with woody mountaines, but within those mountains plain and pleasant, fruitfull in Corn, and very plentifull of Woods, which yeelds great profit to the people; not without some Mines of Gold and Silver, and rich pits of Salt: able to furnish out a feast, but for wine onely, which is the greatest want hereof. The whole length of it is not above 120 miles, and the breadth not more. Yet is so populous and well planted, that there are said to be in it 12 Earldomes, and as many Abbies, 144 Cities, and as many market Towns, 150 Castles, and 2000 Villages.

The principall of these are 1. Jene, on the River Saltza, bordering upon Misnia, an University chiefly of Physitians, founded in the year 1555. by the sonnes of John-Frederick the Elector, taken prisoner and deprived by Charles the fift. 2 Erdford on the River Gers, out of which are cut so many Misnia. Channels, that every ſtreet hath almoſt the benefit of it. A rich, populous, and well built City, accounted amongſt the beſt of Germany; and made an Univerſity in the time of the Emperour Wenceſlaus, anno 1392. Many times burnt, but ſtill reviving like the Phœnix out of the aſhes into greater glory. At firſt immediately ſubject to the Archbiſhop and Electour of Mentz, but having freed themſelves from him, they have ſince governed themſelves as a free Eſtate, and one of the Hanſetowns; not ſubject to the Duke of Saxony as their Lord, but their Patron and good neighbour onely. 3. Mulhuiſen, and 4 Noorthuiſen, two Imperiall Cities, but not elſe obſervable. 5 Smalcald, famous for the league here made, anno 1530. between all the Princes and Cities, which maintained the doctrine of Luther: into which firſt entred John Frederick the Duke of Saxon, and his ſonne; Erneſt, and Francis, Dukes of Luneburg; Philip the Lantgrave, George Marqueſſe of Brandenbourg, the Cities of Straſburg, Nurenberg, Heilbrune, Kuteling, Ulmes, Lindaw, Conſtance, Mening, and Campedune. Afterward anno 1535. there entred into it Barnimus, and Philip, Princes of Pomeren, Ulrick Duke of Wirtenberg, Robert Prince of Bipont, William Earl of Naſſaw, George, and Joachim, Earls of Anhalt; the Cities of Franckford, Hamborough, Auſpurg, Hannolder; and not long after the Palſgrave, and the King of Denemark. By which famous confederacy, Luther not onely kept his head on his ſhoulders; but the Religion by him reformed, grew to that ſtrength, that no force or policy could ever root it up. 2 Kole or Hale, where Philip the Lantgrave was treacherouſly taken priſoner, as you ſhall hear anon. 3 Wiemar, a town which together with the Caſtle of Gotha, were aſſigned for the eſtate and maintenance of that religious, though unfortunate Prince, John Frederick Duke of Saxony, after this diſcomfiture and impriſonment by Charles the fift: The ordinary ſeat of the Dukes of Saxon-Weimar, who live here in a ſtately and magnificent Caſtle made of poliſhed ſtone: moſt artificially contrived, and beautified with Orchards, Gardens, and other pleaſures, but made more pleaſant by the watering of the River Ilma, upon which it ſtandeth. 6 Gotha, upon the River Lonn, ſaid by Rithaimerus to bee built by the Gothes, and by them thus named. A place not long ſince of great importance, and fortified with a very ſtrong Caſtle called Grimmenſten, which being made the retiring place of one Grunbachius, and other ſeditious perſons under the protection of John Frederick one of the ſonnes of the deprived Elector; was taken after a long ſiege by Auguſtus the Elector of Saxony, (to whom the ſtrength of this peece being in the hands of the injured family, was a very great eye-ſore) and by command of the Eſtates of the Empire in the Diet at Regensberg, anno 1567. demoliſhed and levelled with the ground.

The old Inhabitants hereof were the Chaſnari of Tacitus, and after them the Turingi, who with the Heruli, under the conduct of Odoacer conquered Italy; called by ſome Turcilingi, by others ſuppoſed to be the Tyrangetæ of Ptolemie. Not heard of in this Countrey till the reign of Childerick the fourth King of the French; then taking up the whole Provinces of Haſſia and Turingia under one Biſſinus their King. Their Armes at that time, and long after, Azure, a Lion Barrie Argent and Gules, armed and Crowned Or. Being overtome at the great battell of Zulph neere Colen, where they joined with the Almans they became ſubject to the French; afterwards added to the Empire by Henry the firſt. William the ſonne of the Emperour Otho the firſt, being Archbiſhop of Mentz, by the permiſſion of his Father held the City of Erdford and all the reſt of Turingia, which hee left unto his ſucceſſours in that See: governed by their Vidames, and Provinciall Officers till the time of Conradus Salicus, when Ludovicus Barbatus one of theſe Vidames, (or Vicedomini) made himſelfe the Proprietarie of it, and left the ſame unto his children after his deceaſe. But in the time of Conrade the ſecond, the iſſue of this Ludovicus either failing or diſpoſſeſſed, it was by that Emperour conferred upon Lewis of Orleans, ſonne to a ſiſter of his Empereſſe: the title of Lantgrave being given to them of this family, for their greater honour. Under eight Princes of this line, whereof five ſucceſſively had the name of Lewis, this Eſtate continued next, falling to Herman a brother of the fift Lewis, then to a ſixt Lewis, and laſt of all to Henry the brother of that Lewis, whom the male iſſue failed: having continued for the ſpace of 252 years. To pleaſe all parties intereſſed in the ſucceſſion, the Eſtate before entire was divided into two parts or Provinces. Of which this now called Duringen or Turingia was alloted to Henry Marqueſſe of Miſnia, ſonne of Judith the daughter of Herman: the Weſtern part hereof, with the title of the Lantgravedome of Heſſen, adjudged to Henry Duke of Brabant in right of Sophia his wife daughter of Lewis the ſixth. In the deſcription of which Countries we ſhall hear more of them.

2 MISNIA or Meiſſen is bounded on the Eaſt with Luſatia, on the Weſt with Duringen, on the North with Saxonie, ſpecially ſo called, and ſome part of Brandenburg; on the South with Voitland and ſome part of Bohemia. The Countrey once overſpread with woods and full of bogs, rendring the air unwholeſome, and the ſoyl unprofitable: both rectified by the care and induſtry of the people; now yeelding ſome mines of ſilver, and great plenty both of corn and paſturage: well watered with the Rivers Sala, Pliſſes, Elſter, and Muſda.

Places of moſt obſervation in it, are 1 Dreſden, ſeated on the Albis, having continually on her wals and Bulwarkes, 150 Pieces of Ordinance; a ſtable of the Dukes, in which are 128 horſes of ſervice; and a Magazin, out of which 30000 Horſe and Foot, may be armed at a dayes warning.

The Town it ſelf ſituate on both ſides of the River, by which divided into the old Towne and the new, joined into one by a bridge of 800 paces in length: the Countrey round about it very rich and pleaſant; able to ſuſtain great multitudes, for that cauſe made the ordinary ſeat of the Dukes of Saxony, who have here a ſtrong and ſtately Caſtle. 2 Naumburg, 3 Mersburg, two Epiſcopall Sees.

4 Lipſique,

4 Lipſique, as famous an Univerſity for Philoſophers, as Jene is for Phyſitians. It ſeemeth the Scholars and Citizens will not ſuffer their Beer to periſh, of which here is ſo much drunk and exported, that the very cuſtome of it due unto the Duke, amounts to 20000 pounds yearly; yet is this town of no more then two Churches; but wealthy, populous, and built for the moſt part of fair free ſtone; honoured with the Courts of Juſtice for all the Countrey. Though ſeated on the meeting of Pleiſs, Parde, Elſter, three Rivers, which lie almoſt on all ſides of it; yet it is not ſtrong: having been thrice taken by the Imperialiſts in leſſe then two yeares, during the late German wars. Sufficiently famous (if for nothing elſe) for the great battell fought neere it betwixt the late King of Sweden and the Count of Tilly: the honour whereof falling to the Swedes and Saxons (with the death of 15000 of both ſides, and all the loſſe of all the baggage, Armes and Ammunition of the Imperialls) freed all theſe parts of Germany from that civill and ſpirituall bondage, which was intended by the Emperour to be put upon them. 5 Mulsberg on the Elb, where John Frederick the Electour, was diſcomfited by Charles the fift. 6 Meiſſen, on the weſt ſide of the ſame River in a hilly and uneven ground, built by the Emperour Henry the firſt for defence of the Empire againſt the Sclaves: a Biſhops See, and the firſt ſeat of the Marqueſſes of the Countrey; both which together with the Burgrave of the Town had their Palaces or Manſion-houſes ſtanding cloſe together on the top of an hill, overlooking both the Town and Countrey. From this Town the whole Province had the name of Meiſſen. 7 Friberg, neere the Mountaines of Bohemia, rich in mines of Silver. 8 Roclite, not far from which are rich Mines of tinne, diſcovered firſt in theſe parts by a Corniſh-man ſpoken of before.

The firſt Inhabitants hereof were the Hermanduri and Suardones, ſubdued or outed by the Sorabi, a great Tribe of the Sclaves ſurnamed Winithi: firſt conquered by the Emperour Henry the firſt, who built the ſtrong Town of Meiſſen to keep them under, and to impede the neighbouring Sclaves from any incroachments on the Empire. Being thus added to the Empire and account of Germany, it was a while governed by ſuch Officers as by the Emperours were appointed to guard theſe Marches: the firſt Proprietarie Marqueſſe being one Echard, ſonne of the Earl of Ooſtland, (deſcended from a younger ſonne of Witikind, the laſt King of the Saxons) by the munificence of Otho the third, not made hereditary till the time of Henry the fift, who gave it in Fee to Conrade, Marqueſſe of Landſberg and Luſatia: whoſe Nephew Theodorick, by his ſonne Otho ſurnamed the Rich, marryed Judith daughter of Herman Lantgrave of Duringen, by which match Duringen accrewed to the houſe of Meiſſen, Henry their ſonne ſucceeding in both Eſtates. To this Henry ſucceeded Albert his ſonne, and after him ſucceſſively foure Fredericks, the laſt whereof by the Emperour Sigiſmund was created Electour and Duke of Saxony, in whoſe poſterity theſe honours and Eſtates doe as yet continue.

VOITELAND is bounded on the Eaſt with Bohemia, on the Weſt with Frankenland; on the North with Miſnia or Meiſſen, on the South with the Upper Palatinate. So called, as ſome, from the Inites or Vites (ſome of that people who together with the Saxons and Angles, conquered Britaine) of whom it had the name of Viteland, that is to ſay, the land or Countrey of the Vites. But being I finde not that the Saxons did ſpread ſo far Eaſtward, I rather think that this name was given it by the Sclaves, who finding it deſerted, or but thinly peopled at their coming thither, might call it by the name of Voidland; from which the Alteration unto Voitland is both plaine and obvious. It is the ſmalleſt Province of all Germany, and never of ſuch repute as to have any particular Prince as moſt others had, but alwayes reckoned as an acceſſory to ſome greater Eſtate. Nor hath it any Town or Cities, of great eſtimation: the chief of thoſe which are, being 1 Olnitz, 2 Werda, 3 Cornab, 4 Schneberg, neer the mountaines called Studetæ by Ptolemie, famed for ſilver mines. 5 Gotzberg, 6 Culmbach, 7 Hoffe, not much remarkable but onely for the Princes of it of the houſe of Brandenburg, called formerly Curia Pegniana.

The antient Inhabitants hereof were parts of the Nertereates and Danduti, ſucceeded to by the French and Sclaves, as they ſeverally deſcended ſouthwards into warmer Countries. Poſſeſſed and planted by the Sclaves it obtained this name. But being a ſmall Nation, and a ſmall Eſtate, it never had the honour of a particular Prince; but did moſt probably belong to the Lords of Meiſſen, upon which it bordereth, and now in their right to the Dukes of Saxony. But ſo that the Duke of Saxony is not the ſole Lord hereof: the Marqueſſes of Anſbach of the houſe of Brandenbourg, poſſeſſing the towns of Hoffe and Colmbach, and ſome other parts of it; the Patrimony at the preſent of Chriſtian, ſonne of Joachim Erneſt the late Marqueſſe of Anſbach, who now enjoyeth them with the title of the Marqueſſe of Colmbach.

SAXONIE ſpecially ſo called, and ſometime for diſtinction ſake OBER SACHSEN, or the Upper Saxonie, is bounded on the Eaſt with the Marquiſate of Brandenbourg; on the Weſt with Haſſia; on the North with the Dukedome of Brunſwick; on the South with Miſnia. The air hereof ſomewhat ſharp, but healthy: the ſoil in the Southweſt parts hilly and uneven, chiefly rich in Minerals; elſewhere ſufficiently fruitfull. Divided into four Eſtates, that is to ſay, the Earldome of 1 Mansfield, 2 the Principate of Anhalt, 3 Biſhoprick of Magdeburg, and 4 Saxonie it ſelfe: this laſt onely ſubject immediately to the Duke; the reſt acknowledging his ſuperiority, have their proper Lords.

1 Moſt Weſtwards towards Duringen and Haſſia, lyeth the Earldome of MANSFEILD, ſo called from Mansfeild, once the the chief Town of it on the River Wieper. The other towns of note in it are 2 Iſleben, betwixt the Rivers Sala and Wieper, ſuppoſed to be ſo called from the Goddeſſe

Iſis

Saxonie. Iſis, who after the death of her husband (as is ſaid by Tacitus) viſited theſe parts: now the Metropolis of the Earldome, and the ſeat of Juſtice for the whole, ſetled here by Earl Voldradus, anno 1448. famous to all poſterity for the birth and death of Martin Luther, born here in the yeer 1483. and here deceaſing in the houſe of the Earl of Mansfield, anno 1546. Of whom, and the ſucceſſe of his Reformation, as we have ſpoken much already, ſo we ſhall ſpeak more, as occaſion is, in the courſe of this work. 3 Wieper, (or Wypra) ſo called of the River on which it ſtandeth. 4 Quernfurt, 5 Retenburg, 6 Alſtad, 7 Helderung, bought of the Earls of Houſtein. Some who delineate the Pedegree of theſe Earls of Mansfield, fetch it as high as from one of King Arthurs Knights of the Round Table, born at Mansfield in Nottinghamſhire; who ſetling himſelf in Germany, gave that name to his houſe: a Military Originall, and very ſuitable to ſuch an active and warlike Family. But thoſe which doe not ſoar ſo high fetch them no further then from Burchard the fift, Earl of Quernfort, and Burgrave of Magdeburg, who following Frederick Barbaroſſa into the Holy Land deceaſed at Antioch, anno 1189. His Nephew Burchard, by a ſonne of the ſame name, was the firſt of this Family that had the title of Earl of Mansfield, about the yeer 1250. continued ever ſince unto his Poſterity (but under ſome acknowledgments to the Electors of Saxony.) Of theſe the moſt eminent, were Voldradus, one of the Councell of Eſtate to the Emperour Sigiſmund, anno 1411. a great improver of the Patrimony of the Earls hereof; 2 John-George, Lord Deputy or Lieutenant of Saxony under Duke Auguſtus. 3 Peter-Erneſt, Governour of Luxembourg under Charles the fift, and Philip the ſecond, by whom much exerciſed and employed in their wars with France. 4 Albert, a conſtant friend of Luthers, and a faithfull follower of John-Frederick the deprived Electour, in whoſe quarrell being outed of his eſtate, he retired to Magdeberg, which he moſt gallantly defended againſt the Emperour. And 5 Erneſtus, Nephew of that Albert by his ſon John, ſo famous for the war which he maintained in moſt parts of Germany againſt Ferdinand the ſecond, in behalf of Frederick Prince Elector Palatine, and the States of Bohemia, with ſo great conſtancy and courage.

Eaſt of the Earldome of Mansfield lyeth the Principate of ANHALT, much ſhaded, if not too much overgrown with woods; parts of the old Hercinian forreſt, whence it had the name; Hol in Dutch, ſignifying a wood or forreſt; and the Princes of this houſe created to this dignity by the ſtile of Principes Harciniæ in Anhalt: Chief townes of it are, 1 Bernberg, the Dynaſtie and uſuall title of this houſe, before they were created Princes of Anhalt. 2 Ballenſtede, part of the antient Patrimony of the firſt Princes hereof. 3 Deſſaw, the birth-place of ſome, and the buriall-place of others of this Family, beautified with a ſtrong Caſtle built by Prince Albert the ſecond, anno 1341. 4 Serveſt, the uſuall place of the Princes reſidence. 5 Coeten, a well fortified place, in vain beſieged by the joynt forces of the Arch-biſhop of Magdeburg, and the Earl of Schwartzenwold.

We went as high as the Round Table for the Earls of Mansfield, but we muſt goe as high as the Ark for the Princes of Anhalt; ſome fetching them from Askenaz, the ſon of Gomer, and nephew of Japhet, from whom, and no other this Aſcanian Family (for by that name it is called) are to fetch their Pedegree. But to content our ſelves with more ſober thoughts, certain it is, that this Family is of the old Saxon race, ſetled in theſe parts by Theodorik, King of Mets, or Auſtraſia, who gave the Towns of Aſcandt and Ballenſtede, with the lands adjoyning, to one Bernwald, or Bernthobald, a noble Saxon, anno 524. From which town and Caſtle of Aſcandt, afterwards raſed to the ground by Pepin, King of the French, anno 747. moſt probable it is that they took their name. From this Bernwald, or Bernthobald, by a long line of Princes, deſcended Albert the ſeventh of Anhalt, ſurnamed Urſus, created Marqueſſe of Brandenburg by the Emperour Frederick Barbaroſſa, anno 1152. the Father of that Barnard, who by the Munificence and bounty of the ſame Emperour was created Duke of Saxony, in the roome of Duke Henry, ſurnamed the Lion, anno 1180. becoming ſo the Stemme of the two greateſt Princes in all the Empire. Henry the ſecond, ſon of this Barnard, was by the ſame Emperour, not long after, made Prince of Anhalt, the firſt of all this ancient and illuſtrious Family which had been honoured with that title, continuing in his race to this very day; the two Electorates of Saxony and Brandenbourg, being mean while tranſlated unto other Families. The moſt conſiderable of which Princes, though all men of Eminence, were 1 Rodolph, Generall of the forces of the Emperour Maximilian the firſt againſt the Venetians, whom he twice overcame in battell. 2 George the Divine, a great Reformer of the Church by his diligent preaching; whoſe Sermons and other Tractates (learned for the times he lived in) are ſtill extant. 3 Chriſtian, born in the yeer 1568. Commander of the Forces of Frederick, Prince Elector Palatine, in the wars of Bohemia.

North of the Principality of Anhalt, lyeth the Biſhoprick of MAGDEBURG, ſo called of Magdeburg the chief City; by ſome called Meydburg, and Meydenburg; whence by a Greek name Parthenopolis, and Virginopolis, by a mungrell word made of Greek and Latine. A City ſeated on the Elb, divided into three parts, but all ſtrongly fortified; begirt with high walls, deep ditches, and almoſt unconquerable Bulwarks: yet very beautifull withall (before the laſt deſolation of it) of elegant buildings, fair ſtreets, and magnificent Temples: Built in the form of a Creſcent, by the Emperour Otho the firſt, the founder of it, who having tranſlated hither the Archiepiſcopall See, for the greater honour of the place, built the Cathedrall of Saint Maurice, where his wife lies buried, anno 948. teſtified by the inſcription to be daughter of Edmund, King of England. A town which hath long flouriſhed in a great deal of glory, and taſted of as much affliction as any other in Germany. For refuſing to receive the Interim, it was out-lawed by the Emperour Charles the fifth, and given to him that could firſt take it. It was firſt hereupon attempted by the Duke of Meglenberg; but he was in a Camisado taken Prisoner, his Army routed, his Nobles made captive, and 260 horse brought into the City. Next, it was besieged by Duke Maurice of Saxonie, who, on honourable termes, was after a long siege received into it, anno 1550. when it had stood on his own guard the space of three yeers. Which long opposition of one town, taught the German Princes what constancy could doe; it held up the coals of Rebellion in Germany, and indeed proved to be the fire which burned the Emperours Trophies. For here Duke Maurice coming acquainted with Baron Hedeck, hatched that confederacy, by which not long after this great Emperour was driven out of Germany. At last it yeilded to Duke Maurice, under the protection of whose successours it hath since enjoyed a long course of felicity, till the yeer 1631. in which most miserably burnt and sacked by the Earl of Tilly: of whom it is observed, that after that fact he never prospered, being shortly after totally routed at the battell of Leipsick, and wounded to the death not long after that, neer the River Leck. Other places of note in this Bishoprick, are, 2 Warnsted, beautified with a fair Castle, not far from Magdeburg, the ordinary seat, or retiring place of the Bishop. 3. Grabetz, upon the River Struma, 4 Mockern, on the same River. 5 Barleben, beneath Meydberg on the Elb. 6 Lunburg, betwixt the Elb and the Struma; not much observable.

The Archiepiscopall See being translated hither from Valersleve and Vrese, (places too obscure for so great a dignity) by Otho the first; and by him endowed with great Revenues, and a goodly territory round about it: the Arch-bishop hereof was also by his procurement made the Primate of Germany; acknowledged so by all but the Bishop of Saltzburg, and the three Spirituall Electors. For the Administration of Justice in matters Criminall and Civill, the said Otho did ordain an Officer whom they called the Burgrave, conferring that office first on Gero, Marquesse of Lusatia. Through many hands it came at last to Burchard, Lord of Querntort, and the Earls of Mansfield; many of which enjoyed this honour: setled at last by the Emperour Rodolphus of Habspurg, on the Dukes of Saxony, who by this means came to have great command and influence on the whole Estate. The Archbishops notwithstanding continued Lords of it, and the whole territory or district adjoyning to it, till the Reformation of Religion: when the Revenues separated from the jurisdiction were given to Lay Princes (for the most part of the house of Brandenbourg) with the title of Administrator. Finally, by the Pacification made at Munster, this fair estate is to be setled for ever on the Electors of that house to be possessed by them, and their Heires and Successours, by the title of the Dukes of Magdeburg; the better to content them for the concession which they made to the Crown of Sweden, of a great part of their right and title to the Dukedome of Pameren.

SAXONIE most specially so called, the fourth and last part of this Division, stretcheth it self along the Elb betwixt Magdeburg and Meissen; of the same nature, in regard both of soil and air, as is said before. Places of most importance in it, are 1 Torge, or Torgow, by some placed in Misnia, but by Mercator in this Province. Built on the west side of the Elb, in form Orbicular, and falling every way from the sides of a mountain, beautified with a stately and pleasant Castle, belonging to the Elector of Saxony, who is Lord hereof, built by John-Frederick the Elector, anno 1535. Near to the City, is a Lake of a mile in compasse; for which the Citizens pay yeerly to the Duke 500 Guldens. 2 Warlitz upon the Elb, once a Commandery of the Templars. 3 Weisenberck, lying towards Brunswick. 4 Kemberg, on the west side of the Elb. 5 Bitterfelt, betwixt the Elb and the Mulda; and 6 Wittenberg, on the Elb, in an open plain, but strongly fenced with walls, ramparts, and deep ditches. The chief beauty of it lyeth in one fair street, extending the whole length of the City; in the midst whereof is the Cathedrall Church, a large Market-place, and the common Councell-house. In former times the seats of the Dukes Electors, till the Electorall dignity was conferred on the house of Meissen, who liking better their own Country, kept their Courts at Dresden: But so, that Wittenberg is still acknowledged for the head City of the Electorate; and was made an University for Divines by Duke Frederick, anno 1508. It was called Wittenberg, as some conjecture, from Wittikindus, once Lord of Saxony, when the extent thereof was greatest: famous for the sepulchres of Luther and Melanchthon, but chiefly for that here were the walls of Popery broken down, and the reformation of the Church begun, by the zeal and diligence of Martin Luther; the story of which reformation so by him begun, I shall here sub-joyn: This Luther, as before is said, was born at Isleben, in the Country of Mansfield, and student first at Magdeburg, but at the establishing of the University of Wittenberg, chosen to be one of the Professours of Divinity there. It happened in the yeer 1516, that Pope Leo having need of money, sent about his Jubilees and Pardons, against the abuses of which, Luther inveighed both privately and publickly, by word and writing. This spark grew at last to so great a coal, that it fired the Papall Monarchy. Of the success of his endevours we have spoke already. We shall look here upon the difficulties which the Cause passed through, before it could be blessed with a publick settlement. Concerning which, we are to know, that the Princes of Germany, and many of the Free Cities had embraced his doctrine, and in the Imperiall Chamber at Spires, solemnly professed they would defend it to the death: hence were they first called Protestants. Nor stayed they there, but made a solemn League and Combination at Smalcald, spoken of before, for defence thereof, and of each other in the exercise and profession of it. Yet was not this Reformation so easily established. Christ had foretold, that Fathers should be against their Sonnes, and Brothers against Brothers for the truths sake; neither doe we ever finde in any story, that the true Religion was introduced, or Religion corrupted about to be amended, without warre and bloud-shed. Charles the Emperour whetted on by the Popes of Rome had long born a grudge against the Reformation; but especi-

Saxony. ally againſt the confederacy of Smalcald. After long heart burning on either ſide, they broke out into open warre, which at firſt ſucceeded luckily with the Princes. But there being an equality of command between John Frederick the Elector of Saxony, and Philip the Lantgrave of Haſſia, one ſometimes not approving; other whiles thwarting the others projects; the end proved not anſwerable. Beſides, the politick Emperour alwayes eſchewed all occaſions of battell, and by this delay wearied out this Army of the Princes; which without performing any notable exploit, disbanded it ſelf: every man haſtning home to defend his own. The Duke of Saxony had moſt cauſe to haſten homeward. For in his abſence, his couſin Maurice forgetting the education he had under him, and how formerly the Duke had conquered for him, and eſtated him in the Province of Miſnia; combined himſelf with the Emperour, and invaded his unckles County. But the Duke Electour, not onely recovered his own, but ſubdued all the Eſtates, in which he had formerly placed his ungratefull and ambitious kinſman. The Emperour all this while was not idle, but waited advantage to encounter the Duke, which at laſt he found nigh unto Mulberg, where the Duke was hearing a Sermon. The Emperour giveth the Alarum; the Duke ſtartling from his religious exerciſe, ſeeketh to order his men but in vain. For they ſuppoſing the Emperour to be nearer with all his forces, then indeed he was, adde the wings of fear to the feet of cowardiſe, and flie away: yet did the Duke with a few reſolute Gentlemen, as well as they could, make head againſt the enemy, till moſt of them were ſlain, and the Duke himſelf taken Priſoner. The morrow after this overthrow, he was condemned to loſe his Head; but pardoned at laſt on condition that he ſhould ranſomleſſe ſet free Marqueſſe Albert of Brandenbourg, renounce his dignity of the Electorſhip, reſigne up all his inheritance, with the like harſh Articles. It was alſo urged, that he ſhould alter his Religion: but that he ſo conſtantly denyed, that it was omitted. For his after maintenance, there were rendred back unto him, the towns of Weymar, and Goth, from the former of which, his Poſterity are now called Dukes of Saxon-Weymar: After this Victory the Emperour fraudulently intrapped the Lantgrave: then marched he againſt the Cities, in all which he prevailed, reſtored the Maſſe, and drave them to hard compoſition for their liberties. It was thought, that in this war the Emperour got 1600000 Crowns, and 500 peeces of Ordinance. The Impriſonment of the Lantgrave, contrary to the Emperours promiſe, was the chief thing which overthrew his good fortune. For Duke Maurice having pawned his word, and given unto the Lantgraves children his Bond, for the ſafe return of their Father; found himſelf much wronged and grieved: therefore conſulting with Baron Hedeck, he entred league with the French King, aſſociated himſelf with Marqueſſe Albert of Brandenbourg, ſuddenly ſurpriſed Auſpurg; and by the terrour which his haſte brought with it, forced the Emperour to flie from Inſpruch; and the Fathers to break up the Councell of Trent. The Emperour now brought low, eaſily hearkned to an honourable Compoſition, which not long after was concluded: the Cities recovering their Priviledges, free paſſage being given to the Reformation, and all things elſe reduced to the ſame ſtate they were in before the wars; the reſtoring of John-Frederick to his Dukedom and Electorſhip excepted only. So did this Duke Maurice both overthrow the liberty of his Country, and reſtore it: ſo was the work of Reformation by his means depreſſed, by the ſame again revived and eſtabliſhed ſtronger then ever. Thus we ſee that of the Poet verified:

——Vel nemo, vel qui mihi vulnera fecit,
Solus Achillæo tollere more poteſt.

None but the man which did his Country wound,
Achilles-like, could heal and make it ſound.

It is obſerved by ſome, that the deprivation of John Frederick, and the advancement of Maurice fell out very happily for the confirming of the Reformation then contended for. Firſt, in regard of John Frederick, whoſe Chriſtian patience and Magnanimity during the whole time of his impriſonment, added great reputation to the cauſe for which he he ſuffered: 2 In reſpect of Duke Maurice, who was a man of far greater parts to advance the work, and every way as zealous in purſuance of it as the other was: And 3 In relation to the children of the deprived Duke, men not to be relied on in a matter of ſuch weight and moment: inſomuch, as it was ſaid of him after his deceaſe, Quod filios reliquerit ſui diſſimillimos. But to return unto my ſtory. The doctrine of Luther thus ſetled in Germany, and being ſo agreeable to the Word of God, was quickly propagated over all Chriſtendome: the reaſons of which, next unto the Almighty power of the moſt High, may be principally ſix: 1 The diligence and aſſiduity of preaching in City, and Village; 2 The publiſhing of books of Piety, and Chriſtian Religian; 3 The tranſlations of the Scriptures, into the vulgar languages, whereby the ſimple might diſcern good from bad, the muddy doctrine of Rome, from the clear water of life, 4 The education of youth, eſpecially in Catechiſmes, which contained the whole body of Chriſtian religion; which once well planted in their mindes, was irradicable; 5 The continuall offers of diſputations with the adverſe party, in a publick audience; which being denyed, gave aſſurance of the truth, and ſoundneſſe of the one ſide, as of the falſhood and weakneſſe of the other; 6 Their compiling of Martyrologies, and Hiſtories of the Church; which cannot but work an admirable confirmation of Faith, and conſtancy in the hearers and readers. There is one only policy wanting, namely, the calling of a generall Synod, to compoſe the differences of the reformed Church, about the Sacrament, and Predeſtination; which would certainly ſtrengthen their own cauſe, and weaken the enemies, whoſe chief hopes are, that the preſent diſagreements will arme party againſt party, to their own deſtruction. But God grant that their hopes may be fruſtrated, and we will ſay with the Poet, Saxony.

——Hæ manus Trojam erigent?
Parvas habet ſpes Troja, ſi tales habet.

Shall theſe ſmall jarres reſtore the ruin'd Pope?
Small hope he hath, if this be all his hope.

But it is time we ſhould proceed to the ſtory of Saxony; the ancient inhabitants of which tract were the Longobardi, or Lombards of Magdeburg; and part of the Cheruſci about Manſfeld, and Wirtenberg. Overcome by the prevailing Saxons, they became part of their name and Country, which in the full extent thereof was once far greater then now it is: containing all the Countries betwixt the Rhene and the River Eydore, in the Cimbrick Cherſoneſſe; and from the River Saltza to the German and Baltick Oceans. Theſe, ſaid by ſome to be a People of Aſia, and there called the Sacæ; who finding that ſmall territory (now a part of Perſia) too narrow for them, forſook their Country, and at laſt fixed themſelves in the Cimbrick Cherſoneſſe; where they firſt took the names of Paſacaſons (or Sac-ſons) that is to ſay, the ſons of the Sacæ. The improbality of this we have there diſputed. Omitting therefore that and the like Originations of them, I conceive them (for my part) to be naturall Germans; ſome tribe of that moſt populous and potent people of the Suevi; but for the reaſon of the name, let every man enjoy the pleaſure of his own opinion. Certain I am that in Ptolemies time they were poſſeſſed of thoſe parts beyond the Elb, & thence extended to the Eydore, part of which tract is now known by the name of Holſtein; and were accounted in that time to be no new-comers. Afterwards as they grew in number, they inlarged their quarters, and paſſing over the Elb in the time of the latter Roman Emperours, poſſeſſed themſelves of the void places which were left by the French, then buſied in the conqueſt of more fruitfull Countries; communicating their name to all the Nations which they overcame, as the French had formerly done before them. So that in fine, they took up the now Dukedomes of Holſtein, Lunenbourg, and Brunſwick, the Biſhopricks of Bremen, Verda, Hilderſheim, Halberſtad, and Magdeburg; the old Marches of Brandenbourg, the Earldome of Mansfield, Weſtphalen, both Friſelands, Overyſſell, with as much of Guelderland and Holland, as lay on that ſide of the Rhene. By which account the preſent Electorall Family hath not one foot of the old Saxony in their poſſeſſion: the ſeat and Patrimony of the Electors being removed into other Countries, upon the alterations and changes which have hapned in that eſtate: the name and title of Saxony being given to the Country about Wittenberg for no other reaſon, but becauſe it was the chief ſeat of the Duke Electors. But to proceed, a ſtout and valiant Nation queſtionleſs they were, the Conquerors of the Iſle of Britain; & the laſt people of the Germans, which yeilded up their Country unto Charles the great; by whoſe means gained unto the Goſpell, anno 785. Their laſt King was called Wittichindus, from whom deſcend the Kings of France, ſince the time of Hugh Capet; the regent Kings of Denmark, of the houſe of Old nberg; the Dukes of Burgundy and Savoy; the Marqueſſes of Montferrat; beſides many other noble and illuſtrious Families, though of leſſer note: The male iſſue of Wittikinde (whom Charles the great created, taking the firſt Duke of Saxony) determining in the perſon of Otho the third, Emperour of Germany, it was by him conferred on Barnard Lord of Lunenburg (but the preciſe time thereof I finde not:) and on the forfeiture incurred by his poſterity, in the perſon of Duke Henry the Proud, beſtowed by Frederick Barbaroſſa upon Barnard of Anhalt, anno 1180. whoſe iſſue in the right line failing, it was finally eſtated by the Emperour Sigiſmund on Frederick Landgrave of Turingia, and Marqueſſe of Miſnia, anno 1423. In his Family it hath ſince continued, but not without a manifeſt breach in the courſe of the ſucceſſion: which hapned when John-Frederick being deprived of the Electorall dignity and eſtate; his couſin Duke Maurice was inveſted in them by Charles the fift. And becauſe theſe tranſlations of States be not ordinary, I will briefly relate the Ceremonies thereat uſed, as I have collected them out of Sleiden. There were at Wittenberg ſcaffolds erected, on which ſate the Emperour, and the Princes Electors in their Robes. On the back ſide of the State were placed the Trumpeters; right againſt it ſtandeth Duke Maurice with two bands of horſmen. The firſt in a full careere run their horſes up to the pavilion: out of the ſecond iſſued Henry Duke of Brunſwick, Wolfang Prince of Bipont, and Albert Duke of Bavier. Theſe when they had in like manner courſed their horſes about, alighted, aſcended to the Throne, and humbly requeſted the Emperour, that for the common good he would advance Duke Maurice to the Electorſhip. He conſulted with the Electors, made anſwer by the Biſhop of Mentz, that he was content; ſo Duke Maurice would in perſon come and deſire it. Then came forth Duke Maurice, with the whole troup; before him were born ten enſignes bearing the Armes of as many Regions, wherein he deſired to be inveſted. When he came before the throne, he kneeled down on his knees, and humbly defired the Emperor to beſtow on him the Electorſhip of Saxony, and all the lands of John-Frederick, late Elector. His Petition was granted. Then the Biſhop of Mentz read unto him the Oath by which the Electors are bound unto the Empire: which Oath, when Duke Maurice had taken, the Emperour delivered unto him a Sword, which was a ſigne of his perfect inveſtiture. Duke Maurice, now the Elector of Saxony, aroſe, gave the Emperour thanks, promiſed his fidelity, made obeyſance, and took his place amongſt the Electors. This ſolemnity was on the 24 day of Feb. anno 1548. This ſaid, it is high time that we ſhould proceed unto the Catalogue of Saxony.

The

1486	28	Frederick III. ſonne of Erneſt.
1525	29	John brother to Frederick the third.
1532	30	John-Frederick ſonne of John the firſt; a great advancer of the Reformation of Religion, impriſoned, and deprived of his Electorſhip by Charles the fift.
1547	31	Maurice deſcended from Albert the brother of Erneſt, created Duke Elector by Charles the fift, whom afterwards he drave out of Germany; and was ſlain in the battell of Sifridhuſe, againſt Marqueſſe Albert of Brandenbourg.
1553	32	Auguſtus brother of Maurice.
1586	33	Chriſtian ſonne of Auguſtus.
	34	Chriſtian II. ſonne of Chriſtian the firſt.
	35	John-George brother of Chriſtian the ſecond, who firſt ſided with the Emperour Ferdinand the ſecond againſt the Elector Palatine, and after with the King of Sweden againſt the Emperour.

The Revenues of this Duke are thought to be the greateſt of any one Prince of Germanie (the Imperial familie excepted) amounting at the leaſt to 400000 l. per annum, though in multitude of Vaſſals, and greatneſſe of territorie, he come ſhort of ſome of them. And to make up this ſum (or perhaps a greater) it is conceived that the profit which ariſeth to him out of ſilver mines, is no leſſe then 130000 yearly; the impoſt laid on Beer in Leipſich onely, a City but of two Pariſh Churches (by which con-conjecture at the reſt) being farmed at 20000 l. per annum. Then hath he the tenthes of all ſorts of encreaſe, as of corn, wine, &c. the Salt-houſes at Hall, and ſome other places, very fair lands belonging unto his domain; and beſides a ſtanding and perpetuall tax laid upon the Subject, towards the maintenance of the war againſt the Turke: granted at firſt in times of danger and hoſtility; but gathered ever ſince in the time of peace (as to that Enemie) under colour of being ready and prepared againſt him. According to the quantity of his Intrado ſo he keeps his State, well ſerved and better attended, then any other of the Electors: there being at one time in the Court of Chriſtian, the Father of the preſent Duke, three Dukes, three Earles, and five Barons of other Nations (beſides the Nobility of his own) all Penſioners and Servants to him: one of the Princes of Anhalt, and one of the Earls of Mansfeild, both Homagers unto the Saxon, being two of the number. Brunſwick

The Armes of Saxonie are Barre-wiſe of ſix pieces Sable and Or, a Bend flowred Vert. Which Bend was added to the Coat by the Emperour Frederick Barbaroſſa, when he confirmed Barnard of Anhalt in his Dukedom. For Barnard deſiring of the Emperor to have ſome difference added to the Ducal coat (being before onely Barry Sable and Or) to diſtinguiſh him and his ſucceſſours from thoſe of the former houſe: the Emperour tooke a Chaplet of Rue, which hee had then upon his head, and threw it croſſe his Buckler or Eſcheocheon of Armes, which was preſently painted on the ſame.

18 BRUNSWICK, and 19 LVNENBVRG.

The Dukedome of BRVNSWICK and LVNENBOVRG, being both originally taken out of the great Dukedome of Saxonie, extracted both from the ſame root, and many times united in the perſon of the ſame one Prince, ſhall bee joined together in the ſtory, though ſevered in the Chorographie or Deſcription of them: bounded on the Eaſt with Magdeburg and Brandenburg; on the Weſt with Weſtphalia; on the North with Denmark, on the South with Duringen and Haſſia. The Air in all parts hereof very cold and comfortleſſe, but ſound and healthfull: the ſoil towards the old Marches of Brandenburg but meanly fertile, towards Duringen and Haſſia mountainous and woodie; in other parts very plentifull of corn, and well provided alſo of ſuch other commodities, as uſually doe grow in thoſe colder climates.

But to take the Chorographie of them ſeverally, BRVNSWICK is bounded on the Eaſt with the Dioceſe of Magdeburg and the Earldom of Mansfeild, on the Weſt with Weſtphalen; on the North with Lunenburg, on the South with Haſſia and Turingia. So called from Brunſwick the chief City, and the head of this Dukedome.

Places of moſt importance in it, are 1 Goslar, upon the River Goſe, whence it had the name; Of a poore Village made a City by Henry the firſt, much beautified and enlarged by Henry the third, who founded here two Churches and a ſtately Palace. Now one of the Imperiall Cities. 2 Helmſtat in the middle way betwixt Brunſwick and Magdeburg, firſt fortified by Charles, ſonne of Charles the Great, for a bridle to the neighbouring Sclaves: and being after given to the Abbats of Werda, was by them ſold to William the Duke of Brunſwick. Quedelnberg built alſo by Henry the firſt, much increaſed ſince by the neighbourhood of a very rich Nunnerie, the Abbeſſe whereof had formerly the priviledges of a Prince of the Empire. 4 Hildeſheim, an antient City, honoured with an Epiſcopall See by Charles the Great, at the firſt converſion of the Saxons. 5 Grubenhagen, which gave title to a younger branch of the houſe of Brunſwick; a principality and a member of the Empire. 6 Hannover, on the River Leine, well built, very ſtrongly fortified, and not meanly traded. 7 Brunſwick upon the River Onacker which paſſeth through it, paſſed over by many handſome bridges, the Metropolis of the antient Saxonie, and at this time the chief of this Dukedome; though of it ſelf Imperiall, and one of the Hanſe. The City of a Quadrangular form, ſeated in the midſt of a plain very fruitfull of corn; in compaſſe about two Dutch, or eight Engliſh miles; ſomewhat larger then Nurenberg, and leſſe then Erdford; containing in that compaſſe not above twelve Churches, whereof two have ſteeples covered with lead, a third with braſſe, all the reſt with tile. Rich, populous, and ſtrongly fortified, on ſome ſides with a double, on others with a treble wall; within which wals are five Cities, diſtinguiſhed by priviledges, but united by Laws. The whole firſt built by Bruno ſonne to Ludolphus Duke of Saxonie, and Uncle to the Emperour Henry the firſt, about the year 861. from whence it had the name of Brunſwick, or Brunonis Vicus, by the more elegant Latiniſts, Brunopolis. 8 Hamelen, on the Eaſt ſide of the Weſer or Viſurgis, encompaſſed with a deep moat, (occaſioned by a ſtream cut out of the River) round about which are divers fortifications and placed with Ordinance. Nigh unto this town is the mountain called alſo Hamelen, unto which the Peed-piper (as they call him) led the children of Halberſtade, where they all ſunk, and were never more ſeen; but of this ſtory more hereafter, when we come to Tranſylvania. 2 Wolfenbaiten, or Wolfenbuttell, where the Duke doth keep his Court: For though Brunſwick giveth him his title, yet will it not yeeld him any obedience, but reputeth herſelfe among the Hanſetownes; for which cauſe there have been great warres between the Dukes, and the Citizens. 3 Halberſtade, a Biſhops See; the late Biſhop (or Adminiſtratour of the Biſhoprick) being Chriſtian Duke of Brunſwick, that noble young ſouldier, who had vowed his life and fortune to the ſervice of Elizabeth Queen of Bohemia; created by King James one of the Knights of the Garter. A Biſhoprick of great revenew, and a very large territorie, ſince the alteration of Religion, given with the title of Adminiſtrator to the ſonnes of Brunſwick, but now by the concluſions at Munſter aſſigned over to the Electour of Brandenburg, with the title of Prince of Halberſtade, the familie of Brunſwick being to be recompenſed with an alternate ſucceſſion in the Biſhoprick of Oſnaburg, and ſome other additionals.

The Dukedome of LUNENBOVRG hath on the Eaſt the Old Marches of Brandenbourg, on the Weſt the Dioceſe of Bremen, a part of Weſtphalia; on the North the Elb, and on the South the Dukedome of Brunſwick. So called from Lunenbourg the chiefe City, once the ſeat of the Dukes.

Places of moſt obſervation in it are 1 Lunenbourg it ſelf, ſituate on the River Elvenaw, an Imperiall City and one of the principall of the Hanſe; ſo called from the Moon here worſhipped in the times of Idolatry. Of a round form, and ſeated in a pleaſant valley; but with mountains near it; on one of which called Calberg is a very ſtrong Caſtle, of right belonging to the Duke, but in the power of the Citizens, who without this Fort could not be maſter of their Liberties. The wals about it are of earth, high and broad, and the Ditches deep; the buildings generally fair (for the moſt part of brick) the chief whereof is the Common-Councell houſe; the ſtreets broad and long with two ſpacious Market-places, but of no very pleaſing ſmell: the whole about a mile and an halfe in length, half a mile in breadth; containing ſix Pariſh Churches. But the thing moſt conſiderable in it is the Fountaine of Salt, (the greateſt riches of this City) and the houſe in which the Salt is boiled, containing 52 rooms, and in each room 8 leaden pans in which are boiled dayly 8 tuns of ſalt, every tun being ſold for 8 Flemmiſh ſhillings bought by the Hamburgers, Lubeckers, and other Merchants, ſome part of the profits of it belonging to the Duke, ſome to the City, the reſt to the Adventurers who employ their ſtocks on it. 2 Cella the ſeat of the Duke of Lunenburg. 3 Gethern of no great bigneſſe or eſtimation, but for a ſtrong Caſtle of the Dukes. 4 Oldendorp, ſituate betwixt the Venaw and the River Eſca, memorable for the great battell fought neer it, anno 1633. betwixt the Imperialiſts and the Swedes; the honour and benefit whereof fell unto the Swedes, who killed upon the place 5000 of the Enemie, beſides ſuch as were found dead in the fields and high wayes, all covered over with dead bodies; took 1500 of them priſoners, and got into their hands 13 pieces of Ordinance, good ſtore of Ammunition, and three mules laden with ſilver for the pay of the Army: the reputation of this victory drawing in Hammelen, and other places of importance which ſtood out before. 5 Verda, an Epiſcopall See, but made a Lay-fee as moſt other Biſhopricks amongſt the Lutherans; the profits thereof being received commonly by a ſonne of Danemark with the title of Adminiſtrator, and laſtly by the treaty of Munſter, appropriated for ever to the Crown of Sweden; the Kings whereof to be entituled Dukes of Verden. 6 Rotenburg, the chief ſeat of the Biſhops of Verda.

Northweſt of Lunenburg, on both ſides of the Elb, lyeth the Countrey and Seigneurie of LAWENBVRG; ſo called from Lawenburg, (Lawburgum) a Town and Caſtle built on the further ſide of the Albis, by Barnard of Anhalt, the firſt Duke of Saxonie of that family: which being razed by Duke Henry the Lyon, was again reedified and given by Albert the ſonne of Barnard to his ſecond ſon John, from whom the Dukes of Saxonie commonly called Dukes of Saxen-Lawenburg doe derive themſelves: Who being pretermitted by the Emperour Sigiſmund at the death of Albert the third, the laſt of the direct line of Barnard, have ſince contented themſelves with their antient Patrimonie. Other towns obſervable in this Signeurie, next unto Lawenburg it ſelf, are 2 Erdenburg, a well fortified peece, oppoſite to Lawenburg, on the hither ſide of the Elb. 3 Raceburg, the ſepulture of this noble family. 4 Moeln, the cauſe of much contention betwixt the Lords hereof and the town of Hamburg, who pretend a title thereunto.

But to return again to Brunſwick and Lunenbourg; the antient Inhabitants of theſe Dukedomes were the Duglubini of Tacitus, with ſome parts of the Chauci and Cheruſci: theſe laſt of moſt fame for the blow they gave to Quintilius Varus, Lieutenant in Germanie after Druſus for Auguſtus Cæſar, who behaving himſelfe with great inſolency towards the Natives, was ſet upon by theſe Cheruſci and their confederates, under the conduct of Arminius a great Prince amongſt them; himſelfe ſlain, and his whole Army conſiſting of three Legions, miſerably cut off, and deſpightfully uſed: which loſſe, and the ſhame thereof ſo diſtracted the Emperour (not formerly accuſtomed to the like misfortunes) that he was many times obſerved to tear his beard, knock his head againſt the poſts, and cry out in the bitterneſſe of his paſſion, Redde mihi legiones Quintili Varo. Having long time after this maintained their liberty (for the Romans kept themſelves from that time forwards on the French ſide of the Rhene) they were at laſt ſubdued by the Saxons, continuing part of that great Dukedom till the proſcription of Henry ſurnamed the Lyon, ſpoken of before; whoſe reconciliation being made, by meanes of Henry the ſecond of England, whoſe daughter Maud hee had formerly married; the Emperor Barbaroſſa reſtored to him again the Cities of Brunſwick and Lunenburg with their ſeverall Territories: of which his two ſons Henry and William were firſt created Earles, then Dukes, the one of Brunſwick, and the other of Lunenbourg, by the Emperour Frederick the ſecond. Which honours and Eſtates doe ſtill remain unto their Poſterities. Before I come to the ſucceſſions of which Princes, I ſhall crave leave to ſpeak of the Originall of the Guelfian Familie, Dukes at the ſame time of Bavaria and Saxonie; of which they are at this time the ſole remainder. A Family derived from one Guelphus (whence it had the name) the ſon of Iſenberdus Earl of Altorf in Schwaben: whoſe wife called Jermintrudis, having accuſed a poor woman of Adultery, and cauſed her to be grievouſly puniſhed, for having 12 children at a birth; was afterwards delivered of the like number, & all of them ſons. Her husband being abſent at the time of her delivery, ſhe commanded the Nurſe to kill 11 of them; fearing (it ſeems) the like ſhame and puniſhment, as by her inſtigation was inflicted on the other woman. The Nurſe going to perform this ungodly command, was met by the old Earl then returning homewards: who asked her what ſhe had in her Apron, ſhe made anſwer Whelps; he deſired to ſee them, ſhee denyed him. Angrie at this refuſall he opened her Apron, and there found eleven of his owne ſonnes, pretty ſweet babes, and of moſt promiſing countenances. Examining the matter he found out the truth, and enjoyning the old Trot to be ſecret in it, he put the children out to Nurſe; ſix years expired, the Earl invited to a Feaſt moſt of his own and his Ladies kindred, and attiring the young boyes all alike, preſented them unto their Mother. Who ſuſpecting by the number of them, what the matter was, confeſſed her offence, is pardoned by the good old Earl, and carefully educates her children: Whom the Father commanded to be called by the name of Guelpes, alluding to the Whelpes or Puppies, which the Nurſe told him ſhe had in her Apron. From the eldeſt of theſe Guelphs or Guelpes ſucceeded that Henry Guelph ſonne of Robert Earl of Altorf, whom Conrade the ſecond made Duke of Bavaria; many of whoſe poſterity enjoyed that Dukedome: increaſed at laſt by the addition of the Dukedome of Saxonie in the perſon of Duke Henry ſurnamed the Proud, Father of Henry called the Lyon, and Grandfather of Henry and William the firſt Dukes of Brunſwick and Lunenburg, whoſe ſucceſſion followeth in this Order.

The DVKES of BRUNSWICK and LVNENBVRG.

1 Henry ſurnamed the Lyon, the laſt Duke of Saxony, and the firſt of this Title.

		Brunſwick			Lunenburg.
1195	2	Henry firſt Earl after Duke of Brunſwick.	1195	2	William firſt Earl, after Duke of Lunenburg.
1213	3	Otho ſonne of William Duke of Lunenburg; after the death of Henry Duke of Brunſwick alſo.
1252	4	Albert ſonne of Otho.	1252	4	John ſonne of Otho.
1279	5	Albert II. ſonne of Albert.	1261	5	Otho II. ſonne of John.
1318	6	Otho II. ſonne of Albert the ſecond.	1330	6	Otho III. ſonne of Otho the ſecond.
1334	7	Magnus ſonne of Albert II. on the failing of the other houſe, enjoyed both Eſtates.
1368	8	Magnus II. ſon of Magnus the firſt.
1373	9	Henry II. ſonne of Magnus the ſecond.
1416	10	William ſon of Henry.		10	Barnard brother of Magnus the ſecond.
1482	11	William II. ſon of William.
1503	12	Henry II. ſon of Will. the ſecond.	1434	11	Frederick II. ſon of Barnard
1514	13	Henry III. ſon of Henry the ſecond.	1478	12	Otho III. ſon of Frederick.
1568	14	Julius ſon of Henry the third.	1514	13	Henry III. ſon of Otho the third.
1589	15	Henry IV. ſon of Julius, who married the Lady Elizabeth, ſiſter to Anne Queen of England.	1532	14	Otho IV. ſon of Henry the third.
				15	Erneſt the brother of Otho ſucceeded in his brothers life time; ſurrendring his Eſtate for an Annuall penſion.
	16	Frederick Ulric ſon of Elizabeth of Denemark and Henry Julius.	1546	16	Henry IV. ſon of Erneſt.
1634	17	Auguſtus, ſon of Henry Duke of Lunenbourg, ſucceeded on the death of Fredenick Ulrick, and the failer of the houſe of Brunſwick in him, in this Dukedome.	1590	17	Erneſt II. ſon of Henry the fourth.
				18	Wolfgangus, the brother of Henry the fourth, and Uncle of Ernestus the ſecond, now Duke of Lunenbourg, anno 1648.

The Armes of theſe Dukedomes were firſt the ſame, that is to ſay, Gules, two Lyons Or; Armed Azure, which Arms they tooke by reaſon of their extraction from the Kings of England, then Dukes of Normandie; retained to this day by the Dukes of Brunſwick without any Addition. But thoſe of Lunenbourg have added three Coates more unto it: the whole bearing being quarterly 1 Gules, two Lyons Or, Armed Azure; 2 Azure, Seme of Hearts Gules, a Lyon Azure, Armed, and Crowned Or, 3 Azure, a Lyon Argent, Crowned Gules, and 4 Gules, within a Border Componie Or, and Azure; a Lyon of the ſecond, Armed of the third.

HASSIA.

HASSIA, is bounded on the North with Brunſwick, on the South with Veteravia, or the State of Wideraw; on the Eaſt with Saxonie; on the Weſt with Weſtphalia. So called from the Heſſi, who having vanquiſhed the Chatti, the old Inhabitants of this Countrey, poſſeſſed themſelves of it.

The Chriſtian faith was firſt preached here by Boniface or Winifred, an Engliſh Saxon, (afterwards Archbiſhop of Mentz) anno 730 or thereabouts. Of whom I find this memorable Apophthegm, that in old times there were Golden Prelates and wooden Chalices, but in his time wooden Prelates and Golden Chalices. Not much unlike to which I have read another, but of later date, viz. that once the Chriſtians had blinde Churches and lightſome hearts, but now they have lightſome Churches and blinde hearts.

The Countrey is very fruitfull of corn, and affordeth good paſturage for the feeding of Cattell, of which they have great droves and heards in many places; with great abundance of Stags, and other Deer for the pleaſures of hunting harboured in the woods hereof, with which in many parts of it it is very much ſhaded. It breedeth alſo on the Downes good ſtore of ſheep, enriched with the fineſt fleece of any in Germany; the Staple commodity of this Country: and in the mountainous parts hereof there want not rich Mines of braſſe, lead, and other metals, which yeild great profit to the people.

Chief towns herein, are 1 Allendorf on the VVeſer, (or Viſnegis) of much eſteeme for the ſprings or fountaines of Salt which are thereabouts. 2 Friſlar, upon the Eder, well walled, and ſituate in a fruitfull and pleaſant ſoil; belonging to the Archbiſhop and Elector of Mentz, but in regard of the convenient ſituation of it, much aimed at, many times attempted, and ſometimes forcibly poſſeſſed, both by the Lantgraves of Haſſia, and Dukes of Saxony. 3 Fuld, on a River of that name, remarkable for the Monaſtery there founded by Boniface, Archbiſhop of Mentz, by the name of Saint Saviours, the Abbot, which is a Prince of the Empire, Chancellour of the Empereſſe, and Lord of a goodly territory in this Country, called from hence Stift Fuld. 4 Frankenberg, on the Eder alſo, ſo called from the French, who incamped there in their wars againſt the Saxons; firſt founded by Theodorick the French King, anno 520. but much enlarged by Charles the Great, about the yeer 804. 5 Eſchewege, on the brow of an hill neer the River VVert, of great trading for the woad, of which the fields adjoyning yeild a rich increaſe. Being deſtroyed by the Hungarians, it was re-edified and enlarged by the Emperour Henry the ſecond: and having ſuffered much miſery in the long war between Adolph, Archbiſhop of Mentz, and the Lantgraves of Haſſia, it fell at laſt into the poſſeſſion of the Lantgrave, anno 1387. 6 Melſingen, on the River Fuld. 7 Darmſtad, lately, if not at the preſent, the ſeat and inheritance of Count Ludovick of the younger houſe of the Lantgraves, taken Priſoner by Count Mansfield, anno 1622. and his whole Country expoſed unto ſpoil and rapine; becauſe (beſides many other ill offices) he was the chief perſwader of the Princes of the Union to disband their forces, provided for defence of themſelves and the Palatinate, and to reconcile themſelves to the Emperour. 8 Marpurg, the ſeat of the ſecond houſe of the Lantgraves, deſcending from that Philip, who was Lantgrave in the time of Charles the fift, whom he ſo valiantly withſtood: pleaſantly ſeated on the Lon, amongſt Viny downes, and ſhady Mountains; honoured with an Univerſity founded here by Lewis, Biſhop of Munſter, anno 1426. and beautified with a magnificent Caſtle (the ordinary dwelling of thoſe Princes) ſituate on an high hill ſomewhat out of the Town: which gives it a very gallant proſpect over the Town and Country. 9 Geiſen, a Town belonging to the Lantgraves of Caſſels, and a ſmall Univerſity alſo. 10 Dietz, upon the River Lon, belonging alſo to the houſe of Caſſels. 11 Caſſels, the chief town and ordinary reſidence of the Lantgraves of the elder houſe, who are hence ſometimes called the Lantgraves of Caſſels: commodiouſly ſeated in a pleaſant and fruitfull ſoil, and well fortified with ſtrong earthen walls, and deep ditches; but the houſes in it of no great beauty, being compoſed for the moſt part of wood, thatch and clay.

Within the limits of this Province is the County of WALDECK, not ſubject to the Lantgraves of Haſſia, though included within the limits of it before laid down, taking up the Weſtern parts thereof where it meets with Weſtphalia; in figure very neer a ſquare, each ſide of which is of the length of ſix ordinary Dutch, or 24 Engliſh miles. The ſoil much of the ſame nature with the reſt of Haſſia, ſave that it hath ſome veines of Quick-ſilver, and inexhauſtible mines of Coal, which the other wanteth; theſe laſt in greateſt plenty about Veldung, and the ſtrong Caſtle of Eiſenburg, two of the beſt townes and places of it. Others of chief note, 3 Waldeck it ſelf on the River Eder, the firſt ſeat of the Earls hereof, who have here an ancient Caſtle, from whence the whole Country takes its name. 4 Mengerhuſe, in a fair Caſtle whereof live the preſent Earls. 5 Witterberg, in a pleaſant and fruitfull Soil, betwixt the Rivers Twiſt and Ahra. 6 Corbach, famous in the times of Albertus Magnus for its golden Mines, yeilding great profit to theſe Earls. The Pedegree of whom is fetched from one Witichinde Earl of Snalenberg, whom Charles the Great made Advocate or Patron of the Church of Paderborn in Weſtphalia, being an Office in theſe times of great juriſdiction. By Witichind the ſecond one of his Succeſſours, this office was ſurrendred into the hands of the Chapter, for the ſumme of 300 marks in ſilver; and to cut off all further claimes, Henry, the nephew of this Witichind, by his ſon Otho, was by the Chapter gratified with the town of Waldeck, of which he was the firſt Earl: whoſe nephew Henry ſurnamed Ferreus, ſubdued Corbach, anno 1366. and added it to his Eſtate. By a third Henry, grandchild of this Ferreus, or man of Iron, this Earldom formerly held in fee of the Church of Paderborn, was firſt put under the patronage and protection of the Lantgraves of Haſſia, anno 1428. as it continueth to this day; the Earls hereof content with their own eſtates, and more addicted to the Book, then unto the Sword, have acted little in the wars to improve their fortunes.

The antient inhabitants of the whole, both Waldeck and the reſt of Haſſia, and alſo of the County of Naſſaw in Veteravia, neer unto adjoyning, were the Catti, or Chatti mentioned by the Antients: firſt conquered (after the withdrawing of the Roman forces) by the Heſſi; and both ſubdued not long after by the Thuringians. Subject unto the Lantgraves of Duringen till the death of Henry, the laſt of the male iſſue of Lewis of Orleans. In the diviſion of whoſe eſtate the Weſtern moiety of Duringen fell to the ſhare of Henry, Duke of Brabant, one of the Competitours, who leaving the title of Lantgrave of Duringen to the Marqueſſe of Miſnia; took to himſelf the title of the Lantgrave of Heſſen, in memory of the Heſſi, ſpoken of before. Of his ſucceſſours the moſt puiſſant was that Philip, who in the time of Charles the fift much ſwayed the affaires of Germany, anno 1529. he diſcomfited King Ferdinand, and reſtored Ulrick to the Dukedome of Wirtenberg, anno 1530. he united all the Proteſtant Princes, and Cities of Germany in a common league at Smalcald; for the defence of the Proteſtant Religion, anno 1545. he undertook the cauſe of Goſlaria againſt the Duke of Brunſwick, whom in a ſet battell he took priſoner, together with his ſon, and poſſeſſed his Country, anno 1548. he united all the Princes and Cities of Germany, in an offenſive and a defenſive league againſt Charles the fifth, but that war ſucceeded not proſperouſly. For the Duke of Saxony his perpetuall Confederate, being taken priſoner, he ſubmitted himſelf to the Emperour at Kale or Hale in Duringen: his ſons-in-law, Duke Maurice, the Marqueſſe of Brandenbourg, and Wolfang Prince of Deuxponts, having given their bonds for his return. The conditions of his pardon were, firſt, that he ſhould diſmantle all his townes, except Caſſell; 2 That he ſhould yeeld up unto the Emperour all his munition; 3 That he ſhould pay unto the Emperour 150000 Crownes. The ſame night he was by the Duke of Alva invited to ſupper, his ſons-in-law of Saxony and Brandenbourg accompanying him. After ſupper he was contrary to the Lawes of Hoſpitality, and the Emperours exact promiſe, detained priſoner. The fallacy ſtood thus. In the Emperours compact with the three Princes, the words were, that the Lantgrave ſhould be kept, Nicht in einig gefengknes, that is, Not in any priſon: which the Emperours Secretary by a ſmall daſh of his pen, turned into, Nicht in ewig gefengknes, that is, Not in everlaſting priſon. Well, in priſon he ſtaid five years, which being expired, he was again ſet at large by Duke Maurice, the overthrower and reſtorer of the German liberty. The reſidue of theſe Lantgraves in their ſeverall times, occur in the enſuing Catalogue of

The LANTGRAVES of HASSIA.

1263 1 Henry of Brabant, ſon of Henry, Duke of Brabant, and Sophia his wife, daughter of Lewis the ſixt, Lantgrave of Thuringia, after a nine years warre betwixt him and the Marqueſſe of Miſnia divided the eſtate, and took unto himſelf the title of Lantgrave of Heſſen.

1308 2 Otho and John, ſons of Henry.

1323 3 Henry II. and Lewis, ſons of Otho.

1376 4 Herman, the ſon of Lewis.

1458 6 Lewis III. ſon of Lewis the Milde.

7 William, the eldeſt ſon of Lewis the third, diſpoſſeſſed of his Eſtate by 8 William II. his youngeſt brother.

1509 9 Philip, the famous Lantgrave ſpoken of before, ſon of William the ſecond.

1567 10 William III. eldeſt ſon of Philip, ſucceeded in one moiety of the eſtate and reſided at Caſſiles: the other moiety being divided betwixt his brethren Ludowick of Marpurg, and George of Darmſtad, father of Ludowick of Darmſtad before mentioned.

1590 11 Maurice, eldeſt ſon of William the third.

12 William IV. ſon of Maurice, now living, 1648.

The Armes of theſe Lantgraves are Azure, a Lyon Barry of eight pieces, Arg. and Gules, Crowned Or.

WESTPHALIA.

WESTPHALIA is bounded on the Eaſt with Haſſia, Brunſwick, and part of Lunenberg: on the Weſt with the Biſhoprick of Colen, Cleveland, Overyſſell, Weſt and Eaſt-Friſeland, and the German Ocean; on the North with the Elb, and the Dukedome of Holſtein; and on the South with Weteravia, and ſome part of Haſſia.

It was thus called of the Weſtphali, a tribe or diviſion of the Saxons, diſtinguiſhed heretofore into the Tranſalbinos, inhabiting in the County of Holſtein, now a part of Denemark; the Joſtphali, betwixt the Elb, the Ocean, with the River of Saltza, and the Weſer; taking up the Biſhopricks of Breme, Verden, Hildeſheim, Halberſtat and Mydburg, with the Dukedomes of Lunenburg and Brunſwick; the Angrivarians, taking up the north-weſt part of the modern Weſtphalen, betwixt the Biſhoprick of Breme, and the Earldome of Colen: and finally, the Weſtphali, or Weſtern-Saxons, inhabiting the reſt of the modern Weſtphalen with the Earldomes of Mark, Berg, Zulphen, the ſeigneury of Over-yſſell, and ſome parts of Guelderland and Holland: But the Saxons being ſubjugated by the power of the French, and ſeverall new eſtates erected out of that old ſtock: the remnant of the Weſtphali and Angrivarians, the Biſhoprick of Breme being added unto the accompt, were comprehended and united in the name of WESTPHALEN.

The ſoil, according to the ſeverall parts of it, is of different natures, the parts adjoyning to the Weſer being deſert, and barren, thoſe towards the Earldomes of Mark and Bergen, mountainous and full of woods; the Biſhoprick of Bremen, except towards the Elb, full of dry ſands, heaths, and unfruitfull thickets, like the wilde parts of Windſor Forreſt betwixt Staines and Fernham. In other parts exceeding plentifull of corn, and of excellent paſturage, ſtored with great plenty of wilde fruits, and Weſtphalen (by reaſon of the many woods) abundance of Akorns: with infinite herds of ſwine (which they breed up with thoſe naturall helps) of ſo good a reliſh, that a Gammon of Weſtphalian Bacon, is reckoned for a principall diſh at a great mans Table.

The old inhabitants hereof were the Chauci Majores about Bremen, the Chanani, Angrivarii, and Bructeri inhabiting about Munſter, Oſnaburg, and ſo towards the land of Colen; and part of the Cheruſci (before ſpoken of) taking up thoſe parts which lie neareſt unto Brunſwick and Lunenbourg. All of them vanquiſhed by Druſus, the ſon-in-law of Auguſtus, but ſoon reſtored to their former liberty, by the great overthrow given by the Cheruſci and their aſſociates to Quintilius Varus. Afterwards uniting into one name with the French, they expulſed the Romans out of Gaul: leaving their forſaken, and ill-inhabited ſeats to be taken up by the Saxons; with whom the remainders of them did incorporate themſelves both in name and nation. Of that great body it continued a conſiderable Member (both when a Kingdome and a Dukedome) till the proſcription and deprivation of Duke Henry the Lyon, at what time the parts beyond the Weſer were uſurped by Barnard, Biſhop of Paderborn; thoſe betwixt the Weſer, and the Rhene by Philip, Archbiſhop of Colen, whoſe ſucceſſours ſtill hold the title of Dukes of Weſtphalen: the Biſhopricks of Bremen, Munſter, Paderborn, and Mindaw, having been formerly endowed with goodly territories, had ſome accrewments alſo out of this Eſtate: every one catching hold of that which lay neareſt to him. But not to make too many ſubdiviſions of it, we will divide it onely into theſe two parts, VVeſtphalen ſpecially ſo called, and 2 the Biſhoprick of Bremen.

In VVESTPHALEN ſpecially ſo called, which is that part hereof which lyeth next to Cleveland, the places of moſt obſervation are, 1 Geſeke, a town of good repute; 2 Brala, a village of great beauty; 3 Arusberg; and 4 Fredeborch, honoured with the title of Prefectures; 5 VVadenborch; 6 Homberg, lording it over fair and ſpacious territories. All which, with two Lordſhips, and eight Prefectures more, diſperſed in the Dukedome of Engern, and County of Surland, belong unto the Biſhop of Colen, the titulary Duke of VVeſtphalen, and Angrivaria, (Engern) as he ſtiles himſelf. 7 Mountabour, (perhaps Mont-Tabor) ſeated in that part hereof, which is called VVeſterwald; a town of conſequence belonging to the Elector of Triers. 8 Rhenen; 9 Schamlat; and 10 Beekem, reaſonable good towns, all of the Biſhoprick of Munſter. 11 Munſter it ſelf, famous for the Treaty, and concluſions made upon that treaty, for the peace of Germany, ſeated upon the River Ems, and ſo called from a Monaſtery, here founded by Charles the great, which gave beginning to the Town; ſuppoſed to be that Mediolanium, which Ptolemy placeth in this tract, a beautifull, and well fortified City, and the See of a Biſhop, who is alſo the Temporall Lord of it. Famous for the wofull Tragedies here acted by a lawleſſe crew of Anabaptiſts, who choſe themſelves a King (that famous Taylor, John of Leiden) whom they called King of Sion, as they named the City New Jeruſalem; proclaimed a community both of goods and women, cut off the heads of all that oppoſed their doings: and after many fanatick and deſperate actions by the care and induſtry of the Biſhop and his confederates brought to condigne puniſhment. The Story is to be ſeen at large in Sleidan, and ſome modern pamphlets, wherein as in a Mirrour, we may plainly ſee the face of the preſent times. 12 Oſnaburg, firſt built, as ſome ſay, by Julius Cæſar; as others by the Earls of Engern; but neither ſo ancient as the one, nor of ſo late a ſtanding as the others make it; here being an Epiſcopall See founded by Charles the Great, who gave it all the priviledges of an Univerſity. Liberally endowed at the firſt erection of the ſame, and ſince ſo well improved, both in Power, and Patrimony, that an alternate ſucceſſion in it by the Dukes of Brunſwick hath been concluded on in the Treaty of Munſter, as a fit compenſation for the Biſhoprick of Halberſtad (otherwiſe diſpoſed of by that Treaty) of late enjoyed wholly by that Family. 13 Quakenberg, on the River Haſe, 14 VVarendorp; and 15 VVildſhuſen, towns of that Biſhoprick. 16 Paderborn, an Epiſcopall See alſo, founded by Charles the Great, at the firſt converſion of the Saxons; more ancient then ſtrong, yet more ſtrong then beautifull. 17 Ringelenſtein; and 18 Oſſendorf, belonging to the Biſhop of Paderborn. 19 Minden, upon the VVeſer, another of the Epiſcopall Sees founded by Charles the Great, and by him liberally endowed with a goodly Patrimony: converted to lay-uſes ſince the Reformation, under colour of Adminiſtration of the goods of the Biſhoprick; and now by the concluſions at Munſter ſetled for ever on the Electors of Brandenbourg, with the title of Prince of Minden. 20 Rintelin, a ſtrong town, conveniently ſeated on the Weſer, not far from Minden, to the Biſhop whereof it doth belong.

Hitherto one would think that Weſtphalen had formerly been a part of Saint Peters Patrimony belonging wholly to the Clergy; but there are ſome Free Cities, and ſecular Princes which have ſhares therein, as 1 VVarburg, a neat town, but ſeated on an uneven piece of ground neer the River Dimula, a town which tradeth much in good Ale, brewed here, and ſold in all parts of the Country: heretofore a County of it ſelf under the Earls hereof, now governed in the nature of a Free Eſtate, and reckoned an Imperiall City. 2 Brakel, accompted of as Imperiall alſo. 3 Herworden, a town of good ſtrength and note, governed by its own Lawes and Magiſtrates, under the protection of Colen. 4 Lemgow, belonging heretofore to the Earls of Lippe, but by them ſo well priviledged and enfranchiſed, that now it governeth it ſelf as a Free Eſtate. Here is alſo 5 The town and County of Ravensburg, belonging anciently to the Dukes of Cleve, and now in the rights of that houſe to the Elector of Brandenbourg: As alſo 6 the Town and County of Lippe, lying on the weſt ſide of the VVeſer; the Pedegree of the Earls whereof ſome fetch from that Sp. Manlius, who defended the Roman Capitol against the Gauls, (they might as well derive it from the Geese which preserved that Capitol:) others with greater modestie look no higher for it then to the times of Charls the Great, one of the noble Families of the antient Saxons. Some other Lords and Earls here are; but these most considerable: all of them Homagers of the Empire, but their acknowledgments hereof little more then titular; though not long since in danger of performing more reall services: the Emperour Ferdinand the 2. after the surprize of Holstein, and some part of Denemark, anno 1627. gaining so far upon this Countrie, that had not the King of Sweden come in so seasonably he had made himself absolute master of it; and by the opportunity of the situation of it on the back of the Netherlands forced the United States to some great extremities. As for the title of Duke of Westphalen and Engern, it hath been long used (as before was said) by the Bishops of Colen: as also (but with better right) by the house of Lawenburg, descended from the antient Electorall Familie, writing themselves in that regard Dukes of Saxonie, Westphalen, and Angrivaria or Engern.

Bremen.

2 The Bishoprick of BREME lyeth on the other side of the Weser, extending as far as to the Elb, and the German Ocean. So called of 1 Breme the principall Citie seated on the Weser, there broad and navigable; the Citie by that means well traded, populous, and rich, beautified with fair and even streets, and very strongly fortified against all Invasions both by Art and Nature; the town being so seated amongst Fenns, occasioned by the overflowings of the River, that it may be easily drowned on all sides to keep off an Enemie: adorned with a spacious Market-place, a fair Counsell-house, and a large Cathedrall, the See of the Arch-bishop, who is the temporall Lord of the town and territorie. Other Towns of especiall note are 2 Osenbridge, not far from Breme, from whence great quantitie of linnen is brought yearly to England and other places. 3 Arusten on the Weser also. 4 Oterenberg, on the river Bolla, not far from the fall thereof into the Ocean. 5 Buxtertrude, on the Elb, not far from Hamburg, but on the hither side of the water. 6 Stode, Stadt, or Stadium, seated on the River Zuinghe, near the fall thereof into the Elb, accompted the antienteſt town in all Saxonie, and one of the first which was enrolled amongst the Hanse, and by especiall priviledge had the pre-emption of all the Rhenish wine that passed by them, and the right also of coining money. But being over-topped by the power and trade of Hamburg, (5 Dutch miles from it) it grew at length so poor, and in such decay, that their yearly Revenues came but to 90*l. per annum*, so that they were fain to sell their priviledges to the Town of Hamburg, and put themselves under the protection of the Bishops of Breme: Revived again upon the comming thither of the English Merchants, who finding some hard measure from the Hamburgers fixed their Staple here: by means whereof the Citizens in short time grew exceeding wealthy: the buildings fair and beautifull, the town strongly fortified. Situate in a place so easily overwhelmed with water, that the people in ostentation of their strength and securitie used to have Ordinance of stone planted over their Gates. But the late German wars have made them sensible of their folly: when notwithstanding their new works and an English Garrison under Sir Charls Morgan, they were compelled to submit themselves to the Earl of Tilly, anno 1627. recovered after by the Swedes in the course of their victories.

As for the Bishoprick of Bremen it was first founded by Charls the Great in the person of Willibode an English Saxon, one of the first Preachers of the Gospel in these parts of this Country. The town before that time a poor Village only, being made an Archiepiscopall See, and the Metropolitan of all the Churches of the North, quickly grew up into esteem, as the Bishops did in power and Patrimonie, till they became Lords of all this tract. Governed since the Reformation of Religion, by Lay-Bishops or Administrators of the Rents of the Bishoprick, which under that title they inverted to their proper use. And now of late by the Conclusions made at Munster setled as an inheritance on the Crown of Sweden to be enjoyed together with the Bishoprick of Verda, by the Kings thereof with the title of Dukes of Breme and Verden: the antient liberties of those Cities formerly granted by their Bishops, being still preserved.

EAST-FRISELAND.

EAST-FRISELAND is bounded on the East with the River Weser, by which parted from Westphalen; on the West with the River Ems which parteth it from Groyningen and the rest of West-Friseland; on the North with the German Ocean, and on the South with the Earldom of Mark, a part of Cleveland. So called from the Frisii, who casting out the old inhabitants possessed themselves of it, and called it by their own name Friseland: divided by the Ems or Amisus, into the Western spoken of amongst the Netherlands, and the Eastern or East-Friseland in which now we are.

The nature of the soil we shall see anon when we come to the subdivisions of it. Chief Rivers, besides those of Ems, and 2 Weser, spoken of elsewhere, 3 Juda, which falleth into a great Bay or Arm of the Ocean, called from hence Die Jadie. 4 Dalliart, on which standeth the Citie of Emden; 5 Delm, and 6 Honta, neighboured by Delmenhorst and Oldenborch, towns of this Countrie. The whole divided into 1 the Countie of Emden, or East-Friseland properly so called, and 2 the Earldom of Oldenburg.

1 EAST-FRISELAND specially so called, hath on the West the River Ems, on the North the Ocean, on the East and South the Earldom of Oldenburg; called also the Countie of

EMDEN

East Friseland.

EMDEN, from the fair Town of Emden, the chief Citie of it. The soil hereof is very fruitfull both in corn and pasturage, sending great store of Oxen, Horses, Wool, Swine, Butter, Cheese, and all sorts of Grain into other Countries; all of them excellent in their kind, not easily to be bettered (if equalled) in any place whatsoever. Chief towns herein are 1 Emden, so called from the Ems, on which it is situate: Dollaert a smal River falling here into it: a noted and wel traded town, beautified with a Haven so deep & large, that the greatest ships with ful sail are admitted into it. The people rich, affirmed to have 60 ships of 100 tuns apeece, and 600 lesser Barks of their own, besides 700 Busses and Fisher boats, maintained for the most part, by their Herring-fishing on the Coast of England. The buildings generally fair, both private and publick, especially the Church, the Town-Hall, and Earls Palace. This last a strong and stately Castle, situate at the mouth of the Haven, and on all sides compassed by the Sea, and yet not strong enough to preserve the Townsmen in their due obedience: who about 50 years agoe, taking advantage of the absence of their Earl, kept him out of their Town, because he seemed not to approve the Calvinian humor; and have since governed in the nature of a Common-wealth confederate with the States of the United Provinces, for their better establishment and support. So easily is Religion made a mask to disguise Rebellion. 2 Aurich, by some called Anseling, seated in the Inlands, rich, and well walled, of great resort by reason of the pleasure of Hunting, afforded very liberally in the Forrests and Woods adjoining; drawing hither the Nobilitie and Gentrie in great abundance. 3 Esen, on the Sea shore, which gives the title of an Earl to the Lord thereof, as doth also 4 Jevere, situate on the West of the River Jada, but both Earls subject to the Earl of East-Friseland. 5 Vredeburg (that is to say, the Free Village) so called from some Immunities granted by the Earls, possessed a while by those of Brunswick, who fenced and garrisoned it for themselves; but in the end recovered by Ezard the 2. Earl. 6 Broick, the seat and proper Government of the Ancestors of these Earls: from whence the parts adjoining are called Broickmerland. 7 Norden, another Præfecture or Captain-ship of the said Ancestors. 8 Dunort, a strong Castle and retiring place of the Earls. 9 Linghen, upon the Ems, a strong town well fortified and as well garrisoned, belonging to the King of Spain as Vicar to the Empire over all Friseland, even to Ditmersh and the confines of Danemark. A dignitie procured by Maximilian, Grandfather to Charls the 5. of the Emperour Frederick the 3. in right whereof, the King of Spain as heir of the House of Burgundie, hath some preheminence over Emden, of little use to him since the falling off of the Belgick Provinces. More towns of note I find not in it, but of Castles, stately dwelling houses, and well built Villages, an incredible number, standing so thick that in many places they join together: some of them being withall so large, so well peopled, and of streets so spacious that they may compare with many Cities in Germanie, of the which the most City-like is named Leere.

The ancient Inhabitants hereof were the Chauci Minores, described by Plinie to be so barbarous a people, and so destitute of all necessarie provision for the life of man, that they had no drinke but rain water, preserved in great troughs before the doors of their Cottages. These outed or subdued by the Frisons, a neighbouring people possessing North-Holland, the District of Vtrecht, with the Countries of Groyning and West-Friseland: who having once passed over the Ems, extended their Dominions as far as Danemark. Governed by Kings, but intermingled with and overpowered by the Saxons, till the time of Charls the Great, by whom the last King Roboald overcome in fight was perswaded to receive the Sacrament of holy Baptisme. But being told that his friends and kinsfolks were in hell, because no Christians: Neither will I (said he) be of that profession, for I love to be amongst my kindred. After this Friseland was a Member of the French kingdom, till the erecting of the Earldom of Holland by Charls the Bald, anno 893. at which time all Friseland on the West side of the Ems was conferred upon him: possessed, but not without much war and bloudshed, by his Successours; the Frisons ever and anon rebelling against them, and killing divers of them in the open field. Those parts of it on the other side of the Ems, remained unto the German Empire, governed by Deputies, Lieutenants, and Provinciall Earls, accomptable to the Emperours for their Administration, till the year 1453. in which Vlrick Governor hereof for the Emperor Frederick, having got the Town of Emden out of the hands of the Hamburgers, was made Earl of East-Friseland, transmitting the Estate and title unto his posterity.

EARLS of EAST-FRISELAND.

1453	1	Vlricus son of Enno, the son of Ezardus, Captains or Governours for the Empire in Broick and Norden, made the first Earl of East-Friseland by the Emperour Frederick.
1466	2	Ezard the son of Vlrick, who got Vreburg from the Citizens of Brunswick.
1528	3	Enno the son of Ezard, who regained Greetzil, formerly usurped by the Dukes of Guelders.
1540	4	Ezard II. sonne of Enno, who married Katharine daughter to Gustavus the first of Sweden.
	5	Enno II. son of Ezard the 2. and the Lady Katharine.
1586	6	Rudolphus Christianus son of Enno the 2. who being well affected to the Lutheran formes, (first introduced in the time of Enno the 1.) was by a Calvinian partie grown up in Emden, dispossessed of that Citie, anno 1592.
1608	7	Enno Ludovicus, son of Rudolphus Christianus, succeeded in this Earldom on the death of his Father, and is still living for ought I can hear unto the contrary.

The Arms of the Earls of East-Friseland, are Azure, Semi of Billets Argent, 2 Lyons Or.

2. The Earldom of OLDENBOVRG, containeth that part of this Country which lyeth on the West side of the Weser, betwixt the Bishoprick of Munster and East-Friseland, specially so called; and so extending Northwards to the German Ocean. So called from Oldenburg the chief Citie of it, and the head of this Earldom. Oldenburg.

The soil hereof exceeding rich but in pastures specially, which breed them in time Herds of Cattel; and furnish not this Country only, but some of their German neighbours, and many of the more Northern Nations with Horses, Beeves, Sheep, Swine, Butter, Cheese. Here is also good store of Pulse, Barley, and Oats, plenty of fruits and trees of all sorts. Large woods, and those well stored with Venison, which yeeld unto the Gentry the delights of hunting. But the air cold and foggie in some extremitie, especially in Winter, and near the Sea.

Chief towns hereof are, 1 Oldenborch on the River Hunta, repaired if not built by Otho the Great, who founded the Church of S. John Baptist: A town of no great state or beautie, the houses generally of clay, but the Castle (the dwelling place of the Earls) of well hewn stones; of an orbicular form with deep ditches of water, the Town and Castle both being strongly fortified. 2 Delmenhorst, on the river Delm, a strong place and of great importance, built in the year 1247. by Otho brother of Earl Christian the 2. and having been 65 years in possession of the Bishops of Munster, was suddenly surprised on Palm Sunday morning by Anthony Earl of Oldenburg, anno 1547. continuing ever since part of this estate. 3 Beck-husen, on a River which falleth not far off into the great Bay or Arm of the Sea, which is called Die Jade. 4 Eqnarten, 5 Ovelgard, both seated in a long Langnet or Demy-Iland, betwixt the said Die Jade, and the River Weser, called Butiada, both taken, and the last well fortified by John Earl of Oldenborch, anno 1520. belonging formerly to the Prefecture of East Friseland, but never brought under the command of the Earls thereof. 6 Westerberg, the chief town, of a spatious territorie. 7 Urieiade, a strong piece, on the river Jade, built by Earl Christiern, one of the younger branches of the house of Oldenburg, about the year 1400. 8 Mellum, 9 Jadele, places of principall importance, the one on the river Jade, the other near the Ocean. Here is also within this Earldom the Province of Amerlander, supposed by some to have been the seat of the Ambrones, who accompanyed the Cimbri and Teutones in their expedition towards the Roman Provinces, and were slain by Marius.

As for the Earls of Oldenburg, they derive themselves from Walpert one of the Nephews of Witikindus, the last King and first Duke of the Saxons, who having built a strong Castle on the borders of Bremen in honour of his wife Alteburg, (whom he dearly loved) called it Alteburgum, so called by the Latinists to this day, by the Germans Oldenborch, about the year 850. But his male issue failing in Frederick the 7. Earl, it came to one Elimar, the son of Haio, a Noble man of the Frisian bloud, who had married Richsa, the daughter of John, the fift Earl of this Familie. From him in a direct line descended Christian or Christiern, eldest son of Theodorick, who being fortunately advanced to the Crown of Denemark, anno 1448. left his estate in this Earldome (but reserving the title, according to the fashion of Germanie) to his brother Gerrard; the better to take him off from his pretentions to the Dukedom of Slesvick, and the Earldom of Holst, in which he did pretend a share. The Patrimonie of it much improved by the addition of the Countries of Rustingen, Oystingen, and Wangerland, all lying on the German Sea, bequeathed by the last will and testament of the Lady Marie Countesse of Jevere in East Friseland, to John Earl of Oldenburg, the third from Gerrard. The Succession of these Earls, in regard the Royall line of Denemark, and by consequence of Great Britain is descended from them, I have here subjoined, in this ensuing Catalogue of

The EARLS of OLDENBOVRG.

850	1	Walpert, of the race of Witikind, the first Earl of Oldenburg.
856	2	Theodorik, the son of Walpert.
	3	Theodorick II. son of Theodorick the 1.
	4	Otho son of Theodorick the 2.
	5	John, the son of Otho, accompanied the Emperour Henry the 2. in his wars against the Greeks and Saracens, anno 1007.
	6	Huno surnamed the Glorious, son of John.
	7	Frederick, son of Huno, fortunate in his wars against the Frisians, the last of the male line of this house.
	8	Elimarus, the son of Haio, a Noble man of the Frisian bloud, and of Richsa his wife, the daughter of John the fift Earl.
1120	9	Elimarus II. the son of Elimar the 1.
	10	Christianus, son of Elimar the 2. surnamed the Courageous, or the Warlike, a professed enemy of Henry the Lyon Duke of Saxonie, from whom he tooke the Citie of Breme.
	11	Maurice, the son of Christian, an associate of Arnulph Earl of Holstein, in his wars with Denemark.
	12	Christian II. son of Maurice.
	13	John II. son of Christian the 2.
	14	John III. son of John the 2.

15 Conrade,

Oldenbourg

15 Courade, the ſon of John the 3.

16 Chriſtian III. ſon of Conrade, a ſtudent in Colen, where initiated into holy Orders, which he relinquiſhed much againſt the will of his brother Maurice, on the death of his Father.

17 Theodorick, ſon of Chriſtian the 3. the firſt Farl of Delmenhorſt of this line, which fell to him by the death of Nicholas Archbiſhop of Breme, deſcended from a younger ſon of John the 2.

1440 18 Chriſtian IV. ſon of Theodorick, and of Heduigis ſiſter and heir of Gerrard and Adolphus Dukes of Sleſwick and Earls of Holſtein, elected on the commendation of his Uncle Adolphus to the Crown of Danemark, anno 1448.

1448 19 Gerrard the brother of Chriſtian the 4. a Prince of an unquiet ſpirit, alwayes in wars, and alwayes worſted; he loſt the Town of Delmenhorſt to the Biſhop of Munſter.

1500 20 John IV. ſon of Gerrard, repaired the ruines of his Eſtate, and ſetled the diſtractions of it in the time of his Father, being then in exile; and after very much enlarged it by the reduction of Butiada.

1526 21 Antonie, the ſon of John the 4. by a ſudden ſurpriſe recovered Delmenhorſt from the Biſhop of Munſter, anno 1547. which he ſtrongly fortified.

1573 22 John V. ſon of Antonie, enlarged this Earldome with the Provinces of Fuſtingen, Oyſtingen, and Wangerland, bequeathed to him by the laſt will of the Counteſſe of Jevere in Eaſt Friſeland.

23 Anthonie II. brother of John the 5. in whoſe life time he was Earl of Delmenhorſt, and after his death of Oldenburg alſo: ſtill living, anno 1649. for ought I can learn unto the contrary.

And thus we ſee the preſent eſtate of Germanie, diſtracted and divided amongſt many Princes, Prelates and Incorporate Towns, the chief of which are herein mentioned and deſcribed. But beſides theſe there are many others of leſſe note, and ſmaller Territories, which yet are abſolute and free: inſomuch, that in one dayes riding, a Traveller may twice or thrice meet with divers lawes, and divers coins; every free Prince and free Citie (whoſe laws the Emperours are ſworn to keep inviolable) having power to make what lawes, and coin what money they will. And hence in the cenſure of Kingdoms, the King of Spain is ſaid to be Rex hominum, becauſe of his Subjects reaſonable obedience; the King of France, Rex Aſinorum, becauſe of their infinite taxes and impoſitions; the King of England, Rex Diabolorum, becauſe of his Subjects often inſurrections againſt, and depoſitions of their Princes: but the Emperour of Germanie, is called Rex Regum, becauſe there is ſuch a number of Reguli, or Free Princes which live under his command; or rather at their owne command, (for they do even what they liſt) as the Emperour Maximilian the firſt, well noted.

And to ſay truth, the publick Government hereof is nothing leſſe then Monarchi call: the Emperour being accompted amongſt the Princes but as the chief Officer of the Empire, not reckoned of by Bodin and others of our great Statiſts and Civilians, as an abſolute Monarch; ſuch as the Kings of England, France, and Spain, are confeſſed to be. For the priviledges of the Free Cities being made perpetuall, the great Eſtates hereditarie, and the Empire eligible: the Emperours were brought at laſt to ſuch low condition, as to be made accomptable to the States of the Empire: who if they be perſwaded in their conſciences, or but think they be ſo, that he is likely by his mal-adminiſtration to deſtroy the Empire, or that he will not hearken unto good adviſe, ab Electorum Collegio Cæſarea majeſtate privari poteſt (as my Author hath it) he may be deprived by the Electors, and a more fit and able man choſen into the place: and that too as the Emperour Jodocus Barbatus hath declared in one of his Conſtitutions, anno 1410. ſine infidelitatis vel Rebellionis crimine, without incurring the crimes of treaſon or diſloyaltie. So that the ſupreme power and majeſtie of the Empire ſeems to reſide eſpecially and contractedly in the Electorall Colledge; diffuſedly in the Imperial Diets, by way of execution in the Chamber of Spires, and other the ſupreme Courts of the ſeverall Circles. But that which makes that body which they call the Empire, is the Aſſembly of the Prelates, Princes and Commiſſioners of the Free Cities in their Diets or Parliaments, the Emperour preſiding in them: whom he that ſaw adorned in his royall Robes with the Imperiall Crown and Scepter, with the titles of Cæſar and Auguſtus given at every word, would think that the whole action did take life from him. Whereas indeed he hath not ſo much priviledge as a negative voice, but is to put in execution ſuch Decrees and Sanctions as theſe Eſtates aſſembled have thought fit to make; not able to doe any Act by his own authority, which may ſpeak him Emperour. But on the other ſide the Princes take power unto themſelves, of making laws for, and impoſing taxes on their ſubjects: of raiſing war upon one another or againſt a third, and doing many other Acts of ſupreme authoritie which in the Emperour would be counted matters of mal-adminiſtration. Such points as theſe, together with the appointing of Judges and the like chief Magiſtrates (as they relate unto the Empire) are not to be concluded of but in generall Diets, which may be ſummoned by or without the Emperour, as occaſion ſerveth. And to this weakning of the majeſtie and power Imperiall, the neighbouring Princes have afforded their beſt aſſiſtance; jealous of their own intereſſe and decreaſe of power, if that vaſt body ſo well limbed ſhould be ſtrongly jointed, and all the ſeverall Members of it united under the command of one Supreme head. Clear proof whereof we have in thoſe ſolemn leagues and confederations made in their ſeverall verall times againſt Charls the 5. and the late Emperour Ferdinand the 2. as ſoon as they began to be in ſome poſſibilitie of ſetling the Imperiall majeſtie in its proper ſplendour, and bringing down the Princes to a lower pitch.

As for the Forces of the Empire, for by that name we are to meaſure the abilities and power of Germanie, we may diſcern them by thoſe Levies which have been raiſed upon particular occaſions, or by the joint conſent of the Free Eſtates aſſembled in the Imperiall Diets. Firſt for particular Levies made by private perſons, we find 12000 Foot and 8000 Horſe raiſed by the Prince Palatine of Zweybruck for aid of the French Hugonots againſt their King; and on the other ſide no fewer then 7000 Horſe under the conduct of the Duke of Aumal, and the Earl of Mansfield for the ſervice of that King againſt the Hugonots. And as for Levies made by conſent of the States, we find that Charls the 5. had under his Enſigns at Vienna, 90000 Foot and 35000 Horſe; Maximilian the 2. at Javerin in Hungarie, 34000 Horſe, and full 100000 Foot; and finally that in the war betwixt Charls the 5. and the Proteſtant Princes, there were no leſſe then 150000 men on both ſides; which numbers no one Countrie in Europe is able to equall. In a word, it is generally conceived that the Empire is able to raiſe 200000 Horſe and Foot, with Arms, Canon and Ammunition of all ſorts, proportionable; which the inſtances before brought do moſt plainly evidence.

Touching the Revenue of the Empire, I find them eſtimated by Boterus, and ſome others ſince at ſeven millions of Crowns yearly. Which may be true enough, taking the Kingdoms of Hungarie and Bohemia, with the hereditary Eſtates of Auſtria into the accompt. But ſince they are not ſo united unto the Empire, but they may at ſome time or other be disjoined again, no reaſon they ſhould come into the reckoning, unleſſe it be as the Revenue of the Emperour, though not of the Empire. But as for the Revenue of the Empire it ſelf, taken abſtractedly from the perſonall and patrimoniall Eſtate of the Emperour, whoſoever he be; it can amount to no ſuch ſum: the tribute paid by the Free or Imperiall Cities (at leaſt 60 in number) amounting to no more per annum then 15000 Florens or 1500*l. Engliſh*; and what is that but like a Pepper corn for a quit-rent in that mighty Continent. By this we may conjecture what the reſt may come to. And though in the way of ſaving charges (which may be reckoned as a part of his income alſo) the Princes and Free Cities be bound to aid him in the time of war againſt the Turk with 3842 Horſe and 16200 Foot, which he may challenge without troubling the Diets for it; yet war is ſuch a great devourer, that if the Diets doe not grant him greater helps, he is like to be but a ſorry gainer by the undertaking; beſides the ſmalneſſe of thoſe forces conſidered with the numbers they are able to raiſe, and the puiſſance of the enemie whom they are to encounter.

Finally for the Arms of the Empire, they are Sol, an Eagle diſplayed with two heads, Saturn, armed and crowned Mars: the two heads ſignifying (as ſome think) the Eaſtern and the Weſtern Empires. Cuſpinian a learned German conceives rather that theſe Arms are two Eagles conjoined, and not one Eagle with two heads: and that they were taken up by the German Nation in memorie of the three Legions of Quintilius Varus diſcomfited by them; at what time they ſeiſed on two of the Roman Eagles (the Militarie Enſign of that people) the third being caſt into the Fennes by the Standard bearer. But whether it be one or two, certain it is that the one head is quite pulled off; and the whole bodie quite ſtripped of all its Feathers, the Imperiall dignitie being little more then titular, diſpoiled and ſtript of all Authority appertaining to it.

DENMARK.

THE Kingdome of DENMARK or DANEMARK, reckoning in the additions of the Dukedom of Holſtein and the great continent of Norway with the Iſles thereof, now all united and incorporated into one Eſtate; is bounded on the East with the Baltick Sea, and ſome part of Sweden; on the Weſt with the main Weſtern Ocean; on the North-east with a part of Sweden; full North with the main Frozen Seas; and on the South with Germanie, from which divided on the South-weſt by the River Albis; and on the South-east by the Trave; a little Iſthmus or neck of Land uniting it to that Continent.

It tooke this name from the Danes, of long times the Inhabitants and Poſſeſſours of it; ſo called quaſi Danorum tractus ſive Regio, (as Mercator hath it,) becauſe the Countrie of that people: but rather quaſi Danorum limes, the bounds or marches of the Danes, bordering cloſe upon the Dutch, from whom it had the name of Danemarch.

As for the ſituation of it in regard of the Heavens, it lieth partly in the Northern temperate Zone, and partly within the Artick Circle, extending from the middle Parallel of the tenth Clime, or 55. degree of Latitude, where it joineth with Germanie, as far as the 71 degree, where it hath no other bound but the Frozen Ocean. By which accompt the longeſt day in the moſt Southern parts hereof is 17 hours and a quarter, but in the parts extremely North, they have no night for two whole months, three weeks, one day, and ſome ſeven hours over, as on the other ſide no day for the like quantitie of time, when the Sun is moſt remote from them in the other Tropick. The air hereof by conſequence muſt be ſharp and bitter, even in the very warmeſt places: Of which and of the nature of the ſoile wee ſhall ſpeak more punctually in the Deſcription and Survey of the ſeverall parts.

The Inhabitants generally are of good ſtature, clear of complexion, well coloured, for the moſt part healthfull and long-lived: for though they eat and drink beyond meaſure, they have good digeſtions. In manners very ſevere, craftie and provident in the managing of their Affairs; but proud withall, and (as the Hiſtorian ſaid of another perſon) omnium quæ dixerant fecerantve oſtentatores, great Vaunters of whatſoever they do or ſay, highly opinionated of their own actions, and peremptorie in maintaining their own opinions: Religious obſervers of their words and contracts, and ſtrict in executing juſtice, eſpecially in puniſhing of Theeves and Pirats: Such of them as do follow the wars prove reaſonable good Souldiers both by Sea and Land; but fitter for the Sea then field-ſervice: the Magiſtrate wiſe rather by experience then ſtudie: though they love learning, and eaſily attain all languages which they give their minds to: the old men covetous, the young men thriftie, and the Merchant ambitious: the Nobilitie and Gentrie are generally of as antient families as moſt in Chriſtendom, here being ſome of thoſe houſes ſtill remaining, which were preſent at the pacification made betwixt Charls the Great, and Hemingus King of the Danes: and which addes much unto their honour, they keep their bloud unmixt from marriages with the Vulgar ſort, and reckon it for an high diſgrace to change their Arms, or make any addition thereunto. The women are fair, diſcreet and courteous, and know well how to govern their houſholds; exceeding fruitfull in bearing Children, but delivered of them with great difficultie. Both Sexes ſpeake the Dutch or German, common (but with ſome difference in the pronunciation) to all the Northern Nations in Norwey and Swethland. The Cimbrick Cherſoneſe.

The Chriſtian faith was firſt preached to thoſe of Holſtein (the next neighbouring Countrey unto Germany) by S. Angarius Biſhop of Bremen, the generall Apoſtle of thoſe Northern parts, in the yeare 826. Lewis the Godly then being Emperour of the Weſt. In whoſe time Harald King of Denmark being expulſed his Kingdomes by the ſonnes of Godfrey or Gottricus, was baptized at Mentz with a great number of that people which attended on him, by the hands of Ebbo Archbiſhop of Rhemes, employed by the Emperour in that ſervice: the converſion of the whole Nation following not long after, by the power and diligence of the Emperour Otho the firſt, aſſiſted by the Miniſtery of one Poppo the firſt Biſhop of Arthuſen, Sueno, or Swain, then reigning amongſt the Danes. The Norwegians came not in till after, converted in the reign of Olaus the third, anno 1055 or thereabouts: the Engliſh aſſiſting in the work, and the good King ſo zealous in it, that hee was canonized a Saint, after his deceaſe. Relapſing for the moſt part to their antient Gentiliſme, they were finally regained unto Chriſtianity, by the means of Pope Adrian the fourth, an Engliſh man, about the yeare 1156. before his aſſuming of the Popedom called Nicolaus Breakſpeare. But by whomſoever firſt converted, the Popes of Rome would needs pretend ſome power and juriſdiction over them, which when they began to exerciſe with too much authority, Waldemar the third is ſaid to have returned this anſwer, Naturam habemus a deo, Regnum a ſubditis, Divitias a parentibus, Religionem a Romana Eccleſia, quam ſi nobis invides renunciamus per præſentes, that is to ſay, We hold our life from God, our Crown from our ſubjects, our Riches from our Anceſtors, our Religion from the Church of Rome; which if we envy us, we do here remit it by theſe preſents. But this renunciation though then threatened, was not made till afterwards: when the whole maſſe of Popery was aboliſhed by King Frederick the firſt, uſing therein the Miniſtery of John Bugenhage a Divine of Pomeren; by whom reformed according to the doctrine of the Lutheran Churches.

As for the Government of the Church ſince that Reformation, it continueth as before it was, by Archbiſhops and Biſhops in number as before, but much abridged of their Revenues, and a great part of their power. For Frederick, though he found it neceſſary to remove the old Biſhops, (not one of which would be perſwaded to the change of Religion) yet he ſubſtituted others in their places: allowing them a convenient maintenance, with a power of Preſidence in all Church-Aſſemblies, where they are to take the advice of other Presbyters along with them; and out of ſuch Aſſemblies to receive complaints, to provide remedie againſt ſcandals, and to order all matters, as peculiar Inſpectors, which concerne the Church. So that in all the Kings Dominions there are two Archbiſhops, and thirteen Biſhops: that is to ſay, the Archbiſhop of Londen, the Biſhops of Roſebilt, Odenſee, Ripen, Wiborch, Arthuſen, Bleſwitk, and Hadderſtene, for the Kingdome of Denmark; the Archbiſhop of Nidroſia, the Biſhops of Bergen, Anſlo, Stuffanger, and Hammar, for the Realm of Norwey; and the Biſhops of Holar and Schalbolt, for the Iſle of Iſeland: the Churches of Holſtein, (formerly under the Biſhops of Hamburg and Lubeck) being governed by Super-intendents as the reſt of the Lutherans.

The whole body of the eſtate (as appears by this) conſiſteth chiefly of three members; viz. 1 the Dukedome of Holſtein, containing Wagerland, Ditmarſh, Stormaria and Holſtein ſpecially ſo called: 2 the Kingdome of Denmark comprehending both Jutlands, part of Scandia, and the Hemodes or Baltick Iſlands: and 3 the Kingdom of Norwey, conſiſting of Norwey it ſelf, and the Iſlands of the Northern Ocean. Which parts we ſhall ſurvey in order, as before laid downe, premiſing firſt a word or two of the Cimbrick Cherſoneſe, in which the Dukedome of Holſtein, and the two Jutlands are contained.

The CIMBRICK CHERSONESE.

The CIMBRICK CHERSONESE, hath on the East the Baltick Sea, on the Weſt the main German Ocean, on the North the narrow Streit or Fretum which they call the Sunde, on the South-weſt the great river of Albis, on the South-eaſt the ſmall River of Trave; betwixt which is the neck or Iſthmus which unites it to Germanie. I know that ſome contract it into narrower bounds, and limit it upon the South with the river Eydore: but I have drawn it down to the Elve and the Trave, which give it more reſemblance to the Cherſoneſe or Deny-Iſland then the other doth: differting in this point from the common opinion. It had the name of Cherſoneſus ἀπὸ τῆς χερσὸς ἢ νήσου, a terra & inſula, it being the ſame with a Peninſula in the Latine: of which name there were five moſt famous, that is to ſay, 1 Peloponneſus in Greece, which is now called Morea; 2 Thracia Cherſoneſus in Thrace, neer the Sea Propontis; 3 Taurica Cherſoneſus in the Euxine Sea, now a part of Tartarie; 4 Aurea Cherſoneſus in India, which we now call Malacca; of all which we ſhall ſpeak in their proper places) and 5 Cimbrica Cherſoneſus, where now we are. This laſt ſo called from the Cimbri, the firſt inhabitants hereof, originally deſcended from Gomer the ſonne of Japhet, thence called Gomerii, and Cimmerii, by contraction Cimbri. Leaving the plains of Phrygia, as too narrow for them, they ſought out new dwellings, and are ſaid to have firſt dwelt in the banks of Palus Mæotis, where they gave name to Boſphorus Cimmerius, there being. Being overcome by the Scythians, they removed their ſeats more Northward into a Countrey bounded, according to Plutarch, by the great Ocean, on the one ſide; and the forreſt of Hercynia, on the other; within Wagerland. in which bounds is the Peninsula or countrey where we now are. They were a people of extraordinary big stature, having blew and red eyes, and lived most upon theft: so that for their sakes, Κλεβρους ὑπονομάζειν Γέρμανοι τὰς λῃστὰς, the Germans called all theeves Cimbers. It hapned that the Ocean overflowing a great part of their Countrey, compelled them to seek new seats: whereupon in great multitudes abandoning their dwellings, they petitioned the Romans, then lording over a great part of the World, for some place to settle in. This request being denyed, they proceeded in another manner, winning with their swords, what their Petitions could not obtain. Manlius, Sillanus, and Cepio, all Roman Consuls perished by them; so that now (saith Florus) Actium esset de Imperio Romano nisi illi seculo Marius contigisset: for he, as we have elsewhere told you, utterly overthrew them. The next Inhabitans hereof were the Saxons, Iuites, and Angles, upon whose removall into Brittaine the greatest part of it was peopled by the Danes, who still possesse it.

It containeth in length about 100 Italian miles, and 80 of the same miles in the breadth; and comprehendeth in that tract or extent of grownd, 30 walled townes, 6 Episcopall Sees, (besides those of Hamburg and Lubeck, which are under the Archbishop of Bremen) and 20 Royall Castles and Palaces, as well for the reception of the Nobles and great men of the Countrey, as the private retirements of the King. The soil naturally more fit for pasturage then tillage; feeding such multitudes of Oxen, that from hence no fewer then 50000 are sent yearly to Germanie. Divided at the present into the Dukedome of Holstein, and the Province of Iuitland.

1. HOLSTEIN.

The Dukedome of HOLSTEIN taketh up the Southern part of the Cimbrick Chersonese where it joins to Germanie, extending as far North, as the River Eydore, which divides it from Iuitland. So called from the Dutch word Holt, which signifies a Wood or Forrest, according to the nature of it; the Countrey being low, marishie and full of Woods, as it continueth to this day. It contains in it these foure Provinces, 1 Wagerland, 2 Stormarsh, 3 Ditmarsh, and 4 Holst, or Holstein specially so called.

1 WAGERLAND is that part of Holstein which lies on the South East of this Chersonese, bounded on the East with Mecklenbourg and the Baltick sea; on the West with Holstein specially so called; on the North with the Sea Baltick also; on the South with some part of Mecklenbourg. So called from the Wagrii, a Tribe or Nation of the Sclaves who possessed this tract; from whence the name of Wagria in our Latine writers.

Chief townes hereof are 1 Lubeck, pleasantly seated on the confluence of the Trave and the Billow, neer the fall thereof into the Baltick from which distant five Italian miles. The River capable of ships of a thousand Tun, which commonly they unlade at Tremuren, the Port Towne to the City, seated upon the very brink of the Sea, where the united Rivers have their fall into it, it was first built by Adolph the second Earl of Holstein, anno 1143. but so well priviledged by him and his next successours, that in short time it bid defiance to its founders, (the cause of many differences betwixt it and those Princes) and was made a Dukedome of it selfe. By Frederick the first it was united to the Empire, after whose death they chose themselves another Duke, who having governed them five years was subdued by the Danes, and the City made subject to that Kingdome; remaining so till delivered by the Emperour Frederick the second. By whom being once again infranchised, it became Imperiall: afterwards listed amongst the Hansetownes, and the first in estimation of all the company, having above 600 ships of all sorts (some of a thousand Tun and and upwards) which belong unto it. But being their Trade is for the most part on the Baltick Seas, which are generally free from Pirats, they are most of them built for burden, and are slow of sail, and little serviceable, if at all, for a fight at Sea. But to return unto the City, it is built upon all the sides of a rising hill, on the top whereof standeth the Church of Saint Marie, (once the Cathedrall of the City, for it was Episcopall) whence is a descent to all the gates of the City, affording to the Eye a most pleasing prospect. The buildings very beautifull, and all of brick, the streets streight and even; the Churches (ten in number) in good repair, adorned with excellent imagerie, and much admired even by skilfull workmen: and unto every private house a pipe of water is conveyed from the publick Conduit; according to the pattern whereof it hath been observed that the Conduits were first made in London, and other places. In a word, there is not any City of Germany, or the more Northern Countries, which can equallize it either for the beauty and uniformity of the houses, the pleasant gardens, fair streets, delightfull walks without the wals, or for the Citizens themselves, who are much commended for their civilitie to strangers, and strict execution of justice without partiality. The whole in compasse about six miles, fortified with a double wall, deep ditches, and unfordable Rivers. 2 Segeberg on the River Trave, four Dutch miles from Lubeck, and neer the head of that River. 3 Oldesso on the same River, in the midst betwixt both. 4 Gronneberg, and 5 Newkirk on the Baltick shore: and 6 Stendorp more within the land, neer the edge of a lake out of which runs the River Swentin.

Southwest of Wagerland lieth STORMARSH, betwixt the Elb and two lesse Rivers called the Billen and the Store; from which last and the marishnesse of the situation, or from that River and the Marsi, once the Inhabitants hereof, comes the name of Stormarsh. Places of most importance are 1 Crempe, on a little River ſo named, which falls not far off into the Store, and both together not much further into the Elb. A town well fortified by Chriſtian the fourth, and reckoned one of the Keies of the Kingdom; as well appears by the reſiſtance which it made to the Duke of Friuland, againſt whom it held out 13 months, and yeelded at the laſt upon good conditions, anno 1628. 2 Tychenberg, (Tychopolis my Author cals it) a Dutch mile from Crempe, but on the very bank of the river Elb, where it receives the Rbin, a ſmall River upon which it is ſeated: firſt built and after very well fortified by Chriſtiern the fourth, of purpoſe to command the Elb, and put a ſtronger bridle in the mouths of the Hamburgers, anno 1603. now held to be the ſtrongeſt peece of all his Dominions; the onely Town of all this Dukedome, which yeelded not to the prevailing Imperialiſts in their late wars againſt the Danes, anno 1628. 3 Bredenberg a ſtrong town, belonging to the Rantzoves, one of the beſt pieces of the Kingdome; remarkable for the ſtout reſiſtance which it made to Wallenſtein, (Duke of Fridland) in the war aforeſaid: who at laſt taking it by aſſault put all the ſouldiers to the ſword. 4 Pippenberg, another ſtrong place, and of very great conſequence. 5 Jetzeba, on the River Store. 6 Gluck-Stude, upon a Creek or Bay of the German Ocean, repaired and fortified by the ſaid Chriſtiern the fourth (who much delighted in the place) to command the paſſage up the Elb. 7 Store. 8 Hamburg upon the Billen, where it falls into the Elb; an antient City built in the time of the Saxons, repaired by Charles the Great, and walled by the Emperour Henry the fourth. Accounted ſince that time an Imperiall City, and made one of the Hanſe on the firſt incorporating of thoſe Towns. Which notwithſtanding, on a controverſie ariſing about that time, betwixt the Earl of Holſtein and the people hereof, it was adjudged to belong to the Earles of Holſt, and that determination ratified by Charles the fourth, anno 1374. In purſuance whereof the Hamburgers took the Oath of Allegeance to Chriſtiern Earl of Oldenburg, the firſt King of Denmark of that houſe, as Earl of Holſt; acknowledging him and his ſucceſſours for their lawfull Lords: though ſince they have endeavoured to ſhake off that yoak, preſuming very much on their power at Sea, and the aſſiſtance which they are aſſured of upon all occaſions from the reſt of the Hanſetownes. As for the Town it ſelfe, it is ſeated in a large plain, with fat and rich paſtures round about it: well fortified by art and nature: the Haven being ſhut up with a ſtrong iron chain. The buildings for the moſt part of brick, but more beautifull then well contrived, and the ſtreets ſomewhat of the narroweſt. The publick ſtructures very fair, eſpecially the Counſell houſe adorned with the Statua's of the nine Worthies carved with very great Art; the Exchange or meeting place for Merchants, and nine large Churches. The Citizens generally rich, maſters of many as great ſhips as ſail on the Ocean, ſome of them 1200 tun in burden; which bring in great profit beſides the great reſort of Merchants and their Factors from moſt places elſe: ſometimes the Staple town for the Cloth of England, removed on ſome diſcontents to Stode, and from thence to Holland. It is obſerved that there was in this town at one time 177 Brewers, and but 40 Bakers, nor more then one Lawyer and one Phyſitian. The reaſon of which diſproportion was, that a Cup of Nimis was their only Phyſick; their differences ſooner ended over a Can then by order of Law; and Bread being accounted but a binder, and ſo not to be uſed but in caſe of neceſſity. Stormarſh.

Betwixt the Rivers Store and Eydore, coaſting along the German Ocean lies the Province of DITMARSH, moſt properly called Tuitſchmarſh, from the mariſhneſſe of the ground and the Dutch Inhabitants, or from a mixture of thoſe people with the Marſi ſpoken of before. The people being naturally of the Saxon race, retain much of the ſtomach and animoſity of the Antient Saxons: never brought under the command of the Earles of Holſt (as Wagerland and Storemarſh were) till Holſt it ſelfe was joined to the Crown of Denmark. And though it was aliened from the Empire by Frederick the third, and given in Fee to Chriſtiern Earl of Oldenburg, the firſt King of that houſe, anno 1474. yet would they not ſubmit unto his authority; but held it out againſt him and ſome of his ſucceſſours, whom in the year 1500 they vanquiſhed in the open field; till broken and made ſubject by the valour and good fortune of King Frederick the ſecond, anno 1559. Chief places in it are 1 Meldorp upon the Ocean, the chief Town of the Province; the Inhabitants of which are ſo wealthy, that many of them cover their houſes with copper. 2 Londen, oppoſite to a Peninſula or Demi-Iſland called Elderſtede, on the Weſt ſide whereof it ſtandeth. 3 Heininckſte, and 4 Tellinckſte; of which nothing memorable.

And as for HOLSTEIN it ſelfe, the fourth and laſt member of this Eſtate, though the firſt in power and reputation, it taketh up the Inland parts betwixt Storemarſh and Juitland, ſave that it hath an outlet into the Baltick, on the Northweſt of Wagerland. Chiefe places in the which are 1 Kyel (Chilonium in Latine) ſeated upon a navigable Arm of the Baltick Sea, parting Wagerland from the Dukedome of Sleſwick: a Town well traded, and having a capacious haven, ſeldome without good ſtore of ſhipping from Germany, Lifeland, Sweden, and the reſt of Denmark. 2 Rendesberg, the beſt fortified peece in all this Province. 3 Niemunſter, on the Northweſt of the Sore, not farre from the head of it. 4 Wilſtre, on a ſmall River ſo called. 5 Bramſtede, 6 Borſholm, not much obſervable: but for a Monaſtery in which Henry one of the Earles hereof (of a younger houſe) turned Monk and dyed, anno 1241.

The antient Inhabitants of this and the other three, were the Saxons, Sigalones, and Subalingii, placed here by Ptolemie; whom I conceive to be no other then ſome Tribes of the Cimbri, of whom this Cherſoneſe took name. The two laſt paſſing into the name of the firſt, and in the declination of the Roman Empire marching over the Elb, and ſpreading all along the Coaſts of the German Ocean, moleſted with their piracies and depredations, the ſhores of Britain. Known by that means unto the Holstein. Britains, they were invited to assist them against the Scots: which action with the aid of the Jutes and Angli, (Inhabitants together with them of the Cimbrick Chersonese) they performed so honestly, as to make themselves masters of the best part of the Island. Such as remained behinde not being able to defend their owne against the Sclaves, were fain to quit the parts lying next to Meeklenburg: which being peopled by the Wagrii, tooke the name of VVagerland. But the Saxons being vanquished by Charles the Great, these on the North side of the Elb, became a part of the great Dukedome of Saxonie; and so continued till dismembred by Lotharius both Duke and Emperour: who gave the proper Holst (or Holstein specially so called) with the Province of Storemarsh to Adolph Earl of Schaumburg, who had deserved well of him in his wars, with the title of Earl of Holstein, anno 1114. By Adolph the second his successour, who having made a full conquest of it, caused it to be planted with Colonies of Dutch or Germans, from Holland, VVestphalen, and Friseland; by which meanes the name of Sclaves was at last worn out. By Gerrard the fift the Dukedome of Slesvick, was also conferred upon him by the bountie of Margaret Queen of Denmark, in whose wars he served. Adolph the last Earle of this house dying without issue, the whole Estate fell on Christiern, sonne of Theodorick Earl of Oldenburg and Heduigis his wife, sister and heir to Adolph before-mentioned: who being called to the Crown of Denmark, compounded with his brother Gerrard for the summe of 50000 Markes; and having gotten Ditmarsh also of the Emperour Frederick the third, prevailed so farre as to have the whole Estate erected into a Dukedome, Anno 1474. to bee held by him and his successours of the sacred Empire. Which said, we will next adde the Catalogue of

The EARLES and DUKES of HOLSTEIN.

1114	1	Adolph of Schomberg, by Lotharius Emperour and Duke of Saxonie made the first Earle of Holstein.
1137	2	Adolph II. sonne of Adolph the first.
1164	3	Adolph III. sonne of Adolph the second, vanquished by Canutus King of the Danes, lost himself and his Countrey.
1232	4	Adolph IV. in his fathers life time recovered his estate from Waldemar the successour of Canutus, overcome by him in a well-fought field, anno 1226. his father then prisoner to the Danes.
1261	5	Gerrard the second sonne of Adolph the fourth, his elder brother John making choice of Wagerland, succeeded in Holstein.
1281	6	Henry the sonne of Gerrard, the first that set up a custome-house at Hamburg, for receipt of his tols and taxes.
1310	7	Gerrard II. sonne of Henry, slain treacherously by the Danes.
1339	8	Henry II. sonne of Gerrard the second.
1381	9	Gerrard III. sonne of Henry the second created the first Duke of Slesvick by Queen Margaret of Denmark.
1404	10	Henry III. sonne of Gerrard the third.
1427	11	Adolphus V. commonly called the XII. (those of the younger houses being reckoned in) the last Earl of this house.
1459	12	Christiern of Oldenburg, King of Denmark, Sweden, and Norwey, sonne of Theodorick Earl of Oldenburg and his wife Heduigis, sister of Henry, and Adolphus the two last Earls, succeeded in the Earldome of Holstein, inlarged with the addition of Ditmarsh, and erected into a Dukedome by the Emperor Frederick the third, anno 1474. But seeing that Otho Earle of Schomberg, pretended a right unto the whole as the next heir male, according to the constitutions of the Empire of which it was holden; and Gerrard the brother of Christiern put in for his share, according to the ill custome of Germanie, of which it was then counted part, he was faine to buy his peace of both: giving to Otho 43000 Florens in ready money, with the Townes of Pinnenberg, Haltzburg, and Bramstede, the antient possessions of the Earles of Schomberg, and 50000 markes to his brother Gerrard, besides his whole interest in the Earldome of Oldenbourg, as before was said. By this meanes Holstein was united to the Crown of Denmark, the Kings whereof as Dukes of Holst, being counted Princes of the Empire; but neither send unto the Diets, nor contribute any thing at all to the publick taxes, nor acknowledge any kinde of subjection to it, more then meerly titularie. Onely it was ordained at the request of the subjects, when first they were incorporated into that Kingdom, that in case of any grievance or unjust sentence in the ordinary courts of justice, wherein they found no remedie in the supreme councell of the Province, it might be lawfull for them to appeale to the Imperiall Chamber, as they had done formerly. Which as it was granted to content them at the present time, on sufficient caution, so hath it seldome or never been put in practise: the very grant or priviledge (if such it were) being in a manner worn out of memory. But since this uniting of the two Estates, the title of Duke of Holstein, and a good part of the Countrey, was given unto Adolphus, brother of Christiern the third (created by Queen Elizabeth one of the Knights of the Garter anno 1560) who governed it interchangeably with the King in their severall turns: after whose death, and the death of all his children dying without issue male, the title of it was conferred on Ulrick son of Frederick the second, and brother of Christiern the fourth, created Knight of the Garter by King James, anno 1605.

IVIT-

IVITLAND.

IVITLAND, containeth all the reſt of the Cimbrick Cherſoneſe, divided from the Dukedom of Holſt by the River Eydore, the antient boundarie betwixt the Saxons and the Danes: but principally by a long trench and wall from one Sea to the other, of ſuch breadth that a chariot or two horſemen a breaſt might ride upon it. Firſt built in imitation of the Picts wall in England, by Godfrey King of Danemark in the time of Charles the Great: either to hinder the dayly incurſions of the Saxons, as ſome; or to ſtop the current of the victories of the ſaid Charles, as others thinke. The tract whereof, ſtill very eaſie to be ſeene, is called Dennewerck, (or the Danes work) to this very day.

It was ſo called from the Juites, who together with the Angli, and neighbouring Saxons, made a conqueſt of the beſt part of Britain. The Countrey ſo abounding in Cattell, that it ſendeth yeerly into Germany 50000 Oxen, beſides great ſtore of Butter, Cheeſe, Tallow, Hides and Horſes; divided commonly into North-Juitland, dnd South-Juitland, or Juitland ſpecially ſo called, and the Dukedome of Sleſwick.

SOUTH-IVITLAND, or the Dukedome of SLESWICK, is that part of the Cimbrian Cherſoneſe which lies next to Holſtein: called South-Juitland from the Southern ſituation of it, and Sleſwick from the chief Town of it, and the head of this Dukedome. The Countrey for the moſt part plaine, little ſwelled with mountaines: the fields whereof doe interchangeably yeeld both fiſh and corn. For during one three years they ſow it conſtantly, and reap the fruits of it: and for the next three, let the Pooles overflow the land, to the end the fiſh may eat up the graſſe (whom they catch as often as they pleaſe) and the mudde which is left behinde inricheth the ſoil. But beſides their Pooles, they have alſo on the Baltick ſhores many goodly Bayes not onely commodious for Merchants, but well ſtored with fiſh, and with Salmons ſpecially.

Chief Townes herein are 1 Flensburg, ſeated amongſt very high Mountains on the ſhore of the Baltick Sea, where there is a Port ſo deep, ſo ſafe, and ſo commodious, that all the Inhabitants thereof in a manner may lade and unlade their ſhips cloſe to their houſes. 2 Huſem, upon the German Ocean, nor farre from the mouth of the River Edore. 3 Hadersleve, a Biſhop See, if not rather ſome towne or manour of the Biſhops of Sleſwick, ſituate on a Navigable inlet of the Baltick Sea, wherewith it is almoſt incompaſſed; beautified with the fair Caſtle of Hansburg, begun by John the eldeſt ſon of king Chriſtiern the firſt, then Duke of Holſt, but finiſhed by Frederick the ſecond King of Denmark. 4 Londenberg in the Peninſula called Elderſteds, over againſt De Soraats, an Iſland of the German Ocean. 5 Sternberg, the ordinary reſidence of the Governor for the King of Denmark. 6 Gottorp a ſtrong Fort or Caſtle of the Duke of Sleſwicks, at the end of a large Bay or Inlet of the Baltick alſo: remarkable for the Toll-booth, or cuſtom-houſe there erected, at which there is Toll paid one yeare with another for 50000 Oxen, ſent out of North-Juitland into Germanie. 7 Sleſwick originally by the Danes called Heydebui, built as they ſay by Hetbe a Queen of that Nation; but by the Saxons called Sleſwick, as the town upon the River Slea, there running into the Baltick, and giving to the Towne a fair and commodious Haven. This of long time hath been accounted the chief Town of this Province, honoured with an Epiſcopall See, and being made the head of the Dukedome, ſo giving name unto the whole. A Dukedome firſt erected by King Henry of Denmark, who gave it to Waldemar great Grandchilde of Abel a former King, an. 1280. to be held by him under the right & ſoveraignty of the Kings thereof. But the male-iſſue failing it returned to the Crown, and was by Margaret Queen of Denmark, conferred on Gerrard Earl of Holſtein, as before was ſaid, anno 1386. Repenting afterwards of that Act, ſhee extorted it out of the hands of the Widow of Gerrard; again recovered by the valour and good fortune of his ſonne Adolphus. After whoſe death, it fell together with Holſtein upon Chriſtiern of Oldenburg, King of Denemark, as before related: by whom incorporated with that Crown: never ſince alienedd, but aſſigned ſometimes in portion for the younger Princes; the Patrimony at this time of the ſonnes of Alexander, ſurnamed of Sunderburg, (the place of his Nativity) ſon of John, one of the younger ſonnes of King Chriſtiern the third.

NORTH-IVITLAND, the moſt Northern part of all the Cherſoneſe, hath on the South the Dukedome of Sleſwick, but on all other parts the Sea. Divided commonly according to the number of the Biſhopricks into four Dioceſes, or Diſtricts, that is to ſay,

1 The Dioceſe of RIP or Ripen, bordering next to Sleſwick, and containeth 30 Prefectures or Herets (as they uſe to call them) ſeven Cities or walled Townes, and ten Caſtles. The Chief of which are 1 Ripen the Epiſcopall See, ſituate neer the German Ocean. 2 Koldins on a Creek of the Baltick Sea, where Dorothy the Dowager of Chriſtiern the third, built a publick School, (one of my Authors calls it an Univerſity).

2 The Dioceſe of ARTHUSEN lying on the North of Ripen, but more towards the Baltick, containeth 32 Herets or Prefectures, ſeven Cities or walled Townes, and five Caſtles. The chief whereof are 1 Arthuſen the Epiſcopall See, ſeated on the Baltick, enjoying a commodious Port, and well frequented, the firſt Biſhop hereof being that Coppo, who converted this nation; Chriſtianitie and Epiſcoparie going for the moſt part hand in hand together. Schunderburg, on the South of Arthuſen.

Juitland.

3 Kalloe, a ſtrong Caſtle of the Kings ſeated in the inmoſt part of a large Bay occaſioned by the Promontorie, or Cape of Hillenis, extending hence two Dutch miles to the high hill of Ellemanberg. Oppoſite whereunto, and pertaining to this Juriſdiction, lie the Ilands of 1 Samſoe, 2 Hiolm, 3 Tuen, 4 Hiarnce (perhaps Gerno) 5 Hilgenes, and others.

3 The Diocese of WIBORCH, on the north of Arthuſen, containeth ſixteen Herets, the Ilands of 1 Jegen, 2 Hanſholm, 3 Oſtholm, 4 Ciſland, 5 Egholm, and 6 Bodum: three Cities, or walled Townes, and as many Caſtles: the principall of which are 1. Wiborch, the Epiſcopall See, an Inland City, but ſituate on a water which runneth into the Bay of Limford. The ordinary ſeat of Judicature, for both the Juitlands; for all Cauſes as well Criminall, or Civill: the Court continually ſitting from one day to another, unleſſe perhaps the Judges doe ſometimes adjourne it for their own refreſhments.

4. The Diocese of BURGLAVE, or Vandalia, lying furtheſt north, is commonly ſubdivided into four parts or members; that is to ſay, 1. Thyland, lying ſouth of the Bay of Limford, on the Baltick ſide, whoſe chief town is 1 Alborch, the ordinary ſeat and reſidence of the Biſhop of Vandalia, from hence many times ſtiled Alburgenſis, ſituate on the Bay aforeſaid, which opening into the Baltick Sea extendeth thorow the main land Weſtwards, almoſt as far as the German Ocean. 2 Morſee, lying on the Ocean, and containing three Prefectures, or Herets, the town of Nicopen, the Caſtle of Lunſtod, and the Iſle of Agerse. 3 Hanheret, on the northweſt of the Bay of Limford, containing four Herets, the town of Thyſtad, where Chriſtiern the third founded a publick School, or ſuch another Univerſity as that of Kolding; the Caſtle of Orumne, and the Ilands of Oland and Oxeholm. There is in this part alſo, the high Rock called Skaringclint, a noted Sea-mark; fitly ſerving to give notice to the Sayler of the Quicksands which lie underneath it, and about this Coaſt. 4 Venſyſſell, Venſilia, or Wenſlie, that is (as Mercator doth expound it) Vandalorum ſedes, the ſeat of the Vandals, taketh up all the reſt of the north of Juitland, containing ſix Prefectures, the Ilands of Greyſholm, 2 Hartzholm, and 3 Tydſholm; three towns, and one Caſtle, the moſt remarkable of which is Schagen, with the moſt northerly point of all this Cherſoneſe. In this part is a very high mountain called Mount Alberg, in which are found ſome marks and remainders of the ancient Gyants, as the inhabitants believe, and report accordingly.

The Inhabitants of both Juitlands in the time of Ptolemy, and before, were the Cobandi, Chali, Phunduſii, Charudes, and in the moſt northern tracts the Cimbri, of whom the four firſt were but Tribes or Nations. Theſe moving towards the South in that great expedition againſt Spain made by the neighbouring Vandals on the Roman Empire, occaſioned the Juites and Angli to inlarge or ſhift their dwellings: each taking up the parts which lay neareſt to them. The Juites, or Gutæ, being a people of Scandia, and there placed by Ptolemy, took up the nothern parts hereof from them, named Juitland: the other being a people of the Suevi, dwelling on the ſouth of the Elb, poſſeſſed them of thoſe parts which lay next the Saxons their old friends and confederates, (their chief town being Sleſwick) where Angelen, now an obſcure village, once of greater note, doth preſerve their memory. But theſe uniting with the Saxons, in the conqueſt of Britain, and leaving none behind which were fit for action, or not enough to keep poſſeſſion of the Country againſt new Invaders, gave opportunity to the Danes to come in upon them. By whom theſe Countries being conquered, as far as to the River Eydore, were planted by Colonies of Danes, and made a part of that Kingdome: of whom we ſhall ſay more in the cloſe of all: firſt, taking a ſurvey of the Baltick Ilands, and ſuch Provinces on the main land of Scandia, as properly make up the Kingdome of Denmark.

2 The BALTICK ILANDS.

The BALTICK ILANDS are in number 35. and are ſo called, becauſe they lie diſperſed in the Baltick Ocean. At this day it is called by the Germans De Ooſt zee; antiently by ſome, Mare Suevicum; by Pomponius Mela, Sinus Codanus; by Strabo, Sinus Venedicus; but generally, Mare Balticum: becauſe the great Peninſula of Scandia, within which it is, was by ſome Writers of the middle and darker times, called Balthia. It beginneth at the narrow paſſage called the Sound; and interlacing the Countries of Denmark, Sweden, Germany, and Poland, extendeth even to Livonia, and Lituania. The reaſons why this ſea being ſo large, doth not ebbe and flow, are 1 the narrowneſſe of the ſtrait, by which the Ocean is let into it; and 2 the Northern ſituation of it, whereby the Celeſtiall Influences have leſſe power upon it. The principall of this great ſhole of Ilands, are 1 Seland, 2 Fuinen, or Fionia. 3 Langeland, 4 Lawland, 5 Falſtre, 6 Axze, 7 Alen, 8 Toſinge, 9 Wheen, 10 Fimera, and 11 Bornholm. Some others of leſſe note we ſhall onely name, and ſo paſſe them over.

1 SELAND, the greateſt Iland of the Baltick Seas, is ſituate neer the main land of Scandia, from which parted by a narrow Strait or Fretum, not above a Dutch mile in breadth, commonly called by the name of the Sundt, or Sound. A Straight thorow which all ſhips that have any trading to, or from the Baltick, muſt of neceſſity take their courſe; all other paſſages being barred up with impaſſable Rocks; or otherwiſe prohibited by the Kings of Denmark, upon forfeiture of all their goods. So that being the onely ſafe paſſage which theſe Seas afford, one may ſometimes ſee two or three hundred Ships in a day paſſe thorow it: all which pay a toll, or impoſition to the King, according to their bils of lading. And to ſecure this paſſage, and command all Paſſengers, there are two ſtrong Caſtles: the one in Scandia called Helſinbourg, whereof more anon; the other in this Iland which is called Croneberg. But before we come unto this Caſtle, we muſt view the other parts of the Iland, being in length two dayes journey, and almoſt as much in breadth: the ſoil ſo fertile, that without any manuring or charge at all, it yeildeth plenty of all neceſſaries for the life of man. It was anciently called Codonania, and containeth in it 15 Cities or walled Townes, and 12 Royall Caſtles. The principall whereof, are 1 Haffen, or Hafnia, the Metropolis of the Ilands; by the Dutch called Copenhagen, or the Haven of Merchants, ſituate near the Sea, with an handſome Port: the Iſle of Amager which lyeth on the Eaſt-ſide of the Town, making a very ſafe road for all kindes of ſhipping. The town of an orbicular forme, and reaſonably well fortified; but the buildings mean, for the moſt part of clay and timber, onely to be commended for a ſpacious Market-place. Yet herein as the chief town of all the Kingdome, and ſituate in the heart of theſe dominions, is the Palace Royall, built of Free ſtone, in form of a Quadrangle, but of no great beauty or magnificence. Moſt memorable for the Univerſity here founded by Henry or Ericus the ninth, but perfected by King Chriſtiern the firſt, by whom, and the ſucceeding Princes liberally endowed. 2 Frederickſburg, amongſt woods of Beech, built for a place of pleaſure by Frederick the ſecond, where the King hath a fine Houſe, and a little Park, in which (amongſt other foreiN Beaſts are) ſome fallow Deer tranſported hither out of England in the 24 year of Queen Elizabeth. 3 Roſchild, not walled, but counted for a City, as a See Epiſcopall, the Biſhops whereof have anciently had the honour of Crowning, and inaugurating the Kings of Danemark. In the Cathedrall Church whereof are to be ſeen the Tombs of many of the Daniſh Kings; ſome of them very fair and ſumptuous, the moſt mean, and ordinary. 4 Sore, of old times beautified with a goodly Monaſtery, the Revenues whereof at the alteration of Religion, were converted to the maintenance of a Free-Schoole, built here by Frederick the firſt. But in the yeer 1623 Chriſtiern the fourth, adding hereunto the Revenues of two other diſſolved Monaſteries, the one in the Ile of Lawland, and the other in Juitland, founded here a new Univerſity, for the greater ſupply of learned Miniſters for the Churches of Denmark and Norway (which before could not be provided for out of Copenhagen) and furniſhed it with men of eminence in all Arts and Sciences, for its firſt Profeſſours. 5 Elſinore, or Helſingore, a village onely, but much frequented by Sea-faring men, as their ſhips paſſe by the Sound, upon which it is. Near unto which is 6, the ſtrong and magnificent Caſtle of Croneberg, built with incredible charge and paines by King Frederick the ſecond, the foundation of it being laid on huge ſtones ſunk into the Sea, and ſo faſtned together, that no ſtorme or tempeſt, how violent ſoever, is able to ſhake it. Well fortified as well as founded, and mixt of a Palace, and a Fort, being ſince the firſt building of it the moſt conſtant reſidence of the Kings of Danemark: who from hence may eaſily diſcern each ſhip which ſailes thorow the Sundt, each of which addeth more or leſſe unto his Revenues. A profitable and pleaſing proſpect. By the Commodity of this, and the oppoſite Caſtle, the King doth not onely ſecure his Cuſtomes, but very much ſtrengthen his Eſtate: the Caſtles being ſo near, and the Strait ſo narrow, that by the addition of ſome few Ships, he may keep the greateſt Navy that is from paſſing by him.

Unto the Government and Juriſdiction of this Iland belong many others, the principall whereof are 1 Amigria, or Amagger, which helpes to make up the Port, or Road of Copenhagen, ſpoken of before, planted with Hollanders brought hither by the procurement of Chriſtiern the ſecond. 2 Mund, or Moem-land, the chief town whereof is called Stegoe. 3 Huene, or WHEEN, a little South of Croneberg Caſtle; a Dutch mile in length, but not quite ſo broad: remarkable onely for the ſtudies of that famous Aſtronomer Tycho Brahe, to whom Frederick the ſecond gave this Iland, that living in a private and ſolitary place, removed from all company but his own Family onely, he might with more convenience attend his Books. At this day moſt obſervable for the Caſtle of Uranopolis, or Urenbourg, in which the greateſt part of his Mathematicall inſtruments are preſerved in ſafety.

III. FIONIA, or FUINEN, the ſecond Iland of accompt in all the Baltick, is ſituate betwixt Seland, and Juitland; from which laſt parted by a Strait called Middelfar Sundt, ſo narrow, and of ſo ſmall a Sea, that the Iland and the Cherſoneſe ſeemed joyned together. A Country of a pleaſant and delightfull ſituation, and as fruitfull withall; containing twelve Dutch miles in length, and four in breadth, and therein 24 Herets or Prefectures, 16 Townes, and ſix Royall Caſtles, beſides many goodly Villages, and Gentlemens houſes. The chief whereof are 1 Odenſee, or Othenſche (called in Latine Othonia) an Epiſcopall See founded here at the firſt converſion of this people, by Otho the great, whence it had the name. The town not large, but beautified with two fair Churches, the one dedicated to Saint Canut, the other to Saint Francis, ſituate in the midſt of the Iland, from which the reſidue of the Towns are almoſt equally diſtant, and ſo commodiouſly ſeated for trade and Merchandiſe, as they doe not onely traffick in the Baltick Sea, but in Sweden, Norway, Ruſſia, Flanders, and Germany. 2 Nibourch, 3 Faborch, 4 Sniborck, 5 Middelfar, whence the ſtreet ſo named: 6 Bogeris, and 7 Kertominde; all ſeated on ſome Haven, or convenient Creek: the principall of the Caſtles being 1 Newbourg, 2 Hagenſchow, 3 Eſchebourg, 4 Hinſgagell; 5 the Court of Rugard. In this Iland not far from the Caſtle of Hagenſchow is the mountain Ochenberg, where John Ranzovius, anno 1530. diſcomfited the great Army of Chriſtopher, the Brother of Anthony, Earl of of Oldenburg, coming in thoſe unſetled times to invade the Kingdome, under colour of reſtoring Chriſtiern the ſecond, formerly depoſed: in which fight the Earls of Hoye and Teckleburg were both ſlain in the place, and the Kingdome after that in quiet from the like pretenders.

South of Fionia, and under the Government hereof, are about 90 leſſer Ilands, moſt of them inhabited; the chief of which are

IV. LANGELAND, ſeven Dutch miles in length, in which, beſides many Villages and Gentlemens houſes, we have the town of Raidkeping, and the Caſtle of Franeker.

V. LALAND disjoyned from Selandt, by a little narrow ſtrait called Groneſundt; ſo plentifull of corn and Cheſnuts, that ſhips full fraighted with them, are ſent yeerly hence. An Iland, which beſides many Caſtles, Villages, and Manſion houſes of the Gentry, hath five good Towns, viz. 1 Nyſtadt, 2 Naſco, 3 Togrop, 4 Richus, and 5 Mariboane, in which laſt antiently was a very rich Monaſtery, the Revenues whereof are now employed for the endowment of the new Univerſity of Sora, founded by Chriſtiern the fourth, as before was noted.

VI. FALSTRE, four German miles in length, affording plenty of corn yearly to ſome neighbouring Ilands; chief towns wherein are, 1 Nicopen, which for the elegancy of the place, and pleaſantneſſe of the ſituation, is called the Naples of Denmark. 2 Stabecopen, from whence there is the ordinary paſſage into Germany, ſeven Dutch miles hence.

VII. TUSINGE, not far from Suiborch, or Swineburg a town of Fionia, a Dutch mile in length, ſituate in a dangerous and troubleſome ſea; from whence is no ſafe paſſage either to Selandt, Fuinen, or Juitland, though much diſtant from neither. Chief places in it are, 1 Aſcens, towards Juitland, 2 Niburg, towards Selandt, and 3 the Court of Keltorp, belonging to the noble Family of Reſencrantz.

VIII. FIMERA, or FEMEREN, a fruitfull and well-peopled Iland, having in it the townes of 1 Derborch, 2 Stabul, and 3 Piettersborn: A place of great importance to the Crown of Denmark, not ſo much in danger of being made ſubject to the Imperialiſts by the taking of Holſtein, and both Juitlands; as by planting a ſtrong Garriſon in this ſmall Iland: and therefore with all diligence recovered by the King again, and better fortified then before againſt all invaſions, anno 1628. Of the remaining Ilands which pertain unto Fionia, we finde the names of 1 Aroe, 2 Romſo, 3 Endelo, 4 Ebelo, 5 Boko, 6 Brando, 7 Zoroe, 8 Agernis, 9 Hellenis, 10 Jerdo, 11 Birkolm; of which nothing memorable.

Amongſt theſe Ilands, but not ſubordinate to Fionia, are

IX. ARIA, belonging to the Dukedome of Sleſwick, conſiſting of three pariſhes, ſome Gentlemens houſes, and the Town and Caſtle of Koping, ſuppoſed to be the habitation of the Arii, ſpoken of by Tacitus, but a Colony rather of them, as I ſuppoſe. And not far off,

X. ALSEN, another little Iland, but of more repute, called in Latine, Elyſia; oppoſite to the Gulf, or Bay of Flensburg, in the Dukedome of Sleſwick, to which it alſo appertaineth. Well ſtored with Beaſts for profit, and Game for pleaſure; ſo populous, that ſome thouſands of men may be eaſily and ſuddenly raiſed in it, conſiſting of 13 Pariſhes, and four Townes, that is to ſay, 1 Gammelgard, 2 Oſterholm, 3 Norborch, and 4 the good town and Caſtle of Sunderburg, one of the ordinary reſidences of the Dukes of Sleſwick, and honoured with the birth of many of the Princes of the Royall Family. Some think it was the habitation antiently of the Elyſii, ſpoken of by Tacitus, and by him placed next unto the Angli. But being the Angli in thoſe times dwelt about the Elb, I rather think, that when ſome Colonies of the Angli ſeated themſelves in the Cimbrick Cherſoneſe, as before was ſaid; ſome of the Arii and Elyſii might goe along for company, and plant themſelves neer them in theſe Ilands.

XI. BORNHOLM, the laſt of all the Baltick which belong to Denmark, is ſituate more Eaſtward, oppoſite to that part of Scandia, which is called Blecking, betwixt it and Pomeren. An Iſle of excellent paſturage, breeding plenty of Cattell, wherewith as alſo with butter, cheeſe, wool, hides, and ſome ſtore of fruits, they ſupply the want of ſome of their neighbours; beſides good quantities of powdered Beef, and Mutton, which they barrell up, and ſell to Mariners. It containeth many good Towne, and wealthy Villages; the chief whereof is Bornholm, which gives name to the Iland. Both Town and Iland pawned by ſome former Kings unto thoſe of Lubeck; from whom redeemed by King Frederick the ſecond, for a great ſumme of money, after it had been in their poſſeſſion about 50 years.

Theſe Ilands in the time of Pomponius Mela, were by one general name called the Hemodes, in number reckoned to be ſeven; the reſidue either not inhabited, or not taken notice of, are no where mentioned in the Ancients. Of theſe ſeven, the greateſt and beſt peopled, was called Codonania (ſuppoſed to be Selandt) in which the ſaid Author placeth the Teutoni. By Ptolemy it is called Scandia Minor, with reference to the great Peninſula of Scandia, ſuppoſed by him to be an Iland. From this, or from the ſea adjoyning, called Sinus Codanus, the people of theſe Ilands, and the next Eaſtern Continent took the name of Danes: ſpreading their name afterwards, as they did their Conqueſts, of which more anon. In the mean time we muſt croſſe over the Sound, and take notice of ſuch other parts of this Kingdome, as lie on the other ſide thereof in the vaſt Continent, or Demi-Iland (which you will) of Scandia: of which ſomewhat muſt be firſt premiſed, in regard, not onely ſome parts of Denmark, but the whole Kingdome of Norway (the northern Ilands excepted) are contained in it. Scandia.

SCANDIA.

SCANDIA, by Plinie and Solinus called Scandivania, by Jornandes Scanzia, hath on the Eaſt that Bay or branch of the Baltick, which is called the Finniſch and Bodner Seas, on the North and Weſt the main Ocean, on the South, where it points towards Germany, the Baltick, or Ooſt-Zee, as the Dutch call it: joyned to the main Continent of Sarmatia by an Iſthmus, or neck of land, at the bottome of the Bodner See, not far from Wardhuys. In regard of ſo great Seas on all parts thereof, it was generally by the Antients thought to be an Iland, but incompertæ magnitudinis, of an unknown greatneſſe, as both Pytheas, and Xenophon Lampſacenus doe affirme it in Pliny: by one of which it is called Baſilia, by the other Baltia, from whence the name of Baltick to the Sea adjoyning. But later Navigations, and experience have confuted that opinion, by which it is found to be no Iland, but a part of the Continent, and a great one too, containing the whole Kingdome of Norway, the greateſt part of the Kingdome of Sweden, and ſome part of Denmark: that part hereof which belongs to Denmark, ſituate in the South-eaſt of this great Peninſula, and divided into the three Provinces, of Hallandia, Scania, and Bleſcida; and in them 23 Herets or Prefectures, and fifteene Cities.

I. HALLANDIA or HALLANDT, hath on the Eaſt the wilde woods which part it from Gothland, in the Weſt the intervening Sea betwixt it and Juitland, on the North Sweden properly and ſpecially ſo called, on the South Scauia, or Schonen. A Country which for the healthfulneſſe of the Air, pliantneſſe of the ſoil, commodiouſneſſe of Havens, plenty of fiſh, pleaſure of hunting, for inexhauſtible mines of Braſſe and Lead, (with ſome veines of Silver) frequency of well-peopled Townes and Villages, and civility of the Inhabitants, not inferiour to any. Places of moſt importance in it, are 1 Laholm, 2 Halmſtad, 3 Falkendorch, all of them on the Sea, at the mouth of navigable ſtreams, whoſe names I finde not: 4 Warburg, upon the Sea ſide alſo, but fortified with a very ſtrong Caſtle on the top of an hill. Taken and garriſoned by the Swedes, anno 1569, and not without great difficulty recovered by the Danes again, anno 1569.

II. SCANIA, or SCHONEN, hath on the Eaſt, Bleſcida, or Blecking; on the Weſt, the Sound, running along the ſhore hereof for the ſpace of twenty German miles; on the North, Hallandt; on the South, the Baltick, or Ooſt Zee. The Country of the ſame nature with Hallandt, as before deſcribed; the Character of that pertaining to all the three: this having over and above, as peculiar to it, that the Sea ſhores are ſtored with ſuch ſholes of Herrings, that ſometimes Ships are ſcarce able with winde and oar to break through them, and row off the Harbour. It is in length 72 miles, 48 in breadth. Chief towns, in which are 1 Lunden, an Archbiſhops See, the Metropolitan of Denmark & Norway, advanced unto that honor by the means and mediation of Ericus the firſt, who purpoſely made a journey to Rome to effect that buſineſſe: the Church of Denmark being before that time ſubject to the Archbiſhops of Breme. This was about the yeer 1100. It is ſituate ſomewhat within the land; but the Cathedrall eaſily diſcernible by Mariners as they ſail along. The City mean, and were it not for the Cathedrall of no beauty at all. But that indeed affirmed to be a work of much magnificence and Art, eſpecially for the Clock, the Diall, and ſome outward adjuncts. For in the Diall courioufly ſet out with divers colours, are to be ſeen diſtinctly, the year, moneth, week-day, and hour of every day throughout the year; with the Feaſts, both moveable and fixed, together with the motion of the Sun and Moon, and their paſſage through each degree of the Zodiack. Then for the Clock, it is ſo framed by Artificiall Engines, that whenſoever it is to ſtrike, two horſe-men encounter one another, giving as many blowes apiece, as the Bell ſounds hours: and on the opening of a dore, there appears a Theatre, the Virgin Mary on a Throne with Chriſt in her armes, and the three Kings or Magi (with their ſeverall trains) marching in order, doing humble reverence, and preſenting ſeverally their gifts; two Trumpeters ſounding all the while to adorne the Pompe of that proceſſion. 2 Malmoge, or Elbogen, (called by both names) at the very Southern point hereof, juſt oppoſite to Coppenhagen in Seland, a well traded Port: the birth-place of Gaſpar Bartholinus, otherwiſe called Malmogius Danus, that great Mathematician; ſuppoſed to the be Author of the Clock and Dial, before deſcribed. 3 Trelleberg, on the north of Elbogen. 4 Landiſcron, on the Sea-ſide, of great ſtrength and conſequence. 5 Helſemburg, a mean town, but fortified with an impregnable Caſtle, juſt oppoſite to Helſinare, and Croneberg in Selandt, the other of the two keyes which openeth into the Sound. 6 Radneby, a frontire town bordering on Verendia, a Province of Swetbland. 7 Chriſtiania, or Chriſtendorp, a ſtrong piece built by Chriſtiern the fourth, anno 1604. compaſſed by the Sea, and fortified by Fens and Marſhes, thought to be impregnable.

III. BLE-

Scandia. III. BLESCIA or BLECKING, is bounded on the East and South with the Baltick Sea, on the North with Verendia a Province of Swethland; on the West with Scania or Sconen: more mountainous and barren then either, but yet partaking somewhat of the former character, which we had of Halland. Chief Townes hereof are 1 Usted, on the mouth of a River falling into the Baltick. 2 Christenberg, in Latine Christianopolis, on the borders of Swetbland, raised out of the ground by Christiern the fourth, to defend his kingdome on that side, anno 1604. not long after by a warlike stratagem surprised by the Swedes, in the late war betwixt those kingdomes, in the year 1611. destroyed and dispeopled by that Nation, who looked upon it as a dangerous and unpleasing object, but since repaired and replenished. 3 Abuys, upon the River which divides the Kingdomes, not far from Christenberg.

The antient Inhabitants hereof were the Gutæ and Dauciones, taking up the South parts of this great Peninsula. Meridionalia tenent Gutæ & Dauciones, as we finde in Ptolemie Geogr. l. 2. c. 11. which in all probability must be meant of these three Provinces. Of these the Gutes passing over into the Cimbrick Chersonese, possessed themselves of the North parts of it, since from them called Jutland. The rest uniting with the people of those many Islands which lye together in the Bay or Gulph Codanus (now the Baltick Sea) took the name of Danes: and not from Dan, I know not what King thereof above a thousand years before the birth of our Saviour. First taken notice of by that name in Jornandes de Rebus Geticis, who lived about the time of Justinian the first, about which time, or not long after it is conceived that they made themselves masters of so much of the Cimbrick Chersonese, as had been formerly possessed by the Jutes and Angli, whose forsaken or ill-peopled seats they possessed themselves of. After this we hear little of them till the time of Charles the Great, living in a confused estate, sometimes made subject to the Norwegians, sometimes to the Swedes, but alwayes without Law and order, till by their King Godfrey or Gotricus they were regulated by Laws, and reduced to an orderly kinde of life, anno 797. About this time they first began to infest the Coasts of England, invaded Friseland with a Fleet of 200 sayl, and had much weakened and indangered the great Empire of France, if the unseasonable death of Godfrey, and the quarrels which arose about the succession after his decease, had not kept them off. Their affaires at home being againe well setled, they employed their whole Forces against England, as the weaker Enemy, over which they tyrannised 250 yeares, and reigned 28, under three Kings of that Nation. Outed of that, and the terrour of their name being over, they have been most busied with their neighbours of Sweden and Germanie: improving their estate, but rather by marriages and civill contracts then by force of Armes, with the addition of the kingdome of Norwey, and the Dukedome of Holstein; their pretentions to, and for a time the possession of the Crown of Sweden, getting them nothing in conclusion but blows and losses. So that we have no more to doe then to summe up a catalogue of the kings hereof, till the uniting of the two Crowns of Denmark and Norwey; leaving the rest that follow to another place.

The KINGS of DENMARK.

A. Ch.
797	1	Gotricus the first Legislator of the Danes, and the establisher of their Kingdome, a prudent and valiant Prince.
	2	Olaus son of Gotricus or Godfrey.
	3	Henningus son of Olaus.
873	4	Siward son to a daughter of Godfrey by the King of Norwey.
	5	Regnier son of Siward.
	6	Siward II.
	7	Ericus or Henricus baptized at Mentz, at the same time with his brother Harald, recovered the kingdom to his house (of which they had been outed by the race of Godfrey.)
	8	Canutus the son of Ericus the heathenish son of a Christian and pious Father.
880	9	Froto the son of Canutus, a professed Christian.
886	10	Gormo (our English writers call him Gormund) son of Froto.
889	11	Harald the son of Gormo, or Gormond.
900	12	Gormo II. son of Harald, an enemie of the Christian Faith.
927	13	Harald II. son of Gormo the second, a good Christian.
975	14	Sueno or Swain, son of Harald, at first a great Enemy of the Gospell, an Usurper of the throne in his Fathers life time, and a great scourge unto the English. Outed of his Estate by Ericus of Swethland, he received the Gospell, regained his Kingdome, and established Christianity in this kingdome, his war on England still continuing.
1010	15	Olaus the eldest son of Swaine, King of Denmark and Norwey.
1020	16	Canutus brother of Olaus, the first King of England of the Danes, succeeded his brother in the kingdomes of Denmark and Norwey, to which hee added also the Crowne of Sweden.
1037	17	Canutus III. sonne of Canutus the second, the last king of England, of the race of the Danes.
	18	Magnus son of Olaus King of Norwey.

1051	19	Sueno II. ſiſters ſon of Canutus the ſecond, by Ulfo an Engliſh Duke.
1074	20	Harald III. baſe ſon of Sueno the ſecond.
	21	Canutus IV. another of the baſe ſons of Sueno, murdered at the Altar in the Church of Ottenſee in the Iſle of Fionia; afterwards canonized a Saint.
1088	22	Olaus II. another of the baſe ſons of Swain.
1096	23	Ericus II. another of the baſe ſons of Swain, the founder of the Archiepiſcopall See of Lunden.
1102	24	Harald IV. baſe ſon of Henry or Ericus the ſecond.
1133	25	Nicolas another of the baſe ſons of Swain.
1135	26	Ericus III. another of the baſe ſons of Ericus the ſecond.
1140	27	Ericus IV. commonly called the fifth (ſome of the younger houſes being reckoned in) nephew of Ericus the ſecond.
1150	28	Sueno III. ſon of Ericus the third, and Canutus the fifth, Grandchild of Nicolas, both kings: the firſt raigning in Scandia, the other in Juitland: both dead without iſſue, Canutus being ſlain by Sueno, and he by Waldemar.
1157	29	Waldemar ſon of Canutus, the lawfull ſon of Ericus the ſecond, after the interpoſition of ſo many Baſtards, ſucceded at the laſt in the throne of his Fathers. By his means the Rugians and Vandals imbraced the Gospell.
1185	30	Canutus V. ſonne of Waldemar.
1203	31	Waldemar II. brother of Canutus and Duke of Sleſwick.
1243	32	Ericus V. called the VII. ſon of Waldemar the ſecond, ſlain by the practiſes and treaſon of his brother Abel.
1251	33	Abel brother of Ericus, ſlain by the Paiſants of Friſeland.
1252	34	Chriſtopher brother of Abel and Ericus.
1260	35	Ericus VI. (VIII) ſon of Chriſtopher.
1287	36	Ericus VII. (IX) younger ſon of Ericus, ſupplanted his elder brother Chriſtopher.
1327	37	Chriſtopher II. eldeſt ſon of Ericus, firſt diſpoſſeſſed of his birth-right by his brother Ericus; after whoſe death, he ſucceeded in the Crown, by the help of his halfe Brother the Earl of Holſt.
1334	38	Waldemar III. ſon of Chriſtopher the ſecond, againſt whom and his eucrochments, the Sea towns, commonly called the Hanſe, did firſt confederate, and vanquiſhed him in many battels.
1376	39	Margaret daughter and heir of Waldemar the third, marryed with Aquin king of Norwey, ſo uniting the Kingdoms: of whom and their ſucceſſours we ſhall ſpeak hereafter; when we have tooke a view alſo of the kingdome of Norwey and the Appendixes thereof.

Norwey.

NORWEY.

NORWEY is bounded on the Eaſt with Swethland, from which parted by a perpetuall ridge of rough and wilde mountaines, called the Dofrine hills; on all other parts by the Sea: that is to ſay, by that frozen Sea upon the North, the German Norwegian Ocean upon the Weſt; and on the South with the Daniſh Sea, interpoſing betwixt it and the Cimbrick Cherſoneſe; in breadth from Schagen the moſt northern point of Juitland to Congell, the moſt Southerly town of Norwey, no leſſe then 250 miles.

It is called Norwey, quaſi tractus ſeu via Septentrionalis, from the Northern ſituation of it; containing in length 1300 miles, in breadth not above halfe ſo much: inhabited by a people given to hoſpitality, plain dealing, and abhorring theft. Antiently they were great warriers, and became terrible to all the more Southerne Nations; by whom called Normans, (that is to ſay Homines Boreales or Northmen, as Willielmus Gemiticenſis rightly hath it): being at that time a mixture of all the Northern Nations together, or of the Norwegians and Swethlanders a part from the Danes whoſe ſteps they followed in their frequent or rather continuall Piracies, on the Coaſts of England, France, and Ireland. By Helmoldus in the ſame ſenſe they are called Nordluidi, a name made into Latine, out of the Dutch word Nord, and the French word leiu, ſignifying men of a Northern place or Nation.

Of the poſition of it in regard of the Heavens we have ſpoke already; but more particularly it reacheth from the firſt Parallel of the twelfth Clime, where the Pole is elevated 58 degrees 26 minutes, as far as to the 71 degree of latitude. By which accompt the longeſt day in the Southern point is but 18 houres; whereas at Wardhuys, being ſituate furtheſt North of all this Countrey, they have no night for almoſt three whole moneths together.

The Countrey for the moſt part rocky, mountainous and barren, full of vaſt woods, extreme cold, and but ill inhabited. In the beſt parts thereof it affords little corn; and in the moſt northern none at all: in ſo much that the common ſort of people are fain to uſe dryed fiſh (that which we commonly call ſtock-fiſh in ſtead of bread. But the better (that is, the richer ſort) buy corn of ſuch Merchants as come to traffick with them. Their chief commodities are ſtock fiſh, rich furres, train-oyle, pitch, and tackling for ſhips, as maſts, cables, deal-bords and the like; which the inhabitants exchange for Norwey. for corn, wine, fruits, beer, and other neceſſaries for mans life. The Countrey is exceedingly troubled with certain little beaſts, which they call Lemmers. They are about the bigneſſe of a field mouſe, and are by the inhabitants ſaid to drop out of the clouds in tempeſtuous weather. They devoure like the Locuſts, every green thing on the earth; and at a certain time dye all in heaps (as it were) together: and with their ſtench ſo poiſon the air, that the poor people are long after troubled with the Jaundies, and with a giddineſſe in the head. But theſe beaſts come not ſo often to infect the land, as the Whales doe to terrifie and moleſt the ſhores, the Weſtern Seas being very deep, and therefore a fit habitation for thoſe great Leviathans: againſt whoſe violence and furie, the Mariners and people of the Seacoaſt have found a Remedie, which is by caſting out ſome water intermixed with the oyl of Caſtor, the ſmell whereof doth force them to retire immediately. Without this helpe there were no fiſhing on theſe Coaſts, which is the greateſt Staple commodity (beſides materials for ſhipping) which the Countrey yeeldeth.

The Towns here, are exceeding thin, and in them the houſes for the moſt part very poore and miſerable, commonly patched up of durt and hurdles, not much unlike our ordinary Cottage houſes in the Fen-Countreys. Diſtributed into five Prefectures or Governments, according to the number of the Caſtles which command the ſame. Of theſe,

1 The firſt moſt towards the South is the Caſtle of BOHUS, to which are ſubject the townes of 1 Marſtraud, ſeated in a Demi Iſland begirt with Rocks, of moſt note for the infinite quantity of herings caught hereabouts. 2 Congel, upon the Sea, a town of Merchandiſe, oppoſite to Schagen in Denmark. 3 Oddewald.

2 AGGERHUIS, the ſecond of the five Royall Caſtles, hath under its command the townes of 1 Anſlo, or Aſloia, on a Bay or Gullet oppoſite to Juitland, an Epiſcopall See, and of moſt eſteeme of all the Countrey, by reaſon of the Courts of Judicature which are therein held. 2 Tonsberg or Koningsberg, that is to ſay, the Kings or the Kingly Mountain, formerly a retiring place of the Kings of Norwey. 3 Fredrichſtrad, built by one of the Fredericks, Kings of Denemark. 4 Schin or Schon, remarkable for its Mines of iron and copper. 5 Saltzburg, 6 Hammar the greater, and 7 Hammar the leſſe, divided by the interpoſing of the Bay called Sinus Mæſianus, in former times the See of a Biſhop, ſince removed to Aſloia, or rather thereunto united in theſe later times, as many poore Biſhopricks bee in Ireland.

3 BEGGER-HUSE is the third Caſtle of command herein. Subordinate whereunto are 1 Bergen, the principall Town of the countrey, an Epiſcopall See, and the ordinary reſidence of the Governour for the Kings of Denmark; ſituate amongſt high mountaines at the bottome of a deep Creek or arm of the Ocean called Carmeſunt; a noted Port, and much reſorted to by Merchants of moſt foraine Nations; bringing in corn, meat, bread, beer, wine, and Aqua vitæ, to ſupply the naturall wants and defects hereof; and in exchange tranſporting hence fiſh, furres, cordage, and other materials for ſhipping. In which regard accounted formerly one of the four chief ſtaple Townes of the Dutch Merchants of the Hanſe: the other three being London in England, Novagrod in Muſcovie, and Bruges in Flanders. But of late time this Bergen hath loſt moſt of its trade, removed hence to Wardhuis, neerer unto Muſcovie: as the great town of Novogrod, by reaſon of the change of navigation through the Baltick into the Northern paſſage, hath given way to S. Nicolas; and Bruges was deprived of her traffick by Antwerp, from whence it is removed to Amſterdam. For the Hollanders, by blocking up the haven, but eſpecially by keeping Bergen op Zome, have ſuch a command over the river, that no veſſell can paſſe or repaſſe without their licence. 2 Staffanger; an Epiſcopall See alſo, but not elſe obſervable.

4 The Caſtle of TRUND-HEIM, is the fourth, ſituate in the Town of Trondheim, formerly called Tronden, and in Latine, Nidroſia, the See of an Archbiſhop who is the Metropolitan of Norwey. A beautifull City heretofore, but ſince the ſubjection of this Countrey unto the Danes, reduced to a Burrough: ſo called of the River Nider, upon which it is ſeated, and Roſa the name then of the principall Church; which in time gave place to the Cathedrall, for greatneſſe and neatneſſe of the fabrick all of poliſhed ſtone, not giving place to any in Europe; about the year 1530 much defaced with fire, which began at the Altar, the damage done by it being eſtimated at 7000 Crowns. A great ſumme of money in thoſe times, and ſo poore a countrey. So that by caſting up our reckoning, wee finde in Norwey one Archbiſhop and four Biſhops, that is to ſay, the Archbiſhop of Trundheim of Nidroſia, the Biſhops of Bergen, Anſlo, Staffanger and Hammar: Of the ſame power, juriſdiction, and revenue, ſince the Reformation, as thoſe of Denmark: whereof, and of the firſt converſion of this people to the Chriſtian Faith, we have ſpoke already.

5 The fifth and laſt Caſtle which commands this countrey is that of WARDHUYS, ſo called of the town of Wardhuys, as that is from the Iſle Ward, in which it is ſeated. A ſmall Caſtle, and the town in former times but mean and poore, ſituate in the extreme North point of all this Kingdom: but in thoſe times accounted (as it eaſily might) for the chief of this Prefecture, and honored in the ſummer time with the ſeat and reſidence of the Governour, retiring more Southwards in the winter, at what time by reaſon of the extremity of the cold, and long abſence of the Sun for months together (the Town lying within the Artick Circle) it is hardly habitable. But of late times it is much improved both in wealth and building; by reason of the removall of the English trading from Novogrod, near the Baltick Sea, to the Town of St. Nicolas not far hence, drawing by that means the trade of Muscovie and Norwey more neere together. So that now it is not onely useful unto the Danes, in regard that it somewhat aweth the neighbouring Lappians, and commandeth the Natives; for that cause fortified very strongly by King Frederick the second, but made very profitable to him also by the resort of Dutch and English, who must of necessity touch at it (if they make no stay here) in their way to Muscovie. Other Townes in these two last Prefectures are not worth looking after. Iceland.

And so much for the Continent or mainland of Norwey; let us next look upon the Islands in the Northern Ocean, which belong unto it.

The ISLANDS in the NORTHERN OCEAN.

The NORTHERN SEA so named from its northern situation, is by some called Mare Scythicum, because it coasted along the shores of Scythia; by Juvenal; called Oceanus glacialis, becau se often frozen: by Pliny in the same sense Mare Amalchium, the word in the Scythick Language signifying frozen, or congealed; by the Russes or Moscovites, Myrmanskoy More; by the Cimbrians in their tongue, Mori moruja, that is to say, the dead Sea, because of the slowness of its motion, often clogged with ice; and in the same sense, mare pigrum by Tacitus. This Tacitus doth best describe it, from whom take it thus. Trans Suenes Mare aliud pigrum & prope immotum, &c. Beyond the Swedes, there is another Sea, so slow and almost immoveable, that many think it to be the bounds which compasse the whole world. Some are perswaded that the sound of the Sun is heard, as he ariseth out of this sea; and that many shapes of gods are seen, and the beams of his head, Illuc usque (& fama vera) tantum natura, At this sea (the report is credible) is the end of nature and the world. The English were the first of all civill people, who adventured to open and discover the passages of it, under the conduct of Richard Chancellour, arriving by this way in Russia, anno 1553. and tracing out the way with others of that Nation, together with the Flemings, Hollanders, and some townes of the Hanse have since followed. Of which more in Muscovie. The principal Islands dispersed in it are Groenland, 2 Iseland, 3 Freezland, belonging to the Crown of Norwey, to be surveyed at the present; Nova Zemla, and Sir Hugh Willoughbies Island, appertaining (if to any) to the Knez, or great Duke of Muscovie: of which more hereafter.

I. ISELAND, is situate under the Artick Circle, in length 144 German miles, 65 in breadth. So called from the aboundance of ice in it and about it, frozen continually for the space of 8 months, and so vehemently chilled with Northern windes, that it yeeldeth neither corn nor trees except Juniper onely: yet there is grasse in such aboundance, that the people are of opinion, that if they doe not sometimes keep their Cattell from feeding, they are in danger to surfeit and dye with fulnesse. Beasts for labour here are both Horses and Oxen; the Oxen and Kine without hornes, but the sheep not so: and they have also here a fine breed of little dogges, knowne amongst us by the name of Iseland dogges, the delight of Ladies; as also white Faulcons, and white Ravens, Eagles with white tailes, with Hares and Beares of the same colour. By reason of their want of corn the people eat stock-fish (as in Norwey) in stead of bread, yet notwithstanding by reason of the benefit of the sea and accesse of strangers, they have all things necessary brought unto them, (even to wood and timber) of which the richer sort make use: giving the Merchant in return, sometimes the flesh of Beeves and Mutton, but ordinarily butter, skinnes, horses, hawkes, brimstone, but fish especially, the staple commodity of the countrey. Of which they have such plenty and of so good condition, that a peice of Iseland Ling is counted with us as a fit dish for a Noblemans table.

The people for the most part are of a plain and simple nature, living (as in the Golden Age) on that which nature gives them without help of Art; more then that of making cheese and butter: the mountaines serving them for Townes, and the Rivers for drink, and lodging all under one roof with their horses and oxen. They use neither Physick nor Physitians, yet live so long (and probably the longer for it) that many of them attain to the age of 150 yeares and more. The women are exceeding faire, but they know not how to attire themselves; nor is there any difference in apparrell betwixt the Sexes, so that it is not easie to know one from another. Few of them but have some familiar Spirit to doe them service: and notwithstanding the endeavour of their Ministers to purge them from this impietie, yet it is so graffed in them that they cannot leave it.

It is observable that notwithstanding the cold condition of this Island, yet in many places it is full of heats and fire under the ground: which by the Antiperistasis of the cold air, stopping the pores of the earth, and taking from it the liberty of evaporation, doth burn more vehemently: insomuch that here are three high mountaines, whose tops are alwayes covered with snow, and yet continually burning. The names of them are Hecle, Helge, and La-Croix, but the first the principall; by some called Heclefort, which sometimes casts out fire, sometimes flaming water, then black ashes, and pumice stones in so great aboundance; that it darkeneth the Sun, and makes the countrey for six miles round about to bee uninhabited. Stranger things are not spoken of Aetna, then of these three mountaines: and here the superstitious people have the same opinion which they have in Sicil: that Freezland. underneath muſt needs be hell, and the habitations of the damned. But to judicious men the naturall reaſon of theſe flames is plain and obvious, occaſioned by thoſe veins of Brimſtone (great quantity whereof they ſend into foraine parts) on which the foundation of the hils is laid: here being many Bathes and fountaines of hot water, which have Sulphure ſwimming at the toppe.

At the firſt planting of this Iſland, the people did not trouble themſelves with building Towns, but every one ſeated himſelfe where he thought convenient; dwelling in cels and cavernes digged in the bottome of the rocks. By meanes whereof the inland parts have not many houſes: but the ſea coaſts ſince the coming of ſo many ſtrangers to them, begin to be built in many places; the buildings for the moſt part being of timber rooted with flags, with an hole on the ſides of the roofe to let in the light. So that we are not to expect many fine townes or Cities: the principall of them which are, being 1 Halar in the North, and 2 Schalholt in the ſouthern part; both Biſhops Sees, having petty Schooles, conſiſting of 24 ſcholars a peece, to whom the Latine tongue is taught at the charge of the Biſhops. 3 Haffenfordt, an Haven town, where under Tents the Dutch Merchants barter their commodities: and 4 Bedſtede, a Caſtle, the ordinary reſidence of the Governour for the Kings of Denmark.

It hath been generally conceived that this Iſland is that Thule, which the Poets ſo often ſpeak of; as, Tibi ſerviat ultima Thule, in Virgil; Nec ſit terris ultima Thule, in Seneca the Tragedian: nor did there want ſome reaſon to perſwade them to this opinion; this being indeed the furtheſt part of the old known world. But greater reaſons are againſt it. For when Solinus ſaith, multæ ſunt circa Britannicum inſulæ, e quibus Thule ultima; I hope Thule muſt be one of the Britiſh Iſles. And when Tacitus ſaith of Agricola, inſulas quas Orcadas vocant domuit, deſpecta eſt & Thule; I am ſure that Iſeland is ſo far from being kenned at any one of the Orcades, that it is at leaſt eight degrees diſtant. So that Thule muſt be ſought for in another place, and where that is hath beene ſhewed already. And as for Iſeland it was ſo farre from being known unto the Antients, that it was hardly known unto thoſe of Norwey, till the yeare 874. when ſome of the Norwegians driven out of their countrey by Harald the firſt, who firſt ſuppreſſing the many Petite Kings of the Norwegians, made many of them ſeeke new dwellings, of which ſome few arrived here: where finding roome enough to plant in, and no great loſſe (if any) by the change of their dwelling, they invited many of their friends and countreymen to come unto them. Anno 1070 they were converted to the Goſpell, by ſome Preachers ſent hither from Adelbert the Archbiſhop of Breme. By whoſe perſwaſion and procurement they founded two Epiſcopall Sees; adding thereto in tract of time eight Religious houſes: that is to ſay, the Monaſteries of Pingore, Remſtede, Modur, and Monkeniere, under the Government and juriſdiction of the Biſhop of Hallar; and thoſe of Vedey, Pernebar, Kirckebar, and Skirde, under the Biſhop of Schalholt. In the year 1260. it was firſt brought under the Crown of Norwey, following ſince that the fortunes of it in all changes both of Church and State: made ſubject with it to the Kings of Denmark: together with it reformed in matters of Religion, according to the confeſſion of Ausbourg: retaining ſtill their Biſhops with a limited power, and turning the Revenues of their Monaſteries unto other uſes, as there they did, according to the will and pleaſure of their Lords of Denmark.

II. Southweſt of Iſeland lies another, and as cold an Iſle, commonly called by the name of FREEZELAND, from the continuall Froſts unto which it is ſubject. By the Latines it is called Frizlandia, to diſtinguiſh it from Friſia or Friſeland in Germany. Situate under the North frigid zone, but not ſo much within the Arctick as Iſeland is: the longeſt day here in the height of ſummer not exceeding 20 houres: and yet the ſoyl ſo cold and barren, that it beareth neither corn, nor frunit; the Inhabitants living moſt on fiſh, which as it is their onely food, ſo is it alſo their chief commoditie wherewith to entertain or invite the Merchant. And hereof there is ſuch aboundance caught upon their coaſts, that they are never without the company of Hanſemen, Scots, Hollanders, Danes, and Engliſh; by which laſt ſo frequented in theſe later times, that it hath beene called by ſome the Weſtern England. For quantity it is ſomewhat bigger then Iſeland, but by reaſon of the bitter air, and the defects above mentioned, very thinly inhabited. The chief Town of it is called Freezeland, by the name of the Iſland; ſituate on the Eaſtern ſhore of it. Beſides which there are ſome others ſet down in the maps, as 2 Samescot, 3 Andefort, 4 Sorund; but not much obſervable. Weſtward hereof, as Zieglerus (and out of him Maginus) telleth us, is a leſſe Iſland called Icaria, giving the name of Mare Icarium to the Sea adjoining: ſo called (by his miſtake or tranſlation of the Fable) from Icarus the ſon of Dedalus a King of Scotland, who did once (but no body knows when) Lord it over theſe Iſlands.

III. GROENLAND, ſo called, as ſome ſay, from the greenneſſe of it in the Summer; as others ſay, by Antiphraſis, becauſe never greene by reaſon of the ſharpneſſe of winter. But the former Etymologie is more agreeable to the ſtate of the Countrey. For though it be continually covered with ſnow, except in June, July, and Auguſt, (inſomuch that though the people bee alwayes clad with Furres and skinnes, yet they feel no heat) yet in thoſe months it is exceeding freſh and green, and affords good paſturage. It is ſituate for the greateſt part within the Arctick, between the 65 and 77 degrees of Northern Latitude: ſo that the longeſt day in the ſouthern part is 21 houres and an halfe; and in the moſt northern they have no night for three months and two weeks. The known length of it is affirmed to be 600 miles, and may be much longer then ſo for ought that any body knowes knows there being no perfect discovery made of it hitherto, though much frequented by the English, and Hollanders (two great Sea-faring Nations) for the benefit of Whale-fishing, much there in use. Their chief commodities are Fish, white Bears, wilde Deer, and some store of Cattell there bred upon their pastures, but housed for the most part all the Winter: the greatest part of the people dwelling in Caves, and delighting in Negromancy, to which more wilfully addicted then those in Iseland, because lesse acquainted with the Gospell. Groenland.

Places of most importance in it are 1 Saint Thomas, (in which there is a Monastery of Dominican Friers) seated in the north-east part of the Iland; concerning which Mercator speaks of one thing which is very observable: relating, that it is not farre from a flaming, or burning mountain, seated upon hot scalding springs, conveyed by pipes of stone into the Monastery, and serving both as a stove to warm them, and for a fire to boyle their Victuals. The walls of the Monastery built of Pumice stones cast out of that Mountain, which being tempered with the water of those burning springs, doth make a glutinous substance serving in stead of Lime, and as long durable. The Gardens of the Convent, in regard of this heat, flourish all the yeer with hearbs, and sweet-smelling flowers: and the adjoyning Sea for the same reason being never-frozen, affords good plenty of Fish and Fowl the whole year about, not onely for the Monkes, but the neighbouring Ilanders: so farre, and to this purpose he. The second Towne of note, is Ilva, not farre from this Monastery: And 3 Munderpre, on the South-east point. Others, as in a Country not well discovered, we have little notice of; though it be neer 300 yeeres since Nicolas Zeni, a Venetian, cast by tempest on the coast of Freize-land, and by the King thereof employed upon new discoveries, anno 1380. first made it known to us of Europe; immediately on that discovery possessed by the NORWEGIANS, and made a Member of that Crown.

As for the NORWEGIANS themselves, now their fellow-subjects, they were first known in the time of Ptolemy, by the name of Chedini, possessing then the western parts of Scandia. Uniting with their neighbours, both Danes and Swethlanders, they became better known in the flourishing times of the French Empire, by the name of Normans, first called so by Egithartus in his History of the life of Charles the Great, infesting then the Sea-coasts of France, and Belgium. Under this name they fell so heavily on the French, especially in the times of Charles the Simple; that they extorted from him that goodly Country, since of them called Normandy; conferred on Rollo, first Duke thereof, anno 912. whose successours much increased their glory by the conquest of England, as some private adventurers of them did by the conquest of the Kingdomes of Naples, Sicil, and Antioch. Afterwards setling on their own bottome, every one of these northern nations acting by it self, they were called Norwegians: sometimes, as formerly commanding over all three Kingdomes, subject successively to each; but most an end governed by their own Kings, till their finall subjugation by the Danes. And as a Nation acting solely, and by it self, they subdued Ireland, under the conduct of Turgesius, who tyrannized there for a time; as also all the Orcades, and the Ile of Man, sold, or surrendred by them, upon good conditions to the English and Scots, who by those titles still possesse them. The Catalogue of their Kings, leaving out all those of the darker times (parallel to our Brute, and the first Scottish Fergus) as meerly fabulous, we will begin with King Suibdagerus, who was King of all the three Kingdomes; and at his death divided them again amongst his three sons; whose successours Munster thus reckoned.

The KINGS of NORWAY.

1 Suibdagerus.
2 Haddingus.
3 Hetharius.
4 Collerus.
5 Frogerus.
6 Gotarus.
7 Rotherus.
8 Helga.
9 Hasmunus.
10 Reginaldus.
11 Gumaraus.
12 Osmundus.
13 Olaus.
14 Osmundus II. not long after whose time, anno scil. 800. the Normans began their Irruptions.
15 Aquinus.
16 Haraldus.
17 Olaus II.
18 Sueno, King of Denmark by Birth, and of Norway by Conquest.
19 Olaus III. son of Swaine, or Sueno, succeeded in the Realmes of Denmark and Norway; Canutus his younger brother being King of England. In this Kings time the Norwegians first received the Gospell.
20 Canutus, King of England, succeeded his brother Olaus in the Kingdomes of Denmark and Norway, to which he also added the Crown of Sweden.

21 Sueno II. by whom the Kingdome was reſtored to the Norwegians.
22 Canutus II.
23 Magnus.
24 Harald II.
25 Magnus II. King of Sweden, and Norway.

1326 26 Magnus III. King of Sweden, and Norway, intending the Crown of Sweden for Ericus his eldeſt ſonne, conferred that of Norway on Haquin, or Aquinus his ſecond ſonne.

1359 27 Aquinus, King of Norway, younger ſonne of Magnus the third, married with Margaret, eldeſt daughter of Waldemar the third, King of Denmark; ſo uniting the Kingdomes. And though Olaus the onely ſon of this bed died young, without any iſſue; yet the Danes having once got footing in Norway, ſo aſſured themſelves of it, that they have ever ſince poſſeſſed it as a ſubject Kingdome: keeping the Natives ſo poor and low, that they are not able to aſſert their former liberties; and not permitting them to uſe any ſhipping, ſo much as for tranſporting their own commodities, for fear they ſhould grow wealthy and ſtrong at Sea. Beſides, the ſtrong Garriſons maintained in moſt parts of the Country, keep it in ſuch an abſolute awe, that they dare not ſtir againſt the Danes, if their ſtomachs ſerved them. So that now Norway being made ſubject to the Crown of Denmark, or both made fellow-ſubjects to the ſame King: we muſt next look upon theſe Kings, not as Kings of each, diſtinct and ſeparate from the other; but as they are in fact and title.

The KINGS of DENMARK, and NORWAY.

1376 1 Haquin, or Aquinus, King of Denmark, and Norway; of this laſt by deſcent, of the other by marriage.

1380 2 Olaus, ſon of Aquinus and Margaret.

1383 3 Margaret, wife of Aquinus, mother of Olaus, and daughter of Waldemar the third, after the death of her ſonne, (in whoſe time ſhe governed as his Guardian) took upon her the Kingdome in her own right; not onely keeping Norway in the ſtate ſhe found it, but adding unto Denmark the Crown of Sweden, won by the vanquiſhment of Albert, Duke of Mecklenburg, then King thereof. A gallant and magnanimous Lady, the Semiramis of Germany.

1411 4 Ericus, Duke of Pomeren, and Knight of the Garter, ſonne of the Lady Mary, Dutcheſſe of Pomeren, daughter of Ingelburgis, the ſiſter of Margaret; by whom adopted for her Heir; ſucceeded after her deceaſe in all the three Kingdomes; outed of all before his death, by a ſtrong Faction made againſt him, and his eſtates conferred on

1448 6 Chriſtiern, Earl of Oldenburg, upon the commendation of his Uncle Adolfus, choſen King of Danemark, and Norway, ſucceeded his ſaid Uncle in the Eſtates of Holſt, and Sleſwick, continuing ſince united unto that Crown; and added alſo thereunto by conqueſt, the Kingdome of Sweden.

1482 7 John, ſon of Chriſtiern, ſucceeded in all three Kingdomes; Knight of the Order of the Garter.

1514 8 Chriſtiern II. ſon of John, King of Denmark, Norway, and Sweden, which laſt he held under with great cruelty; hated, by reaſon of his Tyranny towards all ſorts of people, and outed of his Kingdomes by his Uncle Frederick, anno 1522. by whom at laſt taken, and kept in priſon till he dyed, anno 1559.

1523 9 Frederick, brother of John, and Uncle of Chriſtiern the ſecond, choſen King of Denmark, and Norway, on the abdication of his Nephew, reformed Religion in both Kingdomes, according to the Confeſſion of Ausbourg.

1535 10 Chriſtiern III. ſuppreſſed with great trouble the party formed againſt him in behalf of Chriſtiern the ſecond, perfected the Reformation begun in the time of his Father, and was a great Benefactour to the Univerſity of Copenhagen.

1559 11 Frederick II. ſonne of Chriſtiern the third, ſubdued Ditmarſh, before unconquered by the Danes, Danes, or the Earls of Holst, and added it unto that Dukedome, both being united to that Crown, though held of the Empire; Knight of the Garter.

1588 12 Christiern IV. sonne of Frederick the second, brother of Anne Queen of Great Britain, and Knight of the Garter; engaging in a warre against the Emperour Ferdinand the second for the liberty of Germany, was suddenly beat out of all the Cimbrick Chersonese by the prevailing Imperialists; but compounded the businesse upon very good termes, and was restored to all his own; Knight of the Garter.

1648 13 Frederick, son of Christiern the fourth, his elder brethren being all dead without issue, succeeded in the Crowns of Denmark, and Norway.

Having thus mustered up the Kings of these severall Kingdomes, taken distinctly, and conjunct, we must next look upon the way of their coming to their Regall throne, their forme of Government, together with the powerablenesse and revenues incident unto it. As for the manner of their coming to the Regall Throne, the Danes pretend the Kingdome to be Elective, and not Hereditary: yet so as they have alwayes set the eldest sonne on the throne of his Father; unlesse some extraordinary occasion have disposed it otherwise. But they that look upon their Stories in the former times can see no such matter: the Kingdome going generally in the way of Succession, unlesse by Faction, or some popular and powerfull Pretender hath interloped, as oftentimes hath hapned in such other Estates, as are hereditary, meerly without claim, or colour of Election. 'Tis true, that the male issue failing in Olaus, the son of Margaret, and the Princes which pretended by the Females after her decease, not being of sufficient power to assert their titles: the Kingdome was transferred to the house of Oldenburg, who held it on no other ground then by that of election. Which being an extraordinary case, is to make no Precedent, though seconded by the outing of King Christiern the second, and the advancement of Frederick unto that Estate: being acts of violence and force, and justified onely by the false Topick of successe. But whosoever lost by the hand, the Danes got well by it; King Frederick taking up the Crown upon such conditions as have made him and his successours little more then Titulary. For he was fain to swear at his Coronation, that he would put none of the Nobility to death, or banishment, but by the judgement of the Senate; that the great men should have power of Life and Death over their Tenants, or Vassals; that no Appeal should lie from them to the Kings Tribunall, nor the King be partaker of the Confiscations; nor finally, advance any to Commands and Honours, but by consent of his Great Councell. Which Oath being also taken by his Successours, made Bodinus say, Non tam re ipsa quam appellatione Reges esse; that they were onely Kings in Title, but not Kings indeed. Yet in regard that the Nobility (so they call their Gentry) have but small Estates, none of them above the degree of Knights, (except onely the Princes of the Blood) and that degree conferred by the King alone, it is not often found that they have dared to crosse, or oppose their King, but when some of the Royall Family (out of private ends) have concurred with them in it: as in the case of Christiern the second deposed by the people, but those people headed, and set on by his Uncle Frederick, who had an eye upon the Crown.

As for the Senate, or Great Councell spoken of before, it consists wholly of men chosen out of the Nobility, (who are to prove their Gentry by a long descent) seldome exceeding the number of 28. to each of which, there is allowed a convenient Salary, with some fair Castle in the Country for his retirements during his being of that bodie: his whole estate being freed also for that time from all publick payments. Without their counsell and advice, the King is neither to determine of Peace or War, or to enter into any new Leagues, or Confederacies, nor impose any Tax upon the Subject: and unto them, and the King joyntly, is the last Appeal: such being the constitution of this Estate, that all Causes and Controversies are first decided in the Prefecture or Heret (184 in number) where they first arise; from whence it is lawfull to appeal to the Judge of the Province, from him to the Chancellour of the Kingdome, and finally to the King and Councell. By the Lawes of Waldemar the first who first reduced the Lawes into set form, and writing, the Bishops were to sit with this Councell in all causes of moment: discharged from that employment by King Christiern the third, by whom it also was ordained, that the Clergy should not sell any of the Church-lands without leave of the King.

The Forces which this King or Kingdome are to raise, may best be seen by some of their particular undertakings: those specially of Christiern the second, who at the request of Henry the second of France, sent a Navy of an hundred sail into Scotland against the English, and therein no fewer then 10000 Souldiers; and of Frederick then Duke of Holst, who in his war against this Christiern, (whose removall from the Crown he had then projected) brought 80000 men into the field, to make good his quarrell. And questionlesse, considering the many Ports and Ilands that this Crown is Master of both within the Baltick, and without, it cannot be but he may suddenly raise a strong power at Sea: And then considering that each of the Nobility which are here numerous enough, is bound to finde a certain number of Horse upon all occasions; as are those also who hold lands of the Kings which the Danes call Verlehninge; it will accordingly be concluded that they are able to make good Levies for a sudden service, especially in defence of their own dominions.

The Revenue of this King consisteth principally in the great impost, laid upon all ships which passe through the Sound: the greatnesse whereof may easily be conjectured at by the multitude of ships which of necessity must passe by it in the trade of the Baltick, though of late somwhat lessened of what it was, since the English found out, and frequented the Northern passage into Muscovia. There are alſo ſome Crown-lands; and a great yearly Tell made of the Catell, which paſſe into Germany; as alſo of the fiſh tranſported into other Countries. And yet it is conceived that the Treaſures of this King are not very great, partly becauſe there is no other important commodity, but fiſh, to draw Merchants thither: and partly that there is not any one Town of any great Traffick in all his Realmes for the entertaining of commerce.

The chief Order of Knighthood in it, is that of the Elephant, inſtituted by Frederick the ſecond, Their badge, a Collar powdred with Elephants towred, ſupporting the Kings Armes, and having at the end the picture of the Virgin Mary.

The Armes hereof are Quarterly, 1 Or, three Lyons paſſant Vert, crowned of the firſt, for the Kingdome of Denmark: and ſecondly Gules, a Lyon Rampant Or, Crowned and Armed of the firſt, in his pawes a Danſk hatchet Argent, for the Kingdome of Norway. What Armes belong to him as Duke of Holſt, and Sleſwick, I am yet to ſeek.

There are in Denmark
Archbiſhops 2. Biſhops 13.
Univerſities 2.

SWETHLAND is bounded on the East with Muscovie, on the West with the Dofrine hils which divide it from Norway; on the North with the great Frozen Ocean, spoken of before; on the South with Denmark, Liefland, and the Baltick Sea. So called from the Sueci, Suethans, or Suethidi, and the word Land added for a termination; of which more hereafter.

It is in length from Stockholm unto the borders of Lapland, above a 1000 Italian miles; and in breadth from Stockholm, lying on the Bodner Sea, to the borders of Denmark, about twenty good dayes journey on horse-back: insomuch as they which have travelled the length and breadth of it on this side of Lapland and the Gulf, accounts it little lesse then all Italy and France together: but taking in Lapland, and the Provinces on the other side of the Gulf, bigger then both by the quantity of 900 miles.

The situation of it in regard of the heavenly bodies, is the same with Norway, under the same Parallels and Degrees; but of so different a temper, both for soil and air, as if disposed of under severall and long distant Climes. For the Aire here is very pure, but not so sharp, and insupportable, as it is in Norway: though in some places where the Moores and Waters setle for want of care to open and cleanse the water-courses, they have great fogges and mists which doe somewhat putrefie it: And for the soil, it is more fertile then any of the other Northern Provinces: so that besides those necessaries which they keep for themselves, they usually transport into other Countries store of Malt and Barley; together with great quantities of Brasse, Lead, Steel, Copper, Iron, the hides of Goats, Bucks, Oxen, and costly furres. They have also some Mines of Silver not mixt with any other metall; plenty of fish in their Lakes and Rivers; abundance of Pine-trees, Firre, Oaks, both for ships and houses; yeilding besides, among the woods, good store of Tarre, and Honey, and some other necessaries. But hereof we shall speak more punctually in the severall Provinces.

The principall mountains of this Country are the Dofrine hils, a vast and continuall ridge of mountaines which divide it from Norway. And though they want not Rivers fit for common uses; yet partly by reason of their great frosts and flakes of Ice, partly by reason of the falling of trees which lie crosse their Channels; they have not many Navigable, or of any great fame. The principall of such as be, are 1 Meler, at the mouth whereof stands the City of Stockholm: 2 Lusen, 3 Dalecarlie, giving name to the Province so called, or as denominated from it. And of the Lakes, whereof here are exceeding many, that of most note is the lake of Werett which receiving it into 24 Rivers disburdneth it self at one mouth into the Baltick, with such noise and fury, that they call it commonly the Devils head.

The people are naturally strong and active, provident, patient, and industrious; hospitable towards strangers, whom they entertain with great humanity: so healthy, that if they doe not shorten their dayes by excesse and riot, they live commonly to 140 years of age; and so laborious, that a Begger is not seen amongst them: exceeding apt to learn as well Tongues and Scientes, as the Arts Mechanicall:

every man in a manner being his own Artificer, without imploying Smith, Maſon, Carpenter, or any of other manuall trades: very valiant both on foot and horſe back, which their long wars againſt the Danes, and their late wars in Germany, have given good proof of. Their women are diſcreet and modeſt, free from that intemperance which theſe Northern parts are ſubject to. Both ſexes uſe a corrupt Dutch, common to all three Northerne kingdoms: except in Finland, and the Provinces on the other ſide of the Bodner ſea, where they partake ſomewhat of the Muſcovite or Ruſſian language.

The Chriſtian Religion was firſt planted amongſt them by the care and diligence of Anſgarius Archbiſhop of Breme, the Apoſtle general of the North; corrupt with Popiſh ſuperſtitions, it was reformed, according to the Auguſtane Confeſſion, in the time of Guſtavus Ericus, the firſt of the preſent Royall familie; ſollicited thereunto by one Petre Nevicius a Lutheran Divine, and Lawrence the Archdeacon of Strengnes; but chiefly moved (as others ſay) by a deſire to appropriate to himſelfe the goods of the Church. And this appeares to have had ſome ſtrong influence upon him in it, in that he preſently ſeiſed upon what he pleaſed; and made a Law that Biſhops ſhould enjoy no more then the King thought fit: yet having pretty well leſſened their Revenues, he was content they ſhould remain as formerly both in power and number, reſerving to himſelfe and his ſucceſſours the nomination of the perſons; but ſo as the approbation of the Clergy (in a kinde of election) doth uſually goe along with the Kings appointment.

The Biſhops are in number ſeven, that is to ſay, 1 of Lincopen, containing in his Dioceſe 226 Pariſhes; 2 of Vexime, under whom are 210. 3 of Scara, ruling over the ſame number of Churches; 4 of Strengnes, under whom are an hundred onely; 5 of Aboe, the greateſt for extent of all, as comprehending under it 500 Pariſhes; 6 of Wiburg, and 7 of Habſay, whoſe Dioceſes for the moſt part lye out of the bounds of Sweden, in Muſcovie, Livonia, and ſome other of the out parts of Poland: all of them under the Archbiſhop of Upſal, as their Metropolitan, whoſe Dioceſe extending into Lapland and Finmarch, containeth 171 Pariſh Churches. By which accompt there are in all the kingdome of Swethland, but 1417 Pariſhes; but many of them of a thouſand or eight hundred families: the people being diſperſed in Forreſts and other places, where they have ſtore of timber to build them houſes, and ſtore of paſturage for their Cattell; which is the reaſon why they have not ſo many great townes, nor ſo well inhabited, as is uſuall in far leſſer Countries: As for the Authority of theſe Biſhops, they ſtill retaine their voice in Parliament, and with them ſo many of the inferiour Clergie, as are from every Socken, (a certain number of Pariſhes like our Rurall Deaneries) deputed to appeare there in the name of the Church: the affaires whereof the Biſhops do direct and order aſwell in as out of publick meetings, according to the Eccleſiaſticall Conſtitutions formerly eſtabliſhed; and if any great occaſion be, they may either adviſe with their Conſiſtorials, or call a Dioceſan Synod, (as they thinke moſt fit) and therein make ſuch Lawes and Canons, as they conceive to be moſt proper for their owne edification.

The whole kingdom is divided into two parts, the one lying on the Eaſt, the other on the Weſt ſide of the Bay or Gulf or Bodner, called Sinus Bodicus in Latine, being a large and ſpacious branch of the Baltick Sea extending from the moſt ſouthernly point of Gothland as farre as to Lapland on the north. According to which diviſion we have the Provinces of 1 Gothland and 2 Sweden, lying on the Weſt ſide of the Gulfe; 3 Lapland, ſhutting it up upon the North, 4 Bodia or Bodden, and 5 Finland, on the Eaſt ſide thereof; and 6 the Swediſh Iſlands, where it mingleth with the reſt of the Baltick.

GOTHLAND, is bounded on the Eaſt with the Bodner Sea, on the Weſt with the Mountains which divide it from Norwey, and ſo much of Denmark as lies in the ſame continent with it; on the North with Sweden; on the ſouth with the ſea Baltick. So called either from the Gothes, whoſe originall Countrey it is commonly affirmed to be; or quaſi goot landt, from the goodneſſe and fertility of the ſoyl (Goot landia, quæ Germanice Terra bona ſonat (as Maginus out of Munſter hath it) the ſoyle being very fruitfull for corne and cattell, affording plenty of Mines, with great ſtore of fiſh, and generally a better conditioned Countrey then any of the reſt of theſe Northern Regions.

It is divided commonly into Oſtrogoth, or Eaſt Gothland; Weſtergoth, divided from the former by the great lake of Weret ſpoken of before; and South Gothland, ſubdivided into Smalandia, Tuiſcia, and Verendia. Chief townes whereof in Oſtrogoth, are 1 Lincopen, a Biſhops See; 2 Loduſe, adorned with a very fair Haven: in Weſtergoth, 3 Scara on the lake Weret, a Biſhops See alſo; 4 Elſeburg on the Weſtern ſea, betwixt Denmark and Norwey; a place of conſequence; and flankerd with two very ſtrong Caſtles in the parts adjoining, the one called Croneberg, and the other Goldberg. 5 Traguatle, remarkable for iron workes, occaſioned by the mines adjoining. And finally in South Gothland, there is 6 Vexim, or Vexio, another of the Epiſcopall Sees: 7 Walburg, a reaſonable fair Town, with a ſtrong Caſtle. 8 Rottenby, and 9 Elcholm in Verendia, neer the confines of Denmark, 10 Colmar, a noted and well traded Port on the Baltick Sea, beautified with a Caſtle not inferiour to that of Millain; and ſo well fortified throughout, that at the taking of it by Chriſtiern the fourth of Denmark, anno 1611. there were found mounted on the Workes 108 braſſe peeces of Ordinance, ſix men of war to guard the Haven, with all manner of Ammunition in proportion to them.

Gothes.

The first Inhabitants of these south parts of Scandia, are commonly affirmed to have beene the GOTHES, whom Jornandes in his Book de Rebus Geticis, makes to have issued out of this countrey, and to plant themselves on the north bankes of the Ister, nere the Euxine sea, some time before the Trojan war: ascribing to them whatsoever is reported in old writers of the antient Scythians, as their encounter with Vexoris or Sesostris the King of Egypt, the Act and acheivements of the Amazons, their congresse with Alexander the Great in his Persian war, and the like to these. In which Jornandes being himself a Goth, is no more to be credited, then Geofrie of Monmouth a Welchman, in the storie of Brute and his successours, to whom he doth ascribe the taking and sack of Rome under the conduct of Brennus, whom he makes to be the brother of Belinus a King of Britain. Most probable it is that they were originally a Dutch or German people, part of the great Nation of the Suevi, called by Tacitus the Gothones, inhabiting in his time (as it is conceived) in the land of Prussia. Who finding their own countrey too narrow for them might passe over the Baltick into the next adjoining Regions: and not well liking that cold clime might afterwards in some good numbers goe to seek new dwellings, and at lest seat themselves on the bankes of Ister, where Jornandes found them. That they were Dutch originally, besides the generall name of the Gothones or Gothes, and those of Ostrogothes, and Wisigothes, into which they were afterwards divided; the particular names of Alaric, Theodorick, Riccared, (the names of their Kings and Captains) seem to me to evidence. That they were once seated in this Countrie doth appeare as plainly 1 by the name of Gothland here still remaining; 2 by the title of Rex Gotborum, which the Kings of Swethland keep in the Royall style; and 3 by some inscriptions in antient unknown Characters engraven on the rocks neere Scara in the Continent, and Wisby in the Isle of Gothland, supposed by learned men to be some monument of that people. And finally that their fixt dwellings, when first known by this name amongst the Romans, was on the north side of the Ister; is evident by the testimony of all antient Writers, from the time of Antoninus Caracalla, with whom they had some tumultuarie skirmishes in his way towards Persia; till their violent irruption into Italie and the Western Provinces: most famous in this intervall for a great fight with Decius the Roman Emperour, whom they overcame and slew in battell, anno 253. In the time of Valens and Valentinian the Roman Emperours a quarrell being grown amongst them, managed by Phritigernes and Athanaricus the leaders of the opposite factions, Phritigernes over throwne in fight did recourse to Valens, from whom he received such succours, that giving his adversary another day it, he obtained the victory. Whereupon Phritigernes and his partie received the Gospell, but intermixt and corrupt with the leaven of Arianism, by the practise of Valens, who sent them none but Arian teachers, to whom and their faction in the Church, he was wholly addicted. Afterwards the whole Nation being driven over the Ister by the barbarous Huns, they obtained of Valens the out parts of Thrace for an habitation, on condition they should serve under the pay of the Emperour, and become Christians: the cause that Arianism overspread the whole Nation generally, which had before infected but one partie onely. Ulphilas a devout and learned man, was their first Bishop; who for their better edification in the way of godlinesse, invented the Gothick Characters, and translated the Scriptures into that language: in the studie whereof they so well profited, that many of them in the time of their first conversion, suffered death for it at the hands of Athanaricus, and were counted Martyrs. Burdned by Valens, and denyed their accustomed pay, they harasse and depopulate the rest of Thrace, marching towards Constantinople: encountred in the way by Valens, whom they overcame, and killed, after all his favours. Vanquished by Theodosius the succeeding Emperour in many battels, they became good neighbours, inlarging their bounds with his leave and license as far as Pannonia, and grown into such estimation with him that Richmir and Frauita, two of that Nation, did obtaine the Consulship: not to say any thing of that exorbitant power and favour which Gainas had attained unto in the Court it selfe. Made insolent by so great honours, and apt to pick quarrels with their Patrons, they invaded Italy in two great bodies, consisting of no fewer then 200000 fighting men: the first whereof under the conduct of Rhadaguisus, was discomfited and cut in pieces by Stilico Lieutenant to Honorius the Western Emperour, at Fesula in the straits of the Appennine: the other by his treachery permitted to passe, sacked Rome, and subdued the most part of Italy, under the leading of Alaricus. He dying immediately after this great victory, left the fruits of it to his son Athaulfus, who marrying with Galla Placidia, the Emperours sister, relinquished Italy, and had all Gaul Narbonnoise, and a great part of Hispania Tarraconensis assigned unto him: where he erected the kingdome of the Wisi-Gothes, or Western Gothes, possessed of Spain and Tingitana, for the space of 300 years, and upward, when they lost that kingdome to the Moores, as hath there been said. In the meane time the Gothes which were left in their owne countries, distinguished from these by the name of Ostro-Gothes by reason of their more Eastern situation, kept themselves in quiet, first subdued by the Huns, and when by Wilamer, freed from that subjection, not intermedling or attempting any thing against the Empire, till called by Zeno Emperour of Constantinople into Italie, against Odoacer and the Heruli, who had then subdued it. Which action they managed with so much prudence and good fortune by their King Theodorick, that they vanquished Odoacer, possessed Italie, and held it above 60 yeares, when broken in many set battels by Belisarius and Narses, Lieutenants for the Emperour Justinian, their Kingdome and name there came unto an end.

As for the Kings of the Gothes, we have a succession of them in Jornandes, from Berig, who first conducted them out of Scandia towards the East, till the going of Theodorick into Italie: but made

Gothes. up with so little probalitie, that I dare give no more credit to it then to the stories of Brute, Dan, Fergus, or the Lady Scota Pharaohs daughter. Such of whom there is any certaine knowledge and succession are these few that follow.

The KINGS of the GOTHES.

344	1	Athanaricus king of the Gothes, in the time of Constantius and Constans the sons of Constantine the Great.
357	2	Alaricus, the first of that name in the time of Constantius.
	3	Phritigernes King of the Gothes in the time of Valens, the first Christian Prince among the Gothes.
370	4	Athanaricus II. in the time of the Emperours Valens, Gratian and Valentinian the second, under whom the Gothes were first setled on this side of the Ister.
379	5	Rhadaguisus, who in the time of Honorius, first led the Gothes into Italie, slain at the battell of Fesulæ.
410	6	Alaricus II. who pursuing the war of Italy, sacked Rome, subdued Naples, and the most of Italy.
412	7	Athaulfus the son of Alarick the second, who first erected the Kingdom of the Wisigothes in Gaul and Spain, continuing there for the space of 300 yeares and upwards: the present Kings of Spain coming from this stock.
417	8	Athalaricus King of the Gothes remaining in the East, at the departure of Rhadaguise and Alaricus distinguished from their plantations by the name of Ostrogothes: vanquished by Attila, they became subject to the Huns, in the time of Theodosius the second, and Valentinian the third, Emperour of the East and West.
	9	Wilamir, one of the bloud Royall of the Gothes, taking advantage of some quarrels amongst the sons of Attila, shooke off that yoke, and recovered the kingdom of the Gothes; in the time of the Emperour Marcianus.
	10	Theodemir son of Winithar, and brother of Wilamir in the time of Leo Emperour of Constantinople.
	11	Theodorick son of Theodemir, kept at Constantinople in his youth as a Pledge or Hostage for his Father, where he was instructed in all the Greeke and Roman learning, and made the adopted son (as is said by Scaliger) of the Emperour Zeno: by whom hee was sent into Italy against Odoacer and the Heruli erecting there the kingdome of the Ostrogothes, which continued till the reign of Justinian, when destroyed by Belisarius and Narses as before is said; the name of Gothes in Italy being thus extinct, but their bloud intermixt with the best Italian. The summe of their whole story, for varieties sake take thus out of Du Bartas.

The warlike Goth which whilom issued forth
From the cold frozen Islands of the North, Incamp'd by Vistula, but th' Air almost
Being there as cold as in the Baltick coast,
He with victorious Armes Sclavonia gaines,
The Transilvanian and Valachian plaines.
Then flies to Thracia, and then leaving Greeke, Greedy of spoile, foure times he bravely seeks
To pluck from Rome, then Mars his Minion,
The plumes which she from all the world had won:
Guided by Rhadaguise, and Alarick,
Bold Vindimarus and Theodorick.
Thence flies to France; from whence expulst, his Legions Rest ever since upon the Spanish Regions.

The Armes of these Kings are said to have been Or, three Ravens with displayed wings Purple, membred Gules. And let this suffice for the Originall, successes, and finall period of the Gothes; reserved by me unto this place, because most commonly conceived to be their originall countrey; at least the place out of which they issued, when they first moved towards the East to seeke new dwellings.

SWEDEN.

SWEDEN is bounded on the East with the Bodner Sea, on the West with the Dofrine hils, which part it from Norwey; on the North with Lapland, on the South with Gotland. So called from the Suethans or Suethids, the old Inhabitants hereof, of whom more anon. A countrey sufficiently fruitfull, but for the goodnesse of the soil inferiour to Gothland, and not so well planted or inhabited as that is, by reason of the vast Woods which they will not suffer to be destroyed, and the greatnesse greatneſſe of ſome mariſhes hitherto undrained: but might be made as rich and fertile, if the people would, as appeareth by that plenty of corn growing amongſt the Woods, though much hindered by their ſhade and thickneſſe both from Sunne and raine. But for the character of this Countrey we had it formerly, when we ſpake of Swethland in the generall; relating ſpecially to this as the principall part. Lapland.

And as the largeſt and principall part of this great body it containes in it many Provinces, and ſubdiviſions, as namely 1 Upland, 2 Suderman, 3 Noricia, 4 Weſtman, 5 Dalecarle, 6 Wermelund, 7 Copperdale, 8 Geſtricia, 9 Helſingen, 10 Middelphat, 11 Angerman, bordering on Lapland, the furtheſt of theſe Provinces towards the North. Many of which have no Townes or Cities of any greatneſſe or beauty, the people living thin, and ſcattered, where they have wood for building, paſturage for their Beaſts, and elbow roome enough for themſelves and their Cattell. Of theſe the principall are 1 Upſal, an Archbiſhops See, and an Univerſitie, ſituate not far from the Bay of Bodner: beautified with a large Cathedrall, wherein many of the ancient Kings of Swethland are interred. From this City the Countrey hereabouts is ſtyled Archiepiſcopatus Upſalenſis. 2 Holm, by the Inhabitants called Stockholm, by the Ruſſians Stecolne, the Royall ſeat of the Kings, a noted and well traded Port, and the chief of the kingdome: exceeding ſtrong both by Art and Nature, as being ſituate in the Mariſhes like Venice, at the mouth of the Lake, or River of Meler, the paſſage to it out of the Bay, being very narrow and by conſequence eaſily defended, and yet ſo deep withall, that the greateſt ſhips of burden may ſaile up to the City: the Port within the Strait being ſo ſafe and capacious, that it is able to receive at one time 300 ſail, which uſually ride there without any Anchour. The Caſtle of this City is conceived to be one of the ſtrongeſt Holds in the world, fortified for the more aſſurance of it with 400 braſſe peeces, many of which are double Canons. 3 Nicopen, a Sea town on the ſame Bay alſo. Theſe three are in that part hereof which is called Upland. Then there is 4 Strengnes, an Epiſcopall See; and 5 Telge, on the lake of Meler, in the Province of Suderman; the title and eſtate of Charles father of Guſtavus Adolphus late King of Sweden, before his getting of the Crown called Duke of Suderman. Next in the Province of Weſtman, there are 6 Arbogen, on the Weſt ſide of the ſaid Lake of Meler; and 7 Aroſe, rich in ſilver mines; out of which are made the beſt Dollars of Sweden: the mines here being ſo rich and profitable, that out of every fifteen pound weight of ſilver, the workmen draw a pound weight of gold. 8 Helſinge, upon the Bay of Bodner in the Province of Helſingen, taking name from hence. 9 Ozebo, or Ourbou, a ſtrong piece in Nerikia; and 10 Leſinger, on the Bay of Bodner, one of the furtheſt North of Sweden, diſtinctly and ſpecially ſo called.

LAPLAND.

LAPLAND, the moſt Northern part of all Scandia, hath on the Eaſt Ruſſia, on the Weſt the Province or Prefecture of Wardhuys, in the kingdome of Norwey; on the North the main frozen Ocean, and on the South Bodia or Bodden on both ſides of the Bay ſo called.

It is named thus originally from the Lappi or Lappones, the Inhabitants of it; as they are from their blockiſh behaviour; the word Lappon ſignifying the ſame with ineptus or inſulſus in Latine, for ſuch they are: rude, barbarous, and without the knowledge of Arts or Letters, as alſo without corn and houſes, or any certain habitations, (except onely in Finmarch) feeding for the moſt part on fiſh, and the fleſh of wild beaſts, with the skins whereof ſowed together they hide their nakedneſſe. Generally they are meer Idolaters, giving divine honour all day following to that living creature whatſoever it be, which they ſee at their firſt ſetting out in the morning: great Sorcerers, and abhorring the ſight of ſtrangers, whom till of late they uſed to flee from, at their firſt approach; but within few yeares paſt beginning to be more ſociable and familiar. In a word, they are the true deſcendants of the Antient Finni (poſſeſſed in old times of all that tract which lyeth betweene the Bay of Finland and the Frozen Ocean) whoſe naturall rudeneſſe and barbaritie, unmixt with the conditions of more civill people, they doe ſtill retain.

It is divided into the Eaſtern and the Weſtern Lapland. The former appertaining to the Knez or Great Duke of Muſcovie, by which people the Inhabitants are called Dikiloppi, or the wild Lappians; is ſubdivided into Biarmia and Corelia, of which if there be any thing in them worth taking notice of, wee ſhall there ſpeake more. The latter doth belong to the Crown of Sweden, ſubdivided into 2 parts alſo, that is to ſay, Finmarch, and 2 Scricfinnia.

1 FINMARCH, being that part hereof which lyeth next to Norwey, is the more populous of the two, the people for the moſt part idolatrous, but by the neighbourhood of the Norwegians, and reſort of ſtrangers unto Wardhuys, and the parts adjoining, ſomewhat civilized; and in the borders of both kingdoms ſavouring of Religion, poſſeſſed of ſheds or ſorry houſes, & thoſe houſes reduced to pariſhes, under the juriſdiction of the Archbiſhop of Upſal, the chiefe of which, (if there be any chief amongſt them) are named 1 Samman, and 2 Hielſo. Called Finmarch, as the antient bounds and Marches of the Finni (of whom more anon) and therefore erroneouſly by Maginus made a part of the kingdom of Norwey.

2 SCRICFINNIA lyeth between Finmarch and Ruſſia, the name derived from the Finni, a great people of Scandia, and Scriken a Dutch word ſignifying leaping, ſliding or bounding, for ſuch is their gate. An etymologie not much improbable, in that the wooden-ſoled ſhoes with ſharp bottomes, which they Finland. they uſed for their more ſpeedy ſliding over the yce, of which this countrey is full, are by the Germans (who alſo uſe them) called Scrikeſkoenen, or ſliding-ſhoes. The ancient Writers call this people Scrictofinni.

Theſe are indeed the naturall and proper Laplanders; and unto theſe the former character doth of right belong. Of ſtature very low, little more then Pigmeys, but ſtrong and active, well skilled in Archerie, and patient of cold and labour. Much given to hunting of wild beaſts whom they kill with their bowes, devoure the fleſh, and cloath themſelves with their skins, which they tie at the top of their heads, and leave no place open but for the ſight, giving thereby occaſion unto ſome to write, that they are hairie all over like kine or horſes. Such Deere (whereof they have great plenty) as they take unkilled, they make to draw in little carts, as they ſhift their Quarters. But having ſerved them for a while they are killed at laſt, though perhaps for nothing but their skinnes; a certaine number of which they pay yeerly to the King of Sweden in the way of tribute. Three companies of theſe Laplanders, ſo clad and armed as aforeſaid, came into Germanie in the year 1630 to ſerve Guſtavus in thoſe wars; looked on with admiration by all ſpectators.

Townes we muſt look for none here, where no houſes be: and yet there are ſome ſheds and cabbins on the Sea ſhore; which Mariners having made for their refreſhment when they came on land, have beſtowed ſome names on, and poſſibly in time may become good townes, now not worth the naming.

BODIA.

BODIA, BODEN, or BODNEK, is ſituate on the South of Scricfinnia, betwixt it and the Bay or Gulfe hence named; extending ſouthwards on the Weſt ſide of it till it joines to Sweden, and on the Eaſt ſide till it meet with the Province of Finland. Hence the diviſion of this countrey, into the Eaſtern, Northern, and Weſtern Bodden; with reference to the ſituation of it on the Bay aforeſaid. The countrey not very plentifull of grain or fruites, but full of great variety of wilde beaſts, whoſe rich skins yeeld great profit unto the Inhabitants; and by reaſon of the commodious ſituation on all ſides of the Bay, well ſtored with Fiſh. Antiently it was part of the poſſeſſions of the Finni, but how or whence it had the name of Bodia, or Bodden, or Bodner, I am yet to learn. But whence ſoever it had the name, certain I am, that from hence the Gulfe adjoining, is called Sinus Bodicus, Bodner Zee, by the Dutch or Germans.

Chief Townes here in are 1 Barkara, in Weſt Bodden, betwixt the Bay and a great navigable lake; 2 Gernia, a well traded Emporie at the very bottom of the Bay in North Bodden; 3 Helſingeliac, more North then that, towards the borders of Lapland, and 4 Kerldby, in Eaſt Bodden, on the bank of the Gulfe, conveniently ſeated for a town of Trade.

3. FINLAND.

FINLAND hath on the North, Bodia; on the South, the Baltick Sea, or Mare Suevicum: on the Eaſt, Sinus Finnicus; on the Weſt, Sinus Bodicus. It is by Munſter thought to be called Finland, quaſi fine land; quod pulchrior & amœnior ſit Suecia, becauſe it is a more fine and pleaſing countrey than Sweden it ſelfe. But indeed it is ſo called from the Finni, or Fenni; a potent Nation who have here dwelt; whoſe character is thus framed by Tacitus: Finnis mira feritas, fœda paupertas, non arma, non equi, non penates, victui herbæ, veſtitui pelles, cubile humus, ſola in ſagittis ſpes. The Finnes, ſaith he, are wonderfully barbarous, miſerably poore, without Armes, Horſe, or Houſehold Goods: Herbs their food, the ground their bed, and the skins of beaſts their beſt apparell, armed onely with their Arrowes, and in them their hopes. A Character which agreeth every way with our preſent Finlanders, eſpecially thoſe of Scricfinnia, and ſome parts of Finmarchia, who are not ſo well reclaimed to civility, as the other are; but very different from that which Jornandes gives them, who living within 400 yeares after Tacitus, before they had much (if any) entercourſe with forein Nations, telleth us of them that they were Scanziæ Cultoribus omnibus mitiores, more tractable and civill then any of the Inhabitans of Scandia, not excepting the Suethidi themſelves. If ſo, they did deſerve to live in ſo good a Countrey, more plentifull and plaine then Sweden, and neither ſo hilly nor ſo mooriſh.

The principall places in it are 1. Abo, an Archbiſhops See, ſituate on the moſt Southern point of it, ſhooting into the Baltick. 2 Wiburg, a Biſhops See alſo, whoſe juriſdiction for the moſt part is without this Province, on ſome part of Ruſſia; all Finland being in the Dioceſe of the Biſhop of Abo. A town conveniently ſeated at the bottome of the Bay or Gulfe of Finland (called Sinus Finnicus in Latine) which divides this Countrey from Livonia: well fortified as the chief Bulwarke of this Kingdome againſt the Moſcovite; and ſo well garriſoned withall, that the keeping of this town, and Rivallia in the borders of Liefland, doe coſt the king of Sweden 100000 Dollars yearly. 3. Udden, on a point or Promontorie of the ſame Gulfe oppoſite to Narve, another Garriſon of this king, in Liefland. 4 Verma upon the Bodner Zee, 5 Cronaburg, more within the land, at the efflux of a River out of the Lake called Puente, 6 Deckala, on the banks of the great Lake called Hoela. 7 Varta, more northwards towards Lapland: of which laſt four I finde not any thing obſervable in the way of ſtory.

6 The SWEDISH ISLANDS.

And now at laſt I come to the Swediſh Iſlands, here and there interſperſed in the Baltick Seas, betwixt the Iſle of Bornholm which belongs to Denmark, and Lieſland or Livonia, appertaining to the King of Poland; the principall of which are 1 Gothia, or the Iſle of Gothland, and 2 Inſula Vlandæ, or the Iſles of Oeland.

1. GOTHIA, or the Iſle of GOTHLAND, is ſituate over againſt Colmar, a ſtrong town in the Continent of Gothland; in length 18 Dutch miles, and five in breadth. Of a rich ſoile, but more fit for paſturage then tillage, yeelding great heards of Cattell, ſtore of game for hunting, plenty of fiſh, excellent marble, and aboundance of pitch, which it ſends forth to other Countreys. There are in it 18 large and wealthy Villages; beſides the Haven town of Wisbich, heretofore rich, and of very great trading, as much frequented by the Merchant as moſt in Europe, but now much decayed, and neither ſo well peopled, nor ſo rich as formerly. The trade removed hither from Wollin of Pomerania (deſtroyed by Waldemar the firſt of Denmark, anno 1170) made it flouriſh mightily: the greateſt traffick of the Baltick being managed here: but after that by reaſon of the long and continuall wars betwixt Denmark and Swethland for the poſſeſſion of this Iſle, it became unſafe; the Factorie was transferred unto other places. For being conveniently ſeated to annoy the Swedes, the Danes have much contended for it, and ſometimes poſſeſſed it; but at the preſent is in the hand of the Swethlander. By ſome conceived to be the Eningia ſpoken of by Pliny.

2 OELAND, or the Iſles of Vlande, ſo called in the plurall number becauſe there are many of them, of which this the principall, is ſituate over againſt Abo, the chief City of Finland. Of no great note, but that it is commodiouſly ſeated to invade or annoy this kingdome; and therefore very well fortified, and as ſtrongly garriſoned: here being the good towns of 1 Viburg, 2 Vames, and 3 the ſtrong Caſtle of Caſtrolm.

Beſides which Countreys here deſcribed, the King of Sweden is poſſeſſed of the ſtrong townes of Narve and Rivallia, and Pernow in Lieſland; of Kexholm or Hexholm in Corelia, a Province of Ruſſia; with very fair and ample territories appertaining to them: ſubdued and added to this Crown by John the ſecond, anno 1581. except Rivallia, which voluntarily ſubmitted to Ericus the ſecond King of this preſent Race, anno 1561. But being theſe Townes and Territories are not within the bounds of Swethland; we ſhall deferre all further diſcourſe thereof, to a place more proper.

The firſt Inhabitants of this kingdome, beſides the Gothes and Finni, ſpoken of already, were the Sitones, and Suiones, mentioned in Tacitus; together with the Phavone, the Phireſi, and the Levoni, whom we finde in Ptolemie, placed by him in the Eaſt and middle of this great Peninſula. Which being the generall names of ſome mighty Nations, are by Jornandes branched into leſſer tribes, of the Suethans, Teutiad, Vagoth, Bergio, Hallin, Liothida, Athelnil, Gaurigoth, Raumarica, Rauragnicii, Grannii, Aganzie, Daxe, Arochitamii, Enagere, Othingi, and divers others by him named. But from what root the name of Sweden, Swedes, or Swethland, by which the chief Province of it, the people generally, and the whole kingdome is now called, is not yet agreed on, nor ſpoken of at all by Munſter or Crantzius, which two, (but ſpecially the laſt) have written purpoſely of this people. Gaſpar Peucerus deriveth them from the Sueui, who antiently inhabited in the North parts of Germanie beyond the Albis; from whom the Baltick ſea was called Mare Sueuicum: which people hee conceiveth to have beene driven by the Gothes and Daci into this countrey, and by the change of one letter onely to be called Sueci. But this hath no good ground to ſtand on, though I meet with many others which are more improbable. For when they left thoſe colder countreys, they fell into theſe parts which are ſtill called Suevia (the Schwaben of the modern Dutch) where we finde them in the time of Cæſar. And after, in fatali illa gentium commigratione, when almoſt all the Northern Nations did ſhift their ſeats, we finde ſuch of them as had ſtaid behinde, to have accompanied the Vandals in their on-fals into Gaul and Spain. Of any expedition of theirs croſſe the Baltick ſeas, ne gry quidem, nothing to be found in more antient Authors. We muſt therefore reſerve the originall of this people either to the Suiones, or the Suethidi, or perhaps to both: both being antiently ſetled in theſe Northern Regions. Of the Suiones wee read in the booke of Tacitus inſcribed De Moribus Germanorum; by whom reported to be ſtrong in men, armour, and ſhipping: and that they were inhabitants of Scandia, appeares by two circumſtances in that Authour. 1 That the people were not permitted to weare weapons, quia ſubitos hoſtium incurſus prohibet Oceanus, becauſe the Ocean was to them a ſufficient Rampart; which could not be affirmed of the antient Suevians, but agreeth very well with the ſituation of this preſent Countrey, defended by the Baltick, and vaſt Northern Ocean, from the ſudden aſſaults of any enemy. 2. Becauſe the Sea which hemmed in that people was conceived to be the utmoſt bound of the World; trans Suiones mare aliud, quo cingi claudique terrarum orbis fines, as his words there are: which wee know to hold good of this Countrey. Adde unto theſe this paſſage of the old Annals of the Emperour Lewis the ſecond, where it is told us of the Danes, relicta patria apud Suiones exulabant, that they were baniſhed into the countrey of the Suiones, which cannot ſo well be underſtood of any place as of this Sweden; being next neighbour unto Denmark. And 4 that this people both by Munſter and Crantzius, are as well called Suiones as Sueci or Sueoi: which ſheweth what they conceived of their true Originall. Then for the Suethans or the Suethidi, whom Jornandes speaks of in his book De rebus Geticis, they are by him placed in the Isle of Scandia (for such this great Peninsula was esteemed to be by most antient writers.) Now that these Suethidi are no other then the present Swethlanders appeareth 1. by the propinquity of the names; 2 In that he maketh the Finni and Finnaithæ, the next neighbours to them; and 3 in that they are affirmed by the same Authour, to have furnished the Romans with rich Furs, and the skins of wilde Beasts, with which commodities this countrey is aboundantly well stored. Now to which of these two Nations, either the Suiones or the Suethidi, those of Sweden are most endebted for their originall, will (I conceive) be no great controversie: the Suethans, and Suethidi of Jornandes, being no other then a tribe of the Suiones, though the greatest and most powerfull of all those tribes: placed therefore in the front to command the rest, and so most like to give the name unto the whole.

Their government was antiently under Kings, affirmed so to be by Tacitus, who telleth us also that they were absolute and free, nullis exceptionibus, non precario jure regnandi, not bound in Covenant with their people, nor holding their Estates at the will of the Subject. But their Historians have gone for Antiquity hereof beyond the story of Brute or the Trojan warre, (beyond which very few of that strain have dared to pretend) as high as unto Magog the son of Japhet; reigning here within 90 years after the flood. But letting passe these dreams and dotages of the Monkish times, certain it is, that sometimes they were under the Danes, sometimes under the Norwegians, sometimes had distinct Kings of their owne, and finally sometimes were comprehended with the Danes and Norwegians, under the generall name of Normans, conducted by one King or Captain upon forain actions. Omitting therefore the succession of their former kings, of whose very being there is cause to make great question; we will begin our Catalogue of them with Jermanicus, who entertained Harald King of Denmark, and his brother Regenfride, driven out of that kingdome by Gottricus or Godfrey, the Contemporary of Charlemagne, of whose successours Munster giveth us more certainty.

1313 26 Magnus III. son to Ericus: the brother of Birgerius was also chosen King of Norwey.

1463 28 Albert Duke of Mecklenburg, son of Euphemia the sister of Magnus the fourth; to the prejudice of Aquinus king of Denmark and Norwey, made King of Sweden, on that quarrell vanquished by Margaret Queen of Denmark and Norwey, widow of Aquinus, anno 1387. to whom desirous of liberty he resigned his Kingdom, and dyed in his own countrey, anno 1407.

1387 29 Margaret Queen of Denmark, Sweden, and Norwey, the Semiramis of Germany, having united the three Kingdomes under her command, caused an Act of State to be passed in Colmar, a chiefe town of Swethland, for the perpetuation of this union unto her successours; the Lawes and Priviledges of each Kingdome continuing as before they were.

1411 30 Ericus IV. Duke of Pomeren, adopted by Margaret, of whose sister Ingelburgis he was descended, was in her life time chosen King of the three Kingdomes, into which he succeeds actually after her decease; but outed of them all by a strong faction raised against him, anno 1439. he dyed in a private estate in Pomeren, anno 1559.

1448 32 Carolus Canutus, one of the meanest of the Nobility, and not long pleasing to the great ones: whose displeasure when he had incurred and feared the consequents thereof, hee gathereth together all the treasure he could, fled unto Dantzick, and there ended his dayes.

1455 33 Christiern King of Denmark and Norwey, called in by a party of the Swedes, and crowned King of Swethland; but outed againe under colour that he had not kept conditions with them: the kingdome governed after that (for a time) by Marshals.

1458 34 John King of Denmark and Norwey, the ſonne of Chriſtiern, received king by the Swedes, then overpowered by the Muſcovite: but their turne being ſerved they expelled him againe; returning to their former government under Marſhals. (Of which Marſhals (deſcended from Steno Stur, the Uncle of Carolus Canutus by his Mothers ſide) there were three in number; viz. Steno, 2 Suanto, and 3 Steno Stur the ſecond, of which the two firſt dyed naturall deaths, and the laſt being by Chriſtiern the ſecond ſlaine in battell, this kingdom was again poſſeſſed by the Danes.

1519 35 Chriſtiern II. King of all three kingdome, uſed his victory ſo cruelly here, and his ſubjects ſo inſolently at home; that here he was outed by Guſtavus Ericus, and driven out of Denmark by his Uncle Frederick.

1523 36 Guſtavus Ericus deſcended from the antient race of the kings of Sweden, having vanquiſhed and expelled the Danes, was on the merit of that action choſen king of Swethland; which ſtill continueth in his houſe.

1561 37 Ericus V. ſonne to Guſtavus 8.

1569 38 John II. brother of Ericus, marryed Catharine the ſiſter of Sigiſmund the ſecond, king of Poland.

1593 39 Sigiſmund the ſonne of John the ſecond, in the life time of his Father choſen king of Poland, anno 1586. but was diſpoſſeſſed of the Crown of Sweden, (after a long warre) by his Unele Charles.

1607 40 Charles II. Duke of Suderman, the youngeſt ſon of Guſtavus Ericus, and brother of John and Eric, the two former Kings, firſt governed here as Viceroy for his Nephew Sigiſmund; but having an aime upon the Crowne (to which he found the Lutherans not very favourable) hee raiſed up a Calvinian partie within that Realm, according to whoſe principles he began firſt to with draw his obedience from his naturall Prince, and afterwards to aſſume the Government to himſelfe: ſpeeding ſo well in his deſigne, that after a long war he forced his Nephew to deſiſt from all further enterpriſes, and made himſelf king, anno 1607.

1611 41 Guſtavus Adolphus ſonne of Charles having ſetled his affaires in Sweden, and made peace with the king of Denmarke, with whom his father was in warre at the time of his death; fell firſt upon his Couſin Sigiſmund the King of Poland, from whom hee tooke many places of importance in Pruſſia and Livonia, and in purſuance of that warre was made Knight of the Garter. Afterwards having ſetled a truce with him, hee paſſed into Germanie, then in great danger of being abſolutely inthralled to the houſe of Auſtria. In which hee proſpered ſo beyond all expectation, that in one yeare hee paſſed over the Elb, the Rhene, and the Danow (which no Conquerour ever did before): and having twice vanquiſhed the Imperialiſts led by Tilly, and reſtored many of the German Princes unto their eſtates; was in the current of his victories ſlaine in the battell of Lutzen, Novemb. 1632. his body royally conveyed to Swethland and there interred.

1632 42 Chriſtina ſole daughter of Guſtavus, of the age of ſeven yeares, acknowledged Queen of Sweden; the eſtate governed by the Counſails of the Nobility. After a long warre with variable ſucceſſe in Germanie, they came at laſt to this Accord in the treaty of Munſter, that ſhee and her ſucceſſours Kings and Queens of Swethland, ſhould peaceably enjoy all the Higher Pomeren, with the Iſles of Rugia, Wollin, and the Towne of Stetin in Lower Pomerland; the Towne and Port of Wiſmar in the Dukedome of Mecklenburg; and the whole Biſhoprick of Bremen and Verden, and the Prefecture of the Towne of Wilchuſen; with the title of Dukes of Bremen, Pomeren, and Verden, Princes of Rugia, and Lords of Wiſmar; and by thoſe titles have a place, as Princes of the Empire, in all Diets and Aſſemblies which concerne the publick. By which agreement (if it hold) the Swedes have not onely got a good footing in Germanie, a ſtrong influence upon all the Counſels of the Empire, a dore open for more forces (if occaſion bee) and a free paſſage into the Weſtern Ocean, which before they wanted: but may in time prove abſolute Maſters of the Baltick ſea, and make the Hamburgers, thoſe of Lubeck, and poſſibly the Kings of Denmark and the Empire it ſelfe, be at their devotion.

But leaving theſe things to the doubtfull iſſue of contingencie, let us next looke upon the forces and Revenues of the Crowne of Sweden, before the time of Guſtavus Adolphus, or as hee found it at his ſucceſſion to that Crowne. For though the Swedes pretend their Kingdome to be elective, eſpecially ſince the failing of the Royall line in Magnus the fourth and Albert of Mecklenbourg; yet ſtill the eldeſt ſon, or next heir ſucceedeth, unleſſe put by, by faction and ſtrong hand, as in the caſe of Sigiſmund, and his Uncle Charles. Which Charles ſo ordered his affaires that having engaged the kingdome in a warre againſt his Nephew, hee was ſollicited at the laſt to accept of the Crowne: to which he would by no meanes yeeld till a Law was made for the entailing of the ſame for ever unto his poſterity, whether male or female, as an Hereditary Crown. But whether Hereditary or Elective, the King once ſetled in the Throne is an abſolute Monarch; having not onely power to levie taxes on his ſubjects, as hee ſeeth occaſion, as five, ſix, ſeven, eight dollars, or more yearely, upon every houſholder, according to the Proportion of his eſtate; but alſo to grant a certaine number of Paiſants unto ſuch as hee meanes to favour, to bee as ſubjects and vaſſals to him, according to his well deſerving. And whereas in the conſtitution of this Govervment every Pariſh hath a Landſman or Conſul to decide the controverſies of the ſame; as every Territorie hath its Vicount, and each Province his Lamen: there lyeth an Appeal from the Landſman unto the Vicount, and from the Vicount to the Lamen; who if they bee ſuppoſed not to judge uprightly, then the Appeale lies unto the Counſell, and from the Counſell of Eſtate to the King himſelfe, (in whom is fixed the Soveraignty and DERNIER RESORT) and not unto the King and Counſell, as before in Denmark.

The Forces of this King are either by Sea, or Land. By Sea, hee is Commander wholly of Bodner, and hath a great power in all the reſt of the Baltick: being able to ſet out 70 good Men of Warre; as John the ſecond did in the yeare 1578. ſeven of which were good Gallions; and all the reſt did carry above 50 caſt peeces of all ſorts; beſides many other good Veſſels fit for ſervice. And if a Navie of this ſize will not ſerve the turne, hee is not onely furniſhed with timber, cordage, and all other neceſſaries for the building of Ships, and with good ſtore of Ordinance and Ammunition for preſent uſe; but is able to raiſe upon a ſudden 6000 Mariners, and upon little warning as many more: all which hee entertaineth at no other charges in a manner then to finde them victuals, inſomuch as John the ſecond before mentioned did uſe to ſay, that that which coſt the King of Spaine a Million of Crownes, coſt not him 100000 Dollars.

For his Land-forces, they may beſt be eſtimated by the Trained Bands, (as wee may call them) in every Province: there being in all 32 Vexilles (or Enſignes) of Foot conſtantly trained and muſtered in the ſeverall Provinces; each Vexille comprehending 600 or 700 men, amounting in the totall to 20000 Foot, all in a manner Muſketiers, ready to march whenſoever the Kings occaſion ſhall ſo require. And then for Horſe there are eleven Cornets in continuall readineſſe, for Sweden, and Gothland, and two for Finland, maintained at the charges of thoſe Countries, to which the King may adde at his owne charges, as many more as hee pleaſeth. And for an inſtance of what this King is able to doe, without putting his eſtates in hazard by drayning them too drye of men to make good his kingdome; wee finde that John the ſecond in his Navie of 70 Ships ſpoken of before, had above 18000 Land-ſouldiers, beſides Mariners: And in the Army which Guſtavus Adolphus the late King brought into Germanie, there were muſtered no fewer at one time then 12000 Horſe, and 34000 Foot, all Finnes, and Swethlanders. For the accommodating of which Armies with Artillerie, and the like Engines of war, it is thought that the kings hereof are maſters of 8000 great peeces, for the moſt part braſſe, with Mortar peeces and Granadoes in proportion to them.

But that which makes his Land forces moſt conſiderable is their hardneſſe in enduring the extremities of winde and weather, inſomuch that it is uſuall with them to ſtand Centinell a whole Winters night of 18 houres long without being relieved: their exact Diſcipline, and obedience to their Commanders, and finally their indefatigable induſtry in making their owne ſhoes, Apparrels, ſtockes for Muskets, and all other neceſſaries. Which doth not onely make them fit to endure any labour which is put upon them in the warres; but keepes them from idleneſſe, and the pride of Mutinies, the ordinary effect in great Armies of ſloth and eaſe. Nor doe they want incouragement on the Kings part neither; who firſt, gives to every ſouldier victuals, which hee accompts not in their pay, and that according to his obedience and deſert; 2. If a ſouldier be taken Priſoner, him the King doth uſually redeem at his owne charges: and 3 if a ſouldiers horſe be ſlain under him, the King ſupplyeth him with another: which makes the ſouldiers (very ſenſible of ſuch obligations) exceedingly conformable unto his commands, how dangerous ſoever they may ſeem to be.

Finally as for his Revenues they muſt needes bee great, there being foure wayes allowed him to amaſſe his treaſures. Firſt the Revenues of the Church, conſiſting before the Reformation of ſeven Biſhopricks and ſixty Monaſteries, which enjoyed very great poſſeſſions; all ſeized on by Guſtavus Ericus, and by him incorporate to the Crowne; excepting onely what is given back to maintaine the Biſhops. 2 Mines, which are here of all metalls in very great plenty, except of Gold and Silver, which they have more ſparingly; the tenth whereof in all places belongs to the King, and yeelds him ſuch a fair Intrade, that in the yeare 1578. the Kings part out of two or three Mixes of Copper onely amounted to 30000 Dollars. 3 Tenths, out of all increaſe, as Rie, Wheat, Barley, Fiſh, Oxen, Skinnes, and the like commodities; the ſumme whereof though not certainly knowne (becauſe the increaſe is ſo uncertaine) yet it was once computed that the tenth of the Oxen onely came in one yeare to 18000 Dollars, beſides proviſion for his houſhold. 4 And laſtly, Cuſtomes impoſed on Merchandiſe, and paid in all his Haven Townes for all commodities imported, or exported of what ſort ſoever. Beſides all which hee hath his Contributions in all times of warre, power of impoſing taxes (though moderately uſed) as his neceſſities require: and on the marriage of a daughter, the kingdome is to provide her portion, which of late times hath beene fixed at the certaine ſumme of 100000 Dollars, beſides Plate and Moveables. Out of which ſeverall Items to ſumme up the totall, it was obſerved that in the yeare 1578. King John the ſecond, (all charges ordinary and extraordinary being firſt deducted) did lay up in his Treaſurie no leſſe then 700000 Dollars: which was a vaſt ſumme for thoſe times, conſidering eſpecially the great charge which the King had beene at that yeare, in furniſhing niſhing a Navie of 70 ſayle, and raiſing 18000 Land-ſouldiers, (beſides Horſe) for defence of his Realme againſt the Danes. And yet it is conceived by ſome knowing men that his Revenues would be much greater then they are, if hee did employ ſtrangers to worke the mines, which the Natives doe not husband to the beſt advantage; and yet are fearfull to diſcover them to other Nations, upon ſome jealouſies which they are naturally addicted to: or if hee would turne Merchant, and in his owne ſhips ſend out Corn and Cordage with Maſts and Timber fit for building, and in them bring back ſalt and other neceſſaries, which his kingdome wants, ſetting them at a farre leſſe price then now they goe at, and yet gaining very greatly by it too.

The Armes of this Kingdome are Azure, three Crownes, Or.

OF RUSSIA.

RUSSIA is bounded on the East by Tartarie, on the West with Livonia, and Finland, from which divided by great Mountains, and the River Poln; on the North by the Frozen Ocean, and some part of Lapland; and on the South by Lituania, a Province of the Kingdom of Poland, and the Grim Tartars inhabiting on the Banks of Palus Mæotis and the Euxine Sea. It standeth partly in Europe and partly in Asia, the River Tanais or Don running through it: the common boundarie of those great and noted parts of the world.

It was thus called from the Rossi or Russi, a people of Mount Taurus or Taurica Chersonesus (if not both) who in the declining times of the Greek Empire, possessed themselves of some parts of it, and being the prevailing people imposed their name on all the rest. Called also Russia Alba, to distinguish it from Russia Nigra a Province of Poland, quod incolæ omnium gentium ipsius imperio subjectarum (as one observes discoursing of the affairs hereof) vestibus albis & Pileis plerunque utantur: becaus the Inhabitants use to wear white caps and vestments. And why not thus; sithence the people of Margiana and Sogdiana in Asia have the name of Jeselbasse, only becaus they wear green turbants, as the word importeth? Finally it is called Moscovie, from Moscovie the chief Province of it, as that denominated from the Moschi, of whom more anon.

In reference to the heavenly bodies it is said by some to be situate betwixt the 8. and 20. Climates, the longest day in the Southern parts being but 16 hours and an half, and almost 22 hours and an half in the Northern parts. But this is to be understood only of the Province of Moscovie, properly and specially so called, and not of the whole Empire of the Moscovite, according to the bounds before laid down. For taking in the Northern Provinces belonging to it, as East Lapland, Candora, and Petzora, lying within the Arctick Circle, the longest day in Summer wil be ful 6 months (for so long do those Countries see no night at all:) which is a mighty disproportion from the length of the longest day in the most Southern parts, being but 16 houres and an half, as before is said. And by this rule we are to take the dimensions also. For though some make the length hereof from North to South, that is to say, from Cala in the North to Astrachan near the Caspian Sea, to be no more then 2260 Verstis, or 3690 Italian miles: yet they confess that reckoning forwards from Tromschua the furthest point of Petzora, the full length thereof will be nigh so much more. And for the breadth, reckoning from Narve on the Bay of Finland (now in possession of the Swedes) to the Province of Severia in the East, it amounteth to 4400 Verstis, or 3300 Italian miles; each Verst being estimated at three quarters of an English mile. Which mighty Territorie, if it were peopled answerably to some other parts of the world, would either make it too great for one Prince to hold, or make that Prince too great and puissant for all his neighbours.

The people, as is commonly reported of them, are very perfidious, crafty and deceitful in all their bargains, false-dealers with all they have to do with, making no reckoning of their promises, and studying nothing more then wayes to evade their Contracts. Vices so generally known and noted in them, that when they are to deal with strangers, they dissemble their Countrie, and pretend to be be of other Nations: for fear leſt no bodie ſhould truſt them. Deſtitute of humane affections, and ſo unnaturall that the father inſults on the ſon, and he again over his father and mother: So malicious one towards another, that you ſhall have a man hide ſome of his own goods in the houſe of ſome man whom he hateth, and then accuſe him for the ſtealth of them. They are exceedingly given to drink, inſomuch that all heady and intoxicating drinks are by Law prohibited: and two or three dayes only in a year allowed them to be drunk in. For the moſt part they are ſtrong of body, ſwift of foot, of a ſquare proportion, broad, ſhort, and thick; grey-eyed, broad-bearded, and generally furniſhed with prominent paunches. The Commons live in miſerable ſubjection to the Nobles; and they again in as great ſlavery to the Duke or Emperour; to whom no man of all the vulgar dares immediately exhibit a Petition, or make known his grievances: nay the mean Lords and Officers are ſqueamiſh in this kinde, and but on great ſubmiſſion, will not commend unto the Duke a poor mans cauſe. They are altogether unlearned, even the Prieſts meanly indoctrinated; it being cautionated by the great Duke that there be no Schools, leſt there ſhould be any Scholars but himſelf: ſo that the people uſe to work commonly on the Lords day, holding it fit only to be kept by Gentlemen; and to ſay in a difficult queſtion, God and our Great Duke know all this: and in other talk, All we enjoy health and life, all from our Great Duke. According to whoſe pleaſure every man is preſcribed what habit he ſhall wear, both for matter and faſhion ſuitable unto their condition. In the time of my Author, their habit was a long Garment without plaits, which hung down to their heels, commonly of white or blew, with very ſtrait ſleeves: on their legs wearing buskins up as high as the calf, for the moſt part red, high at the heels, and beſet with nails of iron. The ſtuffe and trimming of this dreſſe is the only difference betwixt the Noble and the Paiſant. The women are attired alſo much after this manner, but if great and Noble, ſuffered to ſet forth themſelves with ſtore of pearls and precious ſtones, which hang ſo thick about their ears, that they do almoſt pul their ears from their heads. A ſecond marriage is conceived no blemiſh in point of chaſtitie, but the third condemns them of incontinence: naturally ſubject enough to the luſts of the fleſh, but private and fearful to offend; if once laſcivious, then moſt intolerably wanton. It is the faſhion of theſe women to love that husband beſt which beateth them moſt; and to think themſelves neither loved nor regarded, unleſſe they be two or three times a day well favouredly ſwadled. The Author of the Treaſurie of times, telleth a ſtory of a German Shoomaker, who travelling into this Country, and here marrying a widow, uſed her with all kindneſſe that a woman could (as he thought) deſire; yet did not ſhe ſeem contented. At laſt learning where the fault was, and that his not beating her, was the cauſe of her peeviſhneſſe; he took ſuch a vein in cudgelling her ſides, that in the end, the Hangman was fain to break his neck for his labour.

They uſe the Sclavonian language, but ſo corrupt and mixt with other languages that they and the Sclavonians underſtand not one anothers meaning, but by circumſtance only: yet in Jugeria (out of which the Hungarians are thought to have iſſued) they ſpeak a corrupt Hungarian; and in Perzota and the Countrie of the Czarcaſſians, they have a language to themſelves diſtinct from others.

They firſt received the Chriſtian Faith in the year 987. or as ſome ſay, anno 942. by the preaching and miniſterie of the Greeks, ſent hither by the Patriarch of Conſtantinople: of which Church they are conſtant followers both for rites and doctrine, but not without ſome ſuperſtitions of their own ſuperadded to them, viz. not coming near a Croſſe, Church, or Monaſterie, but they kneel down, and make the ſign of the Croſſe, ſaying, Miluy Hiſpodi, i.e. Lord have mercy upon us; not entring into any Church untill waſhed and bathe. They bear a deadly hatred to the Jews, whom they ſuffer not to live amongſt them; and ſo great friendſhip unto a Calfe, that they hold it a great offence to kil one, or to eat his fleſh. Their Church is governed by 18 Biſhops, and 2 Metropolitans, al of them ſubordinate to their Archbiſhop or Patriarch, as he in former times to the Conſtantinopolitan; by whom he uſed to be confirmed. But about an hundred years agoe they withdrew themſelves from that ſubjection; the Patriarch being nominated by the Great Duke, and conſecrated by two or three of his own Suffragans. Without the counſell and advice of this Patriarch, the Emperour or Great Duke doth nothing of any moment. The Biſhops are all choſen out of the Monaſtick or Regular Clergy; which makes the Monks, (being all of the Order of S. Baſil) to live very religiouſly in hope to be advanced to the Epiſcopall dignity. And for the Secular Clergy, or Parochiall Prieſts, there is not much required of them but to ſay their Maſſes (which being in their own language they may eaſily do,) and to read now and then one of S. Chryſoſtoms Homilies, tranſlated heretofore for the uſe of thoſe Churches: after the death of their firſt wives not permitted to marry, in other things little differing from the reſt of the people. Once in the year it is lawfull and uſuall with them to hold a Synod, at which the Patriarch hath his Crozier or Paſtorall ſtaffe carried before him, as the Popes Legate hath the Croſſe; where they make Conſtitutions for the publick government, and the regulating of Divine matters, moſt punctually and carefully obſerved by the Prince himſelf.

As followers of the Greek Church (but ſo as to be counted a Church diſtinct) they differ much both from the Romiſh and Reformed: 1 Denying the Holy Ghoſt to proceed from the Father and the Son. 2 Denying Purgatory, but praying for the dead. 3 Beleeving that holy men enjoy not the preſence of God before the reſurrection. 4 Communicating in both kinds; but uſing leavened bread, and mingling warm water with wine, which both together they diſtribute with a ſpoon. 5 Receiving children of 7 years old to the Sacrament of the Euchariſt, becauſe then they begin to ſin. 6 Forbidding extream unction, confirmation, and fourth marriages. 7 Admitting none to Orders but ſuch as are married, and yet prohibiting marriage to them that are actually in Orders. 8 Rejecting carved Images, but admitting the painted. 9 Obſerving 4 Lents in the year. 10 Reputing it unlawfull to faſt on Saturday, Saturday; or to eat blood or any thing that hath been ſtrangled according to the firſt Councell holden at Hieruſalem. 11 And finally diſſolving marriage by divorcement, upon every ſlight occaſion or conceived pleaſure. Which diverſitie betwixt the Romaniſts and this people in point of Religion, hath bred ſuch a difference betwixt them in point of Affection, and made them ſo ill conceited of one another: that if a Moſcovite be known or but ſuſpected to have converſed with any of the Church of Rome, he is accounted to be a polluted perſon, and muſt be ſolemnly purged and purified before he be admitted to partake of the bleſſed Sacrament.

In matters of war the people are indifferent able, as being almoſt in continuall broils with their Neighbours: and have a cuſtome that when they goe to the Wars every Souldier giveth to the Emperour or Great Duke a piece of money, which at the end of the war he receiveth again; and by that means the number of the ſlain is exactly known. At their funerals they uſe to put a penny into the mouth of the partie deceaſed, a pair of ſhoes on his feet, and a Letter in his hand, directed (ſuch is their ſuperſtition) to S. Nicholas, whom they deem to be the Porter of Heaven: an opinion doubtleſſe very prejudiciall to the Popes and S. Peters prerogatives.

This Country is not ſo populous as ſpatious. The Eaſtern parts are vexed with the Tartars; who like Eſops dog, will neither dwell there themſelves, nor ſuffer the Muſcovites to plant Colonies in them: the Weſtern parts are almoſt as much moleſted by the Sweden and Polonian Kings; the Southern by the Turks and Precopenſes; and the Northern by the coldneſſe of the air, which is of ſuch vehemencie, that water thrown up into the air, will turn to ice before it fall to the ground. The better to reſiſt the extremity of this cold, not only the clothes of this people, but their very houſes are lined with thick Furs. Every Gentleman or man of note hath in his dwelling-houſe a ſtove or hot-houſe, in which they keep, as it were, to thaw themſelves. Such as travell on the way, uſe often to rub their noſe or ears with ſnow or ice, to ſettle and recall the motive ſpirits into thoſe parts, which otherwiſe they would be in danger to loſe: the ignorance of which preventing Chirurgery, was not the leaſt cauſe that in the year 1598, of 70000 Turks, which made an inrode into Muſcovie, 40000 were frozen to death. By reaſon of theſe extremities of froſts and cold, it is the cuſtome of this people, to lay the bodies of their dead all the winter long on heaps in the Belfrees of their Churches; where they lie without putrefying or any ill ſavour, till the end of March; at what time the air beginning to wax warm and the earth to be fit for digging, each familie looks out their dead bodies, and takes care to bury them. This exceſſe of cold in the air, gave occaſion to Caſtilian in his Aulicus, wittily and not incongruouſly to faign, that if two men being ſomewhat diſtant, talk together in the winter, their words will be ſo frozen that they cannot be heard: but if the parties in the ſpring return to the ſame place, their words will melt in the ſame order that they were frozen and ſpoken, and be plainly underſtood. Such is their winter, neither is their ſummer leſſe miraculous. For the huge Seas of ice, which in a manner covered the whole ſurface of the Country, are at the firſt approach of the Sun ſuddainly diſſolved, the waters quickly dryed up, and the earth dreſſed in her holy-day apparell: ſuch a mature growth of fruits, ſuch flouriſhing of hearbs, ſuch chirping of birds, as if here were a perpetuall ſpring. The reaſon of which ſtrange and ſuddain alteration is conceived to be the long lying of the ſnow on the face of the earth, keeping it from the rigour of the winter froſts: which being diſſolved by the Sun in the beginning of the ſpring, doth ſo throughly drench and ſoke the ground (being of a light and ſandie mold) and conſequently make it the more penetrable by the beams of the Sun, ſhining hotly on it; that it forceth in a manner the Herbs and Plants to ſhoot forth in great plenty, and that too in a ſhorter time then can be imagined.

The whole Countrie generally is very much over-ſpread with Woods, parts of the great Hercynian Forreſt, heretofore over-running all the North, and ſtill more viſible here then in other places: either by reaſon of the idleneſſe of the people, naturally given to ſloath and eaſe; or for that the Country is not populous enough to overcome them; or that there is already ground enough for tillage to ſupply their neceſſary uſes. For here do grow the goodlieſt and talleſt trees of the world, through which by reaſon of their thickneſſe, the brightneſſe of the Sun-beams can hardly pierce: affording ſhelter to great multitudes of Cattle, but of wild beaſts eſpecially, whoſe skins are better then their bodies; as Bears, Marterns, Zibellines, Wolves, black Foxes, whoſe skins are of very great eſtimation. Of the timber of theſe trees are ſquared all neceſſaries both for Forts and Houſes; the Fortifications in this Countrie being made of huge Beams faſtened together, (the chinks filled with earth) not eaſily ſhaken by batterie, though much ſubject to fire. And out of them iſſueth an unſpeakable quantitie of Pitch and Rozin, which are hence diſtilled: beſides an everlaſting fountain of wax and hony; the Bees, without the Midwifrie of the Art of men, building their Hives or houſes in the hollow trees. Concerning this there goeth a ſtory (reported and beleeved for a certain truth) of a Countryman, who accidentally had ſlipped down into a great hollow tree, where he ſtood up to the breſt in honey, continuing there two dayes without other ſuſtenance: at the end whereof a Bear coming to partake of the bootie, he laid hold of his legs and ſo terrified him with his cries, that he made him leap out with the man at his heels. The Countrie yeildeth alſo great ſtore of Flax and Hemp, which is tranſported yearly into other Countries; and would make them very excellent cordage, if the people had any skill in manufactures or Mechanicall Arts: and in ſome places rich paſtures, and ſuch ſtore of Corn, that therewith they do furniſh Lapland, and the North parts of Sweden. Fiſh they have alſo in good plentie, which they ſalt and drie, and either vent it to the Merchant, or lay it up in ſtore for their Forts and Families. By which accompt it will appear that the principall commodities which they ſend abroad, are rich Furs, Flax, Hemp, Whales greaſe, Honey, Wax, Pitch, Rozin,

Nuts,

Nuts, Filberds, and the like: which either the Dutch and Engliſh buy of them at the Port of S. Nicholas, or the Armenians at Aſtrachan near the Caſpian Sea: giving them in return, Cloth, Silks, Tapeſtry, and ſome other Merchandiſe, tranſported to the value of 500000 Rubbles yearly. Particularly of Wax 50000 poad (every poad containing 40 Engliſh pounds) of tallow 100000 poad, 100000 hides, 100 ſhips laden with Flax and Hemp; the reſt of their Commodities proportionably in the time of my Author: ſince whoſe time the trade hereof hath been much increaſed.

This Country not improperly may be called (as by ſome it is) the Mother of Rivers. The chief of which are 1 the Don, called Tanais by the old Geographers, and by them thought to be the only Boundarie betwixt Europe and Aſia; the Northern parts of this Country being then unknown. It disburtheneth it ſelf into Palus Mæotis, and hath its fountain not out of the Ripheam Mountains, as was thought of old, but out of a great Lake called Iwanowreſero in the Forreſt of Okonitzkilies, or Jephapinolies, ſome 20 Engliſh miles from the Citie of Tulla, and having run a great way Eaſtward turneth back again, and then proceedeth Southwards towards the Mæotis, as was ſaid before. 2 Boryſthenes, now called Nieper, whoſe ſpring was unknown unto Herodotus, but now diſcovered to be near Dnieperk, a Village of Moſcovie (ſpecially ſo called) in the Forreſt of Wolkonskie. Whence paſſing South, and running by the Town of Smolensko, it receiveth many other Rivers, and amongſt them that of Doſna, (by the ancient Writers called Hipani) notwithſtanding whoſe muddy waters, it ſtill retains its naturall clearneſſe, and ſo falls into the Euxine Sea. 3 Tarunus (ſo called by Ptolemie) or Duina the leſſe (to difference it from Duina the greater) which riſing not far from the head of Boryſthenes, out of the Lake of Duina, and waſhing the wals of Riga the chief Town of Livonia, loſeth it ſelf in the Baltick Sea. 4 Dfina, or Dwine (commonly called Duina the greater) ſo called from the meeting of two rivers, the Juch and the Sachan (whereof more hereafter) of which that of the longeſt courſe, not known unto the ancients, hath its head in the Province of Permia, and its fall into the Frozen or Northern Ocean, at the Port of S. Nicholas. 5 Occa, or Ocyne, riſing in the Territorie of Miſceneck, and making all the Countrie fruitfull through which it paſſeth, emptieth it ſelf into the Volga. 6 Volga, by Ptolemie called Rha, by the Tartars, Edill; which riſeth 25 Dutch miles from Moſco towards Lituania, and fetching a great compaſſe in and out, after it hath ſwallowed up many leſſer Rivers, diſchargeth it ſelf with 70 mouths into the Caſpian Sea, now called Mer di Bachu: Here are beſides theſe Rivers many notable Lakes, as thoſe of Duina and Volga, out of which the ſaid two Rivers iſſue; that called Ilmen, not far from Novogrod the Great, 80 Italian miles in compaſſe; that of Ladoga 100 Dutch miles in length and 60 in bredth, in which are many pleaſant Iſlands; and that called Bideloyeſero (Lacus Albus in Latine) about 12 German miles long, and as many broad, into which 360 Rivers are ſaid to diſcharge their ſtreams; in the midſt whereof is a very ſtrong Caſtle, ſaid to be impregnable: in which the Great Duke keeps the moſt part of his treaſure, and into which he doth withdraw in the times of danger and ſedition.

As for the Mountains of this Country, here are the Montes Amadoci, Riphæi, and Hyperborei, ſo much talked of, and ſo little known among the Ancients. A continuall and craggie chain of hils runing croſſe Sarmatia Europæa, South and North, and thence Eaſtwards into Aſiatica. Beginning not far from the fall of Boryſthenes into the Euxine, they extend directly towards the North, and are there called Montes Amadoci. Afterwards bending for a long ſpace towards the North-eaſt, they are called Riphæi; and then paſſing on directly Eaſt, by reaſon of their Northernly ſituation, called Hyperborei. And though Sir Walter Raleigh ſay, I know not on what authority, that there are no Riphean Mountains in Rerum natura: yet Mercator placeth them in this tract, and telleth us that in regard of their being alwayes covered with ice and ſnow, they are hardly paſſable, calling theſe and the ſaid Hyperborei (in his Europa) by the name of Cingulum terræ, or the Girdle of the Earth, a great part whereof (though known in divers places by different names) they do ſeem to compaſſe.

It is divided for the better Government hereof into four parts (by them termed Chetfords) and thoſe governed by four Lieutenants not reſident upon their charges, but attending on the Emperors perſon whereſoever he goeth, and there holding their Courts, but ſpecially at Moſco, the prime ſeat of the Empire: where from their Under-Deputies they receive the complaints of their Provinces, and inform the Emperours Counſell of the buſineſſe, and from them again receive inſtructions for Reformation. But as to the Chorographie of it, it is divided into the Provinces of Moſcovie ſpecially ſo called, 2 Novogrod the Great, 3 Smolensko, 4 Moſaiskie, 5 Pleſcow, 6 Corelia, 7 Biarmia, 8 Petzora, 9 Condora, 10 Obdora, 11 Jugra, 12 Severia, 13 Permia, 14 Rhezan, 15 Wiathka, 16 Caſan, 17 Aſtrachan, 18 Novogordia inferior, 19 the Mordwits, 20 Worotine, 21 Tuvir, 22 Wolodomir, 23 Dwina, and 24 the Ruſſian Iſlands. Others of leſſe note (of which there is no want) are reduced to theſe. In my Deſcriptions whereof I ſhall not be ſo exact and punctuall as I have been hitherto: the Countrie not being much travelled by Strangers, nor any of the Natives ſuffered to goe into forein Nations, or permitted (out of jealouſies of State) to hold diſcourſe with the Ambaſſadours of neighbouring Princes, but only in the Emperours hearing. By means whereof the Chorographie of this vaſt Empire is come but lamely to our hands, though the Power, Politie, and Revenues of it, being points diſcernible by the Miniſters of other Princes, and by the courſe and conduct of their affairs, are as well known as thoſe of leſſe diſtance. Which ſaid, we will firſt begin with Moſcovie, the prevailing Province, that which gives name to this whole Empire; with reference to which the ſituation and poſition of the reſt of the Provinces is ſet forth unto us in our Authors.

Muſcovie.

1. MVSCOVIE.

1 MVSCOVIE, ſpecially ſo called, is ſeated in the very center of this Eſtate, and ſo more fit to order the affaires thereof: the largeſt Province of the whole, extending from Eaſt to Weſt 600 Dutch or 2400 Engliſh miles: ſo populous with all, that beſides 30000 Boiares', or Gentlemen bound to ſerve on Horſeback at their owne charges (like the Turkes Timariots) the Great Duke is able to raiſe 70000 Foot (which is a great matter for a Countrey ſo little cultivated).

The ſoyle hereof is ſtiffe and clammie, but might be made more profitable then it is, were it well manured; or ploughed and ordered as it is in all other Countries. For here, and in moſt parts elſe of this large Dominion, the people are accuſtomed to ſow no more of their land then what they digge with the ſpade, or can break up with a ſtick very ſharply pointed, whereof they carry great numbers into the field, that when one breaks they may uſe another.

Chief places in this Province are 1 Moſco, the Imperiall ſeat and the See of the Patriarch, ſo called of the River Moſco upon which it is ſituate. Exceedingly improved both in ſtate and beauty, ſince the time that Daniel the fourth Lord of Moſcovie, removed the ſeat Royall hither, from Volodomire, where before it was: inſomuch that it was once growne to nine miles in compaſſe; containing then 41500 families; but being fired by the Tartar, anno 1571. (at what time there were burnt 800000 perſons) it is reduced to five miles only, the houſes for the moſt part of wood and durt, the ſtreets very miry; without either Ditch, Wall, or Rampart to defend it againſt an Enemy. In ſteed whereof there are two Caſtles, in the out parts of it, the one called Kitagorod, the other Bolſigorod, environed with the River Moſco, and another water called Neglinna, which here fals into it. It containes 16 Churches, moſt of them of the ſame materials as the houſes are: and the Palace of the great Duke ſituate in the midſt hereof (which for the greatneſſe of it may be thought a little City) fortified with 17 Towns, 3 Bulwarks, and a continuall Garriſon (if the great Duke be there) of 25000 men for the guard of his perſon. 2 Sloboda, a Biſhops See, North-eaſt to Moſco, on the banks of one of the greateſt Rivers which fall into the Volga. 3 Ruſchow, the title of a Dukedome, fortified with a Caſtle of wood (of which ſtuffe moſt of the fortreſſes of this countrey are made) ſituate 23 leagues from Moſco towards the weſt, on the banks of the Volga; which hath its fountain in the territorie and precincts hereof. 4 Jaroſlave, on the Volga alſo, a town and Caſtle; diſtant about 46 Dutch miles from Moſco; formerly the Eſtate and patrimony of the ſecond ſons of the Great Duke, but united to the Royall Domaine, by John Waſiliwick, and by him added alſo to the ſtyle Imperiall. It is alſo one of the Sees Epiſcopall. 5 Ruſtow, the See of one of the two Metropolitans ſituate in a fruitfull ſoyl, well ſtored with fiſh, and yeelding good plenty of ſalt. One of the antienteſt Principalities of all this Empire, and held accuſtomably by the ſecond ſonne of the Great Duke, as a ſtate diſtinct: but conquered by John Vaſiliwick, anno 1565. and added to the ſtyle and Patrimony of the Great Duke himſelfe, the younger ſons being from thence forth put off with penſions. 6 Vologda, a Biſhops See, ſituate in a fenny and woodie Countrey, very ſtrong by nature, and beautified with one of the ſtrongeſt Caſtles of all this Eſtate, where the Great Duke doth ſometimes lay a part of his treaſure: that part eſpecially which is raiſed of the Engliſh and Dutch Merchandiſe, wich being landed at the Port of St. Nicolas, is firſt brought hither, where having paida new toll or cuſtome, it goeth on to Moſco. Betwixt this City and that of Yaroſlave before mentioned, for the ſpace of an hundred Engliſh miles, where ſtood in former times 50 goodly Villages, (ſome of them of a mile in length) the Countrey in a manner is left wholly deſolate, and without Inhabitants; abandoned by the people by reaſon of the inſupportable preſſures which were laid upon them.

2 SMOLENSKO. 3 MOSAISKI. 4 PLESCOW.

The Dukedome of SMOLENSKO, is ſituate on the courſe of the River Nieper, or Boryſthenes, full of many thick Forreſts, from whence they carry a great number of rich skins yeerly. Places of moſt obſervation in it, are 1 Smolensko ſituate on the Nieper, a Biſhops See, about 80 Polonian miles from Moſco, begirt on every ſide with mountaines and ſpacious Woods. A large town and of great eſteem in theſe parts of the Empire; and giving name unto this Province; which heretofore was governed in a free condition under the patronage and protection of the Kings of Poland in the time of Alexander a late king thereof by Baſilius the Great Duke conquered, and added unto this Eſtate. Taken by the Polanders, in the yeare 1610. after a long ſiege of two yeares, with the ſlaughter of 200000 Muſcovites, and the loſſe of many of the beſiegers; but reſtored again to Michael Fedrovitius the Great Duke, on the making of the peace between them. 2 Biela, a principality of it ſelfe, having the honour of a Caſtle, and reckoned in the uſuall ſtyle of the Knez or Emperour.

3 MOSAISKI, hath in length 350 Italian miles, and as much in breadth ſo called from Moſaiſke, the chief town hereof, and a Biſhops See, taken together with the territory or Province appertaining to it, from Alexander King of Poland, by John the Great Duke, father of Baſilius before mentioned.

4 PLSCOW or PSKOW, containes in length 350 Italian miles, in breadth 230 or thereabouts, ſo called from Pleſcow or Pskow, the chief City of it, and a Biſhops See; great, powerfull, and well walled walled about, the onely walled City of all this Empire. So large within the wals, that when it was be- Novogrod.

ſieged by Stephen king of POLAND, there were in it for defence thereof 70000 Foot, and 7000 Horſe, beſides the naturall Inhabitants of it; which in all ordinary computation muſt be many more. It belonged formerly to the Poles, in right of the Dukedome of Lituania; taken from them by Baſilius the Great Duke of Muſcovie, anno 1509; by whom and his ſucceſſours uſed in the Royall ſtyle.

5 NOVOGORD.

5 NOVOGORD or NOVOGROD is one of the largeſt Provinces or Dukedomes in all Ruſſia; bordering on Livonia, towards Sinus Finnicus, or the Gulfe of Finland: a colder Countrey and leſſe fruitfull then that of Muſcovie, becauſe ſituate ſomewhat further North: the longeſt ſummer day in Moſco not being above 18 houres, whereas in Novogrod the chief City hereof, it is very neer 20. By conſequence the winter nights being of that length, muſt make the air exceeding cold, and the ſoile as comfortleſſe. Here is in this Province the great lake Ilmen, ſpoken of before, 80 Italian miles in compaſſe; as alſo that called Ladoga, before alſo mentioned.

Townes of moſt eſtimation in it are 1 Novogrod it ſelfe, the wealthieſt and goodlieſt City of all the North, affirmed to be in greatneſſe not inferiour to Rome, called therefore Novogrod the great (to difference it from another of the ſame name near unto Valodomir:) an Archbiſhops See, and one of the foure Mart-townes of the Hanſe-Merchants, reſorted to from all parts for the trade of Muſcovie, brought thither by land, and thence tranſported through the Baltick to moſt parts of Chriſtendome. So confident in thoſe times of their power and ſtrength, that they uſed to ſay, that men could doe nothing againſt God and them: but found the contrary when taken from the Crown of Poland by the Great Duke of Muſcovie. The trade thereof ſince much decayed, by the finding out of the North-East paſſage to the Port of St. Nicolas, where the Engliſh and Dutch Merchants barter with the Muſcovite. Yet ſtill it keeps the reputation of the principall City, ſituate on the River Naf, which the Dutch call Ny; the buildings for the moſt part of wood and clay: diſtant from Moſco 120 Dutch miles, and about 200 from the main body of the Baltick, betwixt which and this City lyeth the whole Bay of Finland, the entrances whereof upon the Dwina, which leads toward Novogrod are fortified with the ſtrong townes and Garriſons of Narve, and Rivallia, both in the hands of the king of Sweden, which is another great hinderance to the trade of this town. 2 Narve, on the North banke of Dwina, where it falls into the Bay of Finland, or Sinus Finnicus, in the Province or Territorie of Wichidaw, heretofore reckoned of as a part of Livonia, but being taken by Baſilius the Great Duke, with the reſt of this Countrey, and the towne of Novogrod it ſelfe, anno 1477. it was impregnably fortified by the care of his ſonne Vaſaliwich, who for a reward unto the Architect being a Polonian, put out both his eies, to diſable him from building the like againe. But having left all the natives in their own habitations, without abating either their ſtrength or number, the Towne and Caſtle not long after was betrayed to the king of Sweden, who ſtill holds it. 3 Pozow or Pozovia, and 4 Volocoluc, two ſtrong peeces, ſituate in the borders againſt the Polanders. 5 Vobſco, beſieged by Stephen king of Poland, with an Army of 100000 men, forced to retire without taking it, with the loſſe of many of his beſt Captaines and common ſouldiers. It is diſtant from Novogrod 28 Dutch miles, the countrey about it called Volsk, where they ſay for certaine that all Cattell which are brought thither of what haire or colour ſoever they be, upon a little ſtay there become all white. The people of this tract have a language (or ſome Dialect rather) peculiar onely to themſelves. 6 Juvanogrod, a ſtrong Caſtle not far from Vobſco, 40 miles from Novogrod; a frontire Caſtle againſt the Swedes garriſoned in Narve, to repulſe whoſe inrodes it was built.

In this Countrey and not far from the Town of Novogrod, was fought that memorable battell betwixt the Sarmatians, and their Slaves. For when the Aſiatick Scythians went to plant themſelves in Media, and the parts adjoining; ſome of the Sarmatians, then Inhabitants of this tract, went along for company. Their long ſtay, cauſed their wives, deſpairing of their return, to comfort themſelves with their ſlaves, both at bed and board, to whom they brought a luſtie increaſe of youths: who being well grown, and hearing that the Sarmatians were upon their coming back, joined together againſt them: the ſlaves to retain that wealth and freedome which they were poſſeſſed of; the women for fear of the diſpleaſure of their husbands, and the young men for defence of their Fathers and Mothers. With joint forces they goe out to meet them, before their entrie into the Countrey; neither are the Maſters ſlow in their advance, hoping to take them unprovided. At Novogrod they have the firſt ſight of each other. The Maſters ſcorning to defile their ſwords on ſo ignoble an Enemy, aſſault them with whips, and by the terrour thereof got a ſignall victory. In memory of which battell the people of that City have ever ſince ſtamped their money with the figure of an Horſeman ſhaking a whip in his hands: And it is the cuſtome over all Muſcovie, that the maids in the time of wooing, ſend ſuch a whip, curiouſly wrought by her own hands, to that Suiter whom ſhe reſolves on for her husband, in token of her future ſubjection to him. But of this more hereafter in another place.

6 CORELIA. 7 BIARMIA.

6. Sixty Dutch miles from Novogrod lyeth the Province called Corelia, extending Northwards as far as to a branch of the Frozen Sea, where the longeſt day is 20 houres and an halfe: the nights proportionable in the winter make it cold and barren. It bordereth on the Eaſt of Finland from which parted by a long and rough ridge of Mountaines. By reaſon of which ſituation betwixt two great Princes, the people are inforced to pay tribute to both; though properly the ſubjects of the Great Duke of Moſcovie. Chief townes whereof are Kexholm, or Hexolm, in the hands of the Swedes; and 2 Corelnberg, the chief town of the Province, belonging with the reſt of the Countrey unto the Moſcovite. By ſome this Province is made a part of the Eaſtern Lapland; but I think erroneouſly: the people having ſome good Towns; and ſavouring of ſome humanity, neither of which are known or heard of amongſt the Laplanders. 3 Nordenberg on the mouth of a lake, which by the River called Warfuga, emptyeth it ſelfe into the Bay of S. Nicolas.

On the North ſide of that branch or Arme of the Frozen Ocean, which bounds Corelia, lyeth the Weſterne part of Lapland, which by a proper name is called BIARMIA, the countrey of the Dikiloppi or wilde Lappians, as the Moſcouites call them, to whoſe Duke or Emperour they are ſubject. We had their Character before when we were in Swethland; nor ſhall we need to repeat it here: as barbarous and rude as the worſt ſort of thoſe mentioned in Scricfinnia, and as idolatrous as they: but more (if more may be) inclined to luſtfulneſſe then the others. In the winter Solſtice, when the Sun entreth into Capricorn, they have night for three whole months together: during which time lurking in their Caves, they have leiſure to conſult with the Prince of Darkneſſe, being very great Sorcerers, able (as ſome affirm) to raiſe Windes, Clouds, Tempeſts, and doe many ſtrange things. Towns here are none. Some ſheds and Cabbins on the Sea coſts, patched up by Saylers, for their reception and refreſhment as they came on land, and named according to their fancies; but not here conſiderable.

8 PETZORA. 9 IVGRIA. 10 OBDORA. 11 CONDORA.

Oppoſite to Biarmia, or Eaſt-Lapland, on the other ſide of the Bay leading towards the Port of S. Nicolas, lyeth a large Promontorie or Headland ſtretching out farre into the North, beyond the Arctick; comprehending in it foure Provinces of the Ruſſian Empire: that is to ſay, Petzora, Jugria, Obdora, and Condora; belonging formerly to the Tartars, but wonne from them of late years by the Ruſſian Emperors, extending by that means their territories to the River Ob, but not a whit improving them in power or patrimonie. Howſoever ſomewhat muſt be ſaid of them, becauſe parts of this great body which we are to diſſect.

1 PETZORA, ſo called from a River of that name, is fenced on every ſide by mountaines and unpaſſable rocks; extending Northwards to the Sea, and croſſed with a vaſt chain of hils, part of the Hyperborei ſpoken of before: ſo high, that a certain man having travelled in the aſcent of them 17 dayes together, is ſaid to have returned back again, deſpairing to attaine the top of them, covered in the winter time with perpetuall ſnowes, in the ſummer with as ſcorching heats, by the continuall lying of the Sun on all parts thereof. The people are of a plain and ſimple nature, and received the Ruſſian faith and Empire at one time together, anno 1518. The chief town of it 1 Petzora, or Pechora, at the fall of that River into the Sea; a ſmall town, but having three Churches in it: the people whereof though otherwiſe ſufficiently ſimple, as before is ſaid, do in the ſummer time catch Partrich, Ducks, Swans, Geeſe, and other fowle, which they ſalt and lay by till the winter, and then live upon them. So good a Tutor is the Belly, that the Poet did not unfitly give it the titles of Artis Magiſter, and Ingenii largitor venter; whereof this may ſerve for one example.

7 CONDORA lyeth on the North of Petzora, more neere the Pole, by conſequence a colder Countrey, and of worſe condition, in one half of the Countrey being continuall day, and the other halfe as long a night. The people univerſally Idolaters, worſhipping ſome Images (or Idols) in the ſhape of a man, others in that of Beares, Wolves, &c. which they adorn with the richeſt furs they can get, and hide them in their Caves for feare of the Ruſſes: who if they chance to light upon them, as they hunt thoſe parts for Sables, Foxes, and Bevers, take away their furres, and beſtow greater heat upon them in fires. The chief Town hereof is Puſtozrea over againſt Nova Zemla, on or neer the great lake called Ozera, whence it hath the name; ſituate in the 68 Degree of Northern Latitude, 50 minutes over.

10 Obdora, ſo called from the River Ob, on both ſides of whoſe bankes it lyeth, is the moſt North-Eaſtern Province of all theſe Dominions: wonne to the obedience of the Ruſſes in the reign of Theodore the ſonne of John Great Duke of Muſcovie. At what time the people had no Cities, lived in Hoords or Companies, eat the Beaſts they tooke, knew no corn nor bread. They were then very good Archers, ſharpsharpening their Arrows with fish Bones; with which bones and the sinews of the Beasts they sowed Furs together for their Clothing, which they wear inward in the winter, outward in the summer, covering their houses with Elke-skinnes. By this Theodore were some Castles built on the Rivers side, to which he sent condemned persons, and brought it into the form of a petit kingdome. But his sonne Boris built Tooma the chief Town hereof, with divers other Towns on both sides of the water, not worth naming here. But notwithstanding this subjection to the Moscovite they continue still in their Idolatry, worshipping an antient Idol, in form of an old woman, holding in each Arm a Childe, and a third at her feet, called by them Zlatu Babu, or the Golden old wife, to which they offer pretious Furs, sacrifice Harts, and therewith doe consult touching things to come. But some accompt this for a Fable, or a meere mistake. Severia, &c.

11 JUGRIA or JUHAR, lyeth also on the Northern Seas, but more south then either of the other; betwixt Petzore or Pechora, and the Province of Dwina: the longest day in summer being not above 21 houres, or not fully that. The people for the most part Idolaters, and worship the same Images as doe those of Obdora: affirmed by some to be the Progenitors of the present Hungarians, who coming out of this Countrey over-ran all Pannonia, and there fixed their dwellings. For proof of which it is affirmed that they speak the old Hungarian language; not used but in this countrey, and the North parts of Hungarie betwixt Danubius, and Tibiscus. Which more learned men affirm to be the Iazygian, the language of the Iazyges who antiently possessed that countrey in the times of the Romans. But leaving this dispute to another place, certaine it is that they are subject to the Moscovite, but so poore and miserable a people, that they have few townes and not many houses; and so bare of money, that in stead thereof they pay Furs for tribute to their Emperour.

12 SEVERIA. 13 PERMIA. 14 RHEZAN.

12 SEVERIA, or SIBIOR as the Moscovites called it, lieth in a long tract on the bankes of the River Ob or Oby, south of Obdoza, and the rest of the foure last Provinces. The Countrey very fruitfull, and abounding with all things necessary, notwithstanding that there be great Deserts, and some Forrests also; but those Forrests well stored with black Foxes, Ermines, Sables, and the like wilde beasts, which yeeld more profit by their rich Furs, then any more fertile Countrey doth by its Corn and fruites. In somuch that in the yeare 1589. there were collected out of this Province only in the way of tribute for the Emperour, 466 timber of Sables, (every Timber containing 40 skins) five Timber of Martrons, 180 Cases of Black Foxes, (every Case containing 40 skins) besides other commodities. The woods also doe afford good plenty of Hony, and the plaines of Herbage; well watered with the River Sem, which falleth into the Desna, and both together into that of the Nieper or Borysthenes. There are in it many Townes and Castles, the principall whereof are 1 Sibier, on the West side of the River Ob, which gives name to the Province; 2 Branki; not far from the great Forrest from hence named. 3 Starodus, 4 Potuvole, and 5 Czeznigo.

The people hereof by reason of their continuall skirmishes with the neighbouring Tartars, are the most warlike Nation of all the Russes: heretofore governed by a Duke or Prince of their owne, who at the first acknowledged no Superiour; but afterwards was severally and successively Tributary to the Lituanians, the Polanders, and the Moscovite, and finally the last Duke being falsly accused of treason, was outed of his estate by Basilius the Great Duke, who addded it to the rest of his Dominions, as it hath continued ever since.

13 PERMIA is situate on the South-west of Sibior or Severia, a large Province, distant 250 Dutch miles from Mosco, so called from Perm, or Permia, the chiefe towne hereof, situate on the River Vischore or Vistorna: the second Town of note is called Sicwiarskey. The people (as also those of Sibior) are of the Moscovite Religion, and live most by hunting wilde beasts, whose flesh they eat, and make good merchandise of their skins, many of which they pay yearly to the great Duke in way of tribute, who makes a good commodity of them, selling them to the Merchant at excessive rates. They have no corn of their own growth, nor will they buy any elsewhere; but in stead of bread eat the flesh of Stags dryed and prepared in the Sun: speaking a language of their own, different from the rest of the Russes; and in stead of Horses and Oxen make use of great dogs and stags, whom they train up to draw their sleds from one place to another. There is good store of woods amongst them; but they want Cedars; and they have paid dearly for that want. For John Vasiliwich meaning to pick a quarrell with them, sent to them for certain loads of Cedar wood, whereof he knew there grew none in their Countrey; and upon word returned that they had no such wood, hee fined them at 12060 Rubbles.

14 RHEZAN, a great and goodly Province, is situate betwixt the River Tanais, and that of Occa: the most fruitfull Countrey of all Russia, and (if report be true) of the whole world also: it being credibly affirmed that one graine of corn doth bring forth six eares; the stalks hereof growing so thick, that an horse can hardly passe through them, or a Quaile flie out of them, but with very much difficulty. Here is also great plenty of fruits, better then are to be found elsewhere in Russia, together with good store of Honey, fish, fowl, and other commodities; besides Ermins, Bevers and the like, common in these Countries. Chief Towns hereof are 1 Tulla, famous for the fountain or spring-head of the River Tanais, which ariseth near it. 2 Colluga, well garrisoned for fear of the Crim Tartar. 3 Corsira, a Bishops See, as is also 4 Rhezan, the principall of the Province which it giveth name to, seated upon the banks of the River Occue. A Country populous and well-planted, affording to the Great Duke 15000 Boyares, or Gentlemen which serve on horseback, and betwixt 30 and 40000 foot.

15 WIATHKA, 16 CASAN, 17 ASTRACHAN.

15 Southeast of Rhezan beyond the banks of the River Kamme, and about 150 Dutch miles from Mosco, lyeth the Province called WIATHKA, fennie and barren, but well stored with fish and honey, and wild beasts good plenty. Heretofore subject to the Tartars, and then the receptacle or retreat of all fugitive servants, here very gladly entertained: but the Tartarians being expulsed, it was made subject by Basilius to the Dukes of Moscovie. I do not read of any Towns which should be here, which makes me think that they do stil retain so much of the Tartar with them, as to live in Hoords and Companies without any fixt dwellings: or at the best, in scattered houses, not hitherto united into Towns and Villages: except it be the Town of Wiatbka it self, built since the subjection of it to the Moscovite, and made a Garrison to defend these out-parts of this Empire against the incursions of the Tartars.

16 CASAN, a kingdome formerly of Tartaria Deserta, lyeth on the Southeast of Wiatbka; the most Civill people of the Tartars, but owing much of that civilitie to their conversation with the Moscovites, (though none of the civillest themselves) tilling their lands and building houses where they may with safety. For although the soil hereof be tolerably fruitfull, and fit for habitation, yet the Countrie for the most part is desolate and ill inhabited, partly by reason of some vast deserts lying betwixt the Cities of Casan and Astrachan; but principally in regard of the Crim Tartar, who will not suffer the Moscovite to plant it with Colonies of his own people, nor the Natives to live there in quiet, except only in the Western parts, where protected by Garrisons. Chief Towns hereof are 1 Casan upon the River Volga, which gives name to the Kingdom; since the subjection of this people to the great Duke, and their conversion to the faith, made a Bishops See. 2 Surick upon the River Sure, in the middle of the vast deserts betwixt Casan and Astrachan; built by Basilius the Great Duke for a stage or resting place for Merchants and Travellers, that there they might repose themselves without fear of the Tartars. The people hereof had once a King of their own, as before was said, the last of which named Chelealcesk, submitted himself unto Basilius the Great Duke and became tributarie: but afterwards revolting, he was vanquished by John Vasiliwich, anno 1553. and this kingdom thereupon united to the Empire of Russia; the Emperours since that time writing themselves Czar Kasanski, or King of Casan: And possible enough it is that Basilius who first made it tributarie, might from hence take the name of Basilius Casan, according to the custome of the ancient Romans.

Under the Government hereof are the Czeremissi, a people that live in great Forrests without any houses, living for the most part of honey and the flesh of wild beasts, with the skins of which they are apparelled. Their language different from the rest, swift of foot, and very good Archers, carrying their Bows in their hands continually, and practising their children so timely in it, that they give them nothing to eat (after such an age) untill they can hit a white which is set before them.

17 ASTRACHAN lyeth also South-east of Casan, more near unto the Caspian Seas; parted from Casan by those deserts spoken of before, but situate on the same branch of the River Volga: which having run a course of 2000 Italian miles, dischargeth it self into this Sea with no lesse then 70 mouths or channels. It took this name from Astrachan the chief town hereof, situate about 20 Italian miles from the fall of one of those 70 mouths or channels into the Caspian: by the commodiousnesse whereof it is one of the best towns of trade in all these dominions, the Armenian Merchants coming hither, and bartering their silks and manufactures for the furs and other naturall commodities of the Russes or Moscovites. A Kingdome formerly, but a kingdome of lesse esteem then that of Casan; conquered (together with it) by Basilius the Great Duke, anno 1494, and by him made Christian. But afterwards revolting they were more absolutely subdued by John Vasiliwich, who brought into the field against them no fewer then 120000 horse, and 20000 foot, (enough to over-run a farre greater Countrie) and yet had hardly got the better but for the terrour of his great Ordnance, which the others wanted. Upon that victorie it was made a Member of the Empire of Russia; the Emperour whereof hath since styled himself the King of Astrachan.

Novogrod Inferior.

18 NOVOGORDIA INFERIOR,

19 The MORDWITS.

But it is now time we return towards Europe, out of which we have wandred up and down in the skirts of Asia, in tracing out the severall Provinces of this Empire, since our first crossing over the Bay of Grandvic, or Saint Nicolas, into the Countrie of Petzora. But in our way we must first take a view of the Dukedom of Novogrod the Lower, so called to difference it from Novogred (surnamed the Great) spoken of before: situate almost in the midst betwixt Casan and Mosco, distant from the last 100 Polonian miles, and 60 miles from the borders of the other; every Polonian mile being reckoned at four Italian. The Countrie generally very rich both for tillage and pasturage; inferiour unto none in all this estate but Rhezan and Wolodomir only. So called from Novogrod the chief town, situate at the confluence of the Ock and Volga; besides which it hath the neighbourhood of a very great Lake, which storeth it plentifully with fish. A Citie of great esteem in all this Empire, partly for the great number of houses in which not easily equalled by any other, partly for an impregnable Castle, cut out of the main Rock with incredible charges in the time of Basilius the Great Duke; but principally for a stately and magnificent Temple, built above 1600 years agoe, in imitation (or emulation, as some say) of the famous Church of S. Sophia in Constantinople. To this Town the story of the Scythian or Sarmatian slaves ought in my minde to be ascribed, though commonly reported of the other Novegrod in the West parts of this Empire. My reason is, because it is not likely that the Sarmatians dwelling on the borders of the Baltick Sea, should crosse all this Country to join with the Asiatick Scythians so remote from them in a needlesse war: which those of this tract might well do, as near neighbours to them, if not of the same Nation or extraction with them.

Subject to the Estate hereof are the Mordwit Tartars, lying on the South, betwixt the Volga and the Don or Tanais where it beginneth to return Westwards towards the Euxine. A people much of the same nature with the Czeremissois, but that they have some Villages, & scattered houses, which the others either want or else care not for. Idolaters for the most part (and the rest Mahometans) carrying their Idols in their Carts whersoever they goe: worshipping that beast all day, which they first see in the morning, and swearing by it for that day, as their chiefest deitie.

22 WOLODOMIR.

And now again we are in Europe, where the Great Duke hath almost as many Titles as Towns with Territorie: four of them (besides some before) either situate in the Province of Moscovie, or else so intermingled with the Towns thereof, that they may easily be taken (or mistaken) for members of it. The principall are, 20 WOROTIN, seated on the West side of the River Ocque, a distinct Dukedom of it self, so called from Worotin the chief Citie of it, built upon that River, about 3 Dutch miles from Colluga in the Province of Rhezan, lying on the further bank thereof; beautified with a strong Castle, and a pleasant soil. The 2 Miscenecks, the next Town of note, remarkable for the head of the River Ocque, which ariseth in the fields thereof.

21 TUVER or OTUVER, as some call it, is a large and goodly Country lying along the banks of the River Volga: so populous that it is said to contain 40000 Boiares, or Gentlemen fit to serve on horseback, and double that number of the common or inferiour sort. It gives the title of a Duke to the Russian Emperour, and is so called from Twerde the chief Town thereof, and a Bishops See; affirmed to be a fairer and more stately Citie then Mosco it self, from which distant 36 Dutch miles.

22 WOLODOMIR is one of the most fruitfull Countries in all Russia, not paralleld by many Countries in the world; the soil here (if all be true, which is said of it) yeilding such an increase that many times the husbandman hath twenty and sometimes twenty five for one. It gives the title of a Duke to the Russian Emperour, and hath precedencie before Moscovie in the style Imperiall. So called from Wolodomir the chief Citie of it, and a Bishops See, and that so named from the Founder, who probably was the same Valadomir (one of the first Kings of the Russes) who married Helena the daughter of Nicephorus Phocas, Emperour of Constantinople. The Citie situate 36 Polonian miles on the East of Mosco, anciently the chief seat and residence of the Great Duke; and so continued till the time of John the son of Daniel, who first translated it to Mosco, that from thence he might more easily confront and oppose the Tartars, with whose irruptions and invasions both he and his predecessours had long been troubled. Under the government hereof is the City of Susdali, of great esteem and very well peopled as long as the Royall seat remained at Wolodomir, betwixt which and Rostow it is seated.

After it fell into decay, and being once destroyed by the Tartars, could never since recover its ancient lustre; having now little to uphold its reputation, but a Bishops See.

23 DWINA, so called from the chief Town, situate on the confluence of two Rivers Juch, and Sukano, whence it hath the name: Dwine in the language of that Countrie signifying two, (as twain doth with us amongst Countrie-people.) A Countrie of a great extent, but exceeding barren, which makes the Villages hereof to stand very thin; the Towns (considering the great compasse of it) to be very few; and the Inhabitants for the most part to live upon dried fish and the flesh of wild beasts, which they have no want of. The chief commoditie is in salt, with which they use to furnish the neighbouring Provinces, and provide such necessaries for themselves as they stand in need of. Chief Towns hereof are 1 Dwine, spoken of before, situate in the midst of the Province, on the meeting of the said two Rivers, which here united into one stream, take the name of Dwine, or Duina the greater, known by that name untill its fall into the Northern Ocean, in the Bay of Granduic. 2 Sagan, so called of the River (one of the two which makes the Dwine) upon which it is seated. 3 Colmagro, 4 Pinnegue, two strong Castles.

Unto this Province (because I know not else how to dispose of them) I must reduce these four Towns following; that is to say, 1 Ustiug, a Bishops See, situate on the western side of the River, over against the Town of Dwine, and in a Country so ill furnished with necessaries, that the people eat dryed fish in stead of bread; but have salt enough to season it from those of Dwine. 2 Gargapoll, a Bishops See also, on the same side of the River that Dwina is of. 3 S. Nicolas, a well known Port, and a Bishops See; situate at the influxe of Duina, into the Gulfe of Granvicus, or the Bay of S. Nicolas, from hence denominated. A Town much traded since the discovery of the North-east passage by the English, and the removal of theirs and the Dutch traffique from Novogrod hither; from hence dispersed with more ease and speed into all the parts of this vast Empire. 4 S. Michael, on the Sea side, commonly called Archangell, a Town of great trade, by the English specially, who have of late here fixed their Staple, to the great enriching of the Place: by reason whereof the English Merchants have not onely great priviledges and immunities (as the Authors of so great a benefit unto this Estate) not granted to others: but the whole Nation have found better and more noble entertainment from them then any others have received. The cause of which was primarily the great opinion which their Emperours had of Queen Elizabeth, who held very good correspondence with them; continued ever since by mutuall Ambassies on both sides; and secondly the conformable behaviour of the English themselves, so acceptable to those Barbarians (both Prince and People) that when John Vasiliwich nailed the hat of another forein Embassador to his head for his too much perverseneſſe, he used our Sir Thomas Smith with all kindneſſe imaginable. Another time when the Jesuite Possevine began to perswade with him to approve of the Religion of the Church of Rome: upon the information of the English Embassadour that the Pope was a proud Prelate, and would make Princes kisse his feet; he grew into such a rage that the Jesuite was afraid he would have beat out his brains. But to return again to the Port of S. Nicolas, it is so called from an Abbie there built unto that Saint, the tutelarie Saint and locall Patron of the Nation. Which said, I will set sail from this Port to the Russian Islands; and see what may be said of them to our present purpose.

24 The RUSSIAN Islands.

The RUSSIAN ISLANDS are but two; both of them in the Northern or Frozen Ocean, on the Coasts of this Country; that is to say, 1 Sir Hugh Willoughbies Island, and Nova Zemla; both subject (if to any) to the Knez or great Duke of Moscovie.

1 WILLOUGHBIES ISLAND was so called from Sir Hugh Willoughbie, because he first discovered it, anno 1553. and was hereabouts found frozen to death the next year following. For being employed by the Merchants of London in the time of King Edward the 6. to find out a new way to Moscovie, Cathaie, and China; he proceeded so far as to this Island (situate almost opposite to the Bay of S. Nicolas:) where the weather proved so extreme, and the Frosts so vehement; that his ship was set fast in the ice, and all his people, with himself, frozen to death; in which condition they were found the next year after, with an exact description of their voyage and fortunes. Notwithstanding which disastrous beginning, the enterprise was pursued by some noble Adventurers, as Jenkinson, Burroughs, Pet. Jackman, and others of the English Nation: who opened the way as far as to the River Ob, (the East boundar of Russia) but by reason of the length of the way, the vast floting Islands of Ice, and perpetuall nights, for many months together in winter, could advance no further.

mies: not yet ſo far diſcovered as to know any thing thereof, but by the relation of the Ruſſes, who affirm the Inhabitants to have neither Religion nor Civilitie, nor the preſcripts of any Law; but that they worſhiped the Sun, Moon, and Northern Star, to which they offer an yearly Sacrifice of their Deer: that the Iſland is woodie, deſert, and not eaſie for travell, having in it neither green bough nor graſſe; yet harbouring great ſtore of Bears and ſuch ravenous and dangerous beaſts. Found experimentally true by William Barrentſon and his Aſſociates, employed by the Hollanders for this diſcoverie, anno 1594. and 1596. in which laſt year, after many dreadfull combats with huge flakes of ice, they were forced to winter in this Iſland, where they built an houſe as well to preſerve themſelves from being buried in ſnow, as from being devoured by the Bears (ſome of them 13 foot in length:) which with the loſſe of two of their company devoured by thoſe Savage creatures, they at laſt effected; ſome of them coming home in ſafety the October following. And though they ſeemed to give ſome hope that a way might be found unto Cathaie on the North of this Iſland, (themſelves having gone as far North as the 81 degree of Latitude, within 9 of the Pole:) yet it is generally conceived that the undertaking is unprofitable, the ſucceſſe impoſſible.

And ſo I leave it to return to the ſtorie of Ruſſia, called anciently by the name of Sarmatia Europæa, but known no further Northwards then the head of Tanais. And for Sarmatia Europæa, it was bounded in the time of Ptolemie, by the Baltick Sea, and ſome Terra Incognita, on the North; the Jazyges Metanaſtæ (now Tranſilvania and the Upper Hungarie) upon the South: the River Viſtula or Wexel (which divided it from Germanie) upon the Weſt; and the Tanais upon the Eaſt. Beyond that all along the banks of the Euxine Sea, to the Mare Caſpium, and as far North as any Conqueror had gone, it was called Sarmatia Aſiatica: the Countries further Eaſtward being then called Scythia. By which accompt as Ruſſia containeth not all Sarmatia Europæa, of which Pruſſia, and the reſt of the incorporate Provinces of Poland, paſſeth for a part; ſo neither is it totally comprehended in it, extending beyond Tanais into Aſiatica. The ancient Inhabitants called by a generall name Sarmatæ, by the Greeks, Sauromatæ; were ſubdivided (for ſo much of this part of it as was then made known) into the Agathyrſi, Rutheni, Pagiritæ, dwelling in the North; the Oſſi, Alauni, Roxolani, &c. dwelling in the South. Amongſt many other barbarous Nations, theſe were ſome of the principall. And from theſe Roxolani, as the principall of all the reſt, Matthias a Michou, a learned Polander, doth derive the originall of the Roſſes (which we now call Ruſſians:) ſeconded herein by the more learned Bochartus, who proveth out of ancient Authors that the Inhabitants of Taurica Cherſoneſus, (from which the paſſage into this Countrie is both ſhort and eaſie) have been formerly called Rhos. Ταύρους τοὺς Ῥῶς καλεῖσθαι, Tauros vocari gentes Rhos, as he ſaith from Tſetzes. Which Rhos, or Rhoſſi firſt mingling with the Alani, a Sarmatian people, might get the name of Roxolani; and afterwards poſſeſſing the more Northern Countries, or mingling with the Roſſi of Mount Taurus (from whom thoſe of Taurica deſcended) in their enterpriſes on Conſtantinople and the parts adjoining; return to their old name of Roſſi. The Rhoſſi, or Ruſſians, were then the firſt Lords of this Country generally; the Moſcovites poſſeſſours of a Province only: ſo called from the Moſchi ſpoken of by Lucan in his Pharſalia; and placed by Plinie near the head of the River Phaſis, which riſing from the Armenian Mountains, fals into the Euxine. Derived no doubt from Meſech (or Moſoch as the Ancients called him) the ſon of Japhet planted originally in the North and North-eaſt of Syria, on the Confines of Cholcis and Armenia, where Plinie as before is ſaid, hath fixed the Moſchi, and where there is a long chain of hils, which moſt of the old Writers call Montes Moſchici. But to return unto the Roſſi, we hear not of them by this name till the time of Michael the third Emperour of Conſtantinople, in whoſe reign they infeſted the Euxine Sea, and had the boldneſſe to attempt the Imperiall Citie, anno 864. ſaid by Cedrenus and ſome others of the Eaſtern Writers to be a people of Mount Taurus, (next neighbours to Meſech or the Moſchi.) Failing in their attempt upon Conſtantinople, and not willing to goe home again, they ſpread themſelves with their confederates and aſſociates in this expedition, upon the North-weſt banks of the Euxine Seas, enlarging their bounds Northwards with leſſe oppoſition, then they were likely to have done on the Southern parts: Conſtantinople being once again in vain attempted in the reigns of Conſtantine the 7. and Henricus Auceps. Converted to the Chriſtian Faith, or growing into better termes with the Eaſtern Emperours, Helena daughter of Nicephorus Phocas, is married to Valadomirus one of their Kings; from that time forwards turning their forces on the Polanders and their weak neighbours; ſave that, provoked by the death of one of their Countrie, ſlain accidently at Conſtantinople in a private quarrell, they made another fruitleſſe journey againſt that Citie, in the time of Michael Calaphates. Enlarging their eſtate to the Weſt and South, they became maſters of a great part of Sarmatia Europæa, Lituania, Podolia, Nigra Ruſſia, and other Provinces now ſubject to the Crown of Poland; being then parts of their Eſtate. Anno 1240. the Tartars, under the conduct of Bathu, or Baydo, ſon of Occata Chan, broke in upon them and ſubdued them: the Countrie before this entire, under one ſole King, being broken afterwards into divers petit and inferiour Governments, according to the will and pleaſure of the inſolent Victors. The principall of theſe (deſcended from the former Kings) were Lords of Wolodomir, Moſco, and ſome other Cities; held by them with no other Title then Lords of Moſcovie; and for that Tributarie to the Tartars, as were all the reſt. Under this thraldome they long groaned, till the Tartariant being divided amongſt themſelves, and grown leſſe terrible to their neighbours, were outed of their power and command here, by the valour of John, ſon of Baſilius the 2. who thereupon changed the Title of Lord into that of Duke, and after into that of Great Duke, as his fortunes thrived. Yet not ſo great, but that he was contented to be an Homager of the Tartars: it being finally agreed on at the end of their wars, that the Tartars should relinquish all their Holds in the Country; and on the other side, that once every year within the Castle of Mosco, the Great Duke standing on foot should feed the horse of the Crim Tartar with oats out of his own cap. This Homage was by Basilius changed to a Tribute of Furres, which being also denyed by his Successours (as they grew in power) occasioned the long warres betwixt the Nations: the Tartars alwayes pressing on them by sudden inroades, sometimes by Armies of no lesse then 200000 fighting men. But notwithstanding all their power, and the friendship of the Turk to boot, the Moscovite is not onely able to assert his Soveraignty, but hath also wrested from them many goodly Provinces.

As for the Princes of this Country I shall not trouble my self (as I see some doe) in tracing a Succession of them as farre as from the times of Augustus Cæsar: when neither the Rossi, nor the Moschi had here any footing. We will therefore goe no higher then the time of George, whose daughter Anne I finde to have been marryed to Henry the first of France. From whom in a direct line descended another George, with whom we doe intend to begin our Catalogue, as being the last King of the Russes before the coming of the Tartars: Who wisely yeelding to the storme, waved the title of King, contented only with the title of Lord of Mascovie, the first seat of that power and Soveraigntie, which he transmitted afterwards to his posteritie: affecting for that cause the title of Dukes of Moscovie, (though all the conquered Townes and Territories have their place also in his style) as much as that of Emperour of Russia. Which some of them have assumed also, since the time of Basilius, who styled himself Basilius by the Grace of God Emperour and Lord of Russia, Great Duke of Volodomir, Moscovie, Novogrod the great, Plescow, Smolensko, Tuver, Jugar, Wiatbka, Bulgar, &c. Lord and great Prince of the Lower Novogrod, Czernigow, Rhezan, Wologda, Rsow, Biele, Rostow, Taroslane, Poloskie, Bielloziere, Udore, Obdora, Condora, &c. King of Cusan and Astrachan. But leaving them unto their swelling and voluminous title, (little inferiour unto that of the Kings of Spain) let us next look on the succession from the time aforesaid, of

The Great DUKES.

1 John the first Great Duke, who strooke off the Tartarian bondage.
2 Basilius Casan wonne the Provinces of Severia, Roscovia, and Smolensko.
3 John Basilius conquered Livonia, and Lituania; both which his successour 1548 4 Johannes Basiliades, or Wasiliwich, lost in his age: though in his youth he had subdued the Noybacensian Tartars to his Empire; and vanquished Selim, Emperour of the Turks, anno 1569. With this King the English first began to confederate.
583 5 Theodorus Johannides, the last of the old Royall line of Moscovie.
598 6 Boris Theodorus, brother to the wife of the last Great Duke, partly by the last will of his Predecessour, partly by practising with the people, obtained the Empire; but being an unmercifull Tyrant was dispossessed by the Polanders, coming in favour of one
1605 7 Demetrius pretending himself to be the son of John Vasiliwich, (and generally believed to be so) preserved in a Monasterie from the tyrannie of Boris, in hatred of whom he was brought in by the Polander, by whose aid he overcame the Tyrant, and rooted out his Familie, and was with great joy crowned Emperour in the Citie of Mosco. But the Russian Lords disdaining to have a Prince imposed on them from Poland, rose in arms against him, and at last vanquished and slew him in the open field, his wife a noble Polonian Ladie, sent poorly home, and the Polanders beaten out of the Country.
1606 8 Basil Juanniwich, surnamed Sniskius, the chief of the Conspiratours, was by the rest of his faction chosen Cnez, or Emperour; and held the State with great trouble, till the year 1610. when 1610 9 Demetrius II. another pretender to the State, as the son of John Vasiliwich also, in opposition unto Sniskius set up by a stronger faction, gave occasion to the Polander to work upon this distemper; by whom Sniskius was taken prisoner, Demetrius slain, Smolensko and other great Towns subdued; and Vladislaus Prince of Poland recommended to the Russians to be chosen Emperour. But the Russes loth to fall under under the power of the Polander, and wearie of their own Confusions, made choice at last, of 1615 10 Michael Fedrowitz, son of Theodore the Patriarch of Mosco, who at last setled this vast Empire, and managed it in a more constant way of peace with the Turk, Tartar, Polonian, and Swethlander, then any of his Predecessours had done before him.

1646 11 Alexius Michoilywitz (or the son of Michael) succeeded his Father in the Empire, troubled at first with some distempers in the State (as in all other Countries about that time) but now quietly setled, anno 1648.

The Formalities with which these great Emperours are invested or setled in the Throne, are not many nor stately: such as they be, I here afford you out of the history of the life of Johannes Basilides, written in Latine by Paulus Oderbornius. On the 2. of June, anno 1583. Theodorus Johannides went towards the Temple of S. Michael, being the principall Church in all Mosco: the streets all covered with flowers, the doores of the Citizens crowned with Garlands; the air echoing with the noise of Flutes and Trumpets, and the people so crowding to behold their Prince, that had not the Guard with naked swords forced a passage through them, it had been impossible for him to have gone on. Being now come to the Church door, the Lords of the Countrie (Cneses they there call them) went out to meet him: and the Archbishop of Mosco clad in his pontificalibus, when he was come into the Church, imbraced him. The pavement of the Church was hidden with Tapestry, and the walls adorned with costly hangings. The Great Duke sate down in his Throne, being attired in a garment of silk, buttoned down with golden buttons: on his head he wore a purple cap, spangled with rich jewels, and on his fingers abundance of rings. Being thus seated, the Patriarch made a prayer to God, to bless him, his people and his government; which was seconded by the joyfull shouts and acclamations of his Subjects: amongst whom no small store of silver mony was flung by the Treasurer, and so they returned to the Palace.

The Government of this Countrie is meerly Tyrannicall, the Emperour being absolute Lord of the lives, lands and goods of all his Subjects: all of them, the noble as well as the base, subscribing themselves in their Petitions to him, by the name of Keloptery, that is, Slaves. Whereupon Mahomet a Turkish Bashaw was used to say, that his Master and the Moscovite were the two most absolute Princes in all the world. First, for their goods, when any Embassadour returns home, the Great Duke takes from him all the presents which he hath received, giving him perhaps some small reward, perhaps none at all: and as for lands they passe not from father to son but as he confirms it. But more particularly (besides the case of Permia spoken of before) John Vasiliwich sent a command to Mosco to provide a Coal-pack of live Fleas for a medicine; and when the Citizens returned answer that it was impossible, he fined them at 700 Rubbles for their disobedience. Another time he laid a mulct of 300000 Rubbles upon his Nobilitie, because he had no good sport in his hunting; which they again extorted from the common people: and under colour of want, commanded from some Bishops and Monasteries the sum of 100000 Rubbles, from some 50000, more or lesse from others, according unto their revenues. And it is usuall with the best of them to cause the Boiares (or Gentlemen which serve on horse-back) to pretend themselves robbed, that he may send unto the Citie to find out the Felon; and on a non est inventus, fine them at discretion, sometimes 8000, sometimes 10000, and sometimes 20000 Rubbles. Then for their lives, there is a storie, that Vasiliwich having found that one of his Secretaries had received a Goose stuffed full of silver for a Bribe, caused him to be brought into the Market-place of Mosco: where without any legall triall he commanded the Executioner first to cut off his legs about the shins, and then his arms about the elbows (still asking the miserable man how he liked Goose-flesh) and in the end to cut off his head in similitude of a Goose ready for the spit. And that they may the better preserve this power, the Great Dukes seldome shew themselves unto the people, but in apparell of inestimable value, joining the ornaments of a Bishop unto the majestie of a King, by wearing a Mitre on their heads shining with Diamonds and rich stones: and when they wear it not on their heads, they place it before the chair of state, (over which are the images of Christ and the blessed Virgin) holding in his hands a most rich Crozier staffe, and all their fingers full of rings. And upon solemn festivals and entertainments, the Great Chamber is beset with Cubboards of plate of infinite value, filled with men cloathed with cloth of gold to the very foot; all of them seeming to be men of the chief Nobility, but many times being no other then the gravest and portliest Citizens of Mosco richly apparelled for the time out of the Emperours Wardrobe; which to such as do not understand the fraud, look like so many Princes, and causeth no small wonder at his magnificence. So that the people seeing him in such royall state, and knowing no more then what they are taught at home, reverence him as slaves, not subjects, and look upon him rather as a God then a King.

Having so absolute a command on their lives and goods, it will be easily supposed that he may raise what forces, and amasse what treasures he hath a minde to. First, for his Forces, it is said that he is able to raise 300000 Horse, if occasion be: and that he may come near that number it is more then probable, in that John Vasiliwich in his war against those of Astrachan, had actually 120000 Horse; and that a great part of the Country is in the hands of the Boiares, bound by their Tenure to serve with horse whensoever he pleaseth. And that there are 110 men chosen by the Emperour, and by him enfeoffed with lands (during pleasure only,) which for these lands they are to find 65000 horse with all things necessary for the wars; and those in a continuall readinesse, fit for present action. Then for such horse as he himself doth keep in continuall pay, there is not fewer then 25000 which attend him him as a Guard to his perſon; all of them well experienced men, and fit for ſervice: which added to the 65000 ſpoken of before, makes up a ſtanding bodie of 90000. Had he foot anſwerable unto this proportion of horſe, there were no dealing with him; but therein his Militia is defective: Vaſſiliwich to his great Armie of 120000 horſe having but 20000 foot; the foot-men which he hath in continuall pay, amounting to 12000 only; farre ſhort of ſuch a ſtanding bodie of horſe, as before we ſpake of. And this defect hath been the reaſon why the Polanders with far leſſe armies have prevailed againſt them: the Great Duke not being able with all his power to hinder King Stephen of Poland from taking Villocolne or beſieging Pleſcow (though his Armie was not above 60000 both in horſe and foot) for want of ſtanding bonds of foot to make good his ground. Generally both horſe and foot are very obedient to their Captains and ſuperiour Officers, patiently enduring all diſcommodities of cold, rain, and hunger; (in that regard fitter to keep a Fortreſſe then ſerve in field;) and ſo regardleſſe of their lives in the day of battle, that they will rather loſe them then either yeeld themſelves Priſoners, or demand Quarter.

For his revenues, they may be what he will himſelf, conſidering (beſides his extraordinary power of oppreſſing his ſubjects before mentioned) the many ordinary wayes he hath of amaſſing treaſure, as viz. the foreſtalling of homebred commodities, and ingroſſing the forein; ſelling them at what price he liſt, and hindering all men elſe from trade, till his owne be ſold; proviſion of rent-corn, and victuall, raiſed in ſome years to 200000 Rubbles, rent-wood, and Hay to 30000; pol-money to 400000, cuſtoms on Merchandiſe to 800000. By which and other means of collecting moneys, and the Domain of his Crown, though he raiſe vaſt ſums; yet it is thought, that his houſhold charges being deducted, there remaineth not towards all other expences, three millions of Rubbles, every Rubble being as much as an Engliſh Mark.

The Arms are Sable, a Portall open of two leaves and as many Degrees, Or.

And ſo much for RUSSIA.

OF

OF POLAND.

POLAND is bounded on the East with Russia, and the Crim Tartar, from whom parted by the River Boryſthenes; on the West with Germanie; on the North with the Baltick Sea, and ſome part of Ruſſia; on the South with the Carpathian Mountaines, which divide it from Hungarie and Walachia.

It is an Aggregate body, conſiſting of many diſtinct Provinces united into one Eſtate; of which Poland being the predominant hath given name to the reſt called all together the Realm of POLAND: and that ſo named from Pole, which in the Sclavonian language (the common language of the Countrey) ſignifieth plaine, becauſe but little ſwelled with hills. Of figure round, in compaſſe 2600 miles; ſituate under the eight and twelfth Climates; ſo that the longeſt day in the ſouthern parts is but 16 houres, and about 18 houres in the parts moſt North.

The Countrey plaine, but full of woods, which ſerve to rectifie the Aire, being naturally ſo cold that they have neither Wine nor Grapes: in ſtead whereof they uſe that kinde of drink called Ale; in former times the uſuall Beverage of England, and this Countrey onely. Barley they have, and Pulſe in ſuch aboundant meaſure, that no ſmall quantities of each are tranſported yearly: nor yeeld they any thing at all to Denmarke or Hungarie for their plenty of Cattell. But of this more in our deſcription of the ſeverall Provinces.

The people are very induſtrious, and ſtudious of all Languages, eſpecially of the Latine to which they are ſo devoted, that there is ſcarſe a mean man, who is not able in ſome meaſure to expreſſe himſelfe in it. According to their abilities rather prodigall then truely liberall; and good ſouldiers generally. The Peaſants live in miſerable ſervitude unto their Lords; the Lords in ſuch equality of eſtate amongſt themſelves, that none of them (excepting the greater Princes) exceedeth 25000 Ducats of yearly rent. Proud in their garb, coſtly in their Apparell, impatient in their humours, and delicate in diet: theſe laſt conditions common to the women alſo, who are for the moſt part indifferently fair, and rather wittie then well ſpoken. But this being the peculiar Character of the Polander properly ſo called, is not perhaps communicable to the people of the reſt of the Provinces, whom we ſhall ſpeak of ſeverally in their proper places.

The Chriſtian faith was firſt planted in this Kingdome at ſeverall times, and by ſeverall perſons, according to the different parts of which it conſiſteth: in Poland ſpecially ſo called, in the time of their Prince Mieciſlaus ſonne of Nemomiſlus, anno 963. in Livonia, by the Preaching of one Meinardus, anno 1200. or thereabouts; in Lituania not untill the yeare 1386. at the admiſſion of Jagello to the Crown of Poland, and then done (as ſome ſay) by Thomas of Walden, (or Waldenſis) an Engliſh Frier. In Samogitia and Volhinia, at the ſame time with Lituania. In the reſt at other times, and on other occaſions, yet ſo that in many places of it, Idolatry was never totally rooted out, the ſeeds and practiſe whereof in many points ſtill remaine amongſt them. Corrupted by the ſuperſtitions of the Church of Rome, a Reformation was endevoured at ſuch time as John of Hus flouriſhed in Bohemia, the next neighbouring kingdome: but by the rigour of Ladiſlaus the ſixth, then King thereof, aſſiſted by his

Biſhops,

Biſhops and Noblemen, at that time hindered. Afterwards in the time of Luther, ſome who had ſtudied at Liſſique and Wittenberg, (Univerſities of Saxonie) brought his opinions home with them into the Province of Poland; as ſome Dutch Merchants (with the reſt of their Commodities) did into Dantzick, the chief Towne of Pruſſia, anno 1525. from whence it ſpread it ſelfe over moſt part of that Country. According as it was favoured or diſliked, by the Palatines, Chaſtellans, and other great men of the Realm; ſo was its entertainment either good or bad: the Grecians in the mean time taking opportunity, to winne ſome parts of it to their ſide; and confirm others in it, who being originally members of the Church of Greece, becauſe originally converted by the Biſhops thereof, did ſtill continue in conformitie and obedience to it. In the end by reaſon of the over great liberty of the Nobility and people, and want of power in the King to controul their doings, every man took up what Religion he beſt liked; ſome following the Auguſtane Confeſſion, others the Helvetian, others adhering as tenaciouſly to the Church of Rome; and ſome inclining to new Sects, or rather to old Hereſies under new diſguiſes, have brought in ſuch a miſcellanie or Babel of Religions into this eſtate, (Jeſuites, Lutherans, Calviniſts, Socinians, Arians, Anabaptiſts, and indeed what not, being here all tolerated) that at laſt it grew into a By-word, that if any man had loſt his Religion hee might finde it in Poland, or elſe beleive it to be vaniſhed. A By-word afterwards applyed unto Amſterdam; communicable ſince unto other places: Libertas Prophetandi, or the Libertie of Prophecying being now as much allowed of in ſome parts of Chriſtendome, as Libertas opinandi, was in Rome under Nervas Government; ubi & ſentire quæ velis, & quæ ſentias loqui liceat, when as a man might thinke as hee liſted of the publick, and ſpeake what he thought. But whether this be ſuch a Rara temporum felicitas, ſuch a felicitie of theſe our times, as Tacitus conceived the other to be of thoſe; future times will ſhew.

But to return againe to Poland, notwithſtanding this mixture of Religions, yet that moſt publickly allowed and countenanced is the Religion authoriſed by the Church of Rome: aſſerted here by the zeal of the Kings unto that cauſe, and the great power of the Biſhops, who ſeeing how thoſe of their Order have ſped in Germanie and other places, under colour of Reformation of ſome things amiſſe, have hitherto upheld the Eccleſiaſticall Eſtate in the ſame forme they found it. The Government of the Church as formerly, by 3 Archbiſhops, and 19 Biſhops: who challenge a juriſdiction over all the kingdome, but exercile it upon thoſe onely who ſubmit unto them: thoſe who embrace the Doctrines of Luther or Calvin, following the formes of Government by them eſtabliſhed, as others doe ſome new ones of their owne deviſing. And for thoſe Provinces and people which lie towards Greece, or were parts heretofore of the Ruſſian Empire, and ſtill hold a Communion with thoſe Churches; they have Archbiſhops and Biſhops of their owne Religion; that is to ſay, the Archbiſhops of Vilne and Lemburg, the Biſhops of Polozko, Luzko, Pinsko, Volodomire, Preſmil, and Kiovia. Yet amongſt all theſe different Churches and formes of Government there is this conformitie, that whenſoever the Goſpell is read openly in the Congregation, the Nobility and Gentrie uſe to draw their ſwords (according to an antient cuſtom which they had among them) ſignifying their readineſſe to defend it againſt all oppoſers. Which reaſon doubtleſſe gave beginning to the ſtanding up at the Creed and Goſpell, in the primitive times; retained ſtill in the Church of England: whereby we doe declare how prepared and reſolute we are to defend the ſame; though ſome of late, holding it for a Relick of Popery, with greater nicety then wiſdome, have refuſed to doe it.

Chief Rivers of this Kingdome are 1 Viſtula or Wixel, the antient Boundary betwixt Germany and Sarmatia Europea, which riſing in the Carpathian Mountaines, paſſeth by Cracovia the chief City of Poland, and dividing Pruſſia from Pomerella falleth into the Baltick ſea not far from Dantzick; and is navigable for the ſpace of 400 miles, of old called Vandalis. 2 Warta, which runneth through the leſſer Poland; 3 Duina the leſſe, watering Livonia: and 4 Boryſthenes or Nieper paſſing through Podolia, both ſpoken of before when we were in Ruſſia. 5 Nieſter by Ptolemie called Tyras, which falleth into the Euxine Sea, having firſt parted Podolia from Moldavia. 6 Jugra, by ſome called the leſſer Tanais, ariſing in Lituania, and falling into the more noted Tanais, which is now called Don. Of leſſe note there are, 1 Reuben or Reuhon, 2 Chronus now called Pregel, 3 Bogh, ſaid by ſome to bee the Hipanis of the Antients. 4 Minnael, 5 Niemen, the Meander of theſe Northern parts. 9 Winde, a Livonian river falling into the Baltick. Mountains of note here are not many, the Countreys for the moſt part being plain and Champain: and thoſe which be are rather boundaries betwixt this and ſome other Kingdome, then proper unto this alone. The chief of which are thoſe called Sarmatici, dividing Germany from Sarmatia Europea, by Solinus named Sevo, by Ptolemie the Carpathian Mountains; the boundary at this time betwixt Poland and Hungary.

The common metes and Land-markes being thus laid down, we will next take a view of thoſe ſeverall Provinces of which this kingdome doth conſiſt, being ten in number: that is to ſay, 1 Livonia, 2 Samogitia, 3 Lituania, 4 Pruſſia, 5 Poland, ſpecially ſo called, 6 Maſſovia, 7 Podlaſſia, 8 Ruſſia Nigra, 9 Voltinia, and 10 Podolia: all of them (except the proper Poland) within Sarmatia Europea.

1 LIVONIA.

1 LIVONIA or LIEFLAND is bounded on the Eaſt with the Empire of Ruſſia, on the Weſt with the Baltick Sea; on the North with the Gulf or Bay of Finland, on the South with Samogitia, and Lituania. Extended in length along the ſhore of the Baltick for the ſpace of 125 Dutch or 500 Italian miles, & 40

Dutch

Dutch or 160 Italian miles in breadth: and called thus perhaps from the Lenovi, a people of Germany, inhabiting not far from the River Viſtula.

The countrey for the moſt part plaine, without any mountaines, furniſhed with corn and fruits in ſo great aboundance, that they ſend part thereof into other countries: and yet there is much ground untilled in it, by reaſon of the bogs and mariſhes which are very frequent. Here is alſo ſtore of wax, honey, and pitch, but they have neither oyl nor wine; the want of which laſt is ſupplyed by Meth. Of tame beaſts fit for mans ſervice they are well provided; as alſo of ſuch whoſe skins are of more value with the Merchant, then their fleſh at the market; as Ermins, Sables, Caſtors, others of that kinde; beſides good ſtore of game for hunting, the countrey having in it many large woods, parts of the Hercynian. And as for Rivers there are few countries which have more, watered by the Winde, the Beck, the Dwine, the Ruho; all of them falling into the Baltick; many great Lakes, whereof the chiefe is that of Beybus, 45 miles long, and full of fiſh.

The people are much given to gluttonie and drunkenneſſe, eſpecially in rich mens houſes where it is to be had: for the paiſant lives in want enough, meere ſlaves to their tyrannicall Landlords, who ſpend in riot and exceſſe, what theſe get by drudgerie. And when at any time the poore wretch leaves his Landlord to mend his condition with ſome other, the Lord if he can overtake him will cut off his foot, to make ſure of him for the future. They are a mixture of many Nations, as the Eſtones, which are the naturall Inhabitants, (derived from the Eſtii, a Dutch people, ſpoken of by Ptolemie) of which Nation are almoſt all the Paiſants; the Moſcovites, Swedes, Danes, Dutch, and Polanders, intermingled with them, comming in upon ſeverall conqueſts, and planting themſelves in the beſt parts of it, in which they ſtill Lord it over the Native, but the Dutch eſpecially for long time Maſters of the whole.

The Chriſtian Faith was firſt here planted by Meinardus of Lubeck employed herein (in the time of Frederick the firſt) at the perſwaſion of ſome Dutch Merchants who traded hither, by the Archbiſhop of Breme, by whom made the firſt Biſhop of the Livonians. The Church hereof at this time governed by the Archbiſhop of Riga, the Biſhops of Derpt, Aſilia, Oeſel, Curland, and Rivallia, in thoſe parts which remaine ſubject to the Polander, where the Religion of the Church of Rome is onely countenanced. Such parts of it that are under the Swedes or Danes are for the moſt part of the Lutheran profeſſion; planted with colonies of that people. But the Eſtones, or originall Inhabitants, as they have a language: ſo they have a Religion by themſelves alſo; mixt of the Chriſtian and the Pagan: extremely well affected unto their Prieſts, to whom they preſent ſalt, candles, and fruites, when they come to them for their bleſſings; great lovers of Confeſſion, eſteemers of holy water, and diligent frequenters of their Churches: but ſo extremely ignorant in all points of Religion, that there is hardly one in a village that can ſay his Pater-noſter. When they bury any of their dead, every one drinketh an health to him, and powreth his part upon him when his turne comes to drink, putting into the grave with him an hatchet, wine, meat, and a little money for his voyage. And in ſome places they are wholly idolatrous (if not converted very lately by the care of the Jeſuites) ſome of them worſhipping the Sun, other ſtocks and ſtones, and ſome Serpents alſo. The language of the Countrey is for the moſt part the High Dutch (being the language of thoſe Nations who firſt lorded over them) the Eſtones having generally a peculiar language, which none of the others underſtand.

It was divided formerly into the Provinces of Curland, Eaſtland, Semigall, Virland, Harland, and Letteland; but theſe ſix, ſince the conqueſt of it by the Polanders, are reduced to three: Harland, and Virland, being united unto Eſtland, and Semigallia unto Curland.

Chief places in Eſtland are 1 Rivalle, a Biſhops See, and well traded Port, ſituate on the Gulf of Finland; a town belonging to the Swede, the keeping whereof and of Viburg, on the borders of Moſcovie ſtand him yearly in 100000 Dollars. 2 Habſey, or Habſes, (Aſilia in Latine) a Biſhops See, and 3 Pernow, a well fortified place, belonging to the Swethlander alſo, ever ſince the conqueſt of theſe parts of the countrey by John the ſecond. Places of great importance to the Crowne of Sweden; as all other pieces of this nature are, which ſtanding in an Enemies Countrey not onely do defend our own, but offend our adverſaries. For they are not onely dores to open a further paſſage into their territories, whenſoever we ſhall ſee occaſion; but whileſt the Enemie is beſieging thereof, or otherwiſe buſyed in recovering them into his power, our owne ſtate is preſerved in quiet, and time may yeeld fit opportunity to relieve them, if they be diſtreſſed, without waſting any part of our proper countreys. Of which nature was Calais when it was in the hands of the Engliſh; the Garriſons which the Spaniards and Portugueze have in Afrik and India: the charge of keeping them being ſufficiently defrayed (if the charge prove greater then the income, as ſometimes it doth) by the advantages they give unto him which hath them. 4 Velin, a ſtrong Town, and fortified with an impregnable Caſtle, betrayed by the Dutch Garriſon, at that time in it, together with William of Furſtenberg the great Maſter, into the hands of John Baſilius the great Duke of Moſcovie: who ſtill holds it. 5 Derpt or Derbren, (in Latine Tupatum) a Biſhops See; ſituate on the Beck, or Embeck betwixt two Lakes, in the midſt of the Province; and taken at the ſame time by the Moſcovite; who tranſporting the Livonians into other places, planted theſe parts with Colonies of his own people. 6 Terneſt, a Caſtle of great ſtrength, taken then alſo by the Ruſſes: but being recovered by the Polander, was blown up with Gun-powder, that it might no more come into the hands of the Enemy. Hitherto nothing of this Countrey which belongs to the Polanders; theſe that follow doe, that is to ſay 7 Borcholm, the ſeat and reſidence of the Biſhop of Rivalle, ſince the taking of that Town by the Swedes. 8 Weiſenberg, Incommodiouſly ſeated betwixt

Livonia. two ill neighbours, Narve, and Rivalle, but ſerving very well to prohibit the incurſions of thoſe Garriſons further into the Countrey. 9 Werneber, in that part of Eſtland, which is called Odinpen, and Wittenſtein in that part thereof which is named Jervia.

In LETTENLAND, lying in the midſt betwixt Eſtland and Curland, the places of moſt note are 1 Rica, (the people call it Rig) ſeated on the mouth of the River Dwina, falling there into the Baltick; firſt built, and planted at the charges of the Merchants of Breme; after that the Archbiſhops See, the ordinary reſidence of the great Maſter, and the chiefe City of the whole Province of Livonia. A town well fortified according to modern Rules of fortification, with a ſtrong wall, large Bulwarks, double ditches, Paliſadoes; and well provided of all manner of Ammunition: a famous Emporie, of great reſort by forein Merchants, who carry hence Pitch, Wax, Hempe, Flax, and ſuch other commodities. Governed (notwithſtanding their ſubjection to the King of Poland) by their own Laws; and ſuch ſtout defenders of their liberties, that they will by no means admit of any foreiner to have command of the City; obedient in all other things to the will of that King. 2 Dunamund, an impregnable fortreſſe, two Dutch miles from Riga, well garriſoned by Polanders, who here take toll of all forein Merchants. 3 Blokaws, a Garriſon of the Kings betwixt Riga and Dunamund, where the Merchants are tolled over again. 4 Winden, more within the land, on the River ſo called. 5 Wolmar, upon the River Treiden. 6 Kokenhan, a ſtrong Towne on the banks of the Dwina. This Countrey belongs wholly to the King of Poland, and ſtood firm for him in the war made by Charles Duke of Suderman, againſt his Nephew Sigiſmund King of Poland and Sweden, when almoſt all Eaſtland had ſubmitted to him.

CURLAND, the third and laſt member of this diviſion, containing Semigallia alſo, lieth ſouth of Lettenland, and north of Samogitia and Lituania: an entire Dukedome of it ſelfe, but holden under the Soveraignty and homage of the kings of Poland. Places of moſt importance in it, are 1 Canden, 2 Goldingen, 3 Kies, (the Dutch call it Wenden) the ſeat of the Great Maſter of the Teutonick order in times paſt; now moſt frequented as the place of Parliament or Generall Aſſemblie for affaires which concern the publick. 4 Dubin, 5 Grubin, on the Sea ſide, but of no trade at all. 6 Halenpot. And then in Semigall, 7 Mitow, the Court and reſidence of the Dukes of Curland, 8 Selborch, 9 Baſſembourg, 10 Debelin. No town in all this Dukedome of any trading, though lying for a great ſpace all along the Baltick; becauſe none of them furniſhed with commodious Havens. A Dukedome firſt begun in the perſon of Gothardus Ketler, (of one of the noble families of Denemark) the laſt Great Maſter of the Dutch Knights in this Countrey: who in the year 1562 ſurrendering his order and the whole poſſeſſion of Livonia to Sigiſmund Auguſtus King of Poland, received back again for him and his heirs for ever, the Dukedome of Curland and Semigall, to be held by them of that Crown: the Nobility of theſe Countreys doing then preſently their homage and allegiance to him, as their Hereditary Prince. Since which time the Princes of this houſe have continued Feudataries unto Poland, but not reckoned as parts or members of the body thereof; not coming to the Diets, nor liable to the publick charges, nor having any thing to doe in the Kings Election: in a word, rather honourable Neighbours of the Kings of Poland, then ſubjects to them. The preſent Duke like to be much increaſed in eſtate and power, if the now Marqueſſe of Brandenbourg (whoſe ſiſter is his mother) ſhould depart without iſſue: For by that means there will be added to this houſe the great Dukedome of Pruſſia, thoſe of Cleve and Gulick, together with ſuch other Countries poſſeſſed now by that Marqueſſe, as he holds by deſcent from the Heires Generall of thoſe Dukedomes: which makes him caſt an eye already upon thoſe Eſtates.

There belong alſo to Livonia ſome few Iſlands ſituate in the Baltick Sea, that is to ſay, 1 Oſilia, 2 Dogeden, 3 Mona, 4 Wormſe, 5 Wrangen, and 6 Kien. Of which the foure laſt doe belong to the King of Polands Dacuden, Dogeden King of Swethland; and Oſilia or Oeſel to the Dane. This laſt the chiefe of all the ſix, diſtant from the maine land of Livonia 12 Dutch miles, 14 of the ſame miles in length, halfe as much in breadth: the chiefe Towns thereof being Oſel, a Biſhops See, which gives name to the Iſland, 2 Sunberg. The Iſland made ſubject to the Danes by Magnus, brother of Frederick the ſecond king of Denmark, who being choſen Adminiſtratour of the Biſhoprick of Derpt, in Eſtland, made himſelf maſter of this Iſland, and ſome other peeces; which, dying without iſſue, he bequeathed to the King his brother, anno 1580.

As for Livonia it ſelfe, it was firſt under the Levoni and Eſtii two German Nations, from whom the Countrey had the name of Livonia, the people of Eſtlanders or Eſtones. Diſtracted into many petit principalities, it was made acquainted with the Chriſtian Faith by the care of the Merchants of Bremen, as before was ſaid. Meinard their firſt Biſhop being dead, and Bertold his ſucceſſour ſlaine by ſuch of the people as had not yet received the Goſpell: the knights of the Port-glaive, and the ſword were ſent hither to defend the Preachers and their Doctrine by force of Arms. Finding themſelves too weak to effect the buſineſſe, they united with the order of Dutch Knights in Pruſſia, to whom from that time forwards they became ſubordinate; the Great Maſter of Livonia, acknowledging him of Pruſſia for his Superiour. Theſe Knights continued Maſters of it, without contradiction till the year 1557. (embracing in the meane time the opinions of Luther, anno 1528) when quarrelling with the Archbiſhop of Riga, of the houſe of Brandenbourg, becauſe he would not adhere unto their opinions; who to ſecure his own eſtate was forced to put Riga into the hands of the Polanders. Afterwards being overlaid by the Moſcovite, who had taken from them almoſt all their Countrey, they were faine to put themſelves under the protection of Sigiſmund Auguſtus King of Poland, anno 1559 But William of Furſtenburg the Great Maſter being betrayed by his own Mercenaries into the hands of the Moſcovite: Gothardus his ſucceſſour (following the example of Albert the Great Maſter of Pruſſia) tranſacted with the ſaid Sigiſmund for the whole eſtate: which he ſurrendered to his uſe in the Caſtle of Riga, March 5. anno 1562. together with his Croſſe the ſeale of the Order, the Charters and Grants of many of the Popes and Emperours which concerned the ſame; as alſo the Keies of the City and Caſtle of Riga, the Office of great Maſter, the rights of coynage, and all the powers and priviledges appertaining to it: receiving back again from Ratzevill the Kings Commiſſioner, the Dukedom of Curland, to him and to his Heirs for ever as before is ſaid. By this tranſaction the Kings of Pole became maſters of Liefland, more abſolutely ſetled in it after a long war betwixt Steven King of Poland, and John Vaſiliwick the Great Duke of Moſcovie, who in the end ſurrendered all his claim therein to the ſaid Steven and his ſucceſſours, anno 1582. reſerving onely ſome few Townes on the Eaſterne borders: the Danes and Swethlanders taking occaſion by theſe troubles to impatronize themſelves of Narve, Rivallia, Oſel, and ſome other pieces. Samogitia.

2 SAMOGITIA.

2 SAMOGITIA is a ſmall Province wedged in betwixt Livonia and Lituania, having Livonia on the North, Lituania on the Eaſt and South, and the Baltick Sea upon the Weſt: in length extending 50 miles from Eaſt to Weſt, but not of anſwerable breadth. It is ſo called from the lowneſſe of the ſituation (the word Samogits in the language of the Inhabitants ſignifying terram inferiorem or the Lowlands) by the Moſcovite in the ſame ſenſe called Samotzkaſemla. This lowneſſe of the ſituation makes it very watery and almoſt continually frozen; but withall it hath many forreſts which yeeld unto the people aboundance of honey, better, more pleaſing to the taſt, and leſſe mixt with wax then in other places.

The people are ſuppoſed to be of the Saxon race, of good ſtature, well-ſet, bold and apt for war; but withall, boyſterous, rude and barbarous: Chriſtians in generall, but many who doe ſtill retaine their old Idolatries: nouriſhing amongſt them a kinde of foure-footed Serpents, about three handfuls in length, which they worſhip as their Houſehold gods, attending them with fear and reverence when they call them out to their repaſt; and if any miſchance happen to any of the familie, it is imputed preſently to ſome want of due obſervation of theſe ugly creatures. Naturally inclined to Divinations, Charmes, and Sorceries, and frequently abuſed (as for the moſt part ſuch people are) by diabolicall illuſions. Nay they which profeſſe the name of CHRIST are ſo ill inſtructed, that they uſe to marry many wives, without conſideration of bloud or parentage: it being ordinary for a man to marry with his brothers widow, & not unuſuall to marry the Relict of their fathers, (a fornication not ſo much as heard of in St. Pauls time, amongſt the Gentiles). They have ſome cuſtomes alſo, as unprofitable, as theſe are heatheniſh; breaking up their land, as they doe in Moſcovie, with ſpades or ſticks. And when one of their Governors obſerving the husbandrie of other Nations, had brought them to the uſe of the plough, it fortuned that for two or three yeares, either by the indiſpoſition of the weather or ſome other accident, they had not ſo much corn as they uſed to have. Which want the people attributing to the uſe of the plough, nec quicquam aliud in cauſa eſſe putantes, and not beleeving that there was any other cauſe of it, grew ſo much incenſed, that the Governour fearing ſome ſedition like to follow on it, was forced to leave them to the old way which before they went. An humour like that of the preſent Iriſh in ploughing with their Horſes tayles, ſpoken of before. So pertinacious for the moſt part are ignorant and ſuperſtitious people in ſtanding to their antient cuſtomes, though abſurd and hurtfull.

Townes they have few, their houſes for the generality being poore and low, covered with ſtraw or durt, with an hole open in the roofe to let in the light. The principall of thoſe they have, (but rather Villages then Towns) are 1 Bigla near the head of the River Swiete, 2 Linkaw, of which nothing memorable.

This Province hath alwayes followed the fortunes of Lituania; ſubject, when that was ſo, to the kings of Ruſſia; converted when that was, to the Chriſtian Faith; and finally united with it to the Crown of Poland.

3 LITVANIA.

LITVANIA hath on the Eaſt the Empire of Ruſſia, on the Weſt Pruſſia, Maſſovia, and Poland; on the North, Livonia, and Samogitia, and on the South Volhinia and Podolia. So called from Lituus the ceremoniall ſtaffe, uſed antiently by the Augures in their divinations: to which the Inhabitants hereof being very much addicted before their receiving of the Goſpell, were called Lituani. But this is but conjecturall onely. Yet rather thus then that it ſhould be peopled by ſome baniſhed Italians, firſt named Italia, then Litalia, and after by a moſt unlikely corruption come to Lituania, as Matthias a Michou would fain have it.

The Countrey for the moſt part full of Moores, Forreſts, ſome great Lakes, like a Sea for bigneſſe, and many navigable Rivers: which frozen over in the Winter make the wayes more travellable at that time of the yeare, then they are in ſummer. The air in moſt places exceeding cold, which makes their Wheat (whereof they have ſome aboundance) to be ſeldome ripe; and other fruites of the Earth to come ſlowly forward. Their forreſts yeeld them Bugles, Ermins, Sables, Deere, wilde Horſes, plenty of Honey, Wax, and Pitch; but their breed of cattell is leſſe here, and of ſmaller ſtature then it is in Germany. Theſe Forreſts alſo are the ſtorehouſe out of which the Engliſh and Hollanders furniſh themſelves with timber both for ſhips and building; returning to them in exchange ſalt, wine, and other neceſſaries which are wanting here.

The people antiently had Fire and Serpents for their Gods, nouriſhing the laſt in their houſes, and keeping the other continually burning: the Prieſts and Miniſters of the Temples alwayes adding fewell, that it might not faile. The Veſtall fire not kept more carefully at Rome, nor with greater ceremonie. To this God whom they called Diſhpan, or the Lord of the Smoke, they uſed to ſacrifice young pullets; to the other their Cocks: the ſeed of this Idolatrie is implanted in them, that it is ſaid, that in a Village of the kings called Lovaniski, not foure miles from Vilna, their chief City, they doe to this day worſhip Serpents. Converted with their Prince Jagello to the Chriſtian faith, an. 1386. they yet retained ſuch cuſtomes as are inconſiſtent with Chriſtianity: marying and unmarying when and as often as they pleaſe; no bond being ſo ſoone cancelled as that of Matrimony. For a maried man to uſe the body of an harlot is accounted (as indeed it is) an opprobrious crime; but for the wife to have her Stallions and Adulterers is a thing ſo ordinary and unblameable, that the husbands call them their Co-adjutors, and prize them far above the reſt of their Acquaintance. The common people in a miſerable ſervitude unto their Lords, pillaged and beaten by them upon any occaſion; yet muſt not come before them with an empty hand. And if any of them have committed a crime deſerving death, he muſt hang himſelf aſſoon as the ſentence is ſignified to him, or elſe is beaten and tormented in ſo cruell manner, that death at laſt is looked on as a better life.

The countrey is divided into ten parts or Provinces, ſubject unto the juriſdiction of ſo many Palatines, that is to ſay, the Palatine of 1 Vilna, 2 Trock, 3 Minsko, 4 Novogrod, 5 Breſtia, 6 Volhinia, 7 Kiovia, 8 Mieſlaw, 9 Vitebſco, 10 Polotzkie. But Novogrod and Polotskie being conquered by the Great Duke of Moſcovie, and added unto that eſtate; and Volhinia reckoned (of late times) for a diſtinct Province of it ſelfe, not depending of it: the remaining number is but ſeven; moſt of them taking names from their principall Townes. The chief of thoſe, and others which deſerve place here, are 1 Vilna a Biſhops See, equall in bigneſſe to Cracow, the chief City of Poland; ſo called of the River Vil and Viln, upon which it is ſeated; built there in the year 1305 by one Godemin, a great Prince of theſe parts: well-walled, but the gates thereof open night and day; large, rich, and well frequented by forein Merchants; eſpecially by thoſe that drive the trade of Moſcovie, who have here their Hall; one of the chief ornaments of the City. They have in it alſo ſome Churches built of ſtone (but the moſt of wood) the principall whereof is the Monaſtery of S. Bernard, which is a very comely ſtructure. The Natives call this Town Vilenski; the Dutch, Die Wilde. Situate in the very heart of the countrey, the longeſt day in ſummer being here 16 houres and halfe a quarter; whereas in the moſt ſouthern parts of the countrey it is but 16, and in the moſt northern not fully 18. 2 Kiovia, or Kiof, ſituate on the Nieper or Boryſthenes, where the River Deſna fals into it: heretofore a beautifull and moſt ſtately City, having in it above 300 faire Churches, of which ſome remain unto this day; the ruines of the reſt to be traced out amongſt ſhrubs and buſhes, the receptacles of wilde beaſts. The ſeat at that time of the Metropolitan of the Ruſſian Empire, containing alſo under his juriſdiction the countries of Walachia in Dacia, and Nigra Ruſsia in Poland. But being deſtroyed by Bathu or Boydo the Tartarian, in the conqueſt of theſe parts by that people; it never could come neer its former luſtre; yet ſtill it holds the reputation of a Biſhops See, acknowledging the Patriarch of Moſco for his Metropolitan; and conſequently of the Communion of the Greek Churches, not of that of Rome. 3 Grodna, on the River Chronus, the chiefe Town of the Palatinate of Trock, memorable for the death of Stephen King of Poland. 4 Grunwald, more memorable for the great defeat given neer it by Jagello the Duke of Lituania and King of Poland to the numerous Army of the Dutch Knights invading this Province: ſo confident of their ſucceſſe in the undertaking, that they brought with them aboundance of chains and torches; with the one to lead captive the Nobles of Poland, and with the other to fire their Cities. But Jagello, then newly made a Chriſtian, putting his confidence in God, with an Army of untrained ſouldiers ſo tamed their pride, that he ſlew 40000 of them; never recovered of that blow whileſt their Order ſtood. 5 Ponsko, in the Palatinate of Breſt; 6 Klow, reckoned a countrey of it ſelfe; and 7 Striſun fortified with a Caſtle, both under the Palatine of Mieſlaw. The reſt of the chief Towns may be known by the Palatinates, which they give their names to; but not elſe obſervable.

The antient Inhabitants hereof were the Aorſi, Pagarini, Savari, tribes of the Sarmatæ Europæi. United into this name of Lituanians, they became ſubject to the Kings of Ruſſia; till the breaking of that kingdome by the Tartars. At what time Erdizvill then their Prince, (but an Homager and Tributary to the Ruſſians) with drew himſelfe from their command: as did alſo many others of the conquered Provinces. Afterwards Mindoch, one of the Dukes or Princes of it, being made a Chriſtian, was by Pope Innocent the third honoured with the title of a King, but returning againe unto his vomit, he loſt that title. In the end anno 1386. Jagello Duke of Lituania, marying with Heduigis Queen of Poland, was upon three conditions choſen King of that Realm. 1 That he ſhould immediately receive the Chriſtian faith. 2 That he ſhould draw all his ſubjects to the ſame beliefe; and 3 that hee ſhould unite this Dukedome to the Crown of Poland. Of theſe the two firſt were performed without out any delay; though the ſecond not without ſome difficulty; the people being obſtinate in their old Idolatry, eſpecially in the religious conceit they had of high trees; which to cut down was held both unſafe and impious. Not to be weaned from this conceit till by the authority of the King their loſtieſt trees were felled, and their Woods grubbed up: which when they ſaw done without any danger to the Prince, or any of thoſe whom he employed in that ſervice, Regis mandato & autoritati cedere cœperunt, they then began to hearken unto his commands, and generally received the Goſpell, and were Baptized. In the laſt point there was a longer time of deliberation. For the Princes of the houſe of Jagello, loth to deprive themſelves of their Patrimoniall eſtate, which was hereditary unto their poſterity; and to ſubject it to the election of the Polanders, in which it was poſſible the Princes of their family might be pretermitted: deferred the accompliſhment hereof from one day to another; under colour that the Lituanians would revolt, if they went about it. But Sigiſmund Auguſtus, in whoſe perſon the male iſſue of Jagello failed, foreſeeing what diviſions might enſue after his deceaſe, and fearing that the Moſcovites would renew their old pretentions; united it unto the Crown: ordaining that the Biſhops, Palatines, and a certain number of the Chaſtellans by him eſtabliſhed, ſhould have their place and ſuffrage in the great Councell of Poland: power in the chooſing of the King, and all other priviledges which the naturall Polonians have. Since that accounted a chief Member of that Body Politicke: ſubject to thoſe corruptions, changes, and innovations in matters of Religion, which have been predominant in the other; excepting thoſe parts onely which relate to the Church of Greece or Moſco, adhering pertenaciouſly to the rites thereof. Volhinia.

4 VOLHINIA.

VOLHINIA, by ſome accounted one of the Palatinates of Lituania; (as once it was) but by others a diſtinct Province of it ſelfe, is bounded on the North and Eaſt with Lituania, on the South with Podolia, and on the Weſt with Ruſſia Nigra, and Podlaſſia. So called, as Maginus is of opinion, from the Volgari, who dwelling on the banks of the River Volga, came afterwards into this countrey calling it Volgaria, whence by degrees it came unto Volhonia, and at laſt to Volhinia. But this conjecture is improbable and of no good grounds.

The countrey yeelds good plenty both of grain and fruits, Pooles which abound with very good fiſh, Forreſts which doe afford them ſtore of game and honey; and much good paſturage for their cattell. The people of the ſame nature with the Lituanians, but more ſtrong, and warlike, and better weaned from their old ſuperſtitions and heatheniſh cuſtomes, then the others are. Of the ſame language and Religion with thoſe of Ruſſia, to which, together with the reſt of Lituania, it did once belong: It is divided commonly into three parts or Provinces, all taking name from the three principall Cities of it; that is to ſay, 1 Luzke, in Latine called Luceozia, a towne of above 1000 families, where 127 onely, in the time of my Authour were of the Romiſh Religion; the reſidue being Ruſſians, Grecians, and ſome Armenians; the ſeat & reſidence of two Biſhops, of which one being of the Communion of the Church of Rome, is of the Province of the Archbiſhop of Lemburg in Ruſſia Nigra: but they which are of the Communion of the Church of Greece, have alſo a Biſhop of their owne, who acknowledgeth the Patriarch of Moſco for his Metropolitan. 2 Valodomir, a Biſhop See alſo, of the ſame condition. 3 Keromenze, which (as the reſt) hath under it many fair Towns and Caſtles, beſides large Villages. The whole once part of Lituania, as before was ſaid; but of late diſmembred from it, and united to the Crown of Poland, as a State diſtinct. But ſo, that the greateſt part of it is immediately ſubject to the Duke of Oſtrogoye, who is ſaid to have 4000 Feudataries in this Countrey, the greateſt Prince of thoſe who hold Communion with the Church of Greece, in the whole Realm of Poland.

PODOLIA hath on the North Volhinia, part of Lituania, and the great Empire of Ruſſia, on the South Moldavia, from which parted by the River Tyras, now called Nieſter: on the Weſt Ruſſia Nigra; extending Eaſtward through vaſt uninhabited countries, as far as to the Euxine Sea. The reaſon of the name I finde no where gueſſed at, the people for the moſt part of the ſame nature with the Ruſſians, to whoſe Empire it formerly belonged.

The Country generally ſo fertile, that the husbandman is accuſtomed to reap an hundred for one, in regard it bears at one ploughing for three years together: the countreyman being put to no further trouble, then at the end of the firſt and ſecond yeares, to ſhake the corn a little, as he reaps or loads it, that which ſo falls ſerving as ſeed for the next yeare following. The meadow grounds ſo ſtrangely rich, and luxuriant, and the graſs ſo high, that a man can hardly ſee the heads or horns of his Cattell: of ſo ſwift a growth, that in three days it will cover a rod which is throwne into it, and in few more ſo hide a plough, that it is not an eaſie work to finde it. If theſe things ſeeme beyond beleife, let Maginus who reporteth them, bear the blame thereof: though better take it on his word then goe ſo far to diſprove him. And yet which addes much unto the miracle, the ground in moſt places ſo hard and ſtony, that there need ſix yoke of Oxen to break it up, to the great toyle both of the Cattell and the men. It is alſo ſaid that in this countrey there are great flocks of ſheep, many-heards of Oxen, abundance of wild beasts, and great store of honey. And yet for all this plenty and abundance of all things necessarie, the Country for the most part, especially towards the East, is but meanly inhabited; by reason of the frequent incursions of the Tartars bordering next unto it. Who have so wasted it in times past, and thereby so discouraged the people from building, planting, and all other works of peace and husbandrie, that in so large and rich a Countrie, there is nothing to be seen but some scattered houses, few Villages, and not above from Towns of note, viz. 1 Oreczakow, at the influx of the Borysthenes or Nieper into the Euxine sea. 2 Vaszow, at the fall of the River Bog into that of Nieper. 3 Braclaw, more high upon the Bog. 4 Camienecz, on the borders of Russia nigra, built by some divine hand as it were amongst the precipices of high and inaccessible Rocks; and so well fortified withall, that it is impregnable; as is apparent by the many and great repulses, which the Turks, Tartarians, and Valachians, have received before it, with much shame and losse. 2 Lemburg, remarkable for the sawces or salt-meats, which they send thence into other Countries.

6 RUSSIA NIGRA.

RUSSIA NIGRA hath on the East Volhinia, Podolia, and Moldavia; on the West Mazovia and Poland, specially so called; on the North Lituania, and Podlassia; and on the South the Sarmatian or Carpathian Mountains. It is called also Roxolania from the Roxolani, a chief people of Sarmatia Europæa, and by some Ruthenia: but generally Russia, from the Rossi spoken of before, in the Empire of Russia, who spread themselves over all these parts. Some hold that it was first called Rosseia which signifieth in the Sclavonian language a scattered Nation, or a Nation disseminated, and dispersed into many parts; and that this was the name generally of all that spake the Sclavonian tongue, and followed the religion and rites of the Church of Greece: extended from the frozen Seas to the Adriatique, and from the Euxine to the Baltick. This and a greater tract of ground I grant to have been heretofore possessed by divers Nations under the name of Sclavonians; a very considerable part of Germany and Poland being conquered by them. But for the name of Russia, given at first to all the Russian Empire, distinguished now into Russia Alba, and Russia Nigra, I adhere unto my former Vote: conceiving that it came from the Rossi, an Armenian people, inhabiting about Mount Taurus, who in the year 864 or thereabouts, attempted the taking of Constantinople, and after placed themselves on the Northern banks of the Euxine, getting ground of the Sclavonians to the North and East, till they had made themselves masters of all Russia Alba, Lituania, Volhinia, Podolia, and this Russia Nigra. Distinguished from the former by the adjunct of Nigra, after the destruction of that great Empire by the coming in of the Tartars, either from the colour of their garments, or their black and more southernly complexion. In which regard called also Russia Meridionalis, or the Southern Russia.

The Country is generally fruitfull, abounding in Horses, Oxen, Sheep, Sables, and Foxes: such store of Bees that they breed not only in Hives and hollow trees, but in Rocks and Caves. Well watred both with Pools and Rivers, affording them great plenty of fish; more naturally spawning here then in other places, insomuch that if a Pond be digged, and spring accordingly, the fish will breed therein of their own accord without being brought from other waters. The greatest want hereof is wine, either supplyed with Mede, or from other places. And it is said, that in the Territorie of Chelme the branches of the Pine trees left upon the ground for three years together, will be converted into stone.

The people are generally valiant, and so strong of bodie, that they use Bows of 12 foot long. Being formerly governed by Dukes, they doe but ill brook the name of King; which much induced the Kings of Poland to send Colonies of naturall Polonians into most parts of the Countrie, insomuch as most of the Knights and Gentrie of it are of that extraction, and follow the religion of the Church of Rome: the Paisants and originall inhabitants of it being more generally affected to the Rites and doctrines of the Church of Greece.

Places of most importance in it are, 1 Chelme, in the Territorie whereof it is affirmed, that the branches of Pine trees left upon the ground for three years together, are converted to stone. 2 Premisien, 3 Halitz, 4 Belzo, 5 Grodeck, and 6 Leopolis, by the Natives called Lemburg, built by one Leo a Moscovite, a Town of great traffique, and an Archbishops See, who is of the Religion of the Church of Rome. But the Patriarch of Mosco hath here also an Archbishop of his own ordaining, there being Churches both in the Citie it self, and all Russia generally (as before was said) which are of the communion of the Church of Greece. There are also in this Citie some Armenian Merchants who have a Church, a Bishop, and some Priests of their own religion.

Of the affairs of this Province, and how it was a part once of the Russian Empire, hath been said already. Dismembred from it by the Tartars, it had a while Dukes or Provinciall Governours, subject and tributarie unto those Barbarians: as had also Podolia, its next neighbour. Both conquered by the Polander, were for a time kept under by strong hand, and the power of Garrisons. But being upon all occasions apt to revolt, by reason of the hard hand which the Kings held over them, (by whom treated rather like slaves then subjects) they were assured unto the State by giving them the same liberties and immunities both for the Nobilitie and the Commons, which the naturall Polonians had; and by that means made fellow-members of that Common-wealth. The Act of Ladislaus the 6. the son of Jagello, imitating therein the ancient Romans, who much augmented their forces, and assured their Estate, by communicating the freedome of Rome, and the priviledges of Latium to many of the the conquered Provinces: and was herein imitated by Sigiſmund the 1. Sigiſmund Auguſtus, and Ste-phen, his ſucceſſours, in their incorporating of Pruſſia, Lituania, and Livonia, to the Crown of Poland.

7 MASSOVIA.

MASSOVIA is bounded on the East with Lituania, on the West with Poland ſpecially ſo called, on the North with Pruſſia and Podlaſſia, on the South with Ruſſia Nigra or Meridionalis. So called from Maſſo, one of the Dukes hereof; who in the year 1045. being vanquiſhed by Caſimire Duke of Poland, fled into Pruſſia and there unfortunately dyed.

The Countrie large, and for the moſt part full of woods, where they finde ſtore of Bugles and wild Buls. The people ſtrong, valiant, and couragious in war: differing little from the Polonians in ſpeech, manners, or apparell; ſave that they uſe a kinde of whiſtling, which the others do not. The principall Towns of it, are 1 Marſchow, the chief of the Province, and heretofore the reſidence of the Duke or Prince, remarkable for the beſt Mede or Metheglin. 2 Egrod Czirko, 3 Poltowoski, 4 Gadziek, 5 Lozara, 6 Droic, the ſeat of a Palatine, but not elſe obſervable.

This Province was once ſubject to Princes of its own, not ſubject or ſubordinate unto any Superiour. Of which number that Maſſo was one, from whom named Maſſovia. In the years 1246. and 1260. being ſtrangely waſted and diſtreſſed by Mindoy Duke of Lituania; they were fain to put themſelves under the power of the Polander: by whom made the portion of the ſecond ſon of that Kingdom. But John and Staniſlaus the two laſt Dukes hereof, dying without iſſue, it returned unto the Kings of Poland, by whom incorporate to that Crown, and priviledged in the election of the King, and all matters which concern the publick, as all others of the Polonians are, anno 1526.

8 PODLASSIA.

Podlaſſia is bounded on the East with Volhinia, on the Weſt with Pruſſia, on the North with Lituania, and on the South with Maſſovia, and Ruſſia nigra. The reaſon of the name I know not. The Countrie not much differing from thoſe before, the people a mixt generation of Ruſſes, Moſcovites, and Polonians; partake a little of the manners and garbe of thoſe ſeverall Nations from which they lineally are deſcended.

Places of moſt importance in it, are 1 Bielsko, 2 Brunsko, 3 Suras, all of them having fair and ample Territories. 4 Tykdiskin, ſtrongly fortified and well garriſoned, as being the place where the Kings Treaſures are kept. 5 Knyſſin, beautified with a royall Palace and a pleaſant Park, wherein are ſtore of wilde beaſts for hunting, and fiſh-ponds very well repleniſhed. 6 Narew, 7 Vaſilkow, and 8 Auguſtow, a very ſtrong Town, built and well fortified by Sigiſmund Auguſtus, and by him thus named, anno 1569. at what time he diſmembred this Province from Lituania, to which before it appertained; uniting it forever to the Crown of Poland.

PRUSSIA is bounded on the East with Lituania, and Podlaſſia; on the weſt with Pomerania; on the North with the Baltick Sea; and on the South with Poland and Maſſovia. Called firſt Boruſſia from the Boruſſi, who ſubdued it (of whom more anon) which by an eaſie alteration was changed into Pruſſia, by which name ſtill called.

The Countrie is extended all along the Baltick Sea, from the Citie of Dantzick in the weſt, to Labian on the mouth of the Maillank East, for the ſpace of 50 Poliſh miles; and from Torune bordering on Maſſovia, to Memel in the confines of Lituania, 58 miles of the ſame meaſure. The air thereof very mild and temperate, the ſoil both profitable and pleaſant; full of Lakes and Rivers ſtored with fiſh, plentifull of corn and other neceſſaries, and well clad with Forreſts which yeeld them game for hunting, rich skins for profit, and abundance of honey. Of which laſt they make Mede for their own uſe (their ordinarie drinke where there is no wine) and ſell the reſt unto the Merchant. But the commoditie wherein they doe excell their neighbours, is their plentie of Amber, which is the juice of a ſtone which groweth like a Corall in a Mountain of theſe Baltick Seas, covered quite with water, and ſhunned by Mariners 3 leagues off for fear of Shipwrack: the Mountaine reaſonable large, about 50 yards high of Engliſh meaſure. And when any tempeſt riſeth in theſe Northern Seas, eſpecially in September and December, the liquor by violence thereof is rent from the rock, and caſt into divers Havens and on divers Coaſts of this Countrie, and ſometimes upon thoſe of Sweden and Pomerania: the people leaping into the Sea when it rageth moſt, whence they take up firſt ſome ſtore of weeds, after that this Liquor; which being taken out of the water hardneth like to Corall. Beſides the beauty hereof and the quality it hath of attracting ſtraws and iron, as the Adamant doth, burning like pitch, and others of this nature; it is excellent good for ſtopping bloud, all kinde of Agues, falling-ſickneſſe, dropſies, ſtone, colick, weakneſſe of ſtomach, head-ach, and the yellow jaundiſe.

Prussia. The people, especially the Gentrie, descend from the Germans, and retain much of their nature: having more art and industry then the other Polonians, and being more tenacious of their ancient customes. Idolaters for long time together, converted first unto the Faith, in the time of the Emperor Frederick the 2. by whose setting on they were subdued by the order of the Dutch Knights, anno 1215. and either wonne or forced to the Christian Faith. As Christians, governed since the first plantation of the Gospell by the Bishops of Culm, Warme, Sambia, and Pomesan, suffragans to the Archbishop of Guesna: under whom those parts of it doe still continue, which have not yet forsaken the Church of Rome: the Lutherans, Calvinians, and other separate Congregations distinct from them, having their own forms both of doctrine and discipline.

Few Provinces of the North are better watered then this is, both for Lakes and Rivers: some of the Lakes 7 Dutch miles in compasse, and well stored with fish; the Rivers 12 in number, that is to say, 1 The Vistula, 2 Chronus, 3 Nogat, 4 Elbing, 5 Vasera, 6 Passaria, 7 Alla, 8 Pregel, 9 Ossa, 10 Drebnicz, 11 Lica, and 12 Lavia, all plentifully stored with fish; besides a large Sea coast both for trade and fishing, no small commoditie to the Natives.

The Country formerly divided into twelve Dukedomes, (so they called the parts and fractions of it) was by the industrie of the Dutch Knights so adorned and beautified (after they had once brought it under their obedience) that there were no fewer then 72 Castles and 62 good Towns of their foundation. Which number being much increased in these later times, hath made it the most flourishing part of the whole kingdom of Poland. But the Order of these Knights being suppressed in this Countrie by an agreement betwixt Sigismund the first King of Poland, and Albert of Brandenbourg the last great Master of the Order; both Towns and Countrie are divided between the successours of the said Albert as Dukes of Prussia, and of the said Sigismund as Kings of Pole; the Dukedoms or divisions of Hogerland, Warme, Galindia, Micklow, Calmigeria, with the Citie of Mariemberg, the Soveraignty of Dantzick, and Melvin, with the whole Countrie of Pomerella lying on the West side of the Vistula, being allotted to the King; the residue containing the divisions of Schalavonia, Sambia, Natangia, Nadravia, Bartonia, Sudavia, and Pomesania, (except the City and Territorie of Mariemberg) to the Dukes of Prussia.

Chief Towns belonging to the Duke, are 1 Mimel, a well frequented Port, the Mart town for the commodities of Lituania, which are brought hither, and here bought by the forein Merchant: part of this Province interposing betwixt Lituania and the Baltick. 2 Coningsberg, as the Dutch; Regimont, as the French; and Mons Regius, as the Latines call it, situate in the Province of Sambia, at the bottome of a Gulfe or Bay, where the Pregel falleth into the Baltick Sea, built by the Dutch Knights in the year 1260, and made an Universitie by Albert the first Duke hereof, 1525. the seat and principall residence of his successours: as also of the Bishops of Sambia, in Latine called Sambienses, by the name of the Province. 3 Mulmeburg, founded by the Dutch Knights, anno 1279. 4 Brandenburg, on the South side of that bay, but more near the Sea; built, as I guesse, by some of the great Masters of that familie. 5 Ragnitz, the furthest town of note towards Lituania. 6 Angersburg, in Sclavonia, as was also Ragnitz. 7 Nordenburg in Bartonia. 8 Ottelburg in Galindia, of which little memorable. 9 Marienwerder, the furthest of the Dukes estate towards the Vistula, and the ordinary residence of the Bishop of Pomesan. Besides which there are reckoned in this division, 80 good towns more, and about 54 Castles, though not of much observation in the course of storie.

Chief towns pertaining to the King are 1 Braunsberg, upon a Bay of the Baltick Sea, which they call Frisch Haffe; a town of good trade by reason of the commodious Haven; and the ordinarie residence of the Bishop of Warmia. 2 Frawenburg, on the same Bay, not far from Braunsburg. 3 Elbing, on the same Bay, not far from a fair and fishfull Lake, well traded, rich, and full of very wealthie Merchants. 4 Ressel, the chief town of the Diocese and Dukedome of Warmie. 5 Strasburg, in Micklow, confining on Poland specially so called; at the siege whereof by Gustavus Adolphus King of Sweden, anno 1628. Elias Tripe, one of the Engineers of that King, found out the use of Leather Ordinance, which afterwards did that King great service in his wars of Germany. 6 Culm, on the River Vistula, a Bishops See. 7 Mariemburg, on the Nogat, built by the Dutch Knights, anno 1302. and made the seat of the Great Masters of their Order, translated first from Ptolemais or Acon in Syria, to the citie of Venice; from thence to Marpurg, and at last to this place by Sifride the twelfth Great Master of it: whose constant residence in this town, occasioned the Bishop of Culm to remove thither also. A very fair and well-built citie, the chief of those which do belong to the King of Poland: by whom so well garrisoned and furnished with such store of victualls, ammunition, and all other necessaries, that it was thought able to hold out for a six years siege. But it proved otherwise when besieged by the King of Sweden, who took it in lesse space then so many months; on the setling of a peace betwixt the Crowns rendred again unto the King of Poland. Beneath this town down towards the Baltick is a pleasant Island made by the Nagot and the Wixell, for the fertilitie of the soil, and the great number of houses, villages, and people, not equalled (for the muchnesse of it) in all this Countrie. 8 Newburg, on the west side of the Vistula or Wixel, in the Countrie called Pomerella, once part of Pomerania, but given by Swantibore Duke of Pomeren, anno 1107. to Bugeslaus his second son; whose posterity enjoyed it till the year 1295. when Mestevin the 2. dying without issue male, gave it to Primislaus Duke of the Polonians, whose successours have ever since enjoyed it by that donation. 9 Dirschaw or Darsaw, (in Latine, Darsovia) a well fortified Town and of great importance, on the same side of the River, and the same Countrie of Pomerella. 10 Dantzick, in Latine called Dantiscum, and sometimes Gedanum, situate on the same side of the River also, a fair and well-built Citie, the houses for the most part of brick, and the reſt of ſtone; raiſed with great beauty and magnificence ſix or ſeven floores high: beautified with a fair Councell-houſe for affairs of State, and many publick gardens for diſport and exerciſe. It conſiſteth of three Cities governed by as many Senates; the one called Furſtat or the fore-Citie, the ſecond Altſtat or the old Citie, and the third Reichſtat or the Emperours Citie: but all encompaſſed with one wall, and governed by one chief Senate or Common-Councel choſen out of all three. A Biſhops See, and the ſecond in eſteem and rank of all the Hanſe towns; of ſo great trade and ſuch a noted Granarie of all ſorts of corn iſſued from hence to ſupply the wants of all other Countries, that 1000 meaſures of wheat (beſides other commodities in proportion) are here dayly ſold. Heretofore it was reckoned as Imperiall, but now eſteemed a Free-Eſtate, acknowledging the Kings of Poland for their Protectours; to whom they allow many cuſtomes upon their merchandiſe, and permit his Officers to abide there for receiving of them. The firſt town in the Kingdome of Poland, which gave entrance to the doctrines of Luther, anno 1525. but in ſo tumultuous a manner, that they that favoured his opinions, depoſed the old Common-Councell-men and created new ones of their own, prophaned the Churches, robbed them of their ornaments, and ſhamefully abuſed the Prieſts, and Religious perſons, aboliſhed the Maſſe, and altered all things at their pleaſure. But by the coming of the King they grew ſomewhat quieter: Having one Convent of Black Friers, and two of Nuns, who ſtill enjoy the exerciſe of their Religion. 11 Melvin, a noted Port Town and of great reſort, eſpecially by the Engliſh Merchants, who had here their Staple for the Baltick. A ſmall, but fair and well-built Citie, and fortified with a very good wall: governed like Dantzk, after the manner of a Free Eſtate or Common-wealth, under the patronage and protection of the Kings of Poland.

The ancient inhabitants hereof were the Venedi, the moſt potent Nation of this tract, extended all along the coaſt of the Baltick, from them by Ptolemie called Sinus Venedicus, containing under them the Gythones, Phinni, Sulanes, Phrungudiones, Avarini; and more within the land, the Sudini, and Galindæ, whoſe name the Dukedome or Province of Galindia, doth ſtill retaine. But great and potent though they were, they were ſubdued by the Boruſſi, inhabiting at the foot of the Riphean Mountaines; who weary of their own cold and barren dwellings, removed into the Weſtern parts, and vanquiſhing the Venedi and thoſe other Nations, poſſeſſed themſelves of this Country, which they called Boruſſia; now by us named Pruſſia. By Venedus one of their Princes, having 12 ſons in all, it was divided into 12 Provinces or Dukedomes, one for every ſon, continuing by that means diſtracted into divers petit principalities, till the coming of the Marian or Dutch Knights, ſent hither by Frederick the 2. anno 1215. by whom the Provinces or Dukedomes of Sudavia, Michlow, and the greateſt part of Nadravia, were laid waſte and deſolate, the reſt ſubmitted to their power and received the Goſpel. After this it continued ſubject to this Order of Knights till the year 1419. when wearie of their extortion, and the continuall change of Maſters, they revolted to the King of Poland, to whom they offered their obedience: ſeconded by the yeelding up of Mariemberg, with many other Towns and Caſtles ſold to King Caſimir by the Garriſon Souldiers, anno 1457. for 476000 Florens. But the Knights diſdaining to be ſo dealt withall, and refuſing to ſwear allegiance to the Kings of Poland, they brake out into open war; managed with variable ſucceſſe on both ſides; Ludovicus the then Great Maſter, being ſo ſucceſſefull at the firſt that he once beat the King out of the field, routed his whole Armie, ſlew 30000 of his men upon the place, and took 136 of his chief Nobilitie: not vanquiſhed at laſt but by the treachery and rebellion of his own people. In the end wearied and worn out on both ſides by continuall wars, Albert of Brandenbourg then Great Maſter, having for 14 years together couragiouſly maintained the honour of his Order, and for the 4 laſt years importuned in vain the aſſiſtance of the Emperour and Princes of Germanie, began to think of ſome expedient to compound the buſineſſe. Being inclined to Luthers doctrines, and willing to advance himſelf unto this Eſtate, he ſecretly practiſed with Sigiſmund the firſt of Poland, to end the war to the advantage of both parties. By whom at laſt it was agreed that Albert ſhould relinquiſh his Order, and ſurrender all Pruſſia into the hands of the King; that the King poſſeſſing the Weſtern parts with the town of Mariemberg, and the ſoveraignty of Dantzk and Melvin, ſhould inveſt Albert with the title of Duke of Pruſſia, eſtating on him and the heirs of his bodie, the whole Eaſtern Moietie, containing the Provinces or Dukedoms before ſpecified; and finally, that Albert and his heirs ſhould hold the ſaid Eſtate as Homagers to the Crown of Poland, taking place in all Aſſemblies at the Kings right hand. According to this agreement, anno 1525. Albert, attired in the compleat Habit of Maſter of the Dutch Order, preſents himſelf humbly on his knees before King Sigiſmund at Cracow, the King then ſitting on his Throne. The King raiſing him from the ground, cauſed him to put off thoſe robes and attire himſelf in a Ducall Habit; which done an inſtrument was read and publiſhed, whereby the King conferred upon him and the heirs of his body the Dukedome of Pruſſia, to be held of him and his ſucceſſours Kings of Poland. An act at which the whole Order were extremely incenſed, but they could not help it; and thereupon retired into Germanie, where there were ſome good lands left to maintain ſuch of them as had no mind to quit that militarie honour: leaving their old Eſtates in Pruſſia to the King, and the Duke; whoſe ſucceſſors have hitherto enjoyed their part of it with the Title of

DUKES of PRUSSIA.

1525 1 Albert Brandenbourg, ſon of Frederick Marqueſſe of Onalsbach, or Ansbach, created Maſter of the Order by the Emperour Maximilian, anno 1511. and the firſt Duke of Pruſſia by Sigiſmund the firſt of Poland, anno 1525. founded the Univerſitie of Coningsberg, anno 1544.

1568 2 Albert Frederick, ſon of Albert the firſt Duke, marryed Mary Eleanor daughter of William Duke of Cleve, Gulick, Berg, &c.

3 Anne, Eldeſt daughter of Duke Albert Frederick Dutcheſſe of Pruſſia, brought the Eſtate in marriage to 4 John Sigiſmund, Marqueſſe and Elector of Brandenburg confirmed therein by Sigiſmund the 3. of Poland, pretending an Eſcheat thereof for want of heirs males of the bodie of Albert the firſt Duke.

5 George William, Marqueſſe and Elector of Brandenburg, and Duke of Pruſſia in right of the Lady Anne his mother; and of Cleve, Gulick, Berg, &c. by deſcent from Mary Eleanor his Grandmother.

6 Frederick William, ſon of George William, Marqueſſe and Elector of Brandenburg, Duke of Pruſſia, Cleve, Gulick, and Berg; of whoſe inveſtiture in the Dukedome of Pomeren, and other large and goodly Signeuries, we have ſpoke elſewhere.

As for the Government of this Province, ſtanding thus divided, that of the Duke is more Monarchicall then that of the King; the one being abſolute and uncontrollable in his Eſtates, the other ſubject to the great Councell of Poland. If any difference grow between them, Delegates appointed by the King, but taking a new Oath to doe equall juſtice, either at Mariemberg or Elbing, do compound the buſineſſe: who together with ſome others of the Dukes nomination, receive all Appeals, in which the Duke is intereſſed as one of the parties.

The Revenues of this Dukedome are thought to be 120000 Ducats yearly.

The Armes thereof are Argent, an Eagle Vert, Membred and Crowned Or, langued Gules.

POLAND properly and ſpecially ſo called, is bounded on the Eaſt with Maſſovia, Podlaſſia, and Lituania; on the Weſt with Sileſia, and the Marquiſate of Brandenburg; on the North with Pruſſia, and on the South with the Sarmatian or Carpathian Mountains, which divide it from Hungarie. It is in length 480 Italian miles, 300 of the ſame miles in breadth; and took this name (as afore is ſaid) from the word Pole, ſignifying as much as plain; the Countrie being plain and levell, little ſwelled with hils.

The Air hereof is pure and healthy, but ſharp and cold; the Countrie plain, ſhaded with thick dark woods, parts of the Hercynian, full of wild beaſts for hunting, and of Bees for honey, which they have here in great abundance: together with ſuch plenty of grain, but of Rie eſpecially, by reaſon of the continuall breaking up of new grounds gained out of the Forreſts, that it may be called the Granarie or Store-houſe of the Weſtern parts of Europe; ſent down the Wixel unto Dantzick, and thence tranſported by the Merchant into other Countries, according to their ſeverall wants.

The Character of the people we have had before; adding now only that in matters of war they are ſtout and reſolute; ſo forwards in giving the charge and purſuit of the enemie, that John Vaſilwich the Great Duke of Moſcovie, comparing them with the Souldiers of his own Dominions, was wont to ſay, that the Moſcovites wanted a ſpur to drive them forwards; and the Polanders had need of a bridle to hold them back. Their language is the Sclavonian tongue; moſt generally ſpoken alſo in the reſt of the Provinces, but with ſome difference in the dialect, or pronunciation.

It is divided commonly into two parts, the Greater and the Leſſer Poland. The Greater lying wholly on the Weſtern ſide of the Wixel, and ſo accounted anciently as a part of Germanie, contains 9 diviſions, under the juriſdiction of the 9 Palatines of 1 Poſna, 2 Kalisch, 3 Siradia, 4 Lancitia, 5 Vratiſlaw, 6 Breſtus, 7 Rava, 8 Ploczko, and 9 Dobrzin: each of them ſo called from ſome Town of note. The chief whereof, and of the reſt contained in them, are 1 Poſna, a Biſhops See, and the principall of the Greater Poland, ſeated amongſt hills on the River Warta; built of free-ſtone, with very large Suburbs beyond the River: but much ſubject unto inundations, which adde much ſtrength unto the place: of great reſort by reaſon of the Marts or Fairs holden twice a year. 2 Koſcien, ſituate amongſt Mariſhes and fortified with a double wall. 3 Oſtreſow, bordering on Sileſia, begirt with woods. 4 Gueſna, the antienteſt town of Poland, founded by Lechus their firſt Prince, the ſeat of him and his ſucceſſours till removed to Cracow, ſituate in Kalisch, and by old preſcription, the firſt place for the inauguration of the Kings of Pole: in regard that here Prince Boleſlaus the firſt King received the Regall Diadem at the hands of Otho the third. The town well-walled, and the See of the Archbiſhop, who is the Primate of the kingdome, by antient priviledge the Popes Legat for all Sarmatia Europæa, and in the abſence of the King or interregnums the Vicar Generall of the kingdome, having power to ſummon the Diets, to conclude and publiſh their Decrees. 5 Petrocow, a walled Town, in the Palatinate or diviſion of Siradia, ſituate in a mooriſh ſoyle; the place in former times of the Generall Diets, ſince removed to Warſaw. 6 Uladiſlaw on the Wixel or Viſtula, a Biſhops See. 7 Bedgoſt, a walled Town on the Bard, a navigable River, conveying the Merchandiſe of theſe parts into the Viſtula. 8 Kruſwick in Breſty, built of wood, ſtanding on a great Lake named Gopla in the Caſtle whereof Popielus the ſecond Duke of Poland, was after a ſtrange manner devoured with Rats, ſwarming out of the Lake. 9 Ploczko, upon the Viſtula, a walled Town, and a Biſhops See, with a Caſtle to it; and 10 Mlawa, bordering on the Dukedome of Pruſſia.

The LESSER Poland lying on the South of the Greater, and divided by the River Wixel, comprehendeth onely three diviſions, under the Government of the Palatines of Cracow, 2 Sendomir, and Lublin. Principall Cities of the which are 1 Cracow, upon the Wixel, (called in Latine Cracovia) a Biſhops See, the chief of all the kingdome, and the ſeat of the Prince, and the Sepulture of the former Kings. By Ptolemie called Carodunum; fortified with a double wall (of the old faſhion) a deep ditch, the Caſtle of Vanel ſituate on the top of an high rock; and beautified with an Univerſity, or generall ſtudy of good Arts and Sciences. The buildings are more faire then elſewhere in Poland, of free ſtone, and foure ſtories high, but for the moſt part covered with Shingles, or tiles of wood: in the midſt a large market-place of form quadrangular; and in the middle of that the Common-councell houſe, about which are many ſhops of Merchants. On one ſide of it ſtandeth the Cathedrall Church; and on the Eaſt-ſide of the City, the Palace Royall, high ſeated on an hill overlooking both the Town and Countrey, fair and well built, of form ſomewhat neere a Quadrangle; but lying open to the South without any buildings above the wall; affording thereby to the Gallery, being on the North ſide of the Caſtle the more excellent proſpect. 2 Lelow, a walled towne with a Caſtle, on the River Bialo. 3 Sendomir, a walled town with a Caſtle alſo, ſeated on a hill, under which the Viſtula or Wixel. 4 Wiſliczа, a walled town amongſt Mariſhes, encompaſſed with the River Nid. 5 Lublin, a walled town, but more ſtrongly fortified by the mariſhes and waters, with which environed: remarkable for three yearly Marts, drawing hither Merchants from moſt parts adjoining, as alſo Moſcovites, Armenians, Turkes, and Grecians: the Jews, inhabiting the greateſt part of the ſuburbs, have here their Synagogue; making the Town, eſpecially at time of thoſe Marts, a medley of all Nations and Religions. 6 Caſimir, on the Wixel, ſo named from the founder of it, a King of Poland.

The old Inhabitants of this countrey, were the Arii, Helverone, Elyſii, and the Nahervali, parts of the Suevi Lygii ſpoken of by Tacitus; all of them lying on the Dutch ſide of the Wixel, by conſequence, within the bounds of the antient Germanie: the people of all the reſt of the Provinces before deſcribed, being of the Sarmatian race, next neighbours to the Germans, and not much unlike them in perſons, cuſtomes, or conditions. But theſe diſperſed and ſcattered Nations of Sarmatia Europæa, being united in the common name of Sclaves, part of them ſetled in that part which we now call Poland, at that time reckoned and accompted of as a part of Germanie. The time of their firſt comming hither, and the manner of their government when firſt ſetled here, is not very well known. But for the firſt it is moſt certain, that it was ſome time, and that not long after the death of Mauritius the Eaſtern Emperour: and for the next it is as certain, that on the coming of Lechus, a Croatian, who fled his countrey for a murder, with his brother Zechius, they ſetled into a more conſtant form of Government, then before they did. For Lechus ſeeing his brothers good ſucceſſe in Bohemia, where the Sclaves received him for their Prince; paſſed into Poland, the next Province, and was as cheerfully received by the Sclaves thereof: who looked upon him as a Prince of their own extraction, and without quarrell or competition ſubmitted themſelves to his commands, anno 650. or thereabouts. Of this there is good conſtat amongſt our Authours. But neither the names or number of his ſucceſſours doe occur in ſtory, till the time of Crocus, the founder of Cracovia, the chief City of Poland, and the Legiſlator of this people. After this the ſucceſſion of their Princes and the ſucceſſe of their affairs, becomes more certain: the Eſtate hereof being much improved, by the conqueſt of many Sarmatian countreys, all which together conſtitute and make up the kingdome of Poland, ſo called from this predominating and prevailing Province. The ſumme of their affaires is this. The poſterity of Crocus failing in Popielus the ſecond, Piaſtus is elected Duke, the Princes from that time forwards, becoming Elective, but alwayes with reſpect to the next of bloud. In the time of Mieciſlaus ſon of Nemomyſtus they received the Goſpell, anno 963. Boleſlaus the ſon of Mieciſlaus, was the firſt who had the title of King conferred upon him by the Emperour Otho the third, about the yeare 1001. relinquiſhed by Uladiſlaus the firſt, and not reſumed againe till the time of Primiſlaus, Duke of Poſna, anno 1300. after which perpetuall. In the perſon of this Primiſlaus, Pomerella is united to the ſtate of Poland, anno 1295. in that of Jagello, or Uladiſlaus the fifth, the great Dukedome of Lituania incorporated into this body as a Member of it, in the time of Sigiſmund Auguſtus. By Uladiſlaus the ſixt, ſon of Jagello, Podolia and Ruſſia Nigra, are alſo added; by Sigiſmund the firſt Pruſſia, and Maſſovia; Podlaſſia by Sigiſmund Auguſtus, who alſo tooke Volhinia out of Lituania: by Stephen, the actuall poſſeſſion of the greateſt part of Livonia; by Sigiſmund the third a title to the Crown of Sweden. The Princes follow in this Order.

1574	41	Henry Duke of Anjou, son of Henry the second French King, chosen on the death of Sigismund mund Auguſtus, the onely Stranger to the bloud in all this Catalogue. On the death of his brother Charles the ninth, he departed ſecretly into France, where he ſucceeded by the name of Henry the third.

1579 42 Stephen Bathor Vaivod of Tranſylvania, having marryed Anne ſiſter of Sigiſmund the ſecond, is elected King; he united Livonia to the Crown, and had a great hand upon the Moſcovite.

1587 43 Sigiſmund III. ſon of John King of Swethland and Catharine his wife another of the ſiſters of Sigiſmund the ſecond King of Poland and Sweden. He valiantly oppoſed Oſman the Great Turke invading his Dominions with an Army 300000.

1633 44 Vladiſlaus VII. eldeſt ſon of Sigiſmund the third; after whoſe death the kingdom was extremely embroyled by factions, eſpecially by the mutinous and ſeditious Coſaques; not fully ſetled by the election of 1648 45 Caſimir V. Brother of Vladiſlaus the ſeventh now king of Poland, anno 1648.

The Government of this kingdome is nothing leſſe then Monarchicall. For though the firſt Dukes hereof were abſolute Princes, and ruled after a Deſpoticall manner; having power not onely of the eſtates of their ſubjects, but of life and death, without formalities of Law: yet when they once became elective, they loſt much of that power, which decayed ſo by little and little, that at the laſt the King is counted little better then a Royall ſhadow: Stat magni nominis umbra, in the Poets language. A diminution which began firſt in the times of Lewis of Hungarie, and Jagello of Lituania, who to gaine the ſucceſſion to the kingdome contrary to Law, the one for his daughter, the other for his ſonne, departed with many of their Royalties and Prerogatives to buy the voices of the Nobility. Since which time the Nobilitie in all their elections have ſo limited and reſtrained the Kings authority, and enlarged their own: that without their conſent in Counſell, he may neither make war nor treat of peace, nor impoſe taxes, nor alienate any of his Demeanes: nor do any thing of importance which concernes the Publick: in ſo much as Boterus a great Stateſman doth expreſſely ſay, that the Government of Poland doth rather ſeem an Ariſtocratie then a Monarchie, a Common-wealth rather then a Kingdome. Beſides the King not onely takes a ſolemn Oath at his Coronation to confirme all the rights and Priviledges, which have been granted to the Subject by his Predeceſſours: but addes this clauſe, quod ſi Sacramentum meum violavero, incolæ Regni nullam mihi obedientiam præſtare tenebuntur, that if he violate this Oath, his Subjects ſhall not be obliged to yeeld him any obedience. Which as Bodinus well obſerveth, doth rather ſavour of the condition of a Prince of the Senate, then of the Majeſtie of a King; reſpected accordingly by the great ones, who looke not on him as their King, but their elder Brother, (or perhaps not that) and reckon his Decrees but of three dayes laſting. Which notwithſtanding the King once choſen and inthroned, hath ſole power in many things, without conſulting with the Senate, as viz. in aſſembling Diets, chooſing the ſecular Counſellers, diſpoſing abſolutely of his Vaſſals, and the Revenues of the Crown to what uſe he pleaſeth; being ſole Judge of the Nobility in Criminall cauſes; which is a ſtrong bridle to raine them in with. By which, and either uniting himſelf unto the Clergy, or the well-forming of his party amongſt the Nobility, hee may doe many things not allowable in ſtrictneſſe of Law: the power and influence which he hath in the publick Government, being proportionable to the ſtrength of his wit and Brain.

And here it is to be obſerved, that none but the Clergie and Nobilitie have any ſuffrage in the election of the King: that is to ſay, the 26 Palatines, and 60 Chaſtellans, with the four Marſhals, and ſome others of the principall Officers of State, in behalfe of the Nobility; and the Archbiſhops and Biſhops in the name of the Clergie: but of the Commons none at all. Whith is the reaſon why there is ſo much care taken to preſerve the priviledges of the two firſt Orders; without obtaining any immunties for reliefe of the third: moſt miſerably oppreſſed on all ſides, rather as Bondmen then Tenants in reſpect of their Lords, and not ſo much ſubjects, as plain ſlaves in regard of the King: whereof ſomewhat hath before been noted. Nor are the common people excluded onely out of theſe elections, but have no place nor vote in the Counſell of State, or in any of the Generall Diets: the firſt conſiſting onely of the Prelates, Palatines, Chaſtellans, and principall Officers, ſpoken of before, the nominating of which pertaineth to the King alone, the other aggregated of all perſons of thoſe ſeverall Orders, and the Delegates of each Province and principall City ſent thither for the reſt of the Nobility, whom they repreſent. Yet notwithſtanding this excluſion of the Commons from this Common-Counſell, they there concludes of all matters of publick intereſſe, not properly determinable by the great Counſell or Counſell of State; in which perhaps (eſpecially in the caſe of taxes) the Commons may be more concerned then any other.

The Forces of this Kingdome or Common-wealth relate unto Land-ſervice onely. For though they have a large Sea coaſt upon the Baltick; yet the Danes, Swedes, and Hanſe-townes, having got the ſtart of them, keep them from doing much at Sea. And for Land-forces they conſiſt of Horſe eſpecially, whereof they are able to raiſe eightſcore thouſand, (that is to ſay, 100000 out of Poland, and 60 or 70000 out of Lituania: of which one halfe at leaſt are thought to be fit for action. And this ſeemes probable enough in regard of thoſe great bodies of Horſe, which Stephen and Sigiſmund the third had againſt the Moſcovite; whereof the one had 40000 and the other 30000 (beſides draught horſes, very well appointed. But for their Foot, they are not at ſo good a paſſe, their Infanterie being for the moſt part Germans or Hungarians; whom they hire for money; of which two Nations

King Stephen, in his enterprise upon Livonia, had no lesse then 16000 to convey his Ordinance. Upon confidence of this great number of Horse, and their readinesse to serve upon all occasions, the Polanders bear themselves so high, that they neither fear the power of a forein Enemie, nor regard the fortifying of their Towns, or the building of Fortresses on their Frontires: boasting that they are able to defend their countrey, without such helps, against any Nation whatsoever, and trusting more to a Castle of bones, (as was courageously said by Savage an English Gentleman) then to a Castle of stones. And for the raising of these Horse, the Gentlemen of the Countrey are bound by their tenure, (like the Turkes Timariots) not onely to serve in person for defence of the Realm, but to maintaine a certain number of Horse in continuall readinesse; especially in those parts which lie next the Tartar, where their numbers are exceeding great, and with whom many times they join to afflict and harasse their own countrey, though in pay against them. Of these some serve in the manner of our men of armes, some like unto our light horse, others like the Tartars. And these they call commonly by the name of Cosacques (or Adventurers): a race of men trained up to steal, wast and depopulate, wheresoever they come; having litte but their swords to live by; a murderous and wicked people, chiefly in their drunkennesse, and that not onely towards strangers, but their naturall Countreymen. The cause of that sedition which for some yeares past, hath more depopulated and distracted that flourishing kingdome, then all the Armies of the Turkes.

As for the Revenues of this king, they are computed at 600000 Crowns per annum, drawn chiefly out of Salt and some Mines of Silver: the profits arising from the Demeasnes of the Crown, being for the most part given away in pensions and gratuities, to the Palatines, Chastellans, and other great men of the Realm, to make them the more pliant to his desires. Most of which sum is put up yearly in his Coffers, or expended in the purchase of estates for his younger sons; his daughters being marryed at the publick charge, and the expenses of his household defrayed by the Lituanians and most part of Poland, for the time that he remains amongst them. Nor doe the wars at any time exhaust his Treasure, in which case by decree of the Diets he is inabled to lay impositions and taxes upon the people, levied in the way of Excise, or upon their lands, which doe amount to such a sum, that by means hereof king Stephen maintained war three yeares against the Moscovite, without expending any thing of his own Revenue.

Chief Orders of Knighthood in this kingdome, are

1 The Marian or Dutch Knights, instituted under the wals of Acon or Ptolemais in the Holy land; in a Church whereof dedicated to the blessed Virgin, their Order was first allowed; from thence called Equites Mariani. The institution was in the year 1190. The first great Master, Henry Walpot. The Christians being beaten out of Syria, they first removed to Venice, and from thence to Marpurg in Hassia, where and in some other parts of Germanie, they were endowed with fair Revenues, from which named Equites Teutonici, or the Dutch Knights sent into Prussia by the Emperour Frederick the second, anno 1239. or called, in as some say, by the Moscovite against the Prussians; they fixed their seat at Mariemberg, under Sigefride, the second Great Master, anno 1340. or thereabouts. In the time of Ludovicus the 18 Great Master they were forced to submit to Casimir the fourth of Poland, anno 1450. the occasion of the long war betwixt them and the Polanders, continuing all the time of Albert of Brandenbourg, the 24 and last Great Master in this Countrey, who surrendered his order (as before said) to Sigismund the first by whom he was created the first Duke of Prussia. Such of the Knights as disrelished this action, retired into Germanie, where they chose one Walter Croneberg master of the Order: the title afterwards conferred upon Maximilian one of the younger sons of Maxmilian the second; but the Order sensibly decaying, and all this time of little estimation in the world.

2 Of the Portylaine, or Sword-bearers (Ensiferi in Latine) confirmed by Pope Innocent the third, by whom sent into Livonia to defend the Preachers of the Gospell against the Infidels, at the first conversion of that countrey. Being too weak to effect that businesse, they united themselves with the Dutch Knights by the Popes authority; and in stead of Knights of the sword, were called Knights of the Crosse. Separated from it in the time of Univus their Great Master, anno 1541. the Dutch Knights being then dispossessed of Prussia, and these inclining wholly to the opinions of Luther, they a while subsisted of themselves; what became of them afterwards, and how the Order was extinguished, hath been shewen already in Livonia.

The Armes of this kingdome are quarterly, 1 Gules, an Eagle Argent, crowned and Armed, Or, for the Realm of Poland; and 2 Gules, a Chevalier armed Cap a pea, advancing his sword Argent, mounted on a barbed Courser of the second for the Dukedome of Lituania.

There are in the whole Realm of Poland.

OF

THE CARPATHIAN MOUNTAINS.

IN our way from Poland unto Hungarie (whither now we goe) wee muſt of neceſſity paſſe over the CARPATHIAN MOUNTAINS, the ancient boundarie of Sarmatia Europæa, from the reſt of Europe. A long and craggie ledge of hils, which beginning near the Citie of Presburg, and the borders of Auſtria, paſſe on in a continuall courſe till they come to the very Euxine Sea, and by that means not only divide Hungary from Poland ſpecially ſo called; but parting Tranſylvania and Moldavia two Dacian Regions, from Ruſſia Nigra, and Podolia, Provinces of the Polonian Kingdom. By Ptolemie in his ſecond Book, they are called Montes Sarmatici (Sarmaticæ Rupes by Solinus) becauſe diſterminating the Sarmatian Nations (who poſſeſſed the moſt part of it) from Germanie, and the more Southern parts of Europe: and in his third booke, by one name Carpates, or Mons Carpatus, ſo called (as ſome think from) the Greek word Καρπὸς, ſignifying Fruit, from the fruitfulneſſe of it, compared with other Mountaines in thoſe Northerne Countries. At the preſent known by divers names, according to the Provinces and people which it paſſeth by. By the Dutch generally called Wurtzgarten, (or a Garden of Herbs) which alludeth to the name of Carpatus: by the Hungars, Tarchzall. Betwixt Moravia and Hungaria where it is at the higheſt, it is called in the Sclavonian tongue, by the name of Tatri; in the German Schneberg: where it parteth Tranſylvania from Ruſſia Nigra, the Roſſes call it Bieſcid; and the Dutch men, Crapack. A chaine of hils of more length then fame: not much obſervable in ſtorie but for the ſhutting up the Hungari, Sclaves, and others of thoſe Northern Nations, which afterward invaded the Roman Provinces; nor of much notice at the preſent, but for giving an Originall to many of the principall Rivers, which water the Countries lying on both ſides of it. And therefore having nothing more to detain us here, we will paſſe them over, and deſcend into the Plains of Hungarie.

HUNGARIE is bounded on the East with Transylvania, and Walachia; on the West with Stiria, Austria, and Moravia; on the North with the Carpathian Mountains which divide it from Poland; and on the South with Sclavonia, and some part of Dacia. Extended in length from Presburg along the Danow, to the borders of Transylvania, for the space of 300 English miles, and 190 of the same miles in breadth. The reason of the name we shall have anon.

It lyeth in the Northern temperate Zone, betwixt the middle Parallels of the 7. and 9. Climates, so that the longest Summers day in the Southern parts, is but 15 houres and an half, and not above 16 houres in the parts most North: taking up all that tract of ground on the North side of Danubius possessed by the Iazyges Metanastæ, a Sarmatian people, and part also of Panonnia Superior, and Pannonia Inferior, both on the South of that River.

But being it passeth generally under the name of Pannonia, we are to know that the Romans having made themselves Masters of all Pannonia, divided it into four Provinces, part of the Diocese of Illyricum Occidentale: that is to say, Pannonia Superior, bordering on Noricum, and containing part of the Higher Austria, and the most Western parts of the present Hungarie, on the South side of the Danow. 2 Pannonia Inferior, containing the Eastern parts of Hungarie on the same side of the River. 3 Valeria, anciently part of Pannonia Superior, comprehending Stiria or Stiermark in the Archdukedome of Austria. And 4 Savia, so called of the River Savus, anciently part of Pannonia Inferior, now called Windesh-land, one of the Provinces or Subdivisions of Sclavonia. But the name of Pannonia falling with the Roman Empire, and this Countrie being fallen into the hands of other Masters, it took a new name from the Nations who possessed themselves of it, and was called Hungaria, quasi Hunni-Avaria, by a mixt name made of the Hunni and Avares, two Scythian Nations, who either successively or conjunctly were possessed thereof; or from the Hungari, another race of Scythians, mentioned by Jornandes in his Book De Rebus Geticis, drawn into this Countrie by the Emperour Arnulph to aid him in his war against Suantobogius King of the Moravians. This last I look on as most probable; the first as more probable then that of Aventine and others of our later Writers; who finding a poor Province in the most North-east point of the Russian Empire called Jugra; (and by them Jugaria) would have the name of Hungarie to be thence derived.

The people are strong of body, and rude of behaviour, respecting neither the liberall Arts, nor mechanick Trades. The greatest aspersion is the name of a coward, which cannot be wiped off without the killing of a Turk; after which they are priviledged to wear a feather, and by the number of their feathers to shew how many Turks they have slain in battell. They desire wars, and like no trade better, being naturally slothfull (like the Irish) and therefore best approve of that course of life, whereby they may rather live upon other mens labour, then take pains for their living. Extremely covetous; yet having rather desire then art to enrich themselves, permitting the Dutch to ingrosse all their trading, and manage such commodities as the Country yeeldeth: which is the cause (seconded by by the oppreſſions of the Turk and the Auſtrian Princes under whom they are) that none of them riſe to any conſiderable wealth. And for ſuch as have eſtates in land they grow every day more poor then others. For though the Females be excluded from inheriting their fathers poſſeſſions (to whom they give no portion but new Cloaths on the wedding day) yet being the ſons do equally inherit the Eſtate (as ſuch who hold in Gavelkinde do here in England) it muſt needs be that by ſo many diviſions and ſubdiviſions, the greateſt patrimonie that is, will be brought to nothing. Both Sexes in the way of their education are inured to hardneſſe, not ſuffered to lie in beds till the night of their marriage.

The Chriſtian faith was firſt planted here in the time of Stephen, ſurnamed the Saint, the firſt King of this Country, invited thereunto by the ſpeciall means and procurement of the Emperour Henry the 2. giving him upon that condition his ſiſter Giſla in marriage; and through the preaching and induſtrie of Albert Archbiſhop of Prague, anno 1016. or thereabouts. Since which time Chriſtianitie hath continued here without interruption, (defended gallantly and couragiouſly againſt the Turks) but broken into fractions and ſubdiviſions among themſelves, ſome pertinaciouſly adhering to the Church of Rome, ſome following the doctrine of Luther, others that of Calvin; and ſome, new fancies and opinions diſavowed by all the reſt: yet all theſe different parties doe agree in this to puniſh adulterie and fornication with no leſſe a puniſhment then death: the father forcing his daughter, the husband his wife, and the brother his ſiſters to the place of their Execution.

The language generally here ſpoken of is a kinde of Sclavonian, differing in dialect from the Poles: but in the parts adjoyning to Germanie, the Dutch is ſpoken; as the old Iazygian is betwixt Danubius and Tibiſcus, the ancient ſeat of the Iazyges Metanaſtæ.

The ſoil is wonderfull fruitfull, yeelding corn and fruits in great abundance; the graſſe in ſome places (as in the Iſle of Comara) exceeding the height of a man: which doth breed ſuch a number of cattle, that this Country alone, is thought to be able to feed all Europe with fleſh. They yearly ſend into Germany and Sclavonia, 80000 Oxen: they have Deere, Partridge, Pheaſant in ſuch ſuperfluitie that any man that will may kill them; which in other places is utterly prohibited, theſe creatures being reſerved as game for Gentlemen. For at that great inſurrection of the Boores in Germany (before the end of which, 50000 of them were ſlain in fight) their chief demands were, that they might chooſe their own Miniſters. 2 That they might pay no tythes but of corn. 3 That they might be free from the power of Magiſtrates. 4 That wood, timber, and fewell might be common. 5 And eſpecially, That they might hunt and hauk in all times and places. The other commodities of the Countrie are Gold, Silver, (whereof they have ſome very rich veins; as alſo of Tin, Lead, Iron,) good ſtore of Fiſh, Copper, Wine, this laſt as good as that of Candie.

The worthieſt Scholar that ever this Kingdome produced, was S. Hierome, a worthy Father of the Latine Church. born in Stridon. The moſt worthy of all their Souldiers, were Johannes Huniades, who ſo valiantly reſiſted the incurſions of the Turks, and ſlew of them 50000 at the battle at Maxon. And 2. Matthias Corvinus, his ſonne, afterward King of Hungary, of whom thus Adrian out of a Poet:

——Patriæ decus, unica ſtirpis
Gloria, Pannonicæ cædis fortiſſimus ultor.

His Countries pride, the glory of his race,
Revenger of th' Hungarians late diſgrace.

The principall Rivers are 1 Danubius, ſpoken of before, when we were in Germanie. 2 Savus; which riſing in Carniola; 3 Dravus, which riſing in Carinthia; and 4 Tibiſcus, which riſing in the Carpathian Mountains, pay their tribute to Danubius: of which Tibiſcus the Hungarians uſe to ſay, that two parts are water and the third fiſh. Beſides which and ſome others of inferiour note, there is the famous Lake called Balaton (by the Dutch Platſe) 40 Italian miles in length, but of breadth unequall: in ſome places being ten miles broad, and in ſome but three. There be alſo many medicinall waters, and more hot Baths then any one Country hath in Europe: ſome waters alſo of a ſtrange Nature; whereof ſome falling on the ground is turned to ſtone; others (about the Town of Smolnice) which falling into Ditches make a kinde of mud, out of which tried and melted they make very good Copper; and ſome again which flow in winter, and freeze in Summer; and near unto Biſtrice or Menſol, a ſpring or fountain out of which cometh a green water, whereof they make Solder for their Gold.

Principall Mountains of this Countrie are 1 Carpatus, the Sarmatian or Carpathian Mountains ſpoken of before. 2 Matzan, near the Citie Agria, covered with rich vines. 3 Erdol, omnium ampliſſimus, the largeſt of the three, ſaith the Atlas minor. Which words if true, muſt needs be underſtood of the height of this Mountain, but neither of the length or breadth; in both which without queſtion it comes ſhort of Carpatus.

The Country is commonly divided into the Upper Hungarie, and the Lower; the Upper lying on the North of the River Danow, out of the bounds and territories of the Roman Empire: the Lower lying on the South of that River, and comprehending all Pannonia Inferior, and part of Superior, two Roman Provinces. The Upper again ſubdivided (before the coming in of the Turks) into 32 Counties or Juridicall reſorts, that is to ſay, 24 on the Weſt ſide of Tibiſcus (or the Tiſſe) and 8 on the Eaſt ſide of it: the Lower (at the ſame time) into 18 onely: of which 10 were betwixt the Danow and the River Dravus: and the other ſix betwixt the Danow and the Savus. But this Diviſion and the Subdiviſions depending on it, being ſince the coming in of the Turkes almoſt out of uſe; we will now look upon it as it ſtand divided at the preſent betwixt the Emperour as King of Hungarie, by a mixt title of deſcent and election; and the Great Turk as Lord of the moſt part of it by Arms and conqueſt, two parts of three at leaſt being forced into his poſſeſſion.

Chief places in the Emperours part, are 1 Sabaria, antiently the Metropolis of Pannonia Superior; the birth-place of St. Martin Biſhop of Tours; now of leſſe accompt; by the Hungarians called Kimarorubath. Others conceive it to be that which the Dutch call Leibnits. 2 Stridon, the Sidron of Ptolemie, in the confines of Hungary and Dalmatia, by the common people called Strigman. A town of good repute till deſtroyed by the Gothes, but after made of more eſteem by the birth of St. Hierom, one of the foure chief Fathers of the Latine Church; and for all parts of humane learning, nothing inferiour to the beſt of the Grecian Sages. 3 Agria, a Biſhops See; 4 Nitri, a Biſhops See alſo on the River Boch; 5 Sopran (Sopronium in Latine) on the borders of Auſtria. 6 Komara, a ſtrong peece in an Iſland of the ſame name, made by the Circling of the Danow: oft-times attempted by the Turk, but in vaine at all times. 7 Presburg, on the edge of Auſtria alſo, but on the North ſide of the river, the Carnuntum of Antoninus: but by the moderne Latines called Poſonium: ſeated in a pleaſant healthfull countrey on the River Lyet, whoſe waters the Danow there receiveth, in the ſuburbs whereof on the top of an high Mountaine ſtandeth a goodly Caſtle, the ordinary reſidence of the Emperours as Kings of Hungary. For though it be a little City, and not very beautifull, yet being ſafe by the neighbourhood of Auſtria, it hath been made the Metropolis of this kingdome, ſince the loſſe of Buda. Before the wals hereof dyed Count Dampierri, one of the chief Commanders of Ferdinand the ſecond, in the wars of Hungary and Bohemia. 8 Gran, by the Latines called Strigonium, took by the Turks, anno 1534. and loſt again, anno 1595. at what time Sir Thomas Arundell of Wardour Caſtle in Wiltſhire, carryed himſelfe ſo gallantly by forcing the Water-tower, and taking thence with his owne hands the Turkiſh Banner, that the Emperour Rodulphus created him a Count of the Empire, and King James afterwards made him Lord Arundell of Wardour. It is ſeated on the Danow, but oppoſite to the mouth of the Gran, which ariſing in the Upper Hungary doth there end its courſes, hence the name of Gran: honoured alſo, of long time, with the See of an Archbiſhop, who is the Primate of the kingdome. 9 Kab, on the meeting of the Danow with the River Kab, coming out of the Lower Hungary, whence the modern Dutch name; by Antonine called Arabon, by the French Jovarine, by our preſent Latiniſts Jaurinum. Memorable heretofore for being the boundarie of the two Pannonia's, Inferior, and Superior, hereabouts divided: of late moſt principally for a ſtrong fortreſſe againſt the Turkes, by whom once taken anno 1594. but not long after againe recovered by the induſtrie of Monſieur de Vandre-Court a French Gentleman. 10. Newſol, or Newhenſel, a ſtrong town in the higher Hungary, not far from the ſpring head of the River Gran, which in the year 1621. proved fatall to that great Commander the Count of Bucquoy, who at the ſiege hereof (the Towne being then in rebellion againſt Ferdinand the ſecond Emperour and King of Hungary) loſt his life. For going privately to view ſome places of advantage for a generall aſſault, hee fell into an Ambuſh of Hungarians, who ſuddenly ſet upon him, diſcomfitted his ſmall party, killed firſt his horſe under him, and at laſt himſelfe, having in that skirmiſh received ſixteen wounds. Slain with him at the ſame time alſo Torquato an Italian Prince, Count Verdugo a Spaniſh Earl, and one of the Gouragas of the houſe of Mantua. 11 Altenbourg, 12 Tockay, both of them very ſtrong by nature, as 13 Caſtell-Novo is by the helps of Art.

Places of moſt importance in the Turkes poſſeſſion, are 1 Buda, by the Dutch called Hoffen, ſuppoſed by ſome to be the Curta of Ptolemie, by others the Abrincum of Antoninus; and to have tooke the name of Buda, either from Buda the brother of Attila, ſaid to be the refounder of it; or from the Budini a Scythian people mentioned in Herodotus. Unevenly ſeated amongſt hils, on the ſouthern ſhore of the Danow, but in the moſt fruitfull part of all the Countrey; exceedingly well fortified, adorned with many buildings, both private and publick; and furniſhed with ſome medicinall Bathes, which owe much of their pomp and ſumptuouſneſſe to their new Maſters the Turkes, who tooke it from the Chriſtians Auguſt 20. anno 1526. Solyman the Magnificent then preſent at the taking of it. Before that time the Seat Royall of the Kings of Hungary, and the chief City of the Kingdome; as now the ſeat of the chief Baſſa or Lord Lievtenant for the Grand Signeur. 2 Alba Regalis, by the Dutch called Stul-Weiſenburg, betwixt the Danow and the Dravus, ſtrongly but unwholeſomely ſeated in the midſt of an inacceſſible mariſh joined to the firm land by three broad Cauſeys blocked up at the ends with three great Bulwarkes; but for all the ſtrong ſituation of it taken by the Turkes, an. 1543. before that time, the uſuall place both for the Coronation and interment of the Kings of Hungary. 3 Volve, on the Danow, taken in the ſame year alſo. 4 Fiefe-kirken, in Latine called Quinque Eccleſiæ, from five Churches in it; a Biſhops See, conceived to be the Tentiburgium of Antoninus; tooke by the Turkes, anno 1566. and giving them a great command on the River Dravus, upon which it is ſeated. 5 Sirmiſch, betwixt the Danow and the Saw, or Savus, now noted for a vein of the beſt wines, but otherwiſe of no eſtimation at the preſent, though heretofore of moſt accompt in all this Province, the Metropolis (as I conceive) of Pannonia inferior; the ſeat of the Præfectus Prætorio Illyrici, before the diviſion of the Empire, honoured with the perſonall reſidence of many of the Emperours, and made in thoſe reſpects, the Stage of many great and memorable actions. For here Vetranio, or Bretanio as others call him, tooke on himſelfe the Purple Robe, and was declared Emperour perour by the Illyrian ſouldiers, lying here in Garriſon; here being deſerted by his own ſouldiers, he ſubmitted himſelfe unto Conſtantius the ſon of Conſtantine the Great; here Gratian the Emperour ſonne of Valentinian the firſt was born: and finally here was held a Councell againſt Photinus, Biſhop of this City, who held that CHRIST had no exiſtence of God the Father, till he was conceived and born of the Virgin; which Tenent being contrary as well to that of the Arian as the Orthodox Prelates, was here condemned by both parties in the time of the ſaid Conſtantius (who was there in perſon) an. 356. 6 Zigoth, a ſtrong towne, ſituate in a mariſh ground on the North ſide of the Dra, taken by Solyman the Magnificent, anno 1566. who there ended his dayes, 7 Kereſture, nigh unto which anno 1596. Mahomet the third gave the Chriſtians ſo great an overthrow, that if hee had purſued his victory, it is thought that hee had finiſhed the conqueſt of Hungarie. 8 Murſa, upon the confluence of the Dra and the Danow, as remarkable in the ſtories of elder times; as 9 Belgrade on the confluence of the Saw and the Danow, hath been in the later. This laſt a town of divers names, firſt called Taurunum, or Taurunum, after Alba Græca, by the Dutch accordingly Greichs Weſſenburg, by the French and modern Latiniſts, Belgrade and Belgradum, from the beautifull ſituation of it, hemmed in upon the North with the Danow, on the Eaſt with the Saw; on the other ſides defended with ſtrong wals, deep ditches, and impregnable Ramparts; belonging antiently to the Deſpots of Servia, by whom conſigned over to Sigiſmund King of Hungary, as beſt able to keep it, the Deſpots being ſatisfied with lands and territories of a better value. The Bulwark heretofore of Chriſtendome againſt the Turkes, who received before it many great and notable repulſes, (of which the moſt memorable were thoſe of Amurath the ſecond and Mahomet ſurnamed the Great) taken at laſt to the great loſſe and ſhame of the Chriſtian world, not ſuccouring the defendants in convenient time, by Solyman the Magnificent, anno 1520. Then on the North ſide of the River in the upper Hungary, there is 10 Peſth, over againſt Buda, on the River Danow. 11 Vaccia, on the ſame River, a Biſhops See. 12 Colocza, an Archbiſhops See, on the ſame River alſo. 13 Zegedin, on the Weſt ſide of the River Tibiſcus. 14 Temeſwar, on the Eaſt of that River towards Tranſilvania, the ordinary reſidence of a Turkiſh Baſſa. 15 Gyula, a ſtrong Town on the borders of Tranſilvania, betrayed by Nicolas Keresken Governour hereof in the laſt yeare of Solyman, on promiſe of ſome great reward. But Selimus the ſon of Solyman cauſed him to be put into a barrell ſtuck full of nailes, with the points turned inwards, and ſo to be tumbled up and down till hee (moſt miſerably) dyed: there being on the barrell this inſcription written; viz. Here receive the reward of thy Avarice and treaſon, Gyula thou ſoldeſt for gold; if thou be not faithfull to Maximilian thy naturall Lord, neither wilt thou be true to me. 16 Singidon, on the South of Gyula, betwixt which and Belgrade are the fields of Maron, memorable for the ſlaughter of 50000 Turkes ſlaine here in battell, under the fortunate conduct of John Huniades.

The firſt Inhabitants of this countrey on the North ſide of the Danow, and the Weſt of the Tiſſe, or Tibiſcus, were the Iazyges Metanaſtæ; and on the Eaſt ſide of the Tiſe, the Daci; known, but not conquered by the Romans: on the South of the Danow the Pannones (by ſome called the Pæones) ſubdivided into the Azuli, Latovici, Werciani, Jaſſii, Oſeriates, and ſome others inhabiting the Weſt parts thereof, or Pannonia Superior; and the Ercuneales, Breuci, Araziſci, and Scordiſci dwelling in the Eaſtern parts, or Pannonia Inferior. Firſt conquered by the Romans: anno V.C. 719. L. Corniſicius, and Sext. Pompeius, being Conſuls; but many times rebelling and not fully ſubdued, till 40 yeares after, the inſurrection of Bato being then cruſhed by Auguſtus Cæſar, and there by the whole Province ſetled in obedience: divided firſt into two parts or Provinces, Superior and Inferior; out of which Savia and Valeria were after taken, as before is noted. Under the Romans it continued till ſubdued by the Hunnes, a people not heard of in the time of the Roman greatneſſe, unleſſe we take them as ſome doe for the Chuni of Ptolemie. But being thoſe Chuni are placed by him betwixt the Baſtarnæ and the Roxolani, on the Southweſt of Boryſthenes, I ſee not how to fit that dwelling unto the Huns: who were ſhut up within the Fenns of Palus Mæotis: and by all the writers of thoſe times accompted for a Nation not ſo much as heard of when they firſt ſet footing into Europe. Letting that paſſe therefore as an improbable and ill-grounded conjecture, certain it is that from the Fenn-Countreys of Aſia on the other ſide of the Tanais, they came firſt into Europe: living in their owne countrey a poore and miſerable life, till God thought fit to make uſe of them as a ſcourge to chaſtiſe the Chriſtians of the Weſt, then grown luxurious and almoſt incorrigible by too much felicity; and to that end miraculouſly opened them a paſſage, never found before. For having neither minde nor meaning to invade the Roman Empire, which poſſibly they had not heard of; nor knowing how to clear themſelves of that uncomfortable countrey in which they dwelt: it pleaſed the great diſpoſer of all things, by following an Hart or Stagge which they had in chaſe to ſhew them a ſafe paſſage into Europe, through the Fenns of Mæotis; which before they thought to be unpaſſable. The report made by thoſe Hunters at their coming back of the rich and pleaſant land which they had ſo fortunately diſcovered, invited the chief heads of their Clans, with all the ſeverall Raſcalities depending on them, to flock into Europe: into which they fell ſo ſuddenly and unexpectedly, that they forced the Gothes, then dwelling on the North ſide of the Iſter, to flie over that River, and ſupplicate to the Emperour Valens for new habitations. This hapened in the year 373. Athanaricus the ſecond, or Ermanaricus (as Jornandes calls him) being then King of the Gothes, and Balamir Captain of Huns. Fleſhed with this victory Balamir or Balhember (as Sigibert cals him) takes the name of King, anno 386. or thereabouts: and following the courſe of the Iſter towards this Pannonia, which he had an aim at; found a great Armie raiſed on the other ſide of the River, of purpoſe to encounter with him: commanded by Detricus Generall for the Roman Empire, and Macrinus (or Matrinus) commander in chief of the Pannonians. Both Generals, preſuming too much on the depth and wideneſſe of the River, and knowing well that the Hunns had neither boat nor ſhip to paſſe them over, betooke themſelves unto their reſt, with too much ſecurity. But the Hunns to the number of 100000 having croſſed the River upon bladders, fell on the Quarters of the Romans, whom they ſlew like ſheep. Macrinus after this fought two battels with them, in the firſt whereof he was victorious, there being loſt on both ſides about 30000 men, but in the ſecond being ſlaine, and his Army routed, the Hunnes poſſeſſed themſelves of both Pannonias; buying this victory with the loſſe of 40000 men, in the year 401. Balamir being dead, Bleda and Attila his ſonnes ſucceeded, anno 436. and Bleda dying alſo in the yeare 450. left Attila ſole king of the Hunnes, that great ſcourge of the Chriſtian world: who having firſt waſted Illyricum and Thrace, compelled the Emperour Theodoſius the ſecond, to buy his peace of him at the price of 6000 pound weight of gold, and an yeerly tribute. Invited afterwards by Genſericus king of the Vandals in Afric to war upon the Gothes of Spain, (out of which Countrey they had driven him) he forced his way through all the Nations betwixt him and Gaul; and beating down all the Towns and Fortreſſes on the River Rhene that ſide of the Roman Empire, entered that Province in the reign of the third Valentinian: divided at that time betwixt the Romans, French, Burgundians, and the Gothes of Spain, diſcomfited by Aetius, and the kings of thoſe Nations then in league againſt him, in that famous battell nere Tholouſe ſpoken of before (with the loſſe of 180000 of his men) he went back by the way of Italy, where hee ſacked Aquileia, Millaine, Vincentia, Pavie; and not without much difficulty was diverted from the ſpoil of Rome, by the interceſſion of Pope Leo: committing in all places ſuch unſpeakable cruelties, that he was alwayes after called (as he ſtyled himſelfe) Malleus orbis & Flagellum dei. Returning home he picked a quarrell with Marcianus the Eaſtern Emperour, as if the tribute promiſed him by Theodoſius had not been well paid. But being pacified for the preſent, and mindefull of his former project upon the Gothes, he reſolved once againe to try his fortune with that people, and was againe defeated by them under the conduct of Thoriſmund, the third King of the Viſigothes, or Gothes of Spain, and ſo returned ingloriouſly to his countrey, Choaked after with his own bloud, violently breaking out at his noſethrils, on his wedding night; he left Pannonia to his ſons named Hernac, Aladurius, and Chaba: who diſagreeing amongſt themſelves about the kingdome, gave an advantage to the Gothes, then poſſeſſed of Dacia; to make themſelves maſters of this alſo, ſcarce thorough warm in their new eſtates, when ſent by Zeno the Emperour into Italy againſt Odoacer where they finally ſetled. After this time we hear no more of the Gothes in Pannonia; or any where of the Hunnes at all, unleſſe acting under the Avares, or joining with them in the name of Hunn-Avaria, as ſome think they did.

The Countrey being thus left to the next Invader, was preſently poſſeſſed by the Longobards, ſaid to be originally of Scandia, and there called Winnili, (and of the Winniloth in Scandia, Jornandes ſpeaketh) afterwards ob longas barbas, Longobardi. But concerning this laſt name, take along with you this old wives tale recited, but not approved of by Paulus Diaconus. The Vandals warring upon the Winnili, went unto Goddan (he ſhould rather have ſaid Woden) to ſue for the victory: which the Winnili hearing, wrought by countermine; and ſent Gambata the mother of their King Aiou, on the like buſineſſe to Frea Goddans wife. So it was, that Goddan had promiſed the Vandals, that they ſhould be victorious, whom he ſaw firſt in the morning: whereupon Frea willing to pleaſe Gambata, and not loving, as it ſeemeth, the ſight of men, gave order, that all the women of the Winnili, parting their hair, bringing one halfe over one cheek, the other over the other, and tying both under their chin, ſhould appear betimes before the window the next morning. This they did, and ſhe ſhewing them to her husband, he demanded of her, Qui ſunt iſti Longobardi? Hence the occaſion of the name. And like enough they might be called ſo from the length of their beards; though otherwiſe the whole tale be vain and fooliſh. Compelled by ſcarcity of victuals to ſeek new habitations, they ſeiſed firſt on the Iſland Rugia, and the adjacent Countries; ſetled about the time of Cornelius Tacitus in thoſe parts of Germany, which now make up the Biſhopricks of Meydburg and Halberſtat. Afterwards finding that countrey too narrow for them, they left their dwellings there, and fel next upon ſome parts of Poland; next on this Pannonia: and at laſt having tarryed in Pannonia 42 years or thereabouts, at the ſolicitation of Narſes (provoked by many indignities from the Empreſſe Sophia the wife of Juſtinus the ſecond) anno 568. under the leading of their King Alboinus, they went into Italy, and there fixt their kingdom, at the end of 200 yeares overthrown by the power of Charles the Great, the moſt mighty Monarch of the Weſt. Of their kings before their coming into this countrey, I ſhall only make mention of Lamiſſus, their third king, and of him this ſtory. Agilmund the ſecond King of the Lombards, one morning went a hunting. As he was riding by a fiſh-pond, he ſpyed ſeven children ſprawling for life, which one, as ſaith Paulus Diaconus, (it may be many harlots) had been delivered of, and moſt barbarouſly thrown into the water. The King amazed at this ſpectacle, put his bore-ſpeare or hunting-pole among them. One of the children hand-faſted the ſpear, and the King ſoftly drawing back his hand, wafted the child to the ſhore. This boy he named Lamiſſus, from Lama, which in their language ſignifieth a fiſh-pond. He was in the Kings Court carefully brought up, where there appeared in him ſuch tokens of vertue and courage, that after the death of Agilmond, he was by the Lombards choſen to ſucceed him. This Lamiſſus together with his predeceſſours, and ſucceſſours, we finde thus recorded.

469	5	Hildehoc, 4	518	10	Valcharius, 7	543	12	Alboinus, who in the year 568. by the ſolicitation of Narſes went into Italy, and erected there the Longobardian Kingdome; which 206 years after was deſtroyed by the puiſſance of Charles the Great.

The Hiſtory of this people is epitomized by Du Bartas thus:

The Lombard ſtrong who was in Scowland nurſt,
On Rugeland and Livonia ſeiſed firſt.
Then having well reveng'd on the Bulgarian
The death of Agilmond; the bold Barbarian
Surpriſed Poland: thence anon he preſſes
In Danows ſtreams to rinſe his amber treſſes.
When he ſtraight after had ſurrendred
The double-named Iſters flowry bed,
To ſcarre-fac'd Hunnes: he hunteth furiouſly
The reſt of Gaules from wealthy Inſubrie.
There reigns 200 years, triumphing ſo,
That Royall Teſin might compare with Po:
Which after fell in Frenchmens hands again,
Wonne by the ſword of worthy Charlemain.

The Longobards having thus left the Stage the Avares entred. Some ſay the Avarini of Ptolemie, a Sarmatian people, but moſt probably, (as Nicetas) a people of Scythia, inhabiting about Palus Mæotis. They firſt began to ſtirre in the reign of Tiberius the 2. (driven by the Turks their next neighbours to paſſe further Weſtwards) and gave that Emperours forces a great overthrow at the mouth of Danubius. Tiberius notwithſtanding did ſomewhat quiet them: but he being dead they took heart again, and with great courage warred upon Mauritius, his next ſucceſſour. Their King at that time called Caganus, we may Engliſh it Cham; as not being the proper name of any one, but the common Attribute of all their Chiefs. This Caganus made his firſt wars upon the Turks, which people were about that time firſt made known to the Inhabitants of Europe; and with the help of the remainder of the Hunnes, invaded and poſſeſſed Pannonia, vanquiſhing both the Emperours Forces and the Gothes and Gepidæ, who had ſtill kept ſome footing in it, and on the departure of the Lombards were of no ſmall power; the name of Gothes being ſwallowed up in that of the Gepidæ, though not quite extinct. After this blow, Mauritius raiſed a ſecond war, but more with an intent to revenge himſelf on his own ſouldiers, which had formerly offended him, then with hope of prevailing againſt the enemy; Comentiolus, according to the Emperours directions, betrayeth his Army, 12000 of them were ſlain, and the reſt taken. Caganus an heroick and mercifull Conquerour, offers to ranſome them for 8*s*. 6*d*. a peece, (for ſo much was that nummus, or νόμισμα which he demanded for them.) When the Emperour, as much loving his gold as hating his Souldiers, had denyed that condition, he offered them all for one nummus, and after for half a one; but being alſo here unſatisfied, he put them all to the ſword. For this cauſe the reſt of his Souldiers not long after made Phocas one of the Centurions Emperour; and he moſt barbarouſly ſtewed the Emperour in his own broath, putting him, his wife, friends, and children to the ſword. After this we find mention of them in the time of Phocas and Heraclius, forraging Thrace to the very walls of Conſtantinople; afterwards ſetled in Pannonia, and part of Noricum, containing now the Upper Hungarie, and ſome part of Auſtria, divided from the Boiarians by the River Ems. Poſſeſſed hereof till the time of Charls the Great, by whom after a war of eight years, they were utterly ſubdued and driven out of theſe parts, their Countrie being peopled with new Dutch Colonies, the remainders of them forced to betake themſelves into Tranſylvania, or that part of Hungarie which lyeth beyond the river Tibiſcus, where ſubject for a time to Suantobogius King of the Moraviants, in whoſe overthrow by the Hungarians they were ſo broken, that their name was never after heard of.

And ſo we come to the Hungarians, the laſt and principall Actors on the Stage of this Kingdome, the givers of the preſent name: before whoſe coming into this Countrie, it had no other name then that of Pannonia, for ought I can finde, in any Authors of thoſe times. A Scythian people, as the Huns, and Avares were, by Jornandes called the Hungari; firſt known in Europe by their acts in the time of the Emperour Arnulphus, when wandring in Sarmatia Europæa without any certain abode, they were by

by him called into this Countrie againſt Suantobogius King of the Moravians before mentioned, from whom they took Tranſylvania, and ſo much of the modern Hungarie as lyeth on both ſides of Tibiſcus, inhabited at that time by the Sclaves, and ſome ſcattered remnants of the Avares, whom they killed up or forced to ſeek new habitations, planting themſelves in thoſe places which they took from them; now the Upper Hungarie. In the right of Lewis the 4. ſucceſſour to Arnulphus, they paſſed over the Danow and ſubdued Pannonia, diſmembring it from the Empire and name of Germanie: after that ranging with unmercifull cruelty over all Germanie, Italie, Greece, Sclavonia, Dacia: ſtill broken by the forces of the Dutch Emperours, and mollified by the ſoftneſſe of the Chriſtian Religion, they became more quiet. Their Government at the firſt was under Dukes; Stephen the 4. Duke on his receiving of the Goſpell, being honoured with the title of King; enjoyed by his ſucceſſours to this very day. In the time of Ladiſlaus ſurnamed the Saint, Dalmatia and Croatia were added to the Crown of Hungarie, bequeathed to him by his ſiſter Zelomira, the widow of the laſt King. In that of Bela the 4. the Tartarians to the number of 500000 fighting men brake into this Country, and like a violent whirlwinde carryed all before them; anno 1248. tyrannizing here for 3 years ſpace, committing mercileſſe maſſacres, and making horrible ſpoils whereſoever they came. In that of Stephen the 4. Myſia, and Bulgaria were made tributarie. By the daughters of Bela and Stephen, both the 4. of thoſe names, the houſes of Naples and Bohemia came to claim the Kingdome of Hungarie; as Lewis the 1. by Elizabeth his mother, ſiſter of Caſimir the 2. did the Kingdome of Poland. The reſt of their affairs ſhall be briefly touched at in the following Catalogue of

The DUKES and KINGS of HUNGARIE.

A.Ch.
	1	Cuſala, the firſt Duke (or Captain) of the Hungari, ſubdued Tranſylvania, and the Upper Hungarie, and paſſed over the Danow, ſlain in his wars againſt the Dutch then poſſeſſed of Pannonia.
	2	Toxus, ſubdued Pannonia, or the Lower Hungarie.
	3	Geiſa, ſon of Toxus.
1000	4	Stephen the fourth Duke and firſt King of Hungarie.
1039	5	Peter, ſurnamed the Alman, nephew of Stephen, depoſed by Andrew and Bela, ſons of Ladiſlaus ſon of Geiſa the 1. and brother of Stephen the firſt King.
1047	6	Andrew eldeſt ſon of that Ladiſlaus.
1059	7	Bela, the brother of Andrew.
1062	8	Solomon, the ſon of Andrew, expelled his Kingdome by
1075	9	Geiſa II. ſon of Bela.
1078	10	Ladiſlaus, ſurnamed the Saint, brother of Geiſa the 2.
1096	11	Coloman, ſon of Geiſa the 2.
1114	12	Stephen II. ſon of Coloman.
1132	13	Bela II. nephew of Geiſa the 2. by his ſon Almus.
1142	14	Geiſa III. ſon of Bela the 2.
1162	15	Stephen III. ſon of Geiſa the 3.
1172	16	Bela III. brother of Stephen the 3.
1191	17	Emericus ſon of Bela the 3.
1201	18	Ladiſlaus II. ſon of Emericus, reigned but 6 months, being ſlain by treaſon, very young, and without iſſue.
1201	19	Andrew II. ſon of Bela the 3. and brother of Emericus.
1236	20	Bela IV. ſon of Andrew the 2.
1271	21	Stephen IV. ſon of Bela the 4.
1273	22	Ladiſlaus III. ſon of Stephen the 4.
1290	23	Andrew III. nephew to Bela the 4. by his brother Stephen.
1302	24	Charles, ſurnamed Martel, ſon of Charles King of Naples by Marie daughter to Stephen the 4. againſt whom was choſen Wenceſlaus King of Bohemia, ſon of King Wenceſlaus the 2. and Anne his wife, daughter of Bela the 4. and after three years Otho of Bavaria, deſcended from Elizabeth, another of the daughters of Bela the 4. choſen alſo by a faction againſt Wenceſlaus: but Wenceſlaus ſurrendring his claim to Otho, and Otho not long after forced to renounce his title; Charles Martell remained King of the whole.
1343	25	Ludovicus, nephew to Charles Martell by his ſon Carlcobert, ſucceeded King of Poland alſo, in right of Elizabeth his mother, ſiſter of Caſimir the 2.
1383	26	Charls II. King of Naples, deſcended from Charles of Naples, and Marie daughter of Stephen the 4. before mentioned; by their ſon John of Durazzo, one of the younger brothers of Charles Martell, poiſoned after a ſhort reign by the Widow of the former King to make way for her daughter to the Crown.
1387	27	Sigiſmund Emperour, King of Bohemia and Duke of Luxembourg; in right of Marie his wife, eldeſt eldeſt daughter of Lewis or Ludovicus, her younger ſiſter Eduigis being Queen of Poland.

1438 28 Albert of Auſtria, Emperour and King of Hungarie, and Bohemia, in right of Elizabeth his wife the daughter of Sigiſmund.

1440 29 Ladiſlaus, or Vladiſlaus ſon of Jagello King of Poland in the minoritie of Ladiſlaus the ſon of Albert, choſen King of Hungarie, unfortunately ſlain at the battle of Varna, with 30000 of his people: and perhaps his perjury might deſerve it. For having made and ſworne a truce with the Turke; the Popes Legate upon a ſeeming advantage, abſolved him of his oath, and drew him into the field. At the beginning the Chriſtians had the better. But at the laſt Amurath the 2. againſt whom they fought, lifting up his eyes to heaven, and deſiring Chriſt to look upon the perfidious dealing wherewith his followers had diſhonoured him: re-encouraged his men, and ſo got the victorie.

1444 30 Ladiſlaus V. King of Bohemia, the ſon of Albert by Elizabeth, daughter of Sigiſmund and Mary.

1458 31 Matthias Corvinus, ſon of the famous Huniades, after the death of Ladiſlaus the 5. choſen King of Hungarie.

1491 32 Vladiſlaus II. or Ladiſlaus VI. ſon of Caſimir the 4. of Poland, and of Elizabeth the daughter of Albert, ſucceeded in the Kingdoms of Hungarie and Bohemia, his 3 younger brothers ſucceſſively in that of Poland.

1517 33 Ludovicus II. King of Hungarie and Bohemia, both born and dead before the ordinary courſe of nature: in the 21 year of his age, and the 10. of his reign, unfortunately drawn into the field to encounter Solyman the Magnificent, one of the hardieſt Captains in his time. The battle was fought at a Village called Mogachz or Mugace, juſt betwixt Belgrade and Buda: in which 19000 of the Hungarians were ſlain, and the young King drowned in the flight. A moſt lamentable diſcomfiture. Lewis thus dead, John Sepuſio Vaivod, or Governour of Tranſylvania, was by the States choſen King of of Hungarie. But Ferdinand Archduke of Auſtria, and brother unto Charles the 5. challenged the Kingdome in right of Anne his wife, daughter and ſiſter to Vladiſlaus and Lewis King of Hungarie and Bohemia. On this pretence he invaded the Kingdom, and drove out John his competitour, who to recover his right, called Solyman the Magnificent into the Country, who took ſo faſt footing in it, that his ſucceſſours could never ſince be removed.

1527 34 John de Sepuſio, Vaivod of Tranſylvania, choſen King upon the death of Ludovicus II. outed by Ferdinand of Auſtria, reſtored by Solyman the great Turk, died anno 1540.

1540 35 Ferdinand of Auſtria, elected King of Bohemia in reſpect to the Lady Anne his wife, ſiſter of Ludovicus the 2. anno 1527. did in the ſame right lay claim to the Crown of Hungarie; choſen to which by a partie prepared for him: he was alwayes in contention with John de Sepuſio; each of them acknowledged King by their ſeverall factions: but by both ſides received on the death of John.

1608 38 Matthias, brother of Rodolphus, afterwards Emperour.

1618 39 Ferdinand II. of Gratz, next heir unto Matthias of the houſe of Auſtria, afterwards Emperour &c. againſt whom a partie of Hungarians called in Bethlem Gabor, Prince of Tranſylvania, whom they elected for their King, intending (as they ſaid) to crown him alſo. But the affairs of Bohemia going on the Emperours ſide, Gabor relinquiſhed his pretentions and hearkned to a peace betwixt them.

1625 40 Ferdinand III. ſon of Ferdinand the 2. choſen and crowned King in the life of his Father, and in the year 1627. King of Bohemia alſo, ſucceeding after him in the Empire and now living, anno 1648.

This Kingdome doth pretend it ſelf to be Elective, and to have ſpeciall priviledges indulged them by their former Princes; and anciently indeed it was ſo in both reſpects, the laſt eſpecially: King Andrew giving authoritie to his Prelates, Peers, and other people, Ut ſine nota alicujus infidelitatis, &c. that without any imputation of diſloyaltie, they might contradict, oppoſe, and reſiſt their King if he did any thing in violation of their Laws and ſanctions. But both their libertie of Elections, and pretence of Priviledges have been ſo ſhaken and reſtrained by their Kings of the houſe of Auſtria, that the Elections are become a matter of formalitie only, their Priviledges depending wholly on the Princes pleaſure: now grown too potent for them to contend withall, unleſs they ſhould betray their Country into the hands of the Turk. To which ſome of them have expreſſed ſome ſtrong inclinations, the oppreſſions laid upon them by the Auſtrian familie, being deemed unſufferable.

The forces of this Kingdome when it was entire, may beſt be ſeen by thoſe great Armies which they have brought into the field againſt the Turk. By whom two parts of three being ſince ſubdued, that which remains muſt not be thought able to anſwer the proportion of former times; though they have done more then could reaſonably be expected from it. For at the battell of Kereſture, anno 1596.

there were 6000 Hungarian horſe, and 10000 foot, of this Nation only; beſides thoſe of Germanie and Tranſylvania: and the next year, notwithſtanding the diſcomfiture of that Armie, they raiſed no leſſe then 20000 horſe and foot, on the noiſe of ſome preparations among the Turks. 'Tis true; their foot are commonly but meanly armed; the defect wherein is rather to be imputed to the Prince then unto the people: who can but bring their bodies (which is all they have) for defence of their Country. And for their horſe, (whom they call Heiducks) maintained in continuall readineſſe at the charge of the Nobilitie and principall Gentrie; they are next Couſins to the Coſacques, almoſt as miſchievous as they, and hold as ſtrict intelligence with the Turks as thoſe doe with the Tartars.

The chief Revenues of this Kingdome come from the ſilver mines, out of which is yearly raiſed about a million and an halfe of Guldens. Maximilian the 2. made it up two millions by ſeizing on the lands of Cathedrall and Collegiate Churches, and aſſigning annuall penſions to the Biſhops, Canons, and other Religious perſons. Moſt of which ſumme comes clearly to the Emperours Cofers, the Preſidiary Souldiers being paid with Contribution money raiſed upon the Countrie: and the Lieutenant Generall, whoſe entertainment comes to 30000 Dollars yearly, detrayed upon their purſes alſo.

The chief Order of Knighthood in this Kingdome was that of the Dragon, inſtituted by Sigiſmund Emperour and King hereof, at ſuch time as by the Councell of Conſtance, againſt John of Hus and Hierome of Prague, and by the ſharpneſſe of his ſword proved upon their followers, he had caſt down (as he conceived) the Dragon of Hereſie and Schiſme. But the device proved of no long continuance, expiring almoſt with the Author.

The Arms of Attila the Hunn, once the King of this Countrie by the name of Pannonia, are ſaid to have been Gules, a Falcon diſplayed Or, membred and crowned Argent. But the Arms of the Kingdome at this time, are Barre-wiſe of 8 pieces Gules and Argent.

There are in HUNGARIE

Archbiſhops 2 Biſhops 13.

And ſo much for HUNGARIE.

OF

OF SCLAVONIA.

SCLAVONIA is bounded on the East with Servia, Macedonia, and Epirus, from which parted by the River Drinus, and a line drawne from thence unto the Adriatick; on the West with Carniola in Germanie and Histria, in the Signeurie of Venice, from which last divided by the River Arsia; on the North with Hungarie, on the South, with the Adriatick Sea. So called from the Sclaves or Sclavi a Dalmatian people, of whom more anon.

It containes in length from Arsia, to the River Drinus, according to Plinies computation 800 Italian miles; the greatest breadth being 325 of the same miles. But others reckon the length of it at no more then 480 miles, who may be reconciled with Plinie, by supposing this, that these last measure in a strait and direct line from River to River; and that Pliny coasted by the Creekes and reaches of the Adriatick. Situate in the Northern temperate Zone, betwixt the middle Parallels of the sixth and seventh Climates: so that the longest day in summer is about 15 houres and an halfe.

The Countrie is generally fruitfull of all those commodities, which are found in Italy, to which little inferiour: yeelding not onely wine and oyle in very good plenty, but good store of Cattell, and of wilde beasts of pleasure no want at all; some rich veins also of gold and silver. The northern parts are mountainous, cold, for the most part lying under snowes, not capable of wine, or any the like productions which require much heat. But even these mountainous parts afford very good pasturage, and breed a wealthy race of sheep which bring forth young twice a yeare and are shorn four times. Nor doth the Sea coasts come behinde in advancing the profit of the people, not onely yeelding store of fish, but the benefit of many excellent and convenient Havens.

The people are courageous, proud, stubborn and untractable, of strong bodies, and able constitutions, fit for workes of drudgerie, and so employed by the Venetians, when first brought under their command: who using them in all servile offices both at home and abroad, occasioned the neighbouring Nations to call their Villaines or Bond-servants, as they of Venice did, by the name of Sclaves; that being originally as to this people, the name not of their condition, but of their Ancestors and Countrey.

The Christian faith was first here planted, I mean in reference to this people, who doe now inhabit it, about the time of Charles the Bald, Emperour of the West, anno 877. Sueropilus being the first of their Kings who embraced the Gospell. But lying in the mid way of Greece and Italy, the Religion of the Church of Rome, and that of the Greeke Church are both allowed of: that of the Greeke being as prevalent in the East parts hereof, as that of Rome is in the Western: The Turkish and Mahometan prevailing in those Towns and Territories under their obedience. But though they bee not of one Religion, they are all of one Language; which is the old Sarmatian (or Sclavonian) tongue, generally spoken in the Empire of Russia, Livonia, Poland, Silesia, Bohemia, Moravia, some part of Hungary, Histria, Sclavonia, where we now are, Dacia, Epirus, Georgia, Mengrelia, (both in Asia) and by all the Captaines, Officers, and other ſouldiers of the Turkiſh Empire: the language generally ſpreading over all thoſe Countreys, which either were Sarmatian in their firſt originall, or made theirs by conqueſt under the united name of Sclaves, or otherwiſe intermixt with them by the neceſſity of commerce and trade, or diſpatch of their common buſineſſes. Inſomuch as taking in the ſubdiviſions of the Provinces and Countreys before ſpecified, it is affirmed by Geſner a right learned man that there are no fewer then 60 Nations which have the Sclavonian tongue for their Vulgar language.

Chief Mountaines in this Countrey are thoſe called Scardonici (from Scardona, one of the beſt towns of Illyria) dividing Dalmatia in the midſt, and extending along the Coaſts therof; by Ptolemie called Ardium. Of Rivers thoſe of ſpecial note amongſt the Antients, were 1 Titius, now Varietha, ſeparating Illyria from Dalmatia; 2 Arſia, now Arſa, the utmoſt bound upon the Weſt; which as 3 Drinus is upon the Eaſt: of which the firſt falleth into that Bay of the Adriatick, which is called Golfo di Quevero, (Sinus Flanaticus by the Antients) the other into the Saw or Savus, ſomewhat weſt of Belgrade. 4 Narſo, now Narento, running not far from Epidaurus.

The Boundaries and Landmarkes being thus ſet out, I ſhould proceed to the diviſion of the countrey as now it ſtandeth. But I muſt firſt look on it as it ſtood in the time of the Romans: in whoſe time that part of the whole Province which lay from the whole River Arſia to the Titius, was named Liburnia, and Illyris; that from the Titius to the Drinus was called Dalmatia. But the Illyrians being the ſtouter and more warlike people, and ſuch as created greateſt troubles to the Romans; it pleaſed the Conquerours when they had fully ſubdued both Nations, to call the whole countrey by the name of Illyricum: and not ſo onely, but to extend this name over all their Provinces (the Dioceſe of Thrace excepted) which lay between the Alpes and the Euxine Sea; the Adriatick and the Danow: for ſo farre the Juriſdiction of the Præfectus Prætorio of Illyricum, did at firſt extend. Huic Præfecto (ſaith Zoſimus) Conſtantinus ejus inſtitutor Macedones attribuit, Theſſalos, Cretenſes, Græciam, & circumjacentes inſulas, Epirum utranque, Illyricos, Dacos, Triballos, & Pannonios, Valeriam uſque & Myſiam ſuperiorem. And that all theſe did then paſſe by the name of Illyricum, appeareth as well by that of Pollio in the life of Claudius the ſecond, expreſſely ſaying Illyricum, Thracas, Myſos, Dacos, Dalmatias & Pannonias continebat; as by that of Socrates the Hiſtorian, who lib. 32. cap. 20. calleth Sirmium the chief town of Pannonia Inferior, & lib. 5. cap. 6. Theſſalonica, the chief City of Macedon, urbes Illyricas, or Illyrian Cities. By which accompt Illyricum in the largeſt extent of that name contained no leſſe then 18 Provinces of the Roman Empire; that is to ſay, 1 Noricum Mediterraneum, 2 Noricum Ripenſe, 3 Pannonia Superior, 4 Pannonia Inferior, 5 Valeria, 6 Savia, 7 Dalmatia, 8 Mœſia ſuperior, 9 Dardania, 10 Dacia Mediterranea, 11 Dacia, Ripenſis, 12 Macedonia, 13 Theſſaly, 14 Achaia, 15 Crete, 16 Epirus Vetus, 17 Epirus Nova, and 18 Prevelitana. Theſe 18 Provinces being caſt or made up into three Dioceſes, viz. the Dioceſe of Illyricum, ſpecially ſo called, containing the ſeven firſt; 2 the Dioceſe of Macedon, containing the ſeven laſt; and 3 the Dioceſe of Dacia, comprehending the other four: were governed by the Præfectus Prætorio for Illyricum, who had firſt his chief ſeat and reſidence at Sirmium before mentioned. But in the diviſion of the Empire betwixt the ſonnes of Theodoſius the Great, into the Eaſtern and the Weſtern: the Dioceſe of Illyricum ſpecially ſo called (after that named Illyricum Occidentale) was laid unto the Weſtern Empire, under the Governance of the Præfectus Prætorio of Italy, and thereupon the ſeat or reſidence of the Prætorio Præfectus for Illyricum, removed from Sirmium unto Theſſalonica. So that now we are to looke upon Illyricum in a ſtricter notion, as a Dioceſe of the Weſtern Empirre, containing the ſeven Provinces before ſpecified, whereof both Noricums, both Pannonias, and Valeria (if at leaſt Stiermarch be that Valeria, as ſome ſay it is) have been deſcribed already in their proper places. There now remaine onely Savia and Dalmatia to be ſpoken of: the firſt containing all thoſe parts of this countrey lying on both ſides of the Savus (whence it had the names); the laſt, thoſe parts hereof which lie towards the Sea, known by the antient name of Dalmatia, the Region of Illyris properly ſo called, being added to it. But as new Lords give new Laws, ſo they give new names. The countrey being divided by the Sclavi into two Kingdomes, viz. of Croatia and Dalmatia: of which the firſt contained the Province of Savia, the laſt took up the whole Province of Dalmatia bounded as before, but keeping the name of Sclavonia to it ſelfe alone, being indeed the onely Province in which the name and memory of the Sclavi, is retained amongſt us. Afterwards as it came to be divided (as at laſt it was) betwixt the Kings of Hungary and the State of Venice: we finde it ſubdivided into theſe ſix parts; that is to ſay 1 Windiſchland, 2 Croatia, 3 Boſnia, 4 Dalmatia, 5 Liburnia, or Contado di Zara, and 6 the Sclavonian Iſlands.

1 WINDISCHLAND.

WINDISCHLAND is bounded on the Eaſt with part of the Lower Hungary, from which ſeparated by a line drawne from St. Nicolas near the River Dravus to the town of Polega, ſtanding on a little River which fals into the Savus on the Weſt with Carniola, or Krain, a Province of the Archdukedome of Auſtria: on the North with the River Dravus, on the South with Croatia. It is thus called by the Dutch as the Land or Countrie of the Winithi, or Vendi, the greateſt Nation of the Sclaves, whom generally they call by the name of Windiſch: and antiently for ſo much of it as lieth on the North of the Savus accounted part of Pannonia Inferior, as afterwards of the Province of Savia, till conquered by the Sclaves, and laid unto their poſſeſſions; from whom named Windiſchland, as before.

Places

Places of moſt importance in it are 1 Windiſch-gretts, ſeated on the Dravus, the Vinundria and Vindemana of the Antients. 2 Sagona, neere unto the Savus. 3 Gradiska on the South, and 4 Zagabria, on the North of the ſame River: from which laſt a great part of this Countrey is called Comitatus Zagabrienſis. 5 Novigrod, on the Savus alſo, but more neere to Germany. 6 Petrowya, ſituate at the foot of the mountaines, which are between the Savus and the Dravus, and divide Hungary from Sclavonia. 7 Siſſeg, or Siſſakhen, (the Siſſia of Pliny and Antoninus) ſituate on the Saw, over againſt Zagabria, where it receiveth the river Zulp, famous for the notable reſiſtance which the Turks there found, anno 1593. Who hoping by the conqueſt of this Province to open a free paſſage into Germany, entred it with a puiſſant Army, (having in their way taken the Caſtle of Oſtrowits and the ſtrong Town of Wihits in Croatia) and ſate down very ſtrongly intrenched before this Town. But the town held it out moſt gallantly againſt all their batteries and aſſaults, till relieved by a power of Germans who came to ſuccour them; by whom 8000 of the Turkes were ſlaine in the place, and moſt of the reſt drowned in the River Savus, as they fled haſtily, and (through that great haſt) blindely from the ſword of the Conquerour. Croatia.

This Province for the moſt part is under the Princes of the houſe of Auſtria, as Kings of Hungary, to which Crown it formerly belonged; thoſe parts of it which lie next to Hungary, on the North and Eaſt, groaning under the tyranny and bondage of the Turkiſh Garriſons.

2 CROATIA.

CROATIA is bounded on the North with Windiſchland, from which parted by the River Una, or Wana; on the Eaſt with Boſnia; on the South with Liburnia, or Contado di Zara; on the Weſt with Carniola. The reaſon of the name I finde not amongſt my Authours; but onely that it was impoſed by the Sclaves at their firſt coming hither: who comprehended under this name all the Inland parts of Sclavonia, from the mountain Ardium to Pannonia, including Boſnia and Windiſchland, though diſtinguiſhed afterwards.

The Countrey for the moſt part cold, mountainous and hilly, overſpread by the branches of the Mountaines Bebii ſpoken of by Ptolemy; yet reaſonably fruitfull, ſtored with all neceſſarie proviſions for the life of man: and would yeeld more increaſe and profit both to Lord and Tenant, were it not for the ill neighbourhood of the Turk, to whoſe tyranny and oppreſſions it hath been, and is ſtill expoſed. The people for the generall are held to be good ſouldiers, mentioned in our modern ſtories by the name of Crabats.

Chief Townes in it are 1 Maſch or Moſth, bordering upon Germany, the Aleta of the Antients. 2 Oſtrowits, a ſtrong Fort on the ſame Frontire; 3 Wihits, by the Dutch called Bighen, by the Antients Funium, the Metropolis or chief Town of the Countrey, encompaſſed like an Iſland by the River Una, and fortified with ſtrong works by the help of Art: but taken by the Turk anno 1592. and all the ſouldiers in it cruelly murdered, contrary to the Articles agreed on at the ſurrendrie. 4 Zeng, 5 Wackat, 6 Tarnow, 7 Modriſch, of which little memorable.

This Countrey with the reſt included antiently under this name, was one of the two kingdomes of Sclavonia, the Princes whereof were uſually entituled Kings of Croatia and Dalmatia. In the yeare 1007. the Venetians having before poſſeſſed themſelves of ſome Townes on the Sea ſide, firſt ſet footing there. How the whole Countrey of Sclavonia came to the Crown of Hungary, ſhall be ſhewn anon. Held, part of it in the right thereof, by the houſe of Auſtria; part of it by the Turkes in the way of conqueſt: the Venetians having now no ſhare in it, for ought I can finde.

BOSNIA is bounded on the Eaſt with Servia a Province of Dacia: on the Weſt with Croatia; on the North with the River Savus, and the Eaſt parts with the Lower Hungary; on the South with Dalmatia. So called as ſome think from the River Boſna, which runneth through it; as others, from the Beſſi a people of Dacia, driven out of their Countrey by the Bulgari, and removing hither, by the change of a Vowell called Boſſi, whence the Country Boſnia.

Places of moſt importance are in it 1 Iaitza, by the Latines called Iazyga, ſituate on the top of an high hil, at the bottom whereof almoſt encompaſſed with two rivers, which there uniting paſſe from thence unto the Savus. The Town by reaſon of the rocky præcipices of the Hil, the unfordableneſſe of the River, and an inacceſſible Caſtle, held to be impregnable: the Metropolis in former times of this petit kingdome, and the ordinary ſepulture of the kings thereof. 2 Warboſoni, at this time the chief Town of the Countrey, but not walled about. 3 Cazach, the uſuall reſidence or retiring place of the Boſnian Kings. 4 Schwanica, not much obſervable. 5 Dorobiza, the firſt town taken by Mahomet the great in his conqueſt of this Kingdome, as 6 Clyſſa was the laſt; the unfortunate King Stephen being taken in it.

This Countrey antiently accounted of as a part of Croatia, together with it was united to the Crown of Hungary; under the Patronage and Homage whereof it was erected into a Kingdome: but the preciſe time when, I finde not. Some ſay, about the year 1420. If ſo, a Kingdome of late date, and a ſhort continuance. For in the yeare 1464. Mahomet the Great, firſt Emperour of the Turkes, having Dalmatia. having taken Constantinople, and almost all the rest of Greece, cast his eye upon it, suddenly surprised it: and having taken Stephen the last King hereof, most barbarously commanded him to be flead alive. After whose death this Kingdome was converted to a Province of the Turkish Empire, and governed by one of the Bassas of it; as it still continueth.

4 DALMATIA.

DALMATIA is bounded on the East with Albania from which parted by the River Driso, on the East with the Titius (now Variecha) which divides it from Liburnia, on the North with Bosnia, on the South with the Adriatick Sea. This only of all the Provinces of Sclavonia, retaineth its ancient name and bounds. So called from Dalminium the chief town hereof in the time of the Romans, from which the people were called Dalmatæ, and the Countrie Dalmatia.

The Countrie in the time of the Romans was full of woods, and those woods of Robbers, who from thence issued out to make spoil and bootie. Dalmatæ sub sylvis agunt, inde ad latrocinia promptissimi, saith the Historian. And by the advantage of these woods, they intercepted and discomfited Gabinius, one of Cæsars Captaines, marching through their Countrie with 1000 horse and 15 Companies of foot towards Macedonia, to the aid of his Generall against Pompey. But their woods being destroyed they became more peaceable; and in stead of Robberies by Land, began to exercise themselves at Sea in the way of Merchandizing, to which their large Sea-coasts and commodious Havens served exceeding fitly.

Places of most consideration in it, 1 Sebenic on the Sea side, not far from the influx of Titius or Variecha: by Ptolemie called Sicum, in whose time a Colonie of Roman Souldiers, sent hither by the Emperour Claudius. 2 Salona, a Roman Colonie also, one of the Juridicall Resorts for these parts of the Province, and the ordinarie Arsenall for their Navies. Renowned in ancient stories for the retreat of Diocletian, a Native of this Countrie, who having governed the Roman Empire 20 years with much felicity, but a great deal of crueltie, deposed himself, and retired to this Citie, where he followed the trade of a Gardener, working with his own hands and observing with great content the productions of nature. Insomuch that when Maximianus Herculius his associate (who at his perswasion had done the like) invited him to resume the Empire, he returned this answer, Utinam posses tis visere olera nostris manibus plantata, &c. that if he would come unto Salona and see how well the Worts which he had planted with his own hands, did thrive and prosper, he would never trouble his head with Crowns, nor his hands with Scepters: a rare expression of a settled and contented minde. The name, and some of the ruines doe still remain to preserve the memorie of so remarkable a place. 3 Spalato, East of Sebenic, a Sea town, and an Archbishops See, who writes himself Primate of Dalmatia. Of note for many learned Prelates, but for none more then for Marcus Antonius de Dominis, who seeming to loath the Romish superstition, came for refuge in England, anno 1616. and having here both by preaching and writing laboured to overthrow the Church of Rome, upon I know not what projects, he declared himself to be of another mind, anno 1622. and returned again to Rome, where he writ as reproachfully of the Church of England. So that we may say of him, as Socrates in his Ecclesiasticall Historie saith of Ecebolius, who under Constantius, was a Christian; under Julian a Pagan; and a Christian again under Jovinian: ποικίλος μὲν ἦν κἀκ νέας ἡλικίας Ἐκεβόλιος μεταπεσεῖν τὴν γνώμην. So wavering and unconstant a turn-coat was Ecebolius, from his beginning to his end. But Ecebolius sped better then Antonius did, he being received into the Church upon his repentance, but this infatuated man imprisoned in the Castle of Angelo, and his dead bodie burnt to Ashes. A just reward for so great levity, and so grosse Apostasie, as he had shewed unto the world in his going hence. 4 Almissa, the Piguritium of Ptolemie, mounted on an high rock, and defended with an impregnable Castle. 5 Stagno, upon the point of a long and spatious Chersonese, not far from which the River Naron (or Narento) falls into the Adriatick. 6 Castle Novo, a strong Fortresse within the Gulfe of Catharo, now in possession of the Turks. 7 Antibari, on the further or Eastern side of the Bay, an Archbishops See; but that and the Sees of his Suffragan Bishops, being 7 in number, now in possession of the Turks. 8 Catharo, on the same side of the Bay, by Ptolemie called Aseruvium, inhabited in his time by Roman Citizens; now a strong hold for the Venetians against the Turks, and giving name unto the Gulfe, which formerly called Sinus Rhizoniscus, from Rhizana (now Rhizins) situate at the bottome of it, is at this time called from this Town Golfo de Catharo. 9 Dolcigno, by Ptolemie called Ulcinium, originally founded by the Colchians. 10 Scutari, more within the land, (the Scodra of Ptolemie and Antoninus) strongly seated on a steep Rock, memorable for the stout resistance which it made for a whole year, against the whole puissance of Mahomet the 2. battered for the most part of that time with 70 pieces of Ordinance of wondrous bignesse, especially that called the Princes piece, which carried a stone or bullet of 1200 l. weight; and taken at the last, anno 1578. Not far from this Town is the great Lake, called by Strabo, Labeates; now the Lake of Scutari, 130 miles in compasse, and environed on all sides with Mountains, except towards the North, out of which issueth the Drinus, now called Driana, which parting Sclavonia from Macedon and Servia, passeth into the Savus. 11 Alesio, the Lissus of Ptolemie, the furthest town of all Dalmatia, towards Greece: memorable for the Grave of Scanderbeg, who was buried here, whereof more hereafter. 12 Medon, raised out of the ruines of Dioclea, an ancient and famous Citie, the birth-place of the Great Emperour Diocletian, spoken of before. 13 Dalminium, once the Metropolis of this Province, situate on the River Drinus, first sacked by Marcius Figulus a Roman Consul, ann.

V. C.

V.C. 689. and after, on a new revolt by one Naſica, ſpoken of by Strabo: not able after two ſuch ruines to revive againe; nothing being now left of it, but the name and memorie. Liburnia.

Betwixt the Cherſoneſe of Stagno and the Gulfe of Catharo, ſtands the town and territorie of Raguſi; not ſubject as all the reſt are either to the Turk or to the Venetians, but governing themſelves by their own Lawes and Magiſtrates as a Free-Commonwealth; paying only to the Turk 14000 Zechins yearly in way of tribute, and as much in Preſents: diſcharged in that regard of Cuſtomes and Impoſitions, in all his Dominions. It was anciently called Epidaurus (of which name there were two other Cities in Peloponneſus) but that town being razed by the Gothes, the Inhabitants (after their departure) not knowing where to retire themſelves, built this in the place of it, at the foot of a ſteep Mountaine, enjoying a pleaſant ſituation near the Sea with a little, but commodious Port, forced out of the water by the art and induſtrie of work-men. The town well built, fortified with wals and a well furniſhed Caſtle; now an Archbiſhops See, and a noted Emporie, rich, and ſtrong in ſhipping, commanding over a ſmall and barren territorie within the land, and ſome pleaſant Iſlands in the Sea. So that the riches of it proceed not from their Rents and Revenues riſing out of the Earth, but by the benefit of their trafique upon the Waters, ſecured therein by the protection of the Turk, without which they had fallen before this time into the hands of the Venetians; as on the other ſide preſerved by the State of Venice, from being a prey to their Protectours. Of more wealth heretofore then they are at the preſent. At what time they traded to moſt parts of this Weſtern world in thoſe great Veſſells which from hence were called Raguſes, but corruptly Argoſies: the laſt of which (their number leſſening with their trade) they lent unto the King of Spain for the war of England, anno 1588. in which action it was loſt and wracked on the Coaſt of Ireland.

5 CONTADO DI ZARA.

CONTADO DI ZARA, or the Countrie of Zara, called anciently Liburnia, and Illyris ſpecially ſo named, is bounded on the Eaſt with Dalmatia, on the Weſt with Hiſtria, on the North with Croatia, and on the South with the Adriatick Sea, or Golfe of Venice.

It took this latter name (the former being long diſcontinued) from Zara the chief town thereof the Jadera of Ptolemie and the ancients, a Roman Colonie at that time, now an Archbiſhops See, enjoying a ſafe and large Port, ſituate on a low Cherſoneſe thruſting out like a Promontorie into the Adriatick; belonging to the State of Venice, by whom well fenced and fortified againſt forein invaſions. For the poſſeſſion and command of this town, there have been great wars betwixt the Hungarians and the Venetians; to whom it ſeemeth to be of ſuch importance, that being once taken by the Hungarians, it was redeemed for 100000 Crowns, of Ladiſlaus King of Naples, pretending againſt Sigiſmund of Luxembourg to the Crown of Hungarie. In this town is the Church of S. John de Malvatia, which was built by a company of Saylors; who being in a tempeſt, made a vow, that if they eſcaped, they would conſecrate a Temple to S. John de Malvatia, whoſe morter ſhould be tempered with Malmſey; and accordingly they paid their vowes. Far leſſe did another Maſter of a ſhip intend to perform his promiſe, though he ſpoke bigger; who in a like extremity of danger, promiſed our Lady to offer at her Altar a Candle as great as the main maſt of his ſhip. For when one of his mates jogging him, told him he had promiſed an impoſſibilitie: Tuſh fool (replyed the Maſter) we muſt ſpeak her fair in time of need; but if ever I come a ſhore, I will make her be content with a candle of eight to the pound. And in a like fit of devotion was he, who on the ſame occaſion plainly told God, that he was no common begger, he never troubled him with prayers before; and if he would hear him that time, he would never trouble him again.

Other towns herein conſiderable, are 1 Albona, retaining ſtill the old name (the Alvona of Ptolemie) ſituate near the River Arſia, the divider of this Province from Hiſtria. 2 Flavona, or Flanona, ſituate againſt the Gulfe of Quernero, of old called Sinus Flanaticus, as before was noted: of ill report amongſt Saylors for frequent tempeſts raiſed on every winde. 3 Zegna, by Ptolemie and Plinie called Senia, ſituate on a flat or levell. 4 Nona, of old called Aenona, compaſſed with the Sea. 5 Scrifia, now a poor Village in the place where ſtood the Argyrutum of Plinie. 6 Scardona, now a mean Village alſo, heretofore of great note, and the Juridicall Reſort for the whole Province: from whence the neighbouring Mountaines had the name of Scardonici: the bounds of this Country and Croatia.

The ancient name of this Country was Liburnia, as before is ſaid, but extending more Northwards beyond the Mountains of Ardium, or Scardonici; this and Dalmatia being then the Membra dividentia of the whole Illyricum. The people hereof called by one generall name Liburni, were much given to Piracies; and for their better ſpeed therein, the Authors and Inventers of thoſe ſwift veſſels which were called Liburnicæ, and Liburnæ. Of which thus Horace:

Ibis Liburnis inter alta navium
Amice propugnacula.

That is to ſay:

In a Liburnian ſhalt thou be Amongſt the ſtouteſt ſhips at Sea.

In imitation of which Veſſels being ſwift and light, the Romans in the time of their wealth and pride invented a kinde of Chair or Litter, (ſuch as thoſe which we call Sedans) wherein they were carried on mens ſhoulders with ſuch eaſe and pleaſure, that they could not only ſleep or read, but write in them alſo: the Porters or Bearers of them of this Nation commonly; from whence, or from the faſhion of the Veſſel which they did reſemble, they were called Liburni. Of theſe thus Juvenal in his third Satyre:

Si vocat officium, turba cedente vehetur
Dives, & ingenti curret ſuper ora Liburno,
Atque obiter leget, aut ſcribet, vel dormiet intus,
Namque facit ſomnum clauſa lectica feneſtra.

Thus Engliſhed by my honoured friend Sir Robert Stapleton, in his excellent tranſlation of that harſh Satyriſt.

When buſineſſe cals, a crowd the rich man ſhuns,
And o're mens heads in's huge Sedan he runs,
Reads, writes, and ſleeps within it as he goes,
For ſleep will come if he the curtains cloſe.

Beſides which office of Chair-carriers or Sedan-men, as we call them now, this people being, when once conquered, a ſervile Nation, furniſhed the Romans with thoſe Beadels, whom they employed in calling the Citizens from the fields to their publick buſineſſes, to which the ſame Poet alludeth, in the next Satyre, ſaying, Clamante Liburno, Currite, jam ſedit, &c. But to proceed, the nearneſſe of this Countrie to the Adriatick, occaſioned the Bay of Quernero commonly called Sinus Flanaticus, to be ſometimes named Sinus Liburnicus, the parts of Italie on the other ſide of it, to be called Regna Liburnorum in the Poet Virgil; and gave the name of Liburnades to a ſhole of Iſlands lying on the coaſt hereof, 60 at leaſt in number, as is ſaid by Strabo. To which and other Iſlands of the Adriatick, we are now to haſten, leaving the ſtorie of Illyricum to the cloſe of all.

6 The SCLAVONIAN ISLANDS.

Along the Coaſts of Sclavonia, lie a cluſter of ISLANDS to the number of a thouſand as is ſaid by Plinie: moſt of which (if indeed ſo many) are but rocks, not Iſlands, or not inhabited at all, or of any note. The principall whereof, and ſuch as deſerve place here, are 1 the Liburnades before mentioned. 2 The Abſyrtides. 3 The Iſles of Raguſi. 4 Arbe. 5 Curzola. 6 Zara. 7 Liſſa and Brazzia: the reſt not worth the looking after, as to our deſigne: the whole number of the Inhabitants reckoned in the totall to no more then 40000 perſons.

1 The LIBURNADES ſaid by Strabo to be 60 in number, lie all along the Coaſt of Liburnia, or Contado di Zaro: the chief whereof are 1 ISSA, now called Pago, containing 100 miles in compaſſe, having a town of the ſame name; but in all that tract of ground not above 1500 inhabitants in the time of my Author, by reaſon of the ſharp air, and great want of fewell. The Salt-pits here yeeld great commoditie, not only to the people themſelves, but alſo to the State of Venice, ſupreme Lord hereof. 2 Tragurium, now Tran and Trahu, ſo called from the chief town hereof, built by thoſe of Iſſa: ſo near the Continent that it ſeems to be a part thereof. By Mela it is named Tagurium, with ſome little difference. 3 Pharus, ſo called from the Pharii, or Parii, of whom once a Colonie, long ſince come to ruine. It is now called Lezina, the greateſt of all the Adriatick, as being 150 miles in compaſſe, and very fruitfull for the bigneſſe. It hath a town of the ſame name, which enjoying a ſafe and ſpatious Harbour; unwalled and of no great beautie, but fortified with a ſtrong Caſtle which commandeth both the Harbour and the ſhipping in it. The birth-place of Demetrius Pharius, ſo often mentioned in the ſtories of Greece and Rome.

2 The ABSYRTIDES are in number many, ſo called from the River Abſyrtus, which thereabout falls into the Adriatick, according unto that of Lucan:

Ei cadit Adriacas ſpumans Abſyrtus in undas.

Abſyrtus foaming with his haſt
Into the Adria falls at laſt.

But whether that river were ſo called by the Colchians at their landing there, in memorie of Abſyrtus the ſon of Aetas King of Colchis, whom they went to ſeek; or for ſome other reaſon, I determine not. Certain I am, it could not be ſo named from the ſcattering of his limbs hereabouts, by Medea his unnaturall ſiſter, as is ſaid by Plinie: that cruell fact being done on the ſhores of the Euxine: the place called Tomos afterwards upon that occaſion. But for theſe Iſlands being in number many, as before was ſaid, two only are of ſpeciall note, that is to ſay, 1 Vegia, or Viglio, not far from Zegna on the firm land, containing in compaſſe betwixt 80 and 100 miles, and about 10000 Inhabitants, the moſt populous of all theſe Seas. It hath a town of the ſame name, with a very fair harbour: the Iſland by Plinie called Curieta, the chief towns of it in his time being Pſulfinium, and Curicum. 2 Abſorus as Ptolemie, Abſyrtium as Plinie calls it: in whoſe time it was one Iſland only, but now divided into two, by the Venetians, letting in the Sea betwixt them: the one of them is called Cherſo, the other Oſero: both joyned together by a Bridge made by the Venetians, and both together making up 140 miles in compaſſe; each of them having one town only, and that of the ſame name with the Iſland, the Inhabitants in both not exceeding 5000 perſons. Stored with ſufficiencie of corn, plentie of wine, and abundance of wood, great quantities whereof are ſent yearly to Venice. They have alſo goodly heards of Cattle, and great flocks of ſheep, affording by their fleſh, wool, cheeſe, and butter, a good increaſe of profit to the owners of them.

3 The Iſlands of Raguſi, (for ſo I call them which belong to that Common-wealth) are but three in number: 1 Gravoſa, a very pleaſant place, full of Gardens of Oranges, Lemmons, and Pomegranates. 2 Languſte, environed about with very high Mountains, in which are the Raguſians Farms, made rich by the great charge and induſtrie of the ſeverall Occupants, ſo as to yeeld them wine, oil, and moſt excellent fruits; which they receive more plentifully from a goodly Plain ſituate in the midſt hereof, and naturally more fruitfull then the other parts. Near to this laſt Iſland is good fiſhing for Sprats: and in both an Art of making their trees to bring forth Oyſters, by bending down their boughes, and ſtaying them under the water with ſtones; ſo as in two years there are ſo many Oyſters faſtned unto them, as is ſtrange to ſee, and in the third year they are very good meat. 3 Melida, lying betwixt Raguſi and the Iſle of Curzola, by Plinie called Melita, and on that ground ſuppoſed by ſome to be that Iſland on which S. Paul did ſuffer ſhipwrack, Acts 29. But the name of Barbarous which the Text joynes to the Inhabitants of it, not proper to an Iſland betwixt Greece and Italie, in the times of S. Paul, and his landing there in Syracuſa, an Haven of Sicil, ſo far from this, ſo near unto the other Melita, which is now called Malta; ſufficiently refell this fancie, though otherwiſe not improbably grounded.

4 Of thoſe which are known only by one ſingle name, the chief are ARBE, ſo called in the time of Plinie from the beſt town of it; but by Ptolemie it is named Scardona. A pleaſant Iſland, in compaſſe about 30 miles, and containing ſome 3000 Inhabitants, the only Haven-leſſe Iſle of all the Adriatick; but that defect abundantly recompenſed by the naturall ſweetneſſe of the place. Which ſo enticed certaine diſſolute Rovers of Auſtria, that they ſeiſed upon it, anno 1618. and had like to have occaſioned an heavy war betwixt Ferdinand Archduke of the Houſe of Gratz (not long after choſen King of the Romans) and the State of Venice, if Philip the 3. of Spain had not made up the breach.

5 CURZOLA, by Ptolemie and Strabo called Corcyra, or Melæna, more rightly Corcyra Melæna, or Corcyra Nigra, to difference it from Corcyra, now Corfu, in the Sea Ionian: the chief town of it being of the ſame name with the Iſland, was founded by the Gnidians of the Iſle of Crete; ſufficiently fruitfull, but of wine eſpecially, 40 miles long, in compaſſe 90. and very populous for the bigneſſe; notwithſtanding that the people being Sea-faring men, do much uſe the Seas and build many ſhips. In the year 1571. a little after the taking of Cyprus, and before the battel of Lepanto, it was invaded by Uluz Aly, Generall of the Turkiſh Fleet, with a Navie of 60 Gallies: for fear of whom Contarenus the Venetian Governour, together with the Townſmen and Garriſon Souldiers, abandoned Curzola, the chief town hereof. The ſilly women thus forſaken, and preferring death before diſhonour, defended the walls; and with fire, ſtones, and ſuch other weapons as they had, they beat off the enemie: till at the laſt a violent tempeſt forced the Turkiſh Generall to remove his Gallies further off to a place of ſafetie.

6 ZARA, LISSA, BRAZZIA, three ſmall Iſles, not otherwiſe memorable but for their misfortunes, ſpoiled by the Turks at their departure from Curzola, who carryed thence 1600 Chriſtians into cruell bondage. The reſt I purpoſely omit, rather Rocks then Iſlands, barren and ſtonie for the moſt part, and not much inhabited.

Illyricum. The ancient Inhabitants of Illyricum, in the full extent of it, comprehending Liburnia and Dalmatia, were the Japodes bordering on Italy, the Sintones or Scirtari confining upon Macedon; the Mazæi, in the midst about Salona; the Peirustæ lying towards Pannonia, the Derrii, Ceraunii, Daursii, Vardæ, Siculotæ, Sardiotæ, and others of inferiour note: all making up the great and potent Nations of the Liburni and the Dalmatæ; and comprehended generally in the name of Illyrians. Of these the Liburnian Illyrians, (Illyrici seu Liburni as they are indifferently called by Florus) were the first who felt the Forces of Rome: which growing State they had provoked by their frequent Piracies, but more by murdering the Ambassadours which were sent unto them to require satisfaction: Teuta their Queen, a proud and Imperious Dame, commanding execution to be done upon them. Warred upon by the Romans for so many injuries, under the conduct of Centimalus one of the Consuls, they were overthrown (as having more of the Pirate then the souldier in them) some of their chief Nobility executed in revenge of the wrong done to the Ambassadours; an yearly tribute imposed on them, and the Queen deprived of the greatest part of her Kingdome, conferred by the Romans on Demetrius Pharius, one of their Confederats. But he proving unfaithfull to them in their war with Hannibal, and Gentius their last King who commanded over Illyricum, siding against them with Perseus King of Macedonia: Anicius the Prætor is sent with a sufficient Army to make an end of that work. Who used such diligence therein, that Scordra the chief town of the Kingdome, was taken, and the King himselfe together with his wife and children made Prisoners; by consequence the whole war ended, antequam geri Romæ nunciaretur, before they knew at Rome that it was begun. The Liburnians after this became quiet subjects, the whole Countrey on taking of the Gentius being made a Province of the Romans, anno V.C. 586. employed at Rome in many servile offices, as before was said: but them the Dalmatians began to cast off the yoke. But Dalminium their chiefe City being first sacked by Martius Figulus, and after by Nasica before mentioned; they continued quiet and obedient till the time of Augustus Cæsar: when they againe rebelled at the instigation of one Batto, a man very potent with the people; who having ten years together maintained the liberty of his countrey, at last broken and wearied by the forces of Germanicus and Tiberius he submitted himselfe unto the two Generals: who asking the reason of his revolt, were answered, because the Romans sent not shepheards to keep, but wolves to devoure their flockes. Thus finally conquered, it continued a Roman Province till the coming of Odoacer into Italy, who brought it under his command; as the Gothes also did having vanquished him, and thereby made themselves Masters of Italy, and the rest of his purchases: But the kingdome of the Gothes, being brought to an end by the good fortune of Justinian, and the valour of Belisarius and Narses, two of his Commanders (but very ill requited by him) Illyricum became a part of the Eastern Empire: continuing under the power of the Grecian Emperours till the time of Phocas that bloudy Tyrant: when made a prey unto the Sclaves.

Of these though we have spoken before in severall places, as their fortunes and affaires have led us: yet being this is the onely countrey which preserves their name, we will here speake more exactly of them, then we have done hitherto; especially as to their manners, name and first Originall; and finally of their successes in this countrey. And first for their Originall, I take it for a thing past question that they were no other then naturall Sarmatians, inhabiting on the North of the River Ister, uniting themselves under this name, in their undertakings and attempts on the Eastern Empire; as the many Nations of Germany tooke the name of Frankes, and Almans, in their actions and achievements against the Western. But why they took this name rather then another, is not yet agreed on. Some fetch the originall of it from Slowo, which in the Sclavonian tongue signifieth a Speech or word, because they were all of one common language: others from Slawa, signifying in that language Fame or Glory, in regard of that great fame and honour which they had achieved by their successes on the Empire. But when I finde a potent Nation of the Winithi, Winuli, or Vendi, a Sarmatian people called Sclavini by Jornandes, possessed in his time of the further shores of the River Ister, opposite to Illyricum and Thrace; and by that name wasting and forraging these Provinces, and other parts of that Empire in the time of Justinian, as we read in Procopius that they did: I see no reason why wee should looke further for the name of Sclaves then from these Sclavini. For having in the time of Phocas subdued this Countrey, and called it Sclavinia, or Sclavonia, after their own name: by that and other fortunate successes on the Eastern Empire, and the honour they had thereby gotten, they might very well induce the rest of the scattered tribes of the Sarmatians to unite together with them both in name and action, and try their fortunes in the conquest of the West of Europe, as these had done already on the East parts of it. In which designe they sped so well that they became Masters of almost all those countreys which lie betwixt the River Vistula, and the Euxine Sea; the Adriatick and the Baltick: communicating their language unto all the Provinces and Nations conquered by them; and to most their manners, rites, and customs. Their Government at first by Kings; but so that the succession seldom held in a Race or Family; and those that had the Throne did not long enjoy it. For having a Law amongst themselves, that hee who killed a Tyrant should succeed in his place: they had few Kings whom some or other would not vote to be a Tyrant, and then dispatch him out of the way that a greater Tyrant then himselfe (as it commonly happeneth in such cases) might possesse the Power. Insomuch that they had a new king almost every year, none of them for the space of an hundred yeares dying naturall deaths; and all that while the People (as it needs must be) most miserably torn in peeces by intestine wars. Not cured of this distemper, till the severall Tribes and Nations of them, (as Poles, Moravians, Bohemians, these here, and those of other Countries) had their severall Princes, succeeding one another in a Regular way. Their Religion Gentilism at the first, firſt, for being originally Heathens, they worſhipped ſuch Gods as others of the Gentiles did; Jeſſan for Jupiter, Ladon for Pluto, Marzim for Mars, Zievane for Venus, and Nian for Diana. They had alſo a Goddeſſe called Pagode, to whom they prayed for fair weather, and a temperate Air. To their children they uſed to give no name, till they began to grow great, and then conducted them to the Temple of their Gods, where they cut off their firſt hair, and offered it as a pledge of their future ſervice: at which ſolemnity they called together their friends and kinſfolk to make merry, with banketts, dancing, ſinging, and all kinds of ſports: offering in ſacrifice an Hog, and wine mixed with honey, ſomewhat like Metheglin.

But to returne unto the ſtory, the Sclaves that ſeiſed in this countrey (ſince called Sclavonia) continued abſolute Maſters of it under the Title of Kings of Croatia and Dalmatia, till the yeare 970. when growing unſufferable by their frequent Piracies, and having raviſhed or ſurprized a company of Venetian Ladies; they forced that State (as the Liburnians did the Romans) to make warre upon them: Which ended in the loſſe of Lezina and Curzola, two of their beſt Iſlands, and almoſt all the Sea townes on the Coaſt of the Adriatick; poſſeſſed for the moſt part ſince that time by the State of Venice: a tribute alſo of 100 Barrels of Wine, and a preſent to the Duke of 3000 Coney-skins, being laid upon them: Petro Urſeola being then Duke of Venice, and Marcomir, king of the Sclavonians. Afterwards Zelamirus the laſt king dying without iſſue, bequeathed the kingdome to his wife: and ſhe as freely to her brother Ladiſlaus king of Hungarie, ſurnamed the Saint: the right hereof accrewing by this means to the kings of Hungary; but the poſſeſſion of a great part of it remaining to the State of Venice: the cauſe of much war and bloud ſhed betwixt theſe Princes, till the Turk came to part the fray, and got the greateſt part for himſelf, by their diſagreements. Betwixt theſe three, Sclavonia at this time doth ſtand thus divided: the Venetians poſſeſſing the greateſt part of the Iſlands and all the Sea Coaſts from the River Arſia to the Bay of Catharo, (the City and Commonwealth of Raguſi, excepted onely); the houſe of Auſtria in the right of the Crown of Hungary, the Inland parts of Windiſchland and Croatia; and the Turks (who firſt ſet footing here in the reign of Mahomet the ſecond) the whole kingdome of Boſna, the Patronage of Raguſi, ſome towns in Windiſchland and Croatia, and all the reſidue of Dalmatia from the Bay of Catharo to Albania.

The Armes of Sclavonia were Argent, a Cardinalls Hat, the ſtrings pendant, and platted in a true Loves knot, meeting in the Baſe, Gules.

There are in Sclavonia
Archbiſhops 4. Biſhops 26.

And thus much for SCLAVONIA.

DACIA is bounded on the East with the Euxine Sea, and ſome part of Thrace; on the Weſt with Hungarie, and Sclavonia; on the North with Podolia and ſome other Members of the Realm of Poland; on the South with the reſt of Thrace and Macedonia. So called from the Daci, who here firſt inhabited; in Strabo, better known by the name of the Davi, who proving, when firſt known to the Romans, an officious people, willingly putting themſelves to ſervice in hope of gain, occaſioned the Romans in their Comœdies and common Speech, to call a Sycophant or Servant by the name of Davus.

It lyeth on both ſides of the Danow, frontiring all along the Upper and the Lower Hungarie and ſome part of Sclavonia: extended from the 7. Climate to the 10. ſo that the longeſt Summers day in the moſt Northern parts thereof is near 17 hours; and in the moſt Southern 15 hours 3 quarters.

By this accompt with reference to the other limits beforelaid down, it differeth much in ſituation and dimenſions from the ancient Dacia deſcribed by Ptolemie: that lying wholly on the North ſide of the Danow, but taking in ſo much of the Upper Hungarie as lyeth on the Eaſt ſide of Tibiſcus: this comprehending all the reſt of the ancient Dacia, with both the Myſias, and Dardania; and in a word, the whole Dacian Dioceſe in the largeſt extent thereof, the Province of Prevalitana excepted only: which though a Member of this Dioceſe, was no part of Dacia, but rather of Macedon or Albania. For the clearer underſtanding whereof we may pleaſe to know, that Dacia properly ſo called was ſituate on the Northſide of Danubius, as before was ſaid, extending as far Weſtward as the River Tibiſcus, where it frontired on the Iazyges Metanaſtæ, inhabited by a militarie and valiant people, who many times, eſpecially when the froſt did favour them, paſſed over the River, and infeſted the Roman Provinces. And though repreſſed and made tributarie by Julius Cæſar, yet they brake out again in the time of Auguſtus, who ſending Lentulus againſt them with a puiſſant Armie, compelled them to retire on the other ſide of the River, planting the Southern banks thereof with ſtrong towns and garriſons to reſtrain them from the like incurſions for the time to come. By means whereof, Si Dacia tunc non victa, ſummota atque dilata eſt, ſaith the Hiſtorian; though Dacia was not overcome, yet it was removed ſomewhat further off, and the Provinces thereby ſecured from the attempts of that people. After this from the time of Cotiſo, with whom Auguſtus had to deal, we find little of them till the reign of Decebalus their laſt King, a man both ready in advice and quick in execution. Againſt him, Domitian made warre by Julianus his Lieutenant; who gave Decebalus a great overthrow; and had then utterly vanquiſhed him, if his wit had not better befriended him then his ſword. For, fearing that the Romans making uſe of their victory, would enter and take poſſeſſion of his Country: he pitched in the way a great number of ſtakes in battell aray, putting on them the old Corſlets of his Souldiers; which looking like ſo many men of Arms, frighted the enemy from approaching the Country. Trajane was the next that made war againſt him, and brought him to that exigent, that having with with much losse endured some few skirmishes, he yeelded himself, and is acknowledged a friend to the Senate and people of Rome. But being one of a high spirit, and born in a free air, he once again fell off from the Romans, but to his own destruction: for seeing by the valour of Trajane, his kingdome conquered and his Palace taken and destroyed, he fell upon his own sword, and Dacia was made a Province of the Roman Empire. Lost in the time of Galienus, it was again recovered by Aurelianus, who finding how difficult and chargeable the keeping of it was like to be, transplanted the Roman Colonies and the more civill sort of the Natives, on the other side of the River, placing them betwixt the two Mysias, (in some part of each) and calling the Countrie given to them by the name of Dacia, or New Dacia; leaving the Old unto the Gothes and others of the barbarous Nations, whose thorough-fare it was in all their enterprises and designs on the Roman Empire. Divided by Aurelianus into the two Provinces of Dacia Mediterranea, and Dacia Ripensis: this lying on the banks of the Danow, the other more within the land; which with the Provinces of Mœsia superior, Dardania, Prævalitana, and part of Macedonia salutaris, made up the whole Diocese of Dacia in the times succeeding. Subject with that of Macedon to the Præfectus Prætorio for Illyricum, and consequently appertaining (after the division) to the Eastern Empire. And it continued in this state till the time of Justinian, who being a Native of this Countrie, subdued it from the command of that Præfect, and instituted both a Præfectus Prætorio for this Diocese only in Civill matters, and a Primate for the affairs of the Church; both setled in the Citie of Justiniana, of his own foundation: enlarging the jurisdiction of the first by the addition of some part of Macedonia Secunda, and Pannonia Secunda; and giving to the other all those preheminences which had been anciently enjoyed by the greater Patriarchs. But this new Institution was of no continuance. For first the Sclaves, and afterwards the Russians, Hungars, and Bulgarians, breaking over the Danow, dismembred it peece-meal from the Empire, and divided it under new names amongst themselves. Of which together with the nature of the soil and people, I shall speak anon: having first took a view of the Rivers, Hils, and other Land-marks, which are to be my chief guides in the Chorographie or description of them. Transylvania.

The Rivers then of most note are 1 The Danow, which here at Axium or Axiopolis a town of Bulgaria, takes the name of Ister, continuing it from thence to its Æstuarium, where it falleth into the Euxine Sea, with 7 mouths or channels: that is to say, 1 Peuce, 2 Naracustoma, 3 Calostoma, 4 Plendostoma, 5 Spireustoma, 6 Boreostoma: the name of the last I find not amongst my Authors, quia languidissimum nec perpetuum, as it is in Ptolemie. 2 Marulius, now called Marisch, 3 Temes, 4 Alluta, keeping its old name, 5 Hierasus, all of old Dacia, and all falling into the Danow or Ister; as do also Ciabrus, now Ibar, a River of Servia; and 6 Sucoma of Bulgaria, or the Lower Mysia. Chief Mountains of it, are 1 The Carpathian, 2 Scardus, 3 Ozbelus, whereof the first parteth it from Sarmatia Europæa, the second from Dalmatia, and the third from Macedon.

This said we will proceed to the description of the severall Provinces, which we have comprehended under this name of Dacia, that is to say, 1 Transylvania, 2 Moldavia, 3 Walachia, 4 Rascia, 5 Servia, 6 Bulgaria; the first four in Old Dacia, on the North side of the Danow; the two last in New Dacia, on the South thereof.

1 TRANSYLVANIA.

TRANSYLVANIA is bounded on the East with Moldavia, on the West with the Upper Hungarie, on the North with Russia Nigra, a Province of the Realm of Poland, from which parted by the Carpathian Mountains; on the South with Rascia, and Walachia.

It took this name from the great Woods lying betwixt it and Hungarie, the name in Latine signifying the Countrie beyond the woods. By the Dutch it is called Seben Burgen, from seven Castles or strong holds anciently built in it, to defend the Frontiers: Septemcastrensis in some Latine Authors, upon that occasion. But by the more elegant Latinists, it hath been named Pannodacia, as that part of Dacia, which either was inhabited by the Pannonians, or made subject to them.

The soil doth naturally abound with wine, corne, and fruit, of which it was so plentifull in the times of the Romans that the Emperour Trajan caused a piece of money to be coined, having the figure of Ceres, holding in the one hand a Cornu-copia, and in the other a plain Tablet with this inscription, Abundantia Daciæ. Particularly besides great plenty of wheat and most excellent wines, it yeeldeth great store of Cherries, Damascens, Malacotoons, Musk-melons, not inferiour to those of Italie; as also Centaurie good store, and many other Medicinall plants; some mines of Gold and Silver, many of Iron, Brasse, and Copper; and not a few veins of Salt and Sulphur. Of Cattle such abundance, that many times large Oxen, are sold for a Floren or halfe a Crown a peece; and a most notable breed of Horses: not to say any thing of that varietie of wild beasts which they have in their Woods and Forrests, and of all sorts of Fowl both for food and pleasure.

The people are much of the same nature with the Hungarians, to whom they have been a long time subject, but somewhat more stubborn and untractable, speak the same language that they do, with some difference in the Dialect only: converted at the same time to the Christian Faith, and under the same formes of Ecclesiasticall government. In former times they used to read, as the Jews doe, from the right hand to the left; but of late herein conform to the Western Nations, from whom they are generally descended.

For that the people of this Country are the progenie of the Saxons, is evident by the Saxon language yet in part retained. 2 We finde that Charls the Great, like a politique Conquercur, placed many of that Nation here; weakning ſo their ſtrength at home, and fortifying the bounds of his Empire. And 3 by a ſtorie recited by Verſtegan, which we touched in our deſcription of Brunſwick; the whole narration is this. Halberſtade was beyond credit troubled with Rats, which a Muſician whom they called the Peed piper, undertaking for a great maſſe of money to deſtroy; they agree: hereupon he tuned his pipes, and all the Rats in the town dancing after them, are drowned in the next River. This done he asketh his pay, but is denyed; whereupon he ſtriketh up a new fit of mirth: all the children male and female of the town follow him into the hill Hamelen, which preſently cloſed again. The parents miſſe their children, and could never hear news of them; now of late ſome have found them in this Country, where I alſo leave them: only telling you this, that this marvellous accident is ſaid to happen the 22 of July 1376. ſince which time it is ſaid that the people of Halberſtade permit not any Drum, Pipe, or other Inſtrument to be ſounded in that ſtreet: and eſtabliſhed a Decree, that in all writings of Contract or Bargain, after the date of our Saviours Nativity, the date alſo of this their childrens tranſmigration ſhould be added in rei memoriam. But though the Dutch or Saxons make up the main bodie of them, yet being conquered by the Hungars, they received many of their Colonies; and in the Northern parts there remain ſtill ſome of the old Scythians planted there by Attila. Out of thoſe Members is the bodie of this State compoſed, ſo ſtrong and populous that it is conceived to be able to raiſe an Armie of 90000 men; and actually did arme 6000 horſe and 12000 foot for the battell of Kereſture, anno 1596. being more by 2000 then the whole Realm of Hungarie ſent unto that ſervice.

Chief Towns herein of the foundation of the Dutch or Saxons, are 1 Hermanſted, in Latine, Hermanopolis (of old called Cibinium from the River Cibin on which it was ſituate) ſo named of one Herman the Founder of it; little inferior to Vienna for ſtrength or greatneſſe; well fortified both by Art and Nature. 2 Cronſtad, in Latine called Corona, by ſome Braſſovia, by others Stephanopolis, this laſt name given it by Stephen King of Hungarie, who repaired and beautified it. Situate on the borders of Walachia, amongſt fruitfull Mountains, remarkable for a fair Librarie, a kinde of Academie, and the moſt noted Emporie or Mart-town of all this Countrie: of great reſort, eſpecially in the time of their publick Fairs, by Turks, Arabians, Greeks, Armenians, Polanders, Walachians, and other Nations. 3 Biſtricium (by the Dutch called Noren) ſo called from the River Biſtrice, which runneth through it: ſo pleaſant and ſo ſweet a town, that there is no durt or mire to be ſeen at any time; or if there be, the people preſently ſwell up the River and ſo cleanſe the ſtreets. 4 Medieſus (by the Dutch, Meduiſh) ſo called, quaſi Medius Conſeſſus, becauſe ſituate in the midſt of the Countrie; a town almoſt as neat as Biſtrice. 5 Segoſwaria, or Schesburg, on the declivitie of an hill. 6 Zabeſus or Luiz, once the chief town of the Saxons, but now much decayed; ſituate in a very deep Vallie, well fenced with waters, and thoſe waters well ſtored with fiſh. 7 Clauſenbourg, the Zeugma of Ptolemie, in Latine called Claudiopolis, from Claudius the ſecond Emperour, by whom reedified: at firſt a Colonie of the Saxons or Dutch only: but of late times the Hungarians coming in as ſtrangers, were at laſt priviledged as Citizens, and inhabit it together with them. The town well ſeated in the middle of a pleaſant Plain, encompaſſed with an handſome wall, and beautified with elegant buildings. 8 Alba Julia, now Weiſenberg, the Apulum of Ptolemie, ſituate on a ſmall brook then called Apnus, (but now Oratas) whence it had the name. Built on the ſide of an Hill near the River Maruch (or Moruſus,) over-looking a large and fruitfull Plain: heretofore a Biſhops See, and the ordinary reſidence of the Prince or Vaivod of Tranſylvania; but now a Garriſon of Hungarian Souldiers, holding it for the Emperour as King of Hungarie.

Chief towns belonging to the Hungarians, and by them inhabited, are 1 Varadin, much mentioned in the ſtories of theſe later times, ſince the Invaſions of the Turks, ſituate on the borders of Hungarie. 2 Thorda, built in or near the place where ſtood the Salinæ of Ptolemie, ſo called from the abundance of Salt-pits which were then about it. 3 Enguedine, by the Romans called Annium, from a Cauſey leading to it, raiſed by one Anuius, and from him ſo named; ſome fragments whereof are ſtill remaining 4 Deva, remarkable for a vein of the beſt Wines. 5 Fenuſchium, affording very pleaſant wines alſo, not inferior to thoſe of Vonuſium in Italie. 6 Zilahi, 7 Gela, of which little memorable. 8 Milleubach, not far from which betwixt it and the Town of Bros, is a very ſtrong fortreſſe, commanding a ſtrait and narrow paſſage leading into this Countrie out of Hungarie.

In the North part hereof lyeth the Province called ZACULEIA, inhabited by the Scyculi, or old brood of Scythians, brought hither by Attila, on his firſt conqueſt of this Countrie, and here ſtill continuing. A people which have much in them of the ancient Hunn, and had heretofore a peculiar language to themſelves: but now they ſpeak the Hungarian generally, differing in the Dialect only. But though, by the neceſſity of commerce and co-habitation, they are brought into the ſame language; they ſtill retain their ancient cuſtoms, governed by their own Laws, and living after the ſame manner as the Switzers doe; each of their Cantons (ſeven in number) being abſolute in and of it ſelf, but all united with the Tranſylvanians, and with one another, for defence of the whole Country againſt the ſeverall pretentions of the German and Turkiſh Emperours. And though they doe acknowledge ſome ſubjection to the Emperour as King of Hungarie, yet it is but what they liſt themſelves: being anciently priviledged from all taxes, more then the paying of a Bull for every houſhold at the Coronation of the new King, when and how oft ſoever it may chance to happen. Their Cantons, (Seds they call them,) are 1 Sepſi, 2 Orbay, 3 Kiſdy, 4 Czyk, 5 Gyrgio, or Uduarheli, 6 Marous Zeek, and 7 Aranias Zeek; ſo called from the chief town in each diviſion. In former times no Noble- man, nor any one of better means and greater eminence then others, was known amongst them: but now of late that parity (or confusion rather) is grown out of credit, and some begin to over-top the rest both in power and title, as in other places. Transylva-nia.

The first Inhabitants of the old Dacia, whereof this Province was a part, were the Anarti, Tauriſci, Rhatacenſii, Cancoenſii, the Burredenſii, and Biephi, &c. first conquered by Lyſimachus, the great and mightie King of Thrace, one of the renowned Captains of Alexander the Great, in token whereof, innumerable medals in the age of our Grand-fathers were found in this Countrie, having his Image on the one side, and this word Victoria on the other. How they were afterwards subdued by the Emperour Trajan, and quitted by Aurelianus, hath been shewn already. Being forsaken by the Romans it was won by the Goths, their constant dwelling, till forced over the Danow by the Hunns, the next possessours of this Countrie, the road or thorow-fare from that time of those barbarous Nations, which out of Asia made their inroads on the Europæans. Having been successively subdued by the Sclaves and Rosses, this part hereof was conquered by Stephen the first King of Hungarie, surnamed the Saint, by whose perswasion and inducements, they received the Gospell. Governed after this time, as a member of that Kingdome, by a Deputie whom they called the Vaivod of Transylvania, (the word Vaivod signifying as much as Præfectus Militiæ, or a Lord Lieutenant;) a man by reason of the greatnesse of his place and power of most authoritie in that Kingdome. The names and succession of these Vaivods till the time of John Huniades, comes imperfectly to us; but after that more clear and constant in this order following.

The VAIVODS and PRINCES of TRANSYLVANIA.

1 John, surnamed Huniades, made Vaivod hereof by Uladislaus the 4. A man of great valour and renown, the great Defender of his Country against the Turks, whom he overthrew in many battels, especially in that of Marous, where he slew 50000 of them. He died about the year 1458.

2 Stephen, of the noble familie of Battori, Vaivod in the time of Matthias King of Hungarie, the son of Huniades.

3 John II. surnamed de Sepusio, after the death of Lewis the 2. chosen King of Hungarie, of whom before.

1526 4 Americus, Bishop of Veradium, made Vaivod by John de Sepusio, on his taking of the Crowne of Hungarie: treacherously murdered for not complying with the Turks, anno 1534.

1540 5 Stephen Mayſat, a noble Hungarian but extremely ambitious, having not long after the death of Americus usurped the Vaivodship, was in the year 1540 confirmed in that dignitie.

1541 6 Stephen III. son of John de Sepusio the late King of Hungarie, by Solyman the Magnificent made Vaivod of Transylvania, being then an Infant, by whom deprived of his Kingdome of Hungarie not long before.

7 Stephen IV. surnamed Battori, made Vaivod by the Turk; and afterwards on the commendation of Amurath the 3. chosen King of Poland.

1575 8 Christopher Battori brother of Stephen, on whose election unto Poland he succeeded here, and was the first who leaving the title of Vaivod, took that of Prince of Transylvania.

9 Sigismund son of Christopher, shook off the Turkish bondage, defeated many of their Armies, and slew some of their Bassas (the Scanderberg of the times he lived in.) But not being able to hold out against so potent an adversarie, he resigned his estate to Rodolphus the Emperour; having for it in exchange the Dukedoms of Oppelen and Ratibor in Silesia, and an annuall pension of 50000 Joachims. But finding his pension ill paid, he made a new resignation of it to 1599 10 Andrew Battori, cousin of Sigismund, slain within the year by the Vaivod of Valachia. After whose death

1601 11 Rodolphus Emperour and King of Hungarie, is admitted Prince of Transylvania, on the second resignation of Sigismund: But his Souldiers behaving themselves with too great insolence, Sigismund was called back again, but never well setled.

1604 12 Justine Battori, surnamed Botscay, succeeded on the death of Sigismund, by the power of the Turkes, by whose help he cleared the Country of the German Souldiers.

1608 13 Gabriel Battori, of the familie of the former Princes, succeeded by the favour of Achmet the Great Turk: after whose death so welcome to his neighbours and subjects.

1613 14 Bethlem Gabour, by the same Achmet, was made Prince of Transylvania, a professed enemie of the house of Austria, but one that with a great deal of noise did them little hurt.

1630 15 Ste-

Moldavia. 1630 15 Stephen Kagotzi, on the death of Bethlem Gabour, ſucceeded Prince by the power and favour of the Turks; under whoſe Clitentele and protection he doth ſtill enjoy it, (as his predeceſſours did before him) againſt all pretentions of the Empire: as on the other ſide, defended by the Emperour and Crown of Poland from being made thrall unto the Turkes.

2 MOLDAVIA.

MOLDAVIA is bounded on the Eaſt with the Sea, on the Weſt with Tranſylvania; on the North with the River Nieſter, the Tyras of Ptolemie and the Antients, by which parted from Podolia a Province of POLAND; and on the South with Walachia.

It is ſo called, as ſome ſay, quaſi Mœtavia from its neerneſſe to the fens of Mœotis, or rather from the Hunnes and other people of thoſe fennes, who poſſeſſed the ſame. Others conceive that it was at firſt called Maurdavia, i. e. nigrorum Davorum Regio, the countrey of the black Davi, (for by the name of Davi were the Dacians called, as we finde in Strabo and ſome others:) ſo named from their complexion or the colour of their Caps and other garments; as Nigra Ruſſia, a neere neighbouring Province of the Realm of Poland, on the like occaſion. But the more probable opinion (as I take it) is, that it tooke this name from the River Moldava which runneth through it; as the Moravians had that name from the River Morava.

The countrey is very fruitfull in corn, wine, graſſe, and wood, but more uſed for paſturage then tillage, by reaſon of the great want of people to manure the land: by meanes whereof it affordeth great plenty of Beefe and Mutton, whereby they ſupply ſome parts of Poland, and the populous City of Conſtantinople. And theſe they iſſue out in ſo great a number, that the tenth penny exacted by the Prince or Vaivod, in the way of Cuſtome, amounteth to 150000 Crownes per annum: and yet the Clergy and the Gentry are diſcharged of this impoſt. But the maine trade of this Countrey is not driven by the Natives, the Port-townes being full of Armenians, Jews, Hungarians, and Raguzian Merchants, who foreſtall the Markets, and barter all their corn and wine into Ruſſia and Poland; their skins, wax, honey, powdered beefe, Pulſe, and butter into Conſtantinople.

The countrey is in a manner round, the Diameter each way being neere upon 300 Engliſh miles: but ſo ill-inhabited by reaſon of the neighbourhood of the Turkes, Tartars, and Polonian Coſacks, that certain Engliſh Gentlemen having in the yeare 1609. travelled at leaſt 240 miles in the countrey, could meet in all the way but nine townes and villages; and for an hundred miles together, the graſſe ſo high that it rotted on the ground for want of Cattell to eat it, and of men to order it. So that we are not to expect in it many eminent Cities, or townes of note: though it afford two Archbiſhops, and two Biſhops Sees, followers (as all the reſt of the people are) of the traditions and doctrines of the Church of Greece.

The principall of thoſe which be are 1 Occazoma, or Zucconia, the Vaivods ſeat, 2 Fucciania, 3 Fazeling, of which little memorable: 4 Kotjim, a place of great ſtrength on the borders of Poland: by ſome called Cocbina, the ordinary magazeen of the countrey: 5 Iaſſy commonly called Yas, the chief Town for wealth and trade in all this Province: 6 Bender, Nieſter; on the Euxine Sea. 7 Polada neer the Danow, 8 Biaolograd or Bologrove ſituate on or neer the river Tyras, now called a ſtrong town againſt the Tartars and Polonians. 9 Kele, antiently called Achilleia, ſituate on the ſhores of the Euxine Sea, for the moſt part compaſſed round with the waters of it; and therefore ſaid by Ptolemie to be an Iſland. 10 Ac Germen, of old called Aſprocaſtron, & Moncaſtrum, a very ſtrong Town in the ſame coaſt alſo: both taken by Baiazet the ſecond Emperour of the Turkes, anno 1485. But theſe three Towns are not ſo properly in Moldavia, at leaſt not in Moldavia properly ſo called, as in a little Province called Beſſarabia, lying on the Euxine, formerly counted part thereof, till conquerred by the Turkes in the year aforeſaid, it became a member of that Empire. A tract inhabited by the Beſſi in the times of Ptolemie, who being drive out of their countrey by the Bulgarians, ſetled themſelves (as ſome ſay) in that part of Sclavonia, which is now called Boſnia.

The whole Countrey following the fortune of Tranſylvania, and the reſt of Dacia till the coming of the Sclaves and Roſſes, was for a while accompted part of the Ruſſian Empire; till the diſmembring of that Empire by the Tartars. After which time it was ſometimes Homager to the Polanders, ſometimes to the Hungarians, according as the Vaivods or Princes of it could finde beſt conditions. By Mahomet the Great it was made tributary to the Turkes; but the tribute at the firſt very light and eaſie, not above 2000 Crownes, per annum: that mighty Emperour, who aimed at more profitable conqueſts, being loth to ſpend his Forces on ſo poore a purchaſe, as the addition of this Province would have been unto him. But Baiazet his ſon, finding how fit it lay for the more abſolute command of the Euxine Sea, tooke in that part hereof, which is called Beſſarabia, reducing it into the form of a Turkiſh Province, anno 1485. as before was ſaid, impoſing on the reſt an increaſe of the former tribute, and ſo left it unto the diſpoſall of its naturall Princes. After which time the Vaivods fearing to be made Vaſſals to the Turkes, did many times riſe in Armes againſt them; aided therein ſometimes by the Hungarians, and ſometimes by the Polander; which laſt pretended to the Soveraignty and chiefage of it. Bogdanus Vaivod hereof in the time of Selimus the ſecond uniting himſelfe more cloſely with the Polonians; became thereby ſuſpected by the Turkiſh Tyrant, who with a great power chaſed him out of his countrey: and gave the ſame unto one John a Moldavian born, but bred up for the the moſt part in the Turkiſh Court (where he renounced his faith, and was circumciſed) under the yeerly tribute of 60000 Crownes. But John the new made Vaivod was no ſooner ſetled, but he returned again to his firſt Religion, and for that cauſe grew leſſe affected by the Turkes: Which being obſerved by the then Vaivod of Valachia, he practiſed to obtain that dignity for his brother Peter, offering to double the ſaid tribute; and to aſſiſt in ſubjugation of the Coûntrey. The Turk accepting of theſe offers, compounds an Army of 70000 Valachians, 30000 Turkes, and 3000 Hungarians, with which they fall into Moldavia: and were ſo gallantly received by the noble Vaivod, that few of them eſcaped the ſlaughter. But being afterwards betrayed by his old friend Czarnieviche; and againſt faith given barbarouſly murdered by the Turkiſh Baſſa: Moldavia fell into the hands of the Turkes, and was united to that Empire, an. 1574. the Vaivods from that time forwards, being nominated by the Turkiſh Emperours, and governing as ſubſtitutes and Lievtenants for and under them. And though Aaron one of the ſucceeding Vaivods did ſhake off this yoke, and confederated himſelf with Sigiſmund Prince of Tranſylvania, and Michael Vaivod of Valachia, for defence of themſelves and their Eſtates againſt that Enemy; yet being afterwards ſupplanted by Roſwan one of his own ambitious ſubjects, and that confederacie diſjointed; it became ſubject firſt unto the Polonians by the power and practiſe of Zamoyskie, Chancellour of Poland; and then unto Rodolphus Emperour of Germany; and finally unto the Turke, as before it was. And though the Polanders have ſince made uſe of ſome opportunities in impoſing Vaivods on this countrey, in deſpite of the Turkes; yet was it commonly to their owne loſſe, little or no benefit to the Moldavians: and in the end drew the whole power of the Turkes upon themſelves in the reign of Oſman: never ſince intermedling in the affaires of this Province, but leaving them entirely to the Turkes diſpoſing; who receive hence ſome yearly tribute, but have not hitherto obtained the entire poſſeſſion of it, ſo long ſince aimed at by thoſe Tyrants. Valachia.

3 VALACHIA.

VALACHIA is bounded on the Eaſt with Moldavia and a branch of the Iſter, or Danubius bending towards the North; on the Weſt with Raſcia; on the North with Tranſylvania, and ſome part of Moldavia, and on the South with the Danubius wholly, by which parted from Servia and Bulgaria. Firſt called Flaccia, from one Flaccus, a Noble Roman, who on the conqueſt hereof in the time of Trajan, brought hither an Italian Colonie; afterwards by corruption Vlachia, and at laſt Valachia.

But the name of Flaccia or Vlachia, was at firſt of a more large extent, then it is at preſent; comprehending all Moldavia alſo: divided in thoſe times by a ridge of Mountaines, into Ciſalpina, and Tranſalpinaa; the name of Moldavia, being afterwards appropriated to the one, and that of Valachia (properly and ſpecially ſo called) unto the other. The people of both in token of their firſt extraction, ſpeak a corrupt Latine or Italian language: but in matters of Religion follow the dictates of the Greek Church, and obey the Patriarch of Conſtantinople; under whom all Eccleſiaſticall affairs are governed by one Archbiſhop and two Biſhops. In other things they partake generally of the rudeneſſe and barbarity of thoſe Nations which have ſince ſubdued them; being a rough hewn people, hardly civilized, ignorant for the moſt part of letters and all liberall ſciences: not weaned perfectly (in ſo long time of their poſſeſſion of Chriſtianity) from the ſuperſtitions of the Gentiles; ſwearing by Jupiter and Venus, marying, and unmarying at their pleaſures; much given to magicall charms, and incantations; and burying with their dead both clothes and victuals, for their relief in that long journey to the other world.

It is in length 500, in breadth 120 miles: the countrey for the moſt part plain, and very fertile; affording ſtore of Cattell, a breed of excellent Horſes, iron-mines, ſalt-pits, and all proviſions neceſſarie to the life of man. Some vines they alſo have, and not few mines of gold and ſilver, more then for feare of the Turkes and other ill neighbours they dare diſcover: begirt about with woodie mountaines, which afford them fewell; and very well watered with the Rivers of Pruth, called antiently 1 Hieraſus, 2 Stertius, 3 Fulmina, 4 Teln, 5 Alluta, all of them falling into 6 the Danow; which in this Province, at the influx of Fulmina takes the name of Iſter: yet is it not (at the preſent) very populous, the ſpaciouſneſſe and fertilitie hereof conſidered; by reaſon of the ill neighbourhood of the Tartars, Turks, and Polonian Coſſackes: their late long wars againſt thoſe Nations and the Dutch, having much decreaſed their former numbers: with which they ſo abounded in the times foregoing, that the Vaivod of this countrey in the year 1473. was able upon little warning to bring 70000 men into the field for a preſent ſervice.

Places of moſt note herein are 1 Galatz on the influx of the River Pruth or Hieraſus into the Danubius, the waters of which River are ſo unwholeſome, that it cauſeth the body to ſwell. 2 Treſcortum, not far from which they dig a bituminous earth, ſo refined and pure, that uſually they make Candles of it inſtead of wax. 3 Prailaba, by ſome called Brailovia, the town of moſt trade in all this countrey; ſituate on the Danow, and defended with a very ſtrong Caſtle fortified by Art, and Nature, and furniſhed with a ſtrong garriſon of Turkes, as the key of this Province, opening the dore unto the reſt. The town moſt cruelly deſtroyed and razed to the ground, with an incredible ſlaughter of the Inhabitants of all ſexes, ages, for the ſpaces of four dayes together: by John the Vaivod of Moldavia ſpoken of before, at his firſt revolting from the Turkes: but the Caſtle in regard of the great ſtrength of it, ſcarce attempted by him. 4 Teina, a Fortreſſe of great ſtrength, but in the hands of the Turkes alſo. 5 Zorza, corruptly for San-Georgio, ſeated on the Danow, with an arm whereof the

Caſtle of it is encompaſſed, garriſoned by the Turkes, and by them held to be ſo ſtrong and ſo ſafe a place, that at the taking of it by Sigiſmund the Prince of Tranſylvania, an. 1596. there were found in it 39 great peeces of Ordinance with ſuch ſtore of Armes and Ammunition as might well have ſerved for a whole kingdome. 6 Tergoviſta, ſometimes the chief City of the Province, and the ordinary reſidence of the Vaivod, till the taking of it by the Turkes: once beautified with a fair and famous Monaſtery, by the Turkes converted into a fortreſſe, environed with deep trenches, ſtrong Bulwarks upon every quarter, and great ſtore of Ordinance: but many times loſt and got againe according to the changes and chance of war. 7 Bucareſta, about a dayes journey from Tergoviſta, ſeated on the Danow, remarkable for two bridges built neer unto it: the one of Boats, (the laying whereof took up no leſſe then an whole moneths time) for the tranſporting of the Army of Sinan Baſſa, againſt Sigiſmund Prince of Tranſylvania before mentioned: and broken down by the ſaid Baſſa in his flight, having bern worſted in all places by the Tranſylvanian. The other work of the Emperour Trajan in his warre againſt Decebalus King of Dacia, built all of ſtone, and laid on piles and Arches of a wonderfull greatneſſe; 24 piles or pillars whereof are yet remaining to the great admiration of all beholders. 8 Cebium, of old called Lycoſtomos, in vain beſieged by the forces of Mahomet the Great, coming in perſon to ſubdue this petit Province. 9 Zarmizegethuſa, the ſeat Royall of Decebalus king of Dacia, taken and deſtroyed by Trajan in his war againſt him: who cauſing it to be repaired and beautified more then formerly, gave it the priviledges of Rome, and the name of Ulpia Trajana; which it retained as long as Dacia was a Province of the Roman Empire. Now a ſmall village called Vetzel. Some ſtones have been digged hereabouts up with this inſcription, COLONIA ULPIA TRAJANA, AUG. DACIE. ZARMIS: which cleerly ſhew as well the dignity and eſteem, as the antiquity of the place before Trajans time.

This Province, as the reſt of Dacia, on that ſide of the Danow, after the coming in of the Sclaves and Roſſes, was under Princes of their own, whom they called (as thoſe of Tranſylvania and Moldavia did) by the name of Vaivods. Protected by the Hungarian Kings they lived long in peace, till ſenſible of the approaching danger which the conqueſt of moſt part of Servia and Bulgaria by the Turkes, was like to bring them: the Vaivod of it in the time of Baiazet the firſt paſſed over the Danow with his Forces, and having done great ſpoil on the Turkiſh Territories, returned againe into his countrey. Rather provoked then weakened with which invaſion, Baiazet comes into Valachia, overcomes the Vaivod in a pitched field, compelling him to ſue for peace, and to pay him tribute. But Baiazet being not long after taken Priſoner by Tamerlane, and the ſucceſſion controverted amongſt his ſonnes, the impoſed tribute was with-held; till Mahomet the fift King of the Turkes, having ſetled the affaires of that tottering State, anno 1417. enforced them to a new compoſition, and the payment of all former reckonings. The fortunate ſucceſſes of Huniades in ſeverall battels induced them once more to change their Maſters, and to put themſelves under the protection of the Hungarians, as they had been formerly, but they paid deere for it: their countrey being made the Thorow-fare of the Turkiſh forces in their attempts upon that Kingdome. But the Hungarians being vanquiſhed at the battell of, Caſſova by Amurath the ſecond, the accuſtomed tribute was brought in, and the Turkes ſatisfied for the preſent, being then hardly put to it by the famous Scanderbeg. Not long after in the yeare 1462. Mahomet the Great undertooke the conqueſt of this Countrey, upon advertiſement that Wladus the then Vaivod of it intended to joine with the Hungarians in ſome war againſt him: and finding how unprofitably he had ſpent his Forces in fighting againſt woods, mountaines, and a waſted countrey, he ſet up Dracala the younger brother of Wladus, to claim the Government, who making a party amongſt the people, and having the Turk for his aſſiſtance and ſupport, poſſeſſed himſelfe of the eſtate, to be holden of him as a Vaſſall to the Turkiſh Empire. And it continued in this ſtate, the Vaivods being after this at the Turkes appointment, and paying all exactions impoſed upon them, till the revolt of Sigiſmund the Prince of Tranſylvania, anno 1595. at what time Michael the then Vaivod hereof, taking that opportunity to ſhake off this yoak, confederated with him and the Moldavian for their common ſafety. And though he held out longer againſt Turk and German then either of the other did; diſcomfited the Turkes by his own proper Forces at the battell of Nicopolis, vanquiſhed the Tranſylvanians, and added that Province for a while unto this Eſtate, yet being at laſt outed of his countrey by the Polanders, and an other put into his place, he was ſhamefully ſlain in his own Tent by the privitie and conſent of Baſta, Lievtenant of Rodolphus Emperour, and King of Hungary. After whoſe death the countrey miſerably diſtracted betwixt two Vaivods, the one placed by the Emperour Rodolph, and the other by Mahomet the Grand Signieur; endured all the ſpoil and wrack which ſo calamitous a competition could bring upon it: till in the end the fortune of the Turkes prevailing, the Valachians were conſtrained to ſubmit unto their diſpoſall, and receive their Vaivods from that Court as they had done formerly; performing their accuſtomed duties, and paying ſuch yearly tribute is as laid upon them. Which notwithſtanding partly by their owne naturall unquietneſſe, and partly by the ambition of ſuch perſons as contend for that dignity; they have ſince been many times embroyled in wars; never ſo quietly compoſed, but that a new hope, or the artifices of the Turkiſh Miniſters ſtarts them into action. By meanes whereof when they have tired and ſpent themſelves in their own combuſtions, they may in fine be fully conquered, and made the next addition to the Turkiſh Monarchie.

RASCIA is bounded on the East with Valachia, on the West with Hungary; on the North with Transilvania, and on the South with the River Danow: encompassed on three sides with that River, and another now called Temes, by the Latines, Samus; and on the East divided from Valachia by the River Alluta: Called Rascia from the Rasciani, a Sclavonian people, whom Ortelius placeth in this tract; and from him Maginus.

Places of most importance in it are 1 Chrysonicum, an old town almost wholly ruinated, till fortified by the Turkes, anno 1449. who marking the convenient situation of it on the Banks of Danubius, opposite to the influx of the River Morava, and how commodiously it stood to command and annoy the Countrey; made it their first work to possesse themselves of it. 2 Bodon, upon the Danow also, a town of trade, memorable for the Marts or Fairs which are here held annually. 3 Zarnovia, 4 Covin, 5 Novebarde, 6 Severin, not far from which, betwixt it and Bucaresta a Town of Valachia, are the remainders of Trajans bridge before mentioned. 7 Colambes, 8 Columbella.

These Rascians, as before is said, were a tribe of Sclaves, setled in this countrey at the time of their first spreading in the East, and here continuing ever since in possession of it. Governed at first by their own Princes, whom by a name borrowed from the Grecians, they called their Despots: that being once the title of the heir apparent or designed successour of the Eastern Empire, as Cæsar had been formerly in the Empire of Rome. But as the following Emperours did affect new titles, so that of Despot fell from one step to another, till given at last unto the Governours of Provinces, as the Despot of Epirus, Peloponnesus, &c. and in the end assumed by the severall Princes of Rascia, Servia, and Bulgaria. How this estate became united unto Servia, I am yet to seek: but sure I am it was united in the person of George, Despot of Servia, and as a part of his estate surprized by Amurath the second, who boasted his successe therein (in a speech made unto his souldiers at the siege of Belgrade) notwithstanding that he had to strive with hunger, thirst, labour, and desperation. So that depending as it did, on the fortune of Servia, we shall there hear more of it: here adding onely by the way, that at the time when Sigismund Prince of Transylvania had wonne so many noble victories against the Turkes, 10000 of these Rascians casting off that yoke, offered themselves unto his service: the onely memorable action which is told us of them since their subjection to the Turke; though that was onely the attempt of some private Adventurers, the whole Nation still continuing in obedience, as before they did.

And thus we see by whom the whole Province of old Dacia became in part possessed, and in part made tributary to the Turkes: the whole being so at their disposing, that before the Revolt of the three Provinces so often mentioned, it yeelded one way with another into the Treasury of the Grand Signeur no lesse then a million of Ducats yearly. Knolles in his Turkish History doth report it so. And his Continuatour doth affirm, that Moldavia onely before the said revolt, did yearly yeeld unto the Turk a whole tun of gold, 2000 horses for service, 10000 great measures of wheat, with as much barley, and a wonderfull proportion of butter, honey, and other victuals, adding withall that the other two Provinces paid as much or more for their yearly tribute. After which rate the estimate made by Knolles may hold very good. But since the reduction of these Countries to their former obedience, the Turkes have been more moderate in their exactions then they were before, for feare of startling them to some new engagement, whom they have brought to this obedience and conformity with such a vast expence both of bloud and treasure, as would have purchased the best Kingdome of Christendom in the open market. In somuch that the ordinary tribute of Moldavia is now but 40000 Chequins, that for Valachia but 24000 of the same coyne: besides 1000 horses yearly sent from both. Such bribes and presents as are given by the Vaivods hereof, either to get or hold their places being Merchantable ware, and wholly at the Turkes disposing, not being part of this Accompt. Which said we will passe over the Danow, and looke upon the other part of this Province, called Dacia nova or New Dacia, containing after our accompt foure Provinces of the Roman Empire, that is to say, both Mysias, Scythia, and Dardania, besides the two Dacias, Mediterranea and Ripensis, interjected betwixt the two Mysias as before is said: all now reduced onely unto two of the Turkish Provinces, namely the Countries of Servia and Bulgaria.

SERVIA is bounded on the East with Bulgaria, on the West with Bosnia, and some part of the Lower Hungary; on the North with the Danubius, by which parted from Rascia; on the South with Albania, and part of Macedon. It containeth all Mysia superior, and a great part of Dardania; and tooke this new name from the Servii, or Serabi, a Sclavonian people, of whom more hereafter.

Servia. The Countrey very rich and fruitfull, brfore the conquest of it by the Turkes; well stored with mines of gold, and silver, especially about Zerbenic, a strong town hereof. The people rude and grosse, and much given to wine; false of their promises and that upon slight occasions, so that there is but little trust to be laid upon them.

Chief Rivers of this Countrey are Colubra, and 2 Lim, falling into the Savus, 3 Ibar falling into 4 Morava, as that into the Danow over against Chrysonicum, or Cruscveccia, a strong town of Rascia. Principall towns hereof 1 Nissa, the Nessum as I take it of Ptolemie; by whom said to be a City of the Dardanians, now the Metropolis of this countrey, and the key thereof; besieged and taken by Amurath the third King of the Turks, anno 1367. 2 Vidina, by the Turkes called Kiratow, taken by Feris Beg, in the beginning of Bajazet the first; and ever since the seat of a Turkish Sanziack under the Beglerbeg or Bassa of Temeswar. 3 Cratova, and 4 Zerbenic, rich in silver mines; a great temptation to the Turks to invade this Countrey. 5 Simandria, or Senderovia, by some called Spenderobe; by the Hungarians Zendrem, by the Turkes Semunder; situate on the Danow not far from Belgrade, and taken by Amurath the second, anno 1438. since governed by a Turkish Sanziack under the Beglerbeg of Buda. 6 Novegrad in the borders hereof, fortified with an impregnable Castle. 7 Stonibourg (in Latine Stonibrigadun) the ordinary seat of the antient Despots. 8 Prisden, said by Mercator to be the birth-place of the Emperour Justinian; most like to be Tauresium, a City of the Dardanians, mentioned by Procopius, who maketh it the birth-place of that Emperour, by whom repaired and fortified with four great Turrets, thence called Tetrapyrgon. But others (more probably) make him to be born at Labrida, a town of Bulgaria; of which more hereafter. 9 Scopi, by Ptolemie called Scipi, and 10 Ulpianum, first built by Trajan, whose forename was Ulpius, afterwards re-edified by the said Justinian, and called Secunda Justiniana, (Justiniana Prima being in Bulgaria) now a poore Village called Pirethy as Lazius; or Czanadre as Martin Niger is of opinion. 11 Rhæiaria, by Ptolemie for distinction sake, called Rhætiaria Mysorum, then the chief City of the Mysians; of which now no ruines are remaining. 12 Ravenitzen, the Vendenis of Ptolemie, but not else observable

The old Inhabitants of this Countrey, such as are most considerable in the story of it, were the Bastarnæ, the Dardani, and the Mæsi: the Triterneſii, and Picenſii, spoken of by Ptolemie, being either branches of the Mæsi, or else an obscure people not worth the looking after. Of these the Dardanians were most antient, inhabiting neere Mount Hæmus, on the borders of Macedon; a barbarous people, and perpetuall Enemies of that Crown, most mischievous in their attempts and designes against it, in the declining state thereof, making great and frequent inrodes into that wealthy Countrey, with the spoiles whereof they inriched themselves. Insomuch that Philip the Father of Perseus finding no other likely means to be rid of that trouble, negotiated with the Bastarne a strong and hardie Nation that dwelt beyond the Danubius, to abandon their owne dwellings, and come to him with their wives and children, promising to assist them in rooting out the Dardanians, and give them possession of their Countrey. But Philip dying as the Bastarne were in their march through Thrace, and no care taken by his sonne to pursue the businesse, they returned all home againe except 30000, which pierced into Dardonia, and made their own fortunes as they could. This practise as it gave matter of quarrell to the Romans, against the Macedonian, so it occasioned Perseus the sonne of Philip, to make use of these Bastarnæ against the Romans, at whose request 10000 horse and as many foot passed over the Danow under the conduct of Claudicus, a King amongst them. But finding that Perseus was too strait-laced to part with money for their pay, they returned againe; forraging the Countrey as they passed: but whether they passed over that River, or mingled themselves with the rest of their Nation, who upon Philips invitation had before come over, that I doe not find. However, coming by this means acquainted with the sweets of this Countrey, divers of them came over hither in the following times, incorporating with the Dardanians, or bordering neer them; insomuch as Tacitus for the most part joins them both together, either as the same, or a neighbouring Nation, first vanquished and added to the Roman Empire by Cn. Curio Scribonius, immediately upon the end of the civil wars, raised by Spartacus & the Fencers, or Gladiatores: the Mysians or the Mæsi being broken at the same time also, an. V. C. 681. As for the Mæsi being the last and greatest of these Nations, they were most probably a Colonie of the Mysians of the lesser Asia, antiently called Mysi, and the Country Mysia, as those Asians were; and as those Europeans are by the Greek writers generally, and by Florus and some others amongst the Latines: though after for distinction sake, Tacitus, Pliny, Virgil, and generally most Latine Authours give them the name of Mæsi. A fierce and savage people they were held to be, Barbari barbarorum, as my Authour calleth them; more barbarous then commonly the Barbarians were: but for all that, subdued by M. Licinius Crassus in the time of Augustus Cæsar, who overcame them in two battels, and after vanquished the Bastarnæ and their King Deldo whom hee killed in fight; the Countrey reckoned after that as a Roman Province. Continuing in this estate, till the fall of the Eastern Empire, it was subjected by the Sclavi or Sarmatians of Europe; and in the division of the spoile fell unto the Sorabi a Sclavonian people; contractedly called Sorbi, and at last Serbi, Servi, and the Countrey Servia. Reduced againe to the obedience of the Eastern Emperours by Basilius Porphyrogenitus, an. Ch. 1000. or thereabouts; more absolutely conquered by John and Manuel Comnenus, two of his successours: but so as they were suffered to live under their owne Princes, whom they called Despots, Homagers to the Empire, and depending on it. First set on by the Turkes in the time of Lazarus the Despot, from whom Amurath the first tooke the towne of Nissa, being the chief of all this Countrey: provoked thereto by the great forces which the Servians and Bulgarians had raised against him, for the siege of Adrianople. And though Lazarus terrified fied with this losse, made his peace with Amurath: yet after he brake out againe into open war, in which he was overcome and slaine in the plaines of Cossova, whereof more anon. To Lazarus succeeded Stephen who quietly enjoyed his Dominions here; the Turkes being in the mean time embroyled in warre amongst themselves by the sonnes of Baiazet. But that difference being once composed, and Mahomet absolutely setled in his Fathers throne; the Turks begun again to pursue this quarrell: which George the son of Stephen compounded with Amurath the second, son of Mahomet, paying the Turk an yearly tribute, and giving him his daughter Mary for a wife or Concubine. But this alliance did not so well unite their affections, (though George did many ill Offices in regard thereof to his Christian neighbours) nor so well settle his estate; but that Amurath in fine dispossessed him first of Rascia, and afterwards of Servia also, for letting Huniades escape whom hee had in his power. And though Amurath was necessitated to restore Servia again, upon the peace made with Vladislaus the King of Hungary; yet Mahomet the Great, on the death of George, soone possessed himselfe of it. For Lazarus the youngest of Georges sonnes having deprived Stephen and George his elder Brethren (whose eyes Amurath had before put out to make them uncapable of the Government) of the principality; compelled them to seek to Mahomet for aid. But dying whilest these matters were in agitation, his widow put her selfe and her three sonnes Peter, John, and Martin, under the protection of the Hungarians; and by that meanes, but with much trouble and many difficulties (the blinde Brethren still soliciting the Turkes against her) held the State a while: till the people finding no assurance in that kinde of government, and weary of the dayly harmes they received from the Turkes, yeelded themselves absolutely to the power of Mahomet, about the yeare 1460, continuing ever since a Province of the Turkish Empire.

BULGARIA is bounded on the East with the Euxine Sea; on the West with Servia, on the North with the River Danow, which is here called Ister; on the South with Thrace. Called formerly by the name of Mysia inferior, as lying lower then the other on the course of that River; as Servia, lying up the water was called Mysia superior. Afterwards it was reckoned of as a part of Dacia, and in that notion was the Birth-place of Galerius, one of the Cesars in the Empire of Diocletian; born in this countrey neere the borders of Thrace; not far from the City of Sardica, who therefore in the Martyrologies of the middle times, was called by the name of Dacianus. Finally, it took this name from the Bulgars, a Scythian people, who in the yeare 566. possessed themselves of it.

The Countrey for the most part full of sharp and rugged hills, branches of the great Mountaine Hamus, which divides it from Thrace, and spred themselves over all this Province, in somuch that even the midlands of it are rough and stony; and though the lower parts have some plains and valleys, yet are they generally full of Woods and Deserts; the most unpleasant, and least peopled part of both the Dacias. The Inhabitants hereof in some conformity to the countrey, are patient of all toil and labour, and not easily tired; but nothing is more troublesome then their conversation: more full of courage, then of valour, their courage not proceeding by the rules of reason, but issuing onely out of brutishnesse, or a naturall fiercenesse.

Places of most note in it, are 1 Axium, or Axiopolis, on the bankes of Danubius, which from this town begins to take the name of Ister. It is now called Colonamich, of no great fame otherwise. 2 Dinogetia, by Antonine called Dinigutia, now Drimago, situate also on the Ister, opposite to the influxe of Hierasus, and the town of Galatz. 3 Mesembria, situate on the Euxine, and still retaining the old name; in Strabo, by some errour of the Transcribers called Menebria. 4 Marcianopolis, on the Ister or Danubius also, built by Trajan in honour of Marcia his sister, whence it had the name: in vain besieged by the Gothes, at their first irruptions on this countrey; and afterwards much mentioned in the stories of that warlike people; for many bickerings, and some great battels they had neere it with the Emperour Claudius, in one of which overthrowne by him wich a mighty slaughter. 5 Nicopolis (by the Turkes called Nigebol) built by the same Trajan on the Danow, at the fall of the River Iatre, at his returne from the conquest of Dacia, whence the occasion of the name; the word Nicopolis signifying the City of Victorie: sufficiently memorable for the founder of it, more for the many great battels fought neer unto it; whereof two the principall. The first, that of Sigismund the Emperour and King of Hungary, besieging it with an Army of 130000 Christians, in the time of Baiazet the first (whose Father Amurath had taken it from the King of Bulgaria) the issue of which siege was this, that Baiazet coming to raise the siege, obtained the victory with the loss of 60000 Turks: the army of the Christians being wholly routed, 20000 slain, all the rest almost taken prisoners; and the young Emperor forced to flie by Sea to Thrace, thence unto Constantinople, afterwards to Rhodes; and at last after 18 months absence to his Realm of Hungary: the other (as it were in revenge of this) was fought betwixt Michael Vaivod of Valachia, and the forces of Mahomet the third, over whom the Vaivod got a remarkable victory, and as the fruits thereof sacked the City it self, carrying thence great spoil and booty, and infinite multitudes of people, with some whereof he made up his Army, sending the rest to inhabit and manure the void and desert places of his own Dominions. 6 Sophia, called Tibiscum in the time of Ptolemie, repaired by the Emperour Justinian, who gave it this name from a famous and magnificent Temple, founded and dedicated by him unto St. Sophia. The ordinary Residence for these late times of a Turkish Beglerbeg, who hath the chiefe command of Europe under the grand Signieur: once taken by Huniades, and by him at the command of Vladislaus King of Hungary, burnt unto the ground; but afterwards repaired and more strongly fortified, then it had beene formerly. 7 Varna, antiently called Dionysiopolis, situate

Bulgaria. ſituate on the Euxine Sea, neer the borderes of Thrace: remarkable for the great defeat ſthere given the Chriſtians; the firſt flight of Huniades from the face of the Turkes, and the death of Uladiſlaus King of Hungary, ſpoken of before. 8 Sumium, 9 Pezechium, 10 Calacrium, 11 Galata, and 12 Macropolis; all taken by the Hungarians in their way to Varna, and loſt againe upon the iſſue of that battell. 13 Siliſtria, at this time the chief City hereof, and the ordinary abode of a Turkiſh Baſſa: delivered to Amurath the firſt, by Saſmenos, Prince or King of Bulgaria, out of a vaine hope to ſave thereby the reſt of his countrey. 14 Paraſtlaba, or Perſtlaba, the antient ſeat of the Kings of Bulgaria; till the taking of it by John Zimiſces Emperour of Conſtantinople, by whom cauſed to be called Johannopolis: but it ſoon loſt that new name, and is now an ordinary village called Peretalaw. 15 Ternova, the uſuall ſeat or reſidence of the later Princes of this countrey, at the conqueſt of it by the Turkes. 16 Budina, once of great importance, and the chief of this countrey; but being taken by Huniades in the courſe of his victories, it was by him burnt downe to the ground, as having been the cauſe of much warre to the Chriſtians there: ſuppoſed to be built in or neer the place, where once ſtood the old City of Oeſcus, the principall town of the Triballi, called therefore Oeſcus Triballorum; though ſome will have that City to be now called Blida. 17 Venuzina, a towne of great ſtrength, and one of the firſt peeces taken by the Turkes. 18 Coſſova, fatall to the Chriſtians, who in the plaines hereof had two main defeates: the firſt by Amurath the firſt, who here diſcomfited Lazarus the Deſpot of Servia, and the greateſt Army that the Chriſtians ever raiſed againſt the Turkes: Lazarus himſelfe being ſlain in the fight, and Amurath himſelfe ſhortly after the battell ſtabbed in the belly by one Miles Cobelitz, a wounded and halfe dead ſouldier, as he was taking a view of the dead bodies which lay there in heaps. The laſt by Amurath the ſecond to the famous Huniades, whom he here diſcomfited after a cruell fight continuing three dayes together; in which were ſlain 17000 Chriſtians, and amongſt them the greateſt part of the Hungarian Nobility, Huniades put againe to flight, and forced to ſome extremities to preſerve his life, the Turkes buying this great victory with the loſſe of 40000 men, as themſelves confeſſed. The place in which theſe fields were fought, called the Plaines of Coſſova, extendeth 20 miles in length, and 5 miles in breadth, incompaſſed round with pleaſant mountaines in the form of a Theater; as if it were deſigned by Nature for a ſtage of action. 19 Doroſtorum, by ſome of the Antients called Rhodoſtolon, the ſeat in Ptolemies time of the firſt Legion called Italica; afterwards one of the chief townes which the Roſſes and Ruſſians had in this countrey: from whom taken by John Zimiſces the Eaſtern Emperour, decaying after that time by little and little, and now wholly ruinate. 20 Achrida, the birth-place of Juſtinian, by whom beautified and enlarged, and called Juſtiniana Prima: who raiſing the Dioceſe of Dacia into a Præfecture placed here a Primate for the affaires of the Church, (which honour it doth ſtill retaine, the Biſhop hereof being the Primate of all Dacia,) and a Præfectus Prætorio, for affaires of State. But he being dead, the town returned to its old name, now called L' Ochrida, contracted by William of Tyre to Acre; by the Turkes called Giuſtandill; a diſtinct Principate of it ſelfe in the time of Amurath the firſt, and by him made tributary at his firſt warre upon this countrey.

And here it is to be obſerved that theſe parts of this countrey which lie next to the Euxine Sea, had antiently the name of Pontus; as had ſome parts of Aſia Minor which bordered on the ſame Sea alſo: and that the City of Tone as Ptolemie, or Tomos as Pliny calls it, to which Ovid was baniſhed by Auguſtus Ceſar, was a City of this European Pontus, and not of the Perſian, as hath been commonly conceived. For Tomi is by Ptolemie placed amongſt the Cities of Mœſia inferior, and by Ovid on the Weſt or left ſide of the Euxine, and not upon the South thereof, as appeareth by theſe lines of his.

that is to ſay,

My wronged Princes wrath commands me bide
At Tomos on the Euxines Weſtern ſide.

The place at this day called Tomiſwar, according to Caelius Calcagninus; but others would have it to be the ſame which is now named Kievia, in the ſame tract alſo; not farre from which is ſaid to be a Lake called to this day Owidow Jezcocoor, the Lake of Ovid. For what cauſe hither baniſhed is not yet agreed on. Some ſay it was for the unlawfull pleaſures which he enjoyed with Julia the Emperours daughter, whom he celebrates in his Amorum under the borrowed name of Corinna. Others imagine that he had ſeen Auguſtus himſelfe unnaturally uſing the company of the ſame Julia, his daughter; for which the offended Prince exiled him: and that he alludeth hereunto in his book de Triſtibus, ſaying, Cur aliquid vidi, cur noxia lumina feci, &c. A Crime, of which I dare not thinke that noble Emperor to be any way guilty. But certain it is, that whatſoever was the true reaſon of it, that which was openly pretended was the writing of thoſe laſcivious and inflammatory Books de Arte amandi, tending to the debauchment of youth, and corruption of manners: which he in divers places of his workes acknowledgeth for the cauſe thereof.

But to return unto the buſineſs of this country, the antient Inhabitants hereof were towards the Eaſt the Troglodyta dwelling neer the mouth or fall of the river Peuce into the Euxine or Black Sea; the Peucini inhabiting on the very mouth of it, and in a little Iſland oppoſite thereunto called alſo Peuce, now Pixina, Pizina, the Cribizi, Piarenſii, and Dimenſii: the Weſtern parts being wholly taken up by the Triballi, the moſt potent Nation of them all: who onely had the happineſſe to vanquiſh Philip King of the Macedonians. For Philip having or pretending a quarrell againſt Mateas a King of the Sarmatians, entred his countrey, overthrew him in a ſet fight, carried with him great booties, and among other things 20000 Mares, for breed, which hee took in the battell: it being the cuſtome of the Scythians and Sarmatians, to uſe Mares onely in the warres, becauſe their not ſtopping in the midſt of a race to piſſe, could be no impediment to them in their flight. In his return homeward, theſe Triballi deny him paſſage through their countrey, unleſſe they might partake of the ſpoiles. This being denyed, they fall from words to blowes, and next to a pitched field. In which fight Philip was wounded with an Arrow, which paſſing through his thigh nailed him to his ſaddle: his horſe being galled with the wound falling down to the ground. Which the frighted Macedonians ſeeing, and ſuppoſing him dead, fled out of the field, leaving all their ſpoiles to the Triballi, as if they had been ſent out only to be their Receivers. So true an obſervation is it, that the very life-bloud of an Army runnes chiefly in the veins of the Generall, or ſupreme Commander. Overtopped after this by the Mæſi or mingled with them, they were firſt broken by the Romans under the conduct of Cn. Curio Scribonius, ſpoken of before, the abſolute Conqueſt of them and the reſt of the Mæſians being reſerved for the times of Auguſtus Cæſar. By him or his ſucceſſours the whole countrey of the Mæſians being caſt into two Provinces, this part of it had the name of Mæſia inferior, that lying Weſtward up the water being called Mæſia ſuperior, for diſtinctions ſake. By the Emperour Aurelianus the Dacians being forced from the other ſide of the Danow by the barbarous Nations, or by him prudently removed to avoid their furie were planted here betwixt both the Myſias, divided afterwards into two Provinces, taken out of the other, Mediterranea, and Ripenſis: which with the help of the higher Myſia, Dardania, Prevalitana, and part of Macedonia Salutaris, made up the whole Dioceſe of Dacia, as before was ſaid. The reſidue hereof now paſſing under the name of Bulgaria, was afterwards divided into two Provinces alſo, another Province being taken out of the Eaſt parts of the Lower Mœſia, lying betwixt the River Phaniſſus, and the moſt northern branch of the Iſter, which they called Scythia, becauſe the Aroteres a Scythian people did once poſſeſs it: the Romans ambitiouſly affecting to be thought the Conquerrours of that unconquerable Nation. Succeſſively by the Gothes and Hunnes was this countrey taken from the Romans; recovered againe in or before the time of Juſtinian who had here his Officers, ſubordinate to the Vicar or Lieutenant of Thrace, to which Dioceſe they properly belonged. But long they held not in that State; the Sclavonians firſt, and after the Bulgarians being maſters of them. Of the firſt of theſe enough hath beene ſaid elſewhere. Theſe latter being a Scythian people inhabiting on the banks of the River Volga, were at firſt called Volgari, afterwards Bulgari: and though ſome conceive they had the name of Bulgarians from Bulgar the chief town of their Nation; but both uncertaine. In the time of the Emperour Anaſtaſius they made their firſt ſally into the Provinces of the Empire, forraging Illyricum and Thrace: afterwards in the reign of Heraclius hired by Coſrhoes the Perſian (with many other barbarous Nations) to beſiege Conſtantinople. In the reign of Conſtantine ſurnamed Pogonatus, conquering or caſting out the Sclaves, they planted themſelves in theſe Countries: compelling the Emperour to compound with them for a ſumme of money, from making any further inroad upon his Dominions. From this time forwards we finde their Princes called by the name of Kings of the Bulgarians; the firſt of which after their ſetling in theſe parts was Trebellius or Trebellis, as ſome call him: the firſt Chriſtian Prince of the Bulgarians; by whom Juſtinian the ſecond was firſt reſtored unto the Empire, of which he had been outed by Abſimarus; and afterwards well beaten by them, and forced to flie unto Conſtantinople on ſome breach between them. Growing into good termes with the Eaſtern Emperours, they aided them againſt the Saracens then beſieging the Imperiall City; of whom they ſlew 22000 as they were forraging the countrey; and in the time of Leo the fourth, called Porphyrogenitus, they became Homagers to the Empire, by whoſe perſwaſion Telerichus King of the Bulgarians received the Sacrament of Baptiſme, and thereupon was honoured by him with a wife of the Imperiall family, and the honourable title of a Patrician. After this time, the Kings hereof had many priviledges indulged them by the Conſtantinopolitans, not uſually communicated unto other Princes, viz. their Crown of gold, their tier or cap of ſilke, and their red ſhoes for their Regall; which were alſo the Imperiall ornaments. To theſe Kings alſo, and to theſe onely, did the Greek Emperours allow the title of Βασιλεὺς, as being meerly Imperiall. Other Kings they called Ρηγὲς, from the Latine word Reges. Inſomuch that when Baſilius Macedo had received letters from Pope Adrian the ſecond, wherein Lewis the ſecond the Weſtern Emperour was called Baſileus; he raſed out that Imperiall attribute, and diſpatched an embaſſie to Lewis, wherein he challenged it as his owne peculiar Epithite. Some quarrells after falling out, Crunus the Bulgarian King, in the time of Nicephorus ſucceſſour to the Empereſſe Irene, invadeth Thrace, taketh the City of Sardica, killeth that Emperour in his tent, and worſteth Michael (who ſucceeded) in the open field; Meſembria, a principall City of this Countrey being taken and ranſacked by him. But Bogor of another temper, not onely did receive the Sacrament of Baptiſm, which many of his Predeceſſors had intermitted: but brought his ſubjects (who rebelled on the change of Religion, and thereupon were fought with and vanquiſhed by him) to the ſame faith alſo: gratified for that cauſe by Theodora the Empereſſe, with ſome large acceſſion unto his eſtate. After long warres betwixt the Bulgarians, and the following Emperours, the fortune of the Conſtantinopolitan did at laſt prevaile: Samuel King of the Bulgarians being overthrown, 15000 of his ſouldiers taken and deprived of ſight; and the countrey conquer-

Bulgaria. red by Basilius the second, surnamed Porphyrogenitus, anno 1015. from that time tributary to the Empire: to which they did good service in the time of Constantinus Ducas, using their help against the Uzi, a new swarm of Scythians passing over the Ister with an Army of 60000 fighting men, and wasting Macedon and Greece. The like did John another of the Kings thereof, aiding the Greeks against Latines, whom they overthrew with a very great slaughter; Baldwin the Emperour of the Latines in Constantinople being taken prisoner, sent in bonds to Ternova, and there cruelly murdered, an. 1206. Nor were they wanting to assist them against the Turkes, when they grew dangerous to that Empire by the taking of Adrianople: for the recovery whereof, they raised a great and puissant Army, unfortunately discomfited by the Forces of Amurath the first, an. 1366. Provoked with which invasion, Amurath having setled his affaires in Asia, with an Army of 30000 falleth into Bulgaria, takes divers places of importance, and prevailed so far, that Sasmenos the last Prince hereof, wrapping his winding sheet about him, to shew that he had deserved death, prostrates himselfe most abjectly at the tyrants feet, offering to put Silistria (his strongest City) into his possession. For not performance of which offer, his countrey is againe invaded, most of it taken from him; permitted to enjoy the rest upon hard conditions, as vassall and tributary to the Turk. But Bajazet, Amurathes successour not content herewith picked a quarrell with him, and made an absolute conquest of Bulgaria, converting it unto a Province of the Turkish Empire, anno 1396. In which state it hath ever since continued, governed by three Turkish Sanziacks under the Beglerbeg of Greece: the Sanziacks residing at Nicopolis, Silistria, and Sophia, in which last the Beglerbeg himselfe doth sometimes reside.

MOUNT HÆMUS.

BEfore we enter into Greece we muſt croſſe MOUNT HÆMUS, a ridge of hils extending from the Euxine Sea to the Adriatick; and ~~thereby ſeparating Greece both from Dacia and Sclavonia.~~ ~~So high and~~ ſubject to the weather, that Stratonicus an old Grecian did uſe to ſay, that for eight moneths of the yeare it was alwayes cold: for the other foure, winter. It was affirmed by ſome of the antient writers, that from one of the higheſt heads hereof, as well the Adriatick as the Euxine might have been diſcerned: the truth of which report upon very good reaſon hath beene called in queſtion. But out of doubt from ſome one top or Summit of it, there is ſo full a proſpect into Thrace and Macedon, that from hence Perſeus taking a ſurvey of the ſite of theſe countreys; poſitis per abrupta Caſtris, &c. as the ſtory hath it, was able to make choice of the fitteſt places for Forts and Caſtles, whereby to lock up all the paſſages againſt his enemies the Romans. In the parts bordering upon Thrace ſo rough and craggy, that it is not to be paſſed but at two places onely. Whereof one was made by the Emperour Trajan, where is yet to be ſeen a mighty ſtrong gate built of great ſquare ſtone; by which the paſſage that way was either opened or ſhut at the pleaſure of them, who had the keeping of the ſame; with a ſmall force exceeding eaſily defended againſt puiſſant Armies. The other being ſituate neer a little River by the Bulgarians called Saltiza, not altogether ſo ſtrait and narrow as the other, but riſing high, and full of broken rockes and dangerous precipices, is alike impaſſable, defenſible at eaſe, and without any great danger: as was experimentally found by famous Huniades, when he attempted (but in vain) to have led his forces this way, for the ſiege of Adrianople. Thoſe parts hereof which border upon Macedonia, though ſomewhat opener, are not much eaſier of aſcent: the paſſages through the broken rocks and precipices being very difficult; and not eaſily maſtered: inſomuch that when Perſeus the laſt King of Macedon had fortified the ſtraights hereof againſt the Romans; non reliquiſſe aditum niſi è cœlo venientibus videbatur, it was conceived (ſaith Florus) that there was no paſſage left for any forces, unleſſe they fell immediately from the heavens themſelves.

This great and rocky chaine of hils, as they were vehemently expoſed to winde and weather, ſo were they deſtitute of thoſe commodities, which were either comfortable or indeed meerly neceſſarie to the life of man: which made the paſſage over them in a manner impoſſible unto any Armies, but what were very patient both of cold and hunger. Yet were they not left deſolate and void of people, ~~eſpecially in thoſe ſides hereof which lay next~~ to Greece; but moſt eſpecially in thoſe parts which bordered or confined on Thrace: where the ſpurres and branches of the hils ſpreading farre and wide, and taking up a great part of the countrey; occaſioned the Romans in the diviſion of the Dioceſe of Thrace into ſeverall Provinces, to call that part or Province of it which lay next to Mœſia, by the name of Hæmimontum, or Hæmimontana, the principall Townes whereof were Adrianople, Uſcudoma, and Anchialar; the principall Governour hereof a Roman Preſident. Where, by the way we take notice of an Errour in the common impreſſions of the Code, Lib. VII. Tit. 62. leg. 23. where we finde Hæmi montem, for Hæmimontum: the firſt being the name onely of the mountain; and the latter (which is there meant) of the Roman Province.

But

But to return unto the Mountain, there is another of this name in Theſſalie, mentioned (or miſtook for this) by Servius in his notes on the firſt book of the Georgicks; in the top whereof was ſaid to be the habitation of Mars, on the bottome the moſt pleaſant valley of Tempe: ſo called from Hæmus, the ſon of Boreas and Orithya amongſt the Poets. And poſſiblie to diſtinguiſh this from that of Theſſalie, Ptolemie, and others call it Æmus, without the Aſpirat, though it may well be, that there are others of this name, as that this is called in divers places, or in divers Authors, by other names: one part hereof being called Scombrus by Ariſtotle, an other Scominus by Thucydides, and by Lavicus the whole called Traſelus. The like may be obſerved at the preſent alſo, Pinetus calling it by the name of Catena Mundi, a great part whereof it links together: Cuſpinianus, Caſtegnazzo; Iazius, Krivizne: the Italians, Mont Argentorato; the French, Monte de Ceſtegnao; the Sclavonians, Cumaniza: and the Turks, Balkan. Which I have therefore here obſerved for the Readers ſake, that meeting any of theſe names in the ſtories either of the ancient or modern times, he may know what hils or mountains are intended by them. Which ſaid I now paſſe on to Greece, the way being thus prepared and laid open to me.

GREECE in the preſent latitude and extent thereof, is bounded on the Eaſt with the Propontick, Helleſpont, and Ægean Seas; on the Weſt with the Adriatick; on the North with Mount Hæmus, which parteth it from Bulgaria, Servia, and ſome part of Illyricum; and on the South with the Sea Ionian: So that it is in a manner a Peninſula or Demy-Iſland, environed on three ſides by the Sea; on the fourth only united to the reſt of Europe.

But this is only in relation to the preſent extent hereof, the name being anciently reſtrained within narrower bounds. Confined at firſt to Attica and the parts adjoining; ab Iſthmi anguſtiis Hellas incipit, as it is in Plinie: and took the name of Hellas from Hellen the ſon of Deucalion; as that of Greece or Græcia, from Græcus the ſon of Cecrops the firſt King of Athens. Communicated afterwards to Peloponneſus, then to Theſſalie alſo: and finally when the Macedonian Empire had inlarged it ſelfe over the petit Common-wealths and Eſtates hereof, it came to be communicated to that Countrie alſo. The people for this cauſe known by divers names, by ſome Achivi, by others Myrmidones; ſometimes Pelaſgi, Danai, Argivi, &c. But the name whereby they are beſt known in ſacred Writers, is that of Ἕλληνες, ſo called from Hellas the more proper and genuine name of Greece, in the ſtricteſt notion and acception. A name uſed frequently and familiarly in the Book of God, both abſolutely to denote this Nation, as where it is ſaid, σοφίαν Ἕλληνες ζητοῦσι, that the Greeks ſeek wiſdome; 1 Cor. 1. 22. and relatively as in oppoſition to the Jews, the Barbarians, and the Helleniſts, or Græcizing Jews. Firſt with relation to the Jews, and then it ſignifieth the whole bodie of the Gentiles generally, of which the Grecians were the moſt eminent and famous people; as Ἰουδαίῳ τε πρῶτον καὶ Ἕλληνι, to the Jew firſt, and alſo to the Gentile, Rom. 11.9,10. Give none offence, καὶ Ἰουδαίοις καὶ Ἕλλησι, neither to the Jews nor to the Gentiles, 1 Cor. 10.32. and elſewhere frequently. In which and all other places of that kinde where the Antitheſis lyeth between the Jews and other Nations, we are to underſtand the Gentiles, the whole body of them; though many times our Tranſlators, I know not why, render it literally the Greeks; as Rom. 1.16. 10.12. &c. Secondly with reference to all other Nations not ſo well verſed in the learning and civilities of that Age as the Grecians were, whom by a common name of ſcorn they called Barbarians: according unto that of Strabo, Barbaræ ſunt omnes Nationes præter Græcos; the Romans themſelves though then the great Lords of the World, being included in the reckoning. And ſo the word is taken, Rom. 1.14. I am a debtour ſaith S. Paul, Ἕλλησι καὶ βαρβάροις, both to the Greeks and the Barbarians, to the wiſe and unwiſe: in which as well the Romans as thoſe of other Nations, have the name of Barbarians. Laſt of all for the Græcizing Jews, whom the Vulgar Latine calleth Græcos, and our Engliſh Grecians; they were ſuch of the Jews who living diſperſed amongſt the Gentiles, uſed the tranſlation of the Septuagint, making that the Canon both for life and doctrine. Which difference betwixt them and the Jews inhabiting in Judæa, who kept themſelves unto the Scriptures in their mother-tongue, and uſed the Hebrew only in all ſacred actions: occaſioned many jars amongſt them, which ſometimes brake out into to open violence, insomuch as R. Eliezer brake into the Synagogue of the Alexandrians at Hierusalem, and therein committed many outrages. Of this unfriendlineſſe between them, mention is made Act 6. 1. where it is ſaid, that there aroſe a murmuring of the Grecians againſt the Hebrews, &c. In which place, though the Engliſh and Vulgar Latine uſe the name of Grecians, yet ought they more properly to be rendred Helleniſts, or Græcizing Jews, as in all other places, viz. Acts 9. 29. 11. 20. &c. where they are called Ἑλληνισταὶ and not Ἕλληνες, in the Greek Originals.

But to proceed to our deſcription of the Country, we finde it ſituate in the Northern temperate Zone, under the fift and ſixt Climats; the longeſt day being 15 hours: inhabited by a people which were once brave men of war, ſound Scholars, addicted to the love of vertue and civill behaviour. A Nation once ſo excellent that their precepts and examples do ſtill remain, as approved rules, and Tutors to inſtruct and direct the man that endeavoureth to be vertuous; famous for government, affectors of freedome, every way noble. For which vertues in themſelves, and want of them in other, all their neighbours and remote Nations were by them ſcornfully called Barbarians: a name now moſt fit for the Grecians themſelves, being an unconſtant people, deſtitute of all learning, and the means to obtain it, Univerſities; uncivill, riotous, and ſo lazie, that for the moſt part, they endeavour their profit no further then their belly compels them, and ſo perfidious withall in all their dealings, eſpecially towards the Weſtern Chriſtians, that it is grown into a Proverb amongſt the Italians, Chi fida in Grego, ſara in trigo, i. e. He that truſts to a Greek is ſure to be couſened. When they meet at feaſts or banquets, they drink ſmall draughts at the beginning, which by degrees they increaſe, till they come to the height of intemperancie: at which point when they are arrived, they keep no rule or order; whereas before to drink out of ones turn is accounted a point of incivility. Hence as I beleeve, ſprung our by-word, As merry as a Greek, and the Latine word Græcari.

The women for the moſt part are brown-complexioned, exceedingly well favoured, and exceſſively amorous. Painting they uſe very much to keep themſelves in grace with their husbands; for when they once grow wrinckled, they are put to all the drudgeries of the houſe. Both ſexes generally in their habit and outward garb, apply themſelves to the State under which they live: ſuch as are ſubject to the Turk, conforming unto the dreſſe and faſhions of the Turks, as thoſe who live under the Venetians, do to that of Venice.

The Chriſtian Faith was firſt here planted by S. Paul, invited by the Spirit to come over into Macedonia, Acts 16. 12. paſſing from thence to Theſſalonica, the chief Citie of Mygdonia, ch. 17. 1. from thence to Athens in Achaia, v. 16. then unto Corinth the Metropolis of Peloponneſus, ch. 18. 1. watering the greateſt part of Greece with the dew of heaven; and planting Biſhops in moſt Churches where he preached the Goſpell, as Dionyſius (the Areopagite) at Athens, Ariſtarchus at Theſſalonica, Epaphroditus at Philippi, Silas at Corinth, and Titus in the Iſle of Crete. The like he did in many other Countries alſo, accounted members of the Greek Church, though not of Greece: the name of the Greek Church extending over all the Provinces of the Eaſtern Empire, governed by the 4 Patriarchs, 1 Of Alexandria, who preſided over Egypt and Arabia. 2 Of Hieruſalem, whoſe Patriarchate (erected only in regard of our Saviours paſſion in that Citie, and the great opinion, which by that means accrewed unto it) confined within the bounds of Paleſtine. 3 Of Antioch, whoſe juriſdiction contained all Syria, Armenia, Cilicia, and the Iſle of Cyprus, and whatſoever elſe was within the Dioceſe of the Orient. And 4 of Conſtantinople, to whoſe charge were committed all the other Provinces of the Greek Church, as Greece, Ruſſia, Dacia, Sclavonia, part of Poland, and all the Iſlands in the Adriatick, Ionian, and Ægean Seas; together with all Aſia Minor, and the Iſles thereof, (except only the Provinces of Cilicia and Iſauria) and the Countries lying on both ſides of Pontus Euxinus, and Palus Mæotis. The reaſons of the large increaſe of whoſe Juriſdiction, confined at firſt within the Dioceſe of Thrace, were 1 The reputation of being ſeated in the Imperiall Citie, which drew after it (by a Decree of the Councell of Chalcedon) all the Provinces of Aſia Minor, (Cilicia and Iſauria excepted only.) 2 The voluntary ſubmiſſion of the Grecians upon their ſeparation of the Church of Rome, by which all Greece, Macedon, Epirus, the Iſle of Crete, and all the Iſlands in the Ægean and Ionian Seas, which formerly had no ſuperior but their own Primate, the Archbiſhop of Theſſalonica; became ſubject unto them. 3 The diligence of the Patriarchs hereof, in converting by his Suffragan Biſhops and other Miniſters, the Ruſſians, Bulgarians, and Sclavonians to the faith of Chriſt, which made thoſe people to look upon Conſtantinople as their Mother-Church. And 4 the pietie and care of the later Patriarchs, in ſupplying with new Paſtors and Miniſters, thoſe parts and Provinces of the Weſt, which being conquered by the Turk, had been forſaken by their old Clergie, and left like ſheep without a ſhepheard.

And yet this Church though thus extended and enlarged in the outward members, is very much ſtraitned and impaired at home: the Country being thinly peopled, and many of thoſe people trained up from their infancie in the Mahometan Law. So that it is a greater wonder that there ſhould be any remainders of Chriſtianitie left amongſt them, then that the open Profeſſors of it ſhould be ſo few: the tyrannie of the Turks on the one ſide, and the temptations of preferment upon the other, being rightly pondered. For who could look to find 20 Churches of Chriſtians in Conſtantinople, the ſeat and ordinarie reſidence of the Turkiſh Emperours; or that in Salonichi, or Theſſalonica, there ſhould be 30 Chriſtian Churches, and but three Turkiſh Moſquits; that the Primate of this Salonichi ſhould have under him 10 ſuffragan Biſhops, whereof he of Philippi hath no fewer then 150 Churches under his Juriſdiction; or finally that under the Metropolitans of Athens or Corinth, there ſhould be as many. So mercifull hath God dealt with this luxurious and perfidious people as not to take away their Candleſtick, though he hath darkened and obſcured the light hereof.

As

As for the Fathers of this Church, anciently and at this preſent held in moſt eſteem, they were no other then ſuch as had been Biſhops of the greater Sees: that is to ſay, 1 S. Chryſoſtome, firſt a Reader of Antioch, afterwards Patriarch of Conſtantinople. 2 Baſil, and the two Gregories, 3 Nyſſen, and 4 Nazianzen, all in Aſia Minor, this laſt of Conſtantinople alſo. 5, 6 The two Cyrils, the one Patriarch of Alexandria, the other of Hieruſalem. 7 Epiphanius, Biſhop of Salamis in the Iſle of Cyprus. 8 Theodoret Biſhop of Cyrus, &c. men of renown and precious memorie amongſt them to this very day. From whoſe writings if they deviate in any materiall point of doctrine, it is in that of the Proceſſion of the Holy Ghoſt, which they grant to be per Filium, but not a Filio. And though Clichthoræus, Lombard, and other moderate men of the Church of Rome, doe grant the difference to be rather, in modo explicandi, quam in ipſa re; and that the Clauſe a Filioque, was added by the Romaniſts to the ancient Creeds, the Grecians not being privie nor conſenting to it: yet ſo uncharitable is that Church towards theſe poore men languiſhing under the tyrannie of Turkiſh thraldome, as to perſecute them with reproach and ſcorn, brand them for Schiſmaticks and Apoſtates, and ſolemnly to anathematize them, in Bulla Cœnæ, every Maundie Thurſday. And it is a very hard meaſure to adde and anathematize too, as is right well obſerved by the late Lord Archbiſhop of Canterbury, in his notable diſcourſe againſt the Jeſuite. Other particular Tenets in which the Greek Church differeth from the Romiſh and Reformed (as in ſome points it doth from both) have been already ſpecified in our Deſcription of Ruſſia, the Churches of the Greeks and Moſcovites differing in no materiall points, but 1 the manner of diſtributing the Sacrament; 2 the exacting of marriage by the Moſcovite in the partie admitted unto Orders; 3 the frequent admiting of divorces upon light occaſions; and 4 finally in being leſſe ſtrict in obſerving the Lent before Eaſter then in any of the other three. For whereas the Grecians account it a damnable ſin to eat fleſh or fiſh which hath bloud in it, in any of their other Lents or times of abſtinence, (they have in both Churches four in all) in that before Eaſter, which of all reaſon ought to be kept moſt punctually, the Laitie eat all ſorts of fiſh without any exception; the bloud of ſome of which, as the Cuttle by name, is held to be a delicate food, and in great requeſt.

The Language they ſpake was of their own, of which there were four Dialects, viz. 1 the Attick, 2 the Dorick, 3 the Æolick, 4 the Ionick: beſides the common phraſe of ſpeech moſt in uſe among them. A language of great fame for the liberall Arts, but more for ſo great a part of the holy Scripture, firſt delivered in it: and for the lofty ſound, ſignificant expreſſions, genuine ſuavitie, and happie compoſition of words, ſo excelling all others, that even in the flouriſhing of the Roman Empire, it ſo much overtopped the Latine, that the Hiſtories of Rome it ſelf (as of Polybius, Appian, Dion Caſſius) were written in it. It was once alſo the generall language of Anatolia, ſome parts of Italie, Provence in France, and almoſt all the Iſlands of the Mediterranean. But now partly by the mutilation of ſome words, and contraction of others; partly by confuſion of the true ſound of Vowels, Diphthongs, and Conſonants, and the tranſlating of the Accents; and finally, by the admixture of forein Nations, it is not only fallen from its naturall elegancie, but from its largeneſſe of extent. For it is now ſhut up within the limits of Greece, and the Sea-coaſts of the leſſer Aſia, oppoſite unto it; and there not only much corrupted but almoſt quite devoured by the Turkiſh and Sclavonian tongues: but ſpecially by that which they call Franco, a Mungrel language, compoſed of Italian, French, and ſome Spaniſh words, uſed as the ordinarie ſpeech for commerce and intercourſe betwixt Chriſtians, Jews, Turks, and the Greeks themſelves, who doe not underſtand, and much leſſe ſpeak the true genuine Greek. So that although they ſtill retain for ordinarie dayes S. Chryſoſtoms Liturgie, and that of S. Baſil for the Feſtivals: yet being both written in the ancient and learned Greek, they are no more underſtood by the Vulgar Grecian, then the Latine Service by the common and illiterate Papiſt.

The ſoil queſtionleſſe is very fruitfull, and would yeeld great profit to the husbandman, if they would take pains in the tilling: but they, knowing nothing certainly to be their own, but all things ſubject to the Grand Signieur and his ſouldiers; neglect the tillage of their lands on the ſame grounds with thoſe who ſaid in the Poets Eclogues:

Impius hæc tam culta novalia miles habebit?
Barbarus has ſegetes? en queis conſevimus arva!

Shall misbeleeving Turks theſe acres ſpoil,
Which I manur'd with ſo much coſt and toil?
Shall they enjoy my care? See neighbours, ſee,
For whom theſe goodly corn-fields tilled be!

The more naturall and certain commodities which they tranſport into other parts, are Wines, which in memory of the water which our Saviour turned into wine; and on the ſixt day of January being that day whereon this miracle was wrought, they uſe to baptize: for which cauſe the Jews will drinke none of them. They ſend alſo into other parts of the world, Oil, Copper, Vitrioll, ſome Gold and Silver, Velvet, Damasks, Turque Grograms, &c.

This Country hath formerly been famous for the brave Commanders, Miltiades, Ariſtides, and Themiſtocles of Athens, Liſander and Ageſilaus of Sparta, Pelopidas and Epaminondas of Thebes, Aratus and Philopœmen of Achaia, Pyrrhus of Epirus, Philip of Macedon the ſubverter of the Grecian liberty, and Alexander his ſon (to omit infinite others) the ſubverter of the Perſian Monarchy. For the divine Philosophers Plato, Socrates, Aristotle, and Theophrastus; for the most eminent Lawgivers, Solon, and Lycurgus; for the most exquisite Poets, Hesiodus, Homer, Sophocles, and Aristophanes; for the famous Historiographers, Xenophon the condiscipl of Plato, Thucydides, Plutarch, and Herodotus; the eloquent Oratours, Æschines, Demosthenes, and Isocrates; and lastly, for the authors and establishers of all humane learning whatsoever, only the Mathematiques excepted.

The chief Rivers are 1 Cephisus, which arising in the Frontires of Epirus, disburtheneth it self into the Ægean Sea. 2 Erigon, and 3 Alaicmon, which beginning their course in the more Northern parts of Macedon, end it in Thirmaicus Sinus. 4 Strymon in Mygdonia. 5 Athicus and Nisus in Thrace. 6 Stymphalus, where Hercules killed the Stymphalian birds. And 7 Ladon in Arcadia. 8 Inachus, whose daughter Io turned into a Heifer, was worshiped by the Egyptians under the name of Isis. 9 Achelous in Epirus, much celebrated by the ancient Poets, especially by Ovid in his Metamorphosis. As is also 10 Peneus, the chief River of Thessalie, and there arising from Mount Pindus, and increased with the waters of many Rivers. Daphne the Nymph, whom Apollo is fabled to have loved, and turned into a Bay tree, lived near or on the banks of this River Peneus, and is therefore said to be his daughter. That is to say:

Cool Sperchie, Enipeus that troubled ran,
Smooth Amphryse, Æas, and old Apidan.

The rest of lesse note, and the most eminent Mountains in each part hereof, shall be remembred in their places as we see occasion.

Thus much of the whole Countrie in grosse. And as for the division of it with reference to the State of the Roman Empire, it contained in a manner two whole Dioceses, viz. Thrace and Macedon: the first under the Præfectus Prætorio Orientis, the latter (together with that of Dacia) under the Præfectus Prætorio for Illyricum. Of these the Diocese of Macedon lying wholly within the bounds of the modern Greece, contained the Provinces of Macedonia Prima. 2 Macedonia Secunda, or Salutaris, (now as in former times, called Albania.) 3 Epirus Nova, taking up the Countries of Phocis, Locris, and so much of the Old Epirus as was on that side of the River Achelous. 4 Old Epirus, comprehending all the rest of that Countrie. 5 Thessalie, 6 Achaia, containing all Achaia and Peloponnesus, the Countries of Locris and Phocis excepted only. And 7 Crete or Candie, with the Isles adjoining. And for the Diocese of Thrace, it was divided into the Provinces of 1 Thrace, specially so called. 2 Europa, 3 Rhodope, 4 Hæmi-montum, 5 Mœsia Inferior, and 6 Scythia: of which the four first make up the bodie of Thrace, and shall there be spoken of: the two last being comprehended in the modern Dacia, have been described already in their proper places. But not to binde my self precisely unto this division, (though I shall look on this as occasion serveth) I shall consider Greece in the severall Provinces of 1 Peloponnesus, 2 Achaia, 3 Epirus, 4 Albania, 5 Macedon, 6 Thrace, 7 The Islands of the Propontick, 8 Ægean, and 9 the Ionian Seas, and 10 finally the Isle of Crete.

1 PELOPONNESUS.

PELOPONNESUS is bounded on the East with the Cretan, on the West the Adriatick or Ionian Seas; on the North-east with Sinus Saronicus, now Golfo di Engia; on the North-west with Sinus Corinthiacus, now Golfo di Patras or Lepanto; and on the South with the Mediterranean. So that it is almost an Island, properly called a Peninsula, rounded with the Sea, except where it is tyed to the main land of Greece, by an Isthmus six miles in breadth, which the Grecians and Venetians fortified with a great wall and five Castles. This was called anciently Hexamilium, and was overthrown by Amurath the 2. who harassed and spoiled all the Country. It was afterwards in the year 1453. upon the rumour of a war, built up again by the Venetians (who then had the greatest part of this country) in 15 dayes; there being for that time 30000 men imployed in the work. This wall extended from one Sea unto the other, which had it been as gallantly guarded as it was hastily made up, or as it was well fortified, had it been as well manned, might easily have resisted the Turks, untill more means had been thought on to defend it. Not lesse observable, but more fruitlesse was the design of some in the elder times to cut thorow this Isthmus and make a perfect Island of it. Attempted by Demetrius King of Macedon, Julius Cæsar, and Caius Caligula, by none more eagerly pursued then the Emperour Nero, who to hearten on his souldiers, loath to attempt so fruitlesse an enterprise, took a spade in hand, and busily began the work. Yet at last the souldiers, being frighted with the bloud which abundantly broke forth; with the groans and roarings which they continually heard, and with the Hobgoblins and Furies, which were alway in their sight; perswaded the Emperour, now half out of the humour, to leave this and enjoin them some more profitable service: given over by the former Princes on the like discouragements. It is in compasse 600 miles, and was called at the first Ægialia, from Ægialus the first King of Sicyon; next Apia from Apis the fourth King; after that Sicyonia from from Sicyon the nineteenth King thereof; and finally Peloponnesus from Pelops the son of Tantalus King of Phrygia, and Νῆσος, Insula; the word signifying as much as the Isle of Pelops. But it is now of late called Morea; and that, a Maurorum incursionibus, from the incursions of the Moores, as Mercator thinketh. Achaia propria.

It is conceived to be the most pleasant Countrie of all Greece, abounding in all things necessarie for the life of man, and in such also as do serve for delicacie and contentment only: adorned with many goodly Plains, swelled with fruitfull Hils, well stored with Ports and Havens on all sides thereof. And though no Country in the world for the bigneſse of it, hath suffered in the ruine of so many brave and stately Cities, yet is it still the most populous and best inhabited of all the Continent of Greece. Near the middle of it in Laconia is the Mount Taygetus, from the top whereof there was no Citie of note in all this Peninsula, but what might easily be seen. A most gallant prospect. The whole divided commonly into these 7 Provinces, 1 Achaia propria, 2 Elis, 3 Messene, 4 Arcadia, 5 Laconia, 6 Argolis, and 7 Corinthia.

1 ACHAIA PROPRIA is bounded on the East with Argolis and Corinthia, on the West with the Ionian Sea; on the North with Sinus Corinthiacus, or the Golfe of Lepanto; on the South with Elis. So called from the Achæi, the Inhabitants of it; the adjunct propria, being added to difference it from Achaia in the Continent or main land of Greece.

Places of most consideration in it, are 1 Dyme, situate in the most Western point of it, on or neat the Promontorie called Araxum, the town now called Chiarenza, and the Promontorie Cabo di Chiarenza. Not far from which is another Promontorie or head-land, of old called Antirrhium, because opposite to another In Ætolia, that was called Rhium, divided by a very narrow strait or fretum, which openeth into the Bay of Corinth; fortified on each side with a Castle for defence thereof, commonly called Dardanelli, and sometimes Castelli di Lepanto. 2 Ægium, where Jupiter is said to have been nursed by a Goat, whence it had the name: Αἴξ in Greek signifying a she Goat: once a strong town, now ruined and destroyed by the Turks, called at this day Vostiza, or Bostizan. 3 Ægira, once the chief Citie of all this tract, situate on a steep and inaccessible hill; now a small Village, called Xilocastro. 4 Olenus, so named from Olenus the son of Jupiter, and Anaxithea, now called Chaminisa. 5 Patræ, situate at the very mouth of the Golfe opposite to Lepanto, first called Aroe, but being by one Patreus enlarged and walled, took the name of Patræ, which name it holdeth to this day, being still called Patras: the town of most note on the Bay of Corinth, called from hence Golfo di Patras. A town of good trade, and much frequented not long since by the English Merchants, who had here their Consul, called the Consul of Morea: but formerly more memorable for the death of S. Andrew the Apostle, who here suffered Martyrdom. 6 Pellene, distant from the Sea about 60 furlongs: the people whereof being constant to their old fashions of apparell, occasioned the Proverb of Pellenæa vestis, applyed to old cloaths out of fashion. Here were once also the two Cities of 7 Helice, and 8 Buris, sunk by the violence of a tempest into the bottome of the Sea, about the time of the battle of Leuctres. Not to say any thing of 9 Tritæa and 10 Phera, two other towns hereof, of note, in the former times; so little now remaining of them, as if they had been sunk at the same time also.

But the chief town of all this Province, (if not a Province of it self) is that of Sicyon, situate not far from the Isthmus, in the most Eastern parts hereof, and giving to the territorie or adjoyning Country (as once unto the whole Peninsula) the name of Sicyonia. The territorie rich, especially in Olives and works of Iron; the Citie the most ancient of all Greece, built within little time of the generall flood and restauration of mankind: first called Ægialia, after Sicyonia, by the names of the first and nineteenth Kings hereof: by whom and their successours much adorned and beautified with Temples, Altars, Statues, and Images of their severall Gods: the ancientest Kingdome in the world, the Assyrian, and Ægyptian excepted only, and perhaps not those. It took beginning in the person of Ægialeus, within 150 years after the deluge, and 200 years before the death of Noah, continuing in a race of Princes who swayed the affairs of Peloponnesus, till overtopped by the growth and good fortune of the Kings of Argos. The names of whom, by reason of the undoubted antiquitie of this Kingdome, I shall here subjoin, in the ensuing Catalogue of of them ſucceſſively one after another: the firſt five only years a piece; Amphictyon, who was the ſixt, continuing 9 years in the Regencie, and Charidemus the laſt of them, ruling 18 years. After whoſe death, or departure, I know not which, A. M. 2844. the Heraclidæ, who about that time returned into Peloponneſus, made themſelves Maſters of this Country; there being no Kings of Sicyonia from this time forwards.

Of theſe Kings the moſt memorable were Ægialeus, and Apis, the firſt and fourth, from whom this Peninſula had the names of Apia, and Ægialia. Ægirus the 6. giving name and being to the Citie Ægira, ſpoken of before: Marathon the 13. of whom perhaps the famous fields of Marathon (in the other Achaia) took denomination: Epopeus the 17. who founded a Temple to Minerva, and therein placed his own Monument or Tropheys: Sicyon the 19. the Founder of the Citie of Sicyon, or at leaſt the repairer and enlarger of it: Pelaſgus the 25. from whom perhaps the Grecians might be called Pelaſgi, if not known formerly by that name. After this time, I finde no man of note who bare ſway in Sicyon till the time of Aratus, the ſpeciall ornament of this town (of which a Native) and one of the principall eſtabliſhers of the Achæan Common-wealth againſt the Spartans and Macedonians; of which more hereafter in the generall Hiſtory of Peloponneſus.

2 The Country of ELIS hath on the Eaſt Arcadia; on the Weſt the Ionian Sea; on the North Achaia propria; on the South Meſſenia. The chief Cities are, 1 Elis, which gives name to the whole Province. So called from Eliſa the ſon of Javan, and grand-child of Japhet, who fixt himſelf in theſe parts of this Countrie, where he built this Citie, calling it by his own name; as his poſteritie in honour of him did the Iſles adjoynig; mentioned in the Propher Ezekiel, by the name of the Iſles of Eliſha Ch. 27. v. 7. Nigh to this Citie runneth the River Alpheus, of which we have ſpoken in Sicilia: and in this Citie reigned the King Augeas, the cleanſing of whoſe Stable is accompted one of the wonders or twelve labours performed by Hercules. 2 Olympia, famous for the Statue of Jupiter Olympicus, one of the 7 wonders, being in height 60 cubits; compoſed by that excellent workman Phidias, of gold and ivory. In honour of this Jupiter were the Olympick games inſtituted by Hercules, and celebrated on the Plains of this Citie, A M. 2757. The exerciſes in them were for the moſt part bodily, as running in Chariots, running on foot, wraſtling, fighting with the whorlbats, and the like. But ſo that there repaired thither alſo Orators, Poets, and Muſicians, and all that thought themſelves excellent in any laudable qualitie, to make triall of their ſeverall abilities: the very Cryers who proclaimed the Victories, contending which ſhould cry loudeſt, and beſt play his part. The rewards given to the Victor were only Garlands of Palm, or ſuch ſlight remembrances; and yet the Greeks no leſſe eſteem'd that ſmall ſign of conqueſt and honour, then the Romans did their moſt magnificent triumphs: thoſe which were Conquerors herein being met by all the principall men of the Citie, in which, or under which they lived, and a paſſage broken in the main wals thereof for their reception; as if the ordinarie Gates were not capable of ſo high an honour, or able to afford them entrance. Inſomuch that when Diagoras had ſeen his three ſons crowned for their ſeverall victories, a friend of his came to him with this gratulation, Morere Diagoras, nunquam enim in Cœlum aſcenſurus es, that is to ſay, Die now Diagoras, for thou ſhalt never goe to Heaven: as if no greater happineſſe could befall the man either in this life or that to come, then that which he enjoyed already. The Judges and Preſidents of theſe Games, were ſome of the Citizens of Elis, deputed to it; highly commended for their juſtice and integrity in pronouncing who beſt deſerved, without partialitie. Of theſe thus Horace in his Odes:

Sunt quos Curriculo pulverem Olympicum
Collegiſſe juvat; metaque fervidis
Evitata rotis, Palmaque nobilis
Terrarum Dominos evehit ad Deos.
Quos Elea domum reducit
Palma cœleſtes.

That is to ſay:

Some in Olympick duſt take pride
Their Chariots and themſelves to hide;
Whom the ſhunn'd mark, and Palm ſo priz'd,
Like to the Gods hath eterniz'd.
Such as like heavenly wights do come
With an Elean Garland home.

But to proceed, after the death of Hercules, theſe games were diſcontinued for 430 years: at which time one Iphitus, warned ſo to doe by the Oracle of Apollo, renewed them; cauſing them to be ſolemnly exerciſed every fourth year: from which cuſtom Olympias is ſometimes taken for the ſpace of 4 years; as quinque annorum Olympiades, for 20 years. Varro reckoneth the times before the floud to be obſcure; thoſe betore the Olympiads, and after the floud to be fabulous; but thoſe that followed theſe Olympiads to be Hiſtoricall. Theſe Olympiads were of long time, even from the reſtauration of them by Iphitus untill the the reign of the Emperour Theodosius 3 the Grecian Epoche, by which they reckoned their accompt: the first of them being placed in the year of the world, 3174. before the building of Rome 24 years; the last in the 440 year after Christs nativity. According to which reckoning this accompt continued for the space of 1214 years; the memorie of which remains, though the name of Olympia be not found in Peloponnesus: the town at this day called by the name of Scanri. 3 Pisa, whose people followed Nestor to the wars of Troy, and in their return were by tempest driven to the coasts of Italie, where they built the Citie Pisa in Tuscanie. 4 Torneſe, a new Town, or the new name of some ancient City, from whence the adjoyning Promontorie of old called Chelonites, is now called Cabo di Torneſe. Messenia.

3 MESSENIA hath on the East Arcadia; on the North Elis; on the South and West, the Sea. It takes its name from the Metropolis Messene situate on Sinus Messeniacus, now called Golfo di Conro. 2 Pylos, where Nestor was King, now called Novarino, a desolate and poor village not worth the noting. Of which thus Ovid speaking in the name of Penelope,

Nos Pylon, antiqui Neleia Nestoris arva,
Misimus, incerta est reddita fama Pylo.

To Pylon, aged Nestors seat, we sent;
But could not hear from thence how matters went.

3 Modon, or Methone, seated in the most southern part of this Peninsula, from whence unto the Isthmus which joineth it to the rest of Greece, are reckoned 175 Italian miles; the ordinarie residence of the Turkish Zanziack, who hath the government of this whole Province of Morea under the Beglerbeg of Greece. 4 Corone or Coron, the chief town on the Bay of Messene, called from hence Golfo di Coron, and the last which held out against the Turks for the State of Venice, once Lords of all the Sea-coasts of Peloponnesus. 5 Cyparissi, now called Arcadia from whence the Bay adjoyning hath the name of Golfo di Arcadia. Here is also the Promontorie called of old Coryphasium, now Cato Zanchio.

The people of this small Province had once a great sway in the whole Peninsula. At first confederate with the Spartans in so strict a league, that they mutually sent young Virgins to one another for their publick sacrifices: but afterwards Corrivals with them for the Supreme power. The Spartans at the last getting the upper hand of them, oppressed them with a miserable servitude. The occasion this. In the confines of this Countrie stood a Temple of Diana, common alike to the Messenians, Spartans, and Dores. It happened that some Spartan Virgins were by the Messenians here ravished; which abuse the Spartans pretended to be the ground of their warre: the true reason indeed being their covetousnesse of the sole Empire. This warre broke out three severall times. The first continued 20 years, in which space the Lacedæmonians fearing their absence would hinder the supply of young children in the Citie, sent a company of their ablest young men home to accompany their wives. Their off-spring were called, Parthenii, who coming to full growth, abandoned Sparta, sailed into Italie, and there built Tarentum. The second being of 23 years continuance, was raised and maintained by Aristomenes, one of the chief men of the Messenians; in which they prospered til Aristocrates King of Arcadia, one of their confederates, revolted, to side with Lacedæmon. Then began they to decline, and Aristomenes was thrice taken prisoner, still miraculously escaping. His last imprisonment was in a Dungeon, where by chance espying a Fox devouring a dead body, he caught hold of her tail. The Fox running away, guided Aristomenes after, till the straitnesse of the hole by which he went out, made him leave his hold, and fall to scraping with his nails, which exercise he never left, till he had made the hole passable, and so escaped; and having a while upheld his falling Country, dyed in Rhodes. The third warre was like drops after a tempest. In which the Messenians being finally subdued, were forced to abandon their Country, or become slaves unto the Spartans who put them to all drudgeries and servile works, as they did the Helots, whom they accounted as their bondmen: and to this life some of them did apply themselves with such obsequiousnesse, that at last it grew into a Proverb, Messena servilior, that such a one was more servile, or more slavishly used then these poore Messenians. But the greatest part of them not brooking that heavy yoke, passed into Sicil, and there built the Citie of Messana. Others were planted in Naupactum, by the State of Athens; the rest dispersed up and down in all parts of Greece: few of them left in their own Countrie, till Epaminondas having vanquished the Lacedæmonians at the battell of Leuctres, restored them to their ancient possessions.

4 ARCADIA, hath on the East Laconia; on the West Elis and Messene; on the North Achaia propria; and on the South the Sea. This Country took its name from Arcas, the son of Jupiter and Calisto; but was formerly called Pelasgia: the people whereof thought themselves more ancient then the Moon.

Laconia.

Orta prius Luna, de se si creditur ipsi,
A magno tellus Arcade nomen habet.

The land of which great Areas took its name,
Was ere the Moon, if we will credit Fame.

The chief Cities are 1 Mantinea, nigh unto which the Theban Army, consisting of 30000 foot, and 3000 horse, routed the Army of the Spartans, and Athenians, consisting of 25000 foot, and 2000 horse. In this battell Epaminondas that famous Leader, received his deaths wounds, and not long after dyed. At his last gasp one of his friends bemoaning his untimely death; Alas, said he, thou dieſt Epaminondas, and leaveſt behinde thee no children: Nay, replyed he, two daughters will I leave behind me, the victory of Leuctra, and this other at Mantinea. It was afterwards called Antigonia in honour of Antigonus Tutor or Protector of Philip the father of Perſeus King of Macedon; but by command of the Emperour Adrian restored to its old name again, and is now called Mantegna. 2 Megalopolis, the birth-place of Polybius that excellent Historian. The one half of it had sometimes the name of Oreſtia, from the lodging of Oreſtes in it; the whole now called Leontari, on what cause I know not. 3 Phialia, towards the Sea. 4 Pſophis, so called from Pſophis one of the sons of Lycaon, once King of this Countrie, slain by Jupiter. 5 Stymphalus, situate near a Lake and River of the same name, where Hercules slew the Stymphalian birds; so great in number and in body that they darkened the sun-beams, and terribly infested this little Province, till driven thence by Hercules. Here was also in this town a Temple dedicated to Minerva, from hence called Stymphalida. 6 Tegea, famous for the Temple of Pan, here worshipped, and from hence called Tegæus: more for the war made upon the Tegeates, or people hereof by the Lacedæmonians: who thinking themselves assured of victorie, brought with them store of chains and fetters, wherewith to lead captive their conquered Enemies, but being overcome in battell, were themselves bound with them, and forced as slaves, to till the grounds of these Tegeates. Here is also in this Countrie the River Styx, whose water for the poisonous taste was called the water of Hell: by which Poets fain, that the Gods used to swear, as may be every where observed: and that what God soever swore by Styx falsly, he was banished from heaven; and prohibited Nectar for a 1000 years.

This Country for the fitnesse of it for pasturage and grazing hath made it the subject of many worthy and witty discourses, especially that of Sir Philip Sidney, of whom I cannot but make honourable mention: a book which besides its excellent language, rare contrivances, and delectable stories, hath in it all the strains of Poesie, comprehendeth the universall art of speaking; and to them which can discern and will observe, affordeth notable rules for demeanour, both private and publick. Which noble Gentleman, as he may worthily be called the English Heliodore, so the Ingenious Author of the History of Melintus and Ariana, may as deservedly be called the French Sidney.

5 LACONIA is bounded on the West with Arcadia, on the East and South with the Sea, on the North with Argolis. Called first Lelegia, from the Leleges, by Strabo said to be the first Inhabitants of it, afterwards Oebalia, from Oebalus a King of Lacedæmon; and finally Laconia, of the Lacones, who succeeded the Leleges in the possession hereof on their removall into the Islands of the lesser Asia. It is by some Writers also called Hecatompolis, from the number of an hundred Cities which it once had in it.

The soil hereof exceeding rich, and the fields very spatious, yet for the most part not well tilled, in regard of the many hils and Mountainets which overthwart it. Well watered with the River Eurotas, and memorable for many fair Bayes and Promontories: of which the principall are the Promontories of Malea, and Tenaria, now called Cabo Malio, and Cabo Matapan: and of the Bayes, that called Golfo di Colochina, the Sinus Laconicus of the ancients; into which the River Eurotas, (now better known by the name of Vaſilo Potamo, or the Kingly River) poures his gentle streams. The nature of the people we shall finde in Sparta.

Places of most observation in it, 1 Leuctres situate on the Sea-side, near the Bay of Messeni; of which name were two others in Greece, the one in Arcadia, the other in Achaia, but this last most memorable. 2 Amyclæ, so called from Amyclas the third King of Sparta, by whom first founded; renowned afterwards for the birth of Castor and Pollux, the sons of Tyndarus; and of good note for being the foundresse of the Citie of Amycle in Calabria Superior, at first a Colonie of this. 3 Thulana, nigh to which is the Lake of Lerna, where Hercules slew the Monster Hydra: and not far off Mount Tenarus neer the Promontorie Tenaria, in which the Natives shew a Cave, beleeved in former times to be the descent into Hell, out of which the Poets fain that Cerberus was dragged by Hercules. 4 Salassia, where Antigonus vanquished Cleomenes, the last King of Sparta. 5 Epidaurus (seated on the Bay named Golfo di Napoli) now called Malvaſia; a town well built and very well peopled; remarkable for the sweet Wines called Malveſey, or Malmeſey, sent from hence into all other parts in great abundance. 6 Sparta, so called from Sparta, the son or brother of Phoroneus the 2. King of Argos, the Founder of it: but afterwards beautified and inlarged by Lacedæmon the second King of this Countrie, it took that name also; promiscuously known by both in the best Authors. One of the Eyes of Greece, and a most famous Commonwealth, but at first governed by Kings, as most of the Greek Cities in ancient times. Tyndarus, the father of Castor and Pollux, was once King hereof, after whose death and the death of the said famous brethren, Menelaus was admitted King of Sparta or Lacedæmon, in right of Helena his wife, their ſiſter. And though Nicoſtratus and Magapenthes, ſons of Menelaus by another venter, ſucceeded after his deceaſe; yet the Spartans ſoon rejected them and received Oreſtes the ſon of Agamemnon to be their King, marrying him to Hermione the daughter of Menelaus and Helena, and conſequently the neece of Tyndarus. Tiſamenes the ſon of Oreſtes and Hermione, ſucceeded next, in whoſe time the Heraclidæ or poſteritie of Hercules returned into Greece, under the conduct of Temenus, Cteſiphon, and Ariſtodemus, ſons of Ariſtomachus: whereof the firſt poſſeſſed himſelfe by force of Arms of the Citie of Argos, the ſecond of Meſſene, and the third conquered the Citie and State of Sparta: which dying very ſhortly after, he left unto his two ſons, Euryſthenes and Procles; the roots of the two Royall families, which jointly and in common governed the affairs of Sparta: firſt abſolutely as Soveraign Princes, without any controll, afterwards at the direction of the Senate, and finally under the command and check of thoſe popular Officers whom they called the Ephori. But becauſe theſe Spartan Kings in each ſeverall period, were for the moſt part men of action, and often mentioned in the Hiſtories of the elder times: I will firſt make a Catalogue of them, and then ſubjoin ſuch obſervations and remembrances, as I think moſt pertinent. Laconia.

Helena

The KINGS of SPARTA

of the firſt Familie.

A.M.
	1	Eurotas the firſt King of Sparta, who gave name to the River Eurotas.
	2	Lacedæmon brother of Eurotas, from whom the Citie of Sparta was called Lacedæmon.
	3	Amyclas ſon of Lacedæmon, the founder of Amyclæ a Laconian Citie.
	4	Argalus ſon of Amyclas.
	5	Cynorta ſon of Argalus.
	6	Oebalus ſonne of Cynorta, from whom a part of this Country had the name of Oebalia.
	7	Hippocoon ſon of Oebalus.

	9	Caſtor and Pollux, ſons of Tyndarus, famous among the Argonautes.
2740	10	Menelaus and Helena his wife the daughter of Tyndarus, whoſe Rape occaſioned the deſtruction of Troy.
2770	11	Nicoſtratus and Megapenthes ſons of Menelaus by a former wife.
	12	Oreſtes and Hermione his wife, daughter of Helena and Menelaus.
	13	Tiſamenes ſon of Oreſtes and Hermione, who being outed of Sparta by the Heraclidæ, reigned in Achaia, and left his Kingdom there, unto his poſteritie.

The KINGS of SPARTA

of the race of HERACLIDÆ.

1 Ariſtodemus, the firſt King of the Race of Hercules; left the Kingdom jointly to his two ſons, ſlain Eurydamidas the ſon of Agis the 3. ſubſtituted his own brother Epiclides in his place. But being himſelf ſhortly after vanquiſhed by Antigonus of Macedonia, and forced to flie his Country with his wife and children: the Government of the Heraclidæ ended after it had continued here for the ſpace of 900 years or thereabouts.

	26	Eurydamidas the laſt King of the line of the Eurypontidæ, ſlain by Cleomenes, the laſt of the other line alſo.

Under theſe Kings the Government at firſt was ἄγαν Μοναρχικὸν, as Plutarch termeth it, ſufficiently Monarchicall, if it were not more. Under Eunomus the fourth King of the ſecond houſe, the people finding the reins of Government let looſe, began to mutinie and grow too head-ſtrong. To bridle whom, and to reſtrain the Kings withall, (ſhould they prove exorbitant) Lycurgus the Protector of Charilaus the ſixth King of that houſe, did ordain the Senate, committing to them the ſupreme power in matters civill, and leaving to the Kings the ordering of all militarie and ſacred buſineſſe. To curb the inſolencies of this Senate, who quickly found their own ſtrength, Theopompus the eighth King of that houſe, with the conſent of Polydorus the tenth King of the other, inſtituted a new Magiſtracie choſen out of the Common-People, whom they called the Ephori, which grew in fine to ſuch an height of pride and tyrannie, as not only to controll the Senators, but to cenſure, fine, impriſon, depoſe, and mutually to kill their Kings, as the ſpirit of ſedition moved them. So that the State of Lacedæmon was at firſt a Monarchie under Kings; then an Ariſtocratie under the command of the Senate; next a Democratie under the Ephori; and finally by thoſe popular Officers made ſo plain a Tyrannie, that Ariſtotle and Plato, two great Common-wealths-men who died before they had embrued their hands in the blood of their Kings, call it in plain terms πυρανίδα & τὸ τυραννικὸν, a moſt abſolute tyrannie. What think you would theſe men have called it, had they lived to ſee Leonidas the 3. depoſed, and Agis the third of that name alſo moſt barbarouſly murdered by theſe popular Villains.

But being the foundation of this Common-wealth was firſt laid, and the good Laws and politique Conſtitutions by which it did ſo long ſubſiſt in great power and ſplendour, eſtabliſhed by the wit and power of Lycurgus, as before was ſaid: we are to know concerning him, that he was the ſon of Eunomus the fourth King of the ſecond houſe, ſlain in a popular tumult by the common people. Who finding by this Eſſay that the people were become too head-ſtrong for the Kings to govern, unleſſe reduced to extreme bondage by their Kings, which he wiſhed not neither: took the advantage of the minoritie of Charilaus to new mould the Government: and what he could not doe by fair means to effect by Arms; forcing this Charilaus, though his Nephew, when he came to age, to flie for ſanctuarie to the Temple of Juno. Having ordained what Laws he pleaſed, and ſetled ſuch a form of government as himſelf beſt fancied: the better to decline the envie of ſo great a change, he got leave to travail; binding the people by an oath to obſerve all his laws untill his return: and being gone, commanded at his death, that his aſhes ſhould be caſt into the Sea, leſt being carryed back to Sparta, the people might conceive themſelves releaſed from their oath. By means whereof his Laws continued in force near 700 years, during which time that Common-wealth did flouriſh in all proſperity: the particulars of which Inſtitutions he that liſts to ſee may finde them ſpecified at large by Plutarch in the life of Lycurgus. Suffice it that the Diſcipline was ſo ſharp and ſtrict, that many went into the wars for no other reaſon then on an hope to rid themſelves from ſo hard a life: and that Diogenes returning hence to the Citie of Athens, gave out that he returned from men to women, ἐκ τῶν Ανδρῶν εἰς τὰς Γυναικᾶς. And being asked in what part of Greece he had met with the compleateſt men; made anſwer that he could no where meet with men, but that he had found ſome boyes amongſt the Spartans. A Cynicall and rugged anſwer, but ſuch as carryed a great deal of judgment in it; the Spartans being more ſtout and reſolute in all their actions, and leſſe effeminate in their lives then the reſt of the Grecians. But beſides the ſtrictneſſe of the diſcipline under which they lived, there was another thing which made them wiſh for wars abroad: namely, the little or no power which either the Kings or People had in civil matters and affairs of State, entirely left to the diſpoſing of the Senate and the power of the Ephori. So that the Kings having by the laws the command of their armies, were willing to engage in war upon all occaſion; and the common people as deſirous to attend them in ſuch employments, as the Kings could wiſh. Upon theſe grounds the war is made a trade amongſt them; beginning with the Helots a neighbouring people; then with the reſt of the Laconians; afterwards quarrelling the Meſſenians their old Confederates: all which they ſeverally ſubdued and made ſubject to them. In the warre which Xerxes made againſt the City of Athens, their King Leonidas the firſt, of the elder houſe, went forth to aid them: ſlain at the ſtraights of Thermopyle, courageouſly fighting for the liberty of Greece: and when it was thought fit to ſet upon the Perſian Fleet, Eurybiades the Spartan Admirall did command in chief. In purſuit of the this war againſt the Perſians, Pauſanias and Ageſilaus were of moſt renown: the firſt in helping the Athenians to drive them out of Greece; the other in making war upon them in their own Dominions. Freed from the Perſians they grow jealous of the State of Athens, whom they looked on as their Rivals in point of Soveraignty and glory. Hence the long warre betwixt theſe Cities called Bellum Peloponneſiacum, managed for the moſt part in Peloponneſus, from thence transferred into Sicil, and at laſt ended in the taking of Athens: the Government whereof they changed into an Ariſtocratie, under 30 Magiſtrates of their own appointment, commonly called the thirty tyrants. Proud of this fortunate ſucceſſe their next quarrell was with the Bœotians, the conquered Athenians covertly, and the Perſians openly aſſiſting the enemy. Here their proſperity began to leave them. For beſides many ſmall defeats, Epaminondas the Theban ſo diſcomfited them, at the overthrowes of Leuctres and Mantinea; that Sparta it ſelfe was in danger of utter ruine. Not long after happened the Holy warre chiefly undertooke againſt the Phocians, wherein alſo they made a party: but this warre being ended by King Philip, they ſcarce breathed more freedome, than he gave air to. But when Alexanders Captains fought for the Empire of their Maſter, all theſe flouriſhing Republiques were either totally ſwallowed into, or much defaced by the Kingdome of Macedon. The Lacedæmonians held the chief ſtrength of a Town to conſiſt in the valour of the people, and therefore would never ſuffer Sparta to be walled, till the times immediately following the death of Alexander the Great: yet could not thoſe fortifications then defend them from Antigonus Doſon King of Macedon, who having vanquiſhed Cleomenes King of Sparta, entred the Town, and was the firſt man that ever was received into it as Conqueror: So much different were the preſent Spartans from the valour and courage of their anceſtours. Cleomenes being forced to forſake his countrey, and the race of the Heraclidæ failing in him, they became a prey to Machanidus and Nabis, two wicked Tyrants: from whom they were no ſooner freed, but they were made ſubject (in a manner) to the power of Rome: and in the end the Town ſo weak and inconſiderable, that it was not able to reſiſt the pooreſt enemy; now a ſmall Burrough called Miſithra. And ſo I leave them to the thoughts of their former glories, having now nothing elſe to boaſt of, but the fame and memory of their actions in former times.

Argolis.

ARGOLIS, ſo called from the chief City Argos, is bounded on the South with Laconia, on the Weſt with Corinthia, and Achaia Propria; on the Eaſt and North with the Sea. A territorie remarkable for a moſt excellent breed of Horſes, and from thence called Hippium.

Places of moſt importance in it, 1 Argos, founded by Argus the fourth King of this countrey, and the chief of this Kingdome. Memorable as for other things, ſo 1 for the death of Pyrrhus King of Epirus, who having forced his entry into it, was here ignobly ſlaine after all his victories, by the hands of an old woman, throwing a Tyle at him from the top of an houſe. 2 For the long race of the Kings hereof, from Inachus the cotemporary of our Father Abraham, anno 2003. unto Acriſius their laſt King. Whoſe daughter Danae being ſhut up in a Tower of Braſſe, was deflowred by Jupiter, to whom ſhe bare the renowned Perſeus, ſo memoriſed in antient Poets. But Perſeus having by misfortune ſlain his Grandfather the old King Acriſius, quitted the City of Argos as unlucky to him, and transferred the Kingdome to Mycenæ, a City of his own foundation, and ſo better fancied: by means hereof, the ſecond City of eſteem in this little Province. Growing in ſmall time unto ſo great riches, that it got the name of dites Mycenæ; as appeareth by Horace, in whom the Horſes of Argos, and the wealth of Mycene are placed in one verſe together;

Aptum dicis equis Argos, diteſque Mycenas.

For horſes Argos is of fame,
For wealth Mycenæ hath the name.

3 Trœzen, ſituate on the Sinus Argolicus, now called Golfo di Engia, the Royall ſeat of Pytheus the father of Theſeus who was born herein: from whence the Town in Ovid hath ſometime the name of Pytheia Trœzen, and Theſeus many times is called Trœzenius Heros: as Hercules had the name of Tyrinthius Heros, from 4 Tyrinthia, another City of this Province, in which he was nurſed. 5 Nemea, where Hercules ſlew the dreadfull Lyon which annoied this countrey. In honour of which noble Act were inſtituted in time following the Nemean Games, which continued of great fame in Greece for many Ages. The Exerciſes were running with ſwift horſes, whorlebats, running on foot, quoiting, wraſtling, darting, ſhooting. Some have referred the originall of theſe Games to one Opheltes a Lacedemonian; and in whoſe honour they conceive them inſtituted: and others fetch it higher from the war of Thebes. But this I take to be the more allowable opinion. 6 Epidaurus on the Sea ſide famous for the Temple of Æſculapius; and the cure of all ſorts of diſeaſes there, ſo called from Epidaurus the ſonne of Argus the founder of it. Of the ſame name, but of a different ſituation from that before mentioned in Laconia: this being ſeated on the Bay called Golfo di Napoli, this on that of Engia. Once called Meliſſa, and Æmera, at that time an Iſland; but by an Earthquake laid unto the continent: now called Pigiala. 7 Nauplia, ſo called of Nauplius King of Eubœa, and father of Palamedes, to whom Argolis. whom it antiently belonged. A ſtation then, as now, for ſhipping, in that regard called Nauplia Navale, now Napoli, or Neapolis, the richeſt and beſt traded in all this tract, giving name unto a large and capacious Bay now called Golfo di Napoli, of old Sinus Argolicus; into which the famous River Inachus, having paſſed through the City of Argos doth diſgorge it ſelfe; ſo called from Inachus, the Father of Io, and the originall and Progenitor of

The KINGS of ARGOS and MYCENÆ.

2475	10	Danaus the brother of Egyptus, by whom driven out of Egypt he was made King of Argos, by conſent of the people: the Father of thoſe many daughters got with child by Hercules. From him the Grecians are called often by the name of Danai.
2525	11	Lynceus ſon of Egyptus the brother of Danaus.
2556	12	Abas the ſon of Lynceus and Hypermneſtra the daughter of Danaus.
2566	13	Pretus the ſon of Abas.
2606	14	Acriſius the brother of Pretus and the father of Danae, foretold by Oracle that hee ſhould be ſlaine by a ſon of that daughter, ſhut her up in a brazen tower. But Jupiter having corrupted the Guards with Gold, got the Ladies conſent, by whom he had Perſeus ſo renowned amongſt the Poets and Hiſtorians of thoſe elder times.
2637	15	Perſeus the ſon of Jupiter and Danae expoſed by his Grandfather to the Seas, miraculouſly preſerved, and grown into great fame by his brave exploits; reſtored Acriſius to his throne from which he had been depoſed by his brother Pretus. But after having ignorantly and unfortunately ſlain the ſaid Acriſius, he removed his ſeat unto Mycenæ; where he reigned together with his ſon Sthenelus.
1645	16	Euryſtheus the ſon of Sthenelus, much ſpoken of for the difficult taskes which at the inſtigation of Juno he impoſed on Hercules, his foſter-child, and the ſuppoſed ſon of Amphytryon his Couſen German.
2753	18	Agamemnon the ſon of Atreus, Commander of the Greeks at the war of Troy, in which action there ingaged 69 Kings of the Grecians, waſted over with a Navy of 1224 ſhips, killed at his coming home by Ægiſthus, his Couſen German.
2768	19	Ægiſthus the ſon of Thyeſtes, having defiled Clitemneſtra the wife of Agamemnon in the time of his abſence, by her procurement murdered him at his coming home, and uſurped the Kingdome.
2775	20	Oreſtes ſon of Agamemnon revenged his fathers death on Ægiſthus and Clitemneſtra, his owne Mother. After which falling mad, and reſtored againe unto his wits, hee married Hermione daughter of Menelaus and Helena, by whom he had the kingdome of Sparta alſo.
2803	21	Penthilus the ſon of Oreſtes, and the laſt King of this line, outed of his eſtate by the Dores and Heraclidæ; who made themſelves Maſters of all Peloponneſus, which they poſſeſſed untill the conqueſt of it by the Macedonians.

7 CORINTHIA is a little Region, lying towards the Iſthmus or neck of land, which joineth Peloponneſus to the reſt of Greece; betwixt Argolis and Achaia Propria. It containeth onely the territory of the City of Corinth, not large, nor very fruitfull of thoſe commodities which the reſt of this Peninſula doth abound withall: as being mountainous and hilly, and by reaſon of the neerneſſe of the Sea, full of craggy rocks. The chief and indeed the onely Cities of note in it, 1 Cenchrea, the navellnavall Road or ſtation of ſhips for Corinth, mentioned Act. 19. 18. and Rom. 16. 1. In both Texts reckoned a diſtinct town from Corinth, as indeed it was. 2 Corinth it ſelfe, is commodiouſly ſituate for the command of all Greece, (had not the Inhabitants been more given to Merchandiſe then unto the warres) as being ſeated on the bottom of the neck or Iſthmus, the Ionian Sea upon the Weſt, and the Ægean on the Weſt, waſhing the wals thereof, and giving it on each ſide a capacious Haven, in which regard called by Horace bimaris Corinthus. In compaſſe about eleven miles, for ſtrength impregnable, for command as powerfull; maſtering both Seas on which it ſtood, and cutting off all paſſage from one halfe of Greece to the other: to which laſt end the Caſtle called Acrocorinthus, looking into both Seas, ſerved exceeding fitly, and was therefore called one of the Fetters of Greece. The City, rich, well traded, and neatly built, moſt houſes beautified with handſome pillars from thence called Corinthian: more memorable for the wealth of the people, and the conveniency of the ſituation, then for any notable exploits performed by them, or any great influence which they had on the States of Greece. But in regard of the wealth, greatneſſe, and ſituation, accounted by the Romans one of the three Cities which they held capable of the Empire; Carthage and Capua being the other two. In this City lived the famous or infamous whore, Thais, who exacted 10000 Drachmas for a ſingle nights lodging: which made Demoſthenes cry out, Non emam tanti pœnitere, and occaſioned the old By-word, Corinthia.

Non cuivis homini contingit adire Corinthum,

'Tis not for every mans availe,
Unto Corinth for to ſayle.

Neer hereunto ſtood the Acrocorinthian mountaines, at the foot whereof the City, and on the top whereof the Caſtle called hence Acrocorinthus were ſeated; out of which flowed the famous fountaine named Pyrene, of old conſecrated to the Muſes; by Perſius called Fons Caballinus, becauſe faigned by the antient Poets to have been made by the horſe Pegaſus, daſhing his foot againſt the rock. And on the other ſide hereof, in the very Iſthmus were celebrated yearly the Iſthmian games, ordained by Theſeus in the honour of Neptune, in imitation of the Olympick deviſed by Hercules in honour of Jupiter. The exerciſes much the ſame, and the reward no other then a Garland of Oaken boughes; yet drawing yearly a great reſort of people to them: partly to exerciſe themſelves, and behold the ſpeats, and partly to ſacrifice to Neptune, who had hard by a famous Temple.

As for the fortunes of this City, it was at firſt called Ephyra, at that time a ſmall and obſcure place; but beautified and repaired by Corinthus the ſon of Pelops, tooke the name of Corinth, Governed by him and his poſteritie till the coming of the Heraclidæ into Peloponneſus: at what time one Aletes of the race of Hercules, poſſeſſed himſelf hereof, with the name of King, A. M. 2849. Twelve Princes of his line enjoyed it for the ſpace of 220 yeares and upwards: when the houſe fayling in the perſon of Automanes, they were governed by temporary officers, like the Archontes of Athens. Continuing under this Government 124 years, the City was ſeiſed on by one Cypſelus, A. M. 3294. who left it to his ſonne Periander, one of the ſeven wiſemen of Greece; counted a Tyrant in thoſe times for no other reaſon, then that he had ſuppreſſed the popular government; after whoſe death, an. 3364. the City did recover its former liberty. In the buſtles betwixt Athens and Lacedæmon, and other the eſtates of Greece, for the ſuperiority, it did little meddle: the aim of this people being wealth, not honour; not intereſſed in any action of renown in all thoſe times; but in the ſending of Timoleon to the aid of the Syracuſans, againſt the Tyrant Dionyſius, who did lord it over them. Subdued together with the reſt by the Kings of Macedon; and with the reſt reſtored to liberty by the power of Rome. Under whom growing ſtill more rich, and withall more inſolent, they abuſed certain Roman Ambaſſadours. But iraſci populo Romano nemo ſapienter poteſt, as is ſaid in Livie: which the Corinthians found too true; the City being beſieged, ſacked, and burnt unto the ground by Lucius Mummius, a Roman Conſul, an. V. C. 607. In the burning whereof there were conſumed ſo many goodly Statuas of gold, ſilver, braſſe, and other metals, that being melted into a Lump, they made up by that fatal chance, the ſo much eſtimated metal, called Æs Corinthium, more highly prized in Rome then Gold or Silver. Repaired again, it was of great eſteem in the time of the Emperours, converted by S. Paul to the Chriſtian Faith; and having flouriſhed a long time in pride and pleaſures, decayed by little and little, till it came to nothing, and is now a ſmall Burrough called Crato.

Having thus ſpoken of the ſeverall Eſtates of Peloponneſus, it reſteth that we ſpeak ſomewhat of the eſtate of the whole, varied according to the fortunes of thoſe particulars, which had moſt influence on the ſame. The affaires hereof a long while ſwayed by the Kings of Sicyon, whence it had the name of Sicyonia, reſtrained afterwards to the territories of that City onely. But when the Kings of Argos came in place and power, it depended much upon their pleaſures; from Apis the third king whereof (if not rather from Apis the fourth King of Sicyon) in the opinion of ſome Writers, it was named Apia. But Pelops the ſon of Tantalus King of Phrygia coming into Greece, and marrying Hippodamia daughter of Oenomaus King of Elis, became the moſt powerfull Prince of all this Peninſula, taking from him the name of Peloponneſus. The Kingdome of Mycenæ growing into power and credit, had the next turn in ſwaying the affaires hereof for a certain ſeaſon: as after that the Dores, and the Heraclidæ, poſſeſſed at once of Argos, Sparta, Corinth, and Meſſene. The Spartans getting the preheminence over all the reſt, were the next who governed the affaires of it, and they held it long; having firſt

Achaia. conquered Laconia, and ſubverted the eſtate of Meſſene; by means whereof, and by their fortunate ſucceſſe againſt the Perſians, they became almoſt abſolute in their commands, without any Competitor. But their power being broken by Pelopidas and Epaminondas in the Theban war, the petit States hereof began to take heart again; & ſtand upon their own legs, as they did a while, till the Kings of Macedon ſucceeding Alexander the Great, brought them once more under, and made them fellow-ſervants with their Spartan Maſters. In the confuſions which enſued in Macedon, amongſt the Competitors for that Kingdome, Patræ and Dime, two Cities of Achaia Propria, firſt united themſelves in a ſtrong league of amity, at ſuch time as Pyrrhus firſt went into Italy: into which confederacie the Cities of Tritæa and Phera ſhortly after came, and not long after that, Ægira and the reſt of Achaia Propria: their affaires firſt governed by two Prætors, with advice of the Senate, as afterwards by one alone with the like advice, of which Marcus Carinenſis was the firſt, and Aratus of Sicyonia the ſecond. The ground thus laid, and the reputation of this new Commonwealth increaſing by the vertue of Aratus, the Epidaurians, Trœzenians, Argives, and Megarians became members of it: maintaining gallantly the liberties of Peloponneſus; till finally maſtered by the Romans: the diviſion of whoſe Empire it fell with all the reſt of Greece, to the Conſtantinopolitans: and in the declining of their fortunes, when the Latines got poſſeſſion of the Imperiall City, moſt of the Sea-coaſts of it were alotted to the State of Venice: the inland parts formerly parcelled out amongſt many Princes whom they called Deſpots, continuing as before they were; till all together made a prey to the Turkiſh Tyrants, Mahomet the Great, and Bajazet the ſecond, by whom wholly conquered. For howſoever Thomas and Demetrius, Brethren of that unfortunate Prince Conſtantinus Palæologus, had fled hither at the taking of Conſtantinople; and were received and obeyed by thoſe Petit Princes: yet being unable to hold out againſt the Conquerour, they became his tributaries. But falling out amongſt themſelves, and neglecting then to ſend in the tribute agreed upon, gave Mahomet the Great occaſion to invade the Countrey, and under colour of aiding one brother againſt the other, to deſtroy them both, as he did accordingly: Demetrius being carryed Priſoner to Conſtantinople, and Thomas forced to abandon Peloponneſus, and flee to Italie, anno 3457. Such towns hereof as belonged unto the State of Venice followed the ſame fortune alſo in the time of Bajazet; by whom all taken at the laſt, and the whole Countrie brought under his obedience, anno 1500 or thereabouts. Governed ever ſince that time by a Turkiſh Zanziack, under the Beglerbeg of Greece, who hath his reſidence at Macedon, a Regiment of 1000 Horſe to ſecure the Countrie, and 700000 Aſpers (that is to ſay, 14000 Crowns) a year for his entertainment.

2 ACHAIA.

ACHAIA is bounded on the Eaſt with the Ægean Sea, on the Weſt with Epirus; on the North with Theſſalie, and on the South with Peloponneſus, and the Seas thereof. Called antiently Hellas from Helles the ſonne of Deucalion: but whence it had the name of Achaia is not yet agreed on, though ſure I am, that from hence the Inhabitants of it were called Achivi, (a name communicated afterwards to all the Grecians) to difference them from the Achæi of Achaia Propria.

The countrey famous in the Authours of elder times more for the gallantry of the men, then any great goodneſſe of their countrey: yet that ſufficiently memorable for the hill Hymettus, ſwarming with Bees, plentifull of the ſweeteſt honey; and rich in mines of excellent marble; as alſo for the River Cephiſus, which runneth almoſt through the whole length hereof; divided into two main ſtreams, of which the one is called Aſopus, the other retaineth its firſt name. Upon the banks hereof ſtood the Temple of Themis, to which Deucalion did repair to be directed in the reſtauration of mankinde, as the Poets fable.

It was divided antiently into theſe ſeven parts, viz. 1 Attica, 2 Megaris, 3 Bœotia, 4 Phocis, 5 Locris, 6 Doris, and 7 Ætolia. A diviſion now as much diſuſed as the name of Achaia, changed by the Turkes into that of Levadia; of which more anon.

1 ATTICA hath on the Weſt Megaris, and ſome part of Bœotia; on all other parts compaſſed with the Sea: ſo called from Athens the chief City. The ſoile for the moſt part very barren and craggy, yet by the armes and induſtry of the people made both rich, and famous: inſomuch as the yearly revenues of the State of Athens were 1200 Talents. The money currant in this countrey was commonly ſtamped with an Oxe, whence came the By-word Bos in lingua, applyed to ſuch Lawyers as were bribed to ſay nothing in their Clients cauſe: Not much unlike to which was the Proverb riſing from the coin of Ægina (an Iſle adjoining) ſtamped with the figure of a Snail, viz. Virtutem & ſapientiam vincunt Teſtudines.

Places of moſt obſervation in it, 1 Phile, a ſtrong Fortreſſe on the Borders of Bœotia, ſurprized by Thraſibulus and others of the baniſhed Athenians, during the Government of the 30 Tyrants: the taking whereof was the firſt ſtep towards their own and their countries libertie; which ſoone after followed. 2 Eleuſis, on the borders of Megaris; almoſt impregnably fortified by the 30 Tyrants when they had the command of Athens, by whom deſigned for their retreat in all times of danger. But having withdrawn hither on the the taking of Phile and Piræus, by the Thraſybulians, they found ſtrong wals a weak defence for ſo much wickedneſſe; being trained out as to a parlie, and ſo deprived of the place and their power together. It was firſt built by one Eleuſius, who entertained Ceres as ſhe was in queſt of her daughter Proſerpine: who to reward him taught him the uſe of Agriculture; and he in honour of her built here a Temple. Hence Ceres in the Poets is called Eleusina, and her sacrifices sacra Eleusinia; and sometimes the City also, Cerealis Eleusis, so called by Ovid, in the 7 book of the Metamorphosis. 3 Rhamnus, upon the River Asopus, famous for the Temple of Amphiaraus, and the Statua of the Goddesse Nemesis, hence called Rhamnusia in the Poets: this Nemesis or Rhamnusia, being the Goddesse of indignation, punishing those who made themselves unworthy of their present fortunes. 4 Trichoritum, of more Antiquity, then fame. 5 Marathon, on the southside of the River Asopus, opposite to Rhamnus; of great note for the discomfiture given by Miltiades the Athenian to the numerous Army of Darius, consisting of 200000 Foot, and 10000 Horse: the Emulation of which noble victory startled such brave resolves in the brest of Themistocles. As memorable in the Poets of those elder times for the Marathonian Bull there slain by Theseus. 6 Pyræus, the Port-Town to Athens, and the ordinary Station for their shipping; the Haven hereof being capable of 400 saile: distant from the City about two miles, but joined unto it by two long wals reaching from the one to the other, for securing the conveyance of their Merchandise to and from the Sea. The Port it self impregnably fortified by the advice of Themistocles. But as these long walls were broken down by the command of the Spartans, when the City of Athens was taken by them: so were the fortifications of Pyræus it self demolished by the command of Sylla, in his war against Mithridates King of Pontus, the better to keep under the Athenians. 7 Panormus, a Seat-Town also, and of very good trade, but not of such importance as the other was. 8 ATHENS, one of the eyes of Greece, and the chiefe of Attica, situate from the Sea two miles, as before was said: the Haven of Pyræus serving it with all commodities, which came from other parts by shipping. First built by Cecrops the first King of it, by whom called Cecropia, A. M. 2409. repaired afterwards by Theseus, and furnished with good Lawes by Solon; and finally thus named from Minerva (whom the Greekes call Athene) to whom then dedicated, and in whose honour there were yearly kept some solemn Games called Panathenæa. A City heretofore adorned with all those excellencies of strength and beauty, which Art or cost could adde unto it. Renowned, as for many things, so for three especially. 1 For the inviolable faith of the Citizens in all their Leagues, and most firm affection to their friends: so that Fides Attica grew in the end unto an Adage. 2 For the famous scholars which here taught and flourished: this being so happy a Nursery of the choicest wits, and so fitly seated for the Muses, that the very Natives being in other countries could sensibly perceive some want of that naturall vigour, which at home was reliant in their spirits. Ita ut corpora istius gentis separata sint in alias Regiones, ingenia vero solis Athenienſium muris clausa esse existimes, as Velleius hath it. Yea and to say the truth, it was a most famous University, from whose great Cistern, the Conduit-pipes of learning were dispersed over all the World. Yet did not learning so effeminate or soften the hearts of the People, but that 3 this one City yeelded more famous Captaines, then any in the World besides, not excepting Rome, Miltiades, Aristides, Themistocles, Cimon, Pericles, Alcibiades, Phocion, and divers others of great name. Who though they were the men that both defended and enlarged this Common-wealth: yet were the people so ungratefull to them, or they so unfortunate in the end, that they either dyed abroad in banishment, or by some violent death at home. Themistocles the Champion of Greece, died an exile in Persia, Phocion was slaine by the people; Demosthenes made himself away by poison; Pericles many times indangered; Theseus their Founder first deposed, and then despitefully imprisoned: Aristides, Alcibiades, Nicias, &c. banished for ten years by Ostracism: A form of punishment so called, because the name of the partie banished was writ on an Oyster-shell, and onely used toward such, who either began to grow too popular, or potent among the men of service. Which device, allowable in a Democratie, where the overmuch powerableness of one might hazard the liberty of all, was exercised in spight oftner, then desert. A Countrey-fellow meeting by chance with Aristides, desired him to write Aristides in his shell; and being asked, whether the man whose banishment he desired, had ever wronged him, replyed, No, he was onely sorry to heare folke call him a good man. We finde the like unfortunate end to most of the Romans, so redoubted in warre. Coriolanus was exiled, Camillus confined to Ardea, Scipio murdered, with divers others: onely because their virtue had lifted them above the pitch of ordinary men. Ventidius was disgraced by Antony, Agricola poysoned, with the privity of Domitian; Corbulo, murdered by the command of Nero: all able men, yet living in an age, wherein it was not lawfull to be valiant. In later times it so hapned to Gonsalvo the Great Captain, who having conquered the kingdome of Naples, driven the French beyond the mountains, and brought all the Italian Potentates to stand at the Spaniards devotion; was by his Master called home, where hee lived obscurely, though honoured after his decease with a solemne Funerall. Worse fared the Guise, and Biron in France; worse Essex and Dudley of Northumberland with us in England. Neither will I omit William Duke of Suffolk, who having served 34 yeares in our warres with France, and for 17 yeares together never coming home, at his return was quarrelled and basely murdered. It were almost an impiety to be silent of Joab, the bravest souldier and most fortunate Leader that ever fought the Lords battells; and yet he died at the hornes of the Altar. Whether it be that such men be born under an unhappy Planet; or that Courtiers, and such as have best opportunity to indeere men of warre unto their Soveraignes, know not the way of commending their great deserts; or that Envy the common Foe to vertue, be an hinderance to it; I am not able to determine. And yet it may be that Princes naturally are distrustfull of men of Action; and are not willing to make them greater, whose name is great enough already. And it may be the fault is in the souldiers themselves by an unseasonable overvaluing of their own performances, as if the Prince or State were not able to reward or prize them: which was the cause of the death of Silius, in the time of Tiberius, concerning which Athens. Tacitus giveth us this good note, that over-merit in great Subjects is exceeding dangerous, and begets hate in ſtead of favours. Beneficia eo uſque læta ſunt dum videntur exolvi poſſe; Ubi multum antevertere unt, pro gratia odium redditur, ſaith that wiſe Hiſtorian.

But to look back againe on Athens, it was firſt built by Cecrops, the firſt King thereof; governed by him and his poſterity with no lower title, for 400 yeares, as is apparent by this following Catalogue of

The KINGS of ATHENS.

A.	M.
2394	1	Cecrops, who firſt made Jupiter a God, and ordained ſacrifices to be offered to him, as Pauſanias writeth.
2444	2	Cranaus, outed of his Kingdome by
2453	3	Amphictyon the ſon of Deucalion, and Uncle to that Amphictyon, who firſt inſtituted the ſupreme Court of the Amphictyones, or Common-Councell of all Greece.
2463	4	Ericthonius the ſon of Vulcan.
2513	5	Pandion the Father of Progne and Philomela, ſo famous in the old Poets, of whom more hereafter.
2553	6	Erichtheus whoſe daughter Orithya was raviſhed by Boreas King of Thrace.
2603	7	Cecrops II. brother of Erichtheus.
2643	8	Pandion II. ſon of Erichtheus.
2668	9	Ægeus ſon of Pandion the ſecond, of whom the Ægean ſea took name.
2706	10	Theſeus the ſon of Ægeus and Companion of Hercules, vanquiſhed the Minotaure in Crete, collected the people of Attica into a body, and incorporated them into the City of Athens, which he had beautified and enlarged.
2746	11	Meneſtheus the ſon of Peteus Grandchild of Erichtheus, ſerved with the other Greeke Princes at the war of Troy.
2769	12	Demophoon the ſon of Theſeus, reſtored unto his Fathers throne on the death of Meneſtheus.
2802	13	Oxyntes ſon or brother of Demophoon.
2814	14	Aphydas ſon of Oxyntes ſlaine by his brother.
2815	15	Thymades the laſt of the line of Erichtheus.
2823	16	Melanthius of Meſſene driven out of his own Kingdome by the Heraclidæ, obtained that of Athens.
2860	17	Codrus the ſon of Melanthius, the laſt King of Athens; who in the warres againſt the Peloponneſians having Intelligence by an Oracle, that his Enemies ſhould have the victory, if they did not kill the Athenian King; attired himſelfe like a common Begger, entred the Peloponneſian Camp, and there played ſuch prancks, that at the laſt they were fain to kill him. Which when the Enemy underſtood, they thought themſelves by this meanes deprived of all hopes of ſucceſſe, and ſo broke up their Army, and departed homewards. For this the people of Athens did ſo honour his memory, that they thought no man worthy to ſucceed, as King; and therefore committed the managing of the Eſtate to Governours for term of life, whom they called Archontes: the firſt Archon being Medon the ſon of Codrus; not differing from the former Kings in point of power, but only in the manner of their admiſſion: the former kings claiming the government by ſucceſſion in right of bloud; and theſe Archontes holding by election onely: whoſe names here follow in this liſt of

The perpetuall ARCHONTES in the STATE of ATHENS.

A.	M.
2882	1	Medon the ſon of Codrus.	3059	7	Diogenetus the ſon of Megacles.
2902	2	Acaſtus the ſon of Medon.	3087	8	Phereclus the ſon of Diogenetus.
2938	3	Archippus the ſon of Acaſtus.	3106	9	Aritthon the ſon of Phereclus.
2957	4	Therſippus the ſon of Archippus.	3126	10	Theſpieus, in whoſe time began the Kingdom of Macedon.
2998	5	Phorbas the ſon of Therſippus.	3153	11	Agameſtor.
3029	6	Megacles the ſon of Phorbas.	3173	12	Æſchilus the ſon of Agameſtor.

After whoſe death, an. mun. 3195. the Athenians weary of theſe Governours for term of life, as being leſſe obnoxious to the check and cenſure of the people, choſe themſelves Officers or Archontes for ten years onely; at the end of which time they were to yeeld up their places, and make roome for others. But being a people greedy of *Noveltie*s, and deſirous of change, they had onely ſeven of thoſe Decenniall Archontes: their Officers from that time forwards being choſen annually: which Officers being nine in number, we may call moſt properly the Provoſt, the Chief Biſhop, the Marſhall, and the ſix Chief Juſtices, all choſen out of the Nobility: And ſo it held for the ſpace of 170 yeares, till the time of Solon: who was the firſt which put the Supreme authority into the hands of the People; and gave the firſt hint unto that Democratie: which afterwards prevailed in Athens, by the helpe of of Pericles, who being one of the great Councell of the Areopagites, took from them a great part of their power in deciding Controverſies and ſuites in Law, putting them over to the judgement of the common People. A Government ſo dearly loved by the Athenians, that in all the Cities which they conquered or reſtored to liberty, or wonne to their partie from the Spartans, they cauſed it to be admitted: as on the other ſide the Spartans introduced and confirmed the Ariſtocratie (their own loved Government) in all the places where they proſpered. As for the Court of the Areopagites of much fame in Athens, it conſiſted from the firſt beginning ἐκ τῶν κατ' ἐνιαυτὸν Ἀρχόντων, of ſuch as had born ſome of the nine chief Offices; who being once admitted, held for term of life. Firſt inſtituted in the time of Demophoon, the ſon of Theſeus, and called by the name of Areopagites, either for that they held their Court in the ſtreet of Mars, ἐν Ἀρείῳ πάγῳ, mentioned, Act. 17. 22. or becauſe Mars being accuſed for a Murder, did firſt plead before them. A Court which held in eſtimation under all theſe changes, and ſo continued till the time of the Roman Empire. Athens.

But to return againe to the ſtory of Athens, in or about the later end of the life of Solon, Piſiſtratus altered the Free State and made himſelfe the abſolute Maſter of the City: but he once dead, the People regained their libertie, driving thence Hippias the ſonne of Piſiſtratus; who hereupon fled for ſuccour to Darius the Perſian Monarch, occaſioning by that meanes the firſt coming of the Perſians into Greece. What ſucceſſe the Perſians had in Greece, theſe Hiſtories of the times abundantly inform us: Darius being vanquiſhed by Miltiades, at Marathon; and Xerxes by Themiſtocles, at Salamis; yet did not Athens ſcape ſo cleare, but that it was taken by Xerxes, though indeed firſt abandoned, and voluntarily diſmantled by the Athenians. When the Perſians were retired homewards, the people of Athens reedified their towne, and ſtrongly fortified it with high and defenſible wals: which done, they put their Fleet to Sea, and ſpoiled the coaſts of Perſia in all quarters; inriching their City with the ſpoiles, and enlarging their power and Dominion by the addition of many Iſlands and Sea townes. Hereby they grew unto that wealth and potency, that they were ſuſpected by their weaker neighbours, and envied by their ſtronger, the Lacedæmonians eſpecially: who fearing to loſe their antient priority over Greece, but pretending the ſurpriſall of Potidea a City of Thrace from the Corinthians, and ſome hard meaſure, by them ſhewed upon the Megarenſes; made warre upon them. In the beginning of this warre, the Athenians not onely reſiſted the whole power of all Greece, confederate againſt them; but ſo exceedingly proſpered, that the Spartans, ſued for peace, and could not get it. But the ſcales of fortune turned. For after they had held out 28 yeares they were compelled to pluck down the Walls of their City, and ſubmit themſelves to the will and pleaſure of the Spartans, now by the puiſſance and good fortune of Lyſander, become their Maſters: by whom the Government was changed, and an Ariſtocratie, (or rather Oligarchie) eſtabliſhed under 30 Magiſtrates, known commonly by the name of the 30 Tyrants; expelled not long after by the valour of Thraſibulus, and his Aſſociates, as hath been touched upon before. Not long after the end of this warre, which the Hiſtorians call Bellum Peloponneſiacum, the Perſians ſeeing how the Spartans, not having now the State of Athens to oppoſe them, began to work upon their Empire: furniſhed Conon a Noble Athenian Gentleman with a Navy ſo well provided, that they overcame the Lacedemonians in a fight at Sea; and thereby put his Countrey-men into ſo good heart, that they once more reedified and repaired their Walls. Which work they had no ſooner ended, but they made a partie in the warre called Bellum Sacrum; compoſed at the laſt by Philip of Macedon: who brought not onely the Thebans whom he came to aid, but the Athenians, Spartans, and the reſt of the adverſe partie under his command. A ſervitude from which they were never freed, till as well Macedon, as the reſt became fellow-ſervants unto Rome. But though this brave City had then loſt her power in point of Armes, yet ſhe ſtill kept her credit, as an Univerſity in point of Arts, Origen, Chryſoſtom, Baſil, and Gregory Nyſſen, men of renown and eminence in the Primitive times, are ſaid to have ſtudied at Athens: the like affirmed of Pope Joane, if the Tale be true, for the middle ages. And ſo it held as I conjecture, though not ſo eminently as before, till the year 1440. when taken by Mahomet the Great, who wondred much (as my Authour telleth) at the extreme beauty of the Caſtle, and the ſtrength of the walls, not having loſt in ſo long time, their former excellencies. Since that it ſenſibly decayed, and is now an ordinary Burrough (by the Turkes called Selines) but ſtill preſerved the Reputation of an Epiſcopall See, the Biſhop of it holding up the title of Athenienſis.

2 MEGARIS is bounded on the Eaſt with Attica; on the Weſt with the Bay of Corinth, on the North with Bœotia, and on the South with the Iſthmus, and the Golf of Engia. So called from Megaris, the chief City.

This the leaſt Province of all Greece, and not very fruitfull; the Countrey for the moſt part being hard and rocky. Not beautified with many Cities; the principall of thoſe which were 1 Pegæ, or Pagei, ſituate on the Bay of Corinth, and ſpoken of both by Pliny and Ptolemie; but not otherwiſe memorable. 2 Megaris (now Megra) firſt built by Megareus the ſonne of Apollo; and from him thus named. Remarkable in former times for a Sect of Philoſophers, called from hence Secta Megarica, founded by one Euclide a Diſciple of Socrates; of whom ſee Laertius. More memorable in the Poets for Niſus, once the King of this little Territorie: on whoſe head there is ſaid to have grown a Purple Haire, on which the preſervation of his life and Kingdome did depend. Which Jewell his daughter Scylla is ſaid to have delivered unto King Minos her Fathers Enemy; on whom then beſieging this City, upon the ſight of him from an high Turret, ſhee became inamoured. But he rejecting her, and her Preſent both, after the taking of the City returned into Crete: which the unhappy woman seeing, threw her self after him into the Sea, and was turned into the Bird called Ciris. I leave the moralizing of the Fable unto the Mythologists: observing only by the way, the antiquity of that politick practise, to love the treason and hate the Traitour. But the glories of this Citie did not end with Nisus. For shaking off the Cretan yoke it became sui juris once again; and being conveniently seated on the very Isthmus, amounted to that height of prosperity that they contended with the Athenians for the Island of Salamis. And in this war they so crushed the power and spirit of Athens by one fatall overthrow, that the Athenians to prevent all the like dysasters, did ordain by Law, that whosoever mentioned the recovery of Salamis, was to lose his life: so that Solon was compelled to faign himself frantick, the better to propound the enterprise. In which, although the State of Athens got the Ile of Salamis: yet did the Megarenses continue a Free-people, till brought under (with the rest) by the Macedonians, and with them made subject unto Rome.

3 BOEOTIA is bounded on the South with Megaris, and the Bay of Corinth; on the North with the River Cephisus; on the East with Attica, and a branch of the Ægean Sea; and on the West with Phocis. Thus named from βοῦς, which in Greek signifieth an Oxe: because when Cadmus weary of seeking his sister Europa (whom Jupiter had stollen out of Phœnicia) came to the Oracle at Delphos; he was commanded to follow the first Oxe he saw, and where the Oxe did rest it self, there to build a Citie.

In the Countrie nothing singular but an ancient custome of burning before the door of an house in which a new-married wife was designed to dwel, the Axe-tree of the Coach which brought her thither: giving her by that Ceremonie to understand (as Plutarch telleth us in his Morals) that she must restrain her self from gadding abroad; and that being now joined unto an husband, she must frame herself to live and abide with him, without hope of departure. In this Country also are the Straits of the Mountain Oeta, from the neighbouring Bathes, called Thermopylæ, not above 25 foot in breadth: which in the war that Xerxes made against the Greeks, were valiantly defended by Leonidas King of Sparta, with no more then 300 of his men: who having valiantly resisted that Armie which in its passage out of Persia had drank Rivers drie, and slain at least 30000 of them, dyed every man upon the place. To hide the greatnesse of which losse, lest it should terrifie the rest of his Armie which were coming on, Xerxes commandedd all the slain men to be buried in severall pits, except a thousand, as if no more then they had been lost in that passage.

Places of most observation in it: 1 Thespias, on a River of the same name, at the fall whereof into the Bay it is pleasantly seated: shadowed on the North with a Branch of the Mountain Helicon; and consecrated as that was, unto the Muses, hence called Thespiades in the Poets. 2 Platea, nigh to which Mardonius, Generall to the Persians, was overcome by the Greeks, with the losse of Mardonius himself and 160000 men on the Persian side; and on the other no more then 31 Spartans, 16 Arcadians, 52 Athenians, and about 600 of the Megarenses. In memorie of which brave exploit, and to preserve the names and honour of those Worthies who there laid down their lives for the liberty of Greece, there was a festivall kept annually by the Plateans in the month of September, with solemn Sacrifices, and a kinde of divine acknowledgment unto the deceased, continued from the time of Aristides the Athenian who first ordained them, to the dayes of Plutarch, who records it: but how long after I am not able to say. In this great fight the Commander in chief was a noble Spartan, called Pausanias, who afterwards having a design to make himself Soveraign of all Greece, and being discovered in the practise, fled for sanctuarie to the Temple of Pallas. From whence because it was counted sacriledge to constrain him by violence, it was unanimously resolved to wall up the entrances, his own Mother laying the first stone. It is recorded that before the fighting of this battell, the Athenians had been told by the Oracle that they should be Conquerors if they fought upon their own ground: whereupon the Plateans within whose territories the Persians had prepared to fight, bestowed that field on the State of Athens. In requitall of which noble act, Alexander the Great re-edified and enlarged their Citie, having been first burnt and sacked by the Persians, and after levelled with the ground by the Lacedemonians, because confederate with Athens in the war against them. 3 Leuctra, remarkable for the great overthrow which the Thebans under the conduct of Epaminondas, gave unto the Spartans, and their King Cleombrotus, there slain: by which victory they did not only preserve their own liberty, but brought their enemies to that fall of courage and reputation, that they could never rise again: the divine vengeance overtaking them in that very place, where some of their Nation had deflowred the daughters of Schedasus who had given them courteous entertainment. For which, when no reparation could be had from the State of Sparta, the unfortunate Damosels slew themselves to avoid the infamie of consenting to their own dishonour, and were buried in those very fields where this battell was fought. 4 Ascra, the birth-place of Hesiod, a man (according to Paterculus) elegantis ingenii, & carminum dulcedine memorabilis: though it hath pleased that proud Critick Julius Scaliger, intending to deifie Virgil, to prefer the worst verse in the Georgicks of the one, before the whole works of the other. 5 Lebadia, near the River Cephisus, the Inhabitants whereof were counted the most superstitious of all the Grecians: memorable for the Den or Cave of Trophonia, and the Oracle there given by Jupiter, hence called Trophonius. Into which Cave none were permitted to enter and receive the Oracle but after many ointings, washings, and the like superstitious preparations: too long and many to be specified in this place and time. A town which still preserves so much of its ancient estimation, that from hence (as I conjecture) the whole Country of Achaia hath the name of Levadia, by which the Turks call it at this present. 6 Cheronea, or Coronea, the birthplace of Plutarch. Near unto which was fought that memorable battell betwixt L. Sylla and the Romans, againſt Archelaus one of the Lieutenants of Mithridates King of Pontus, leading an armie of 120000 ſouldiers, of which 10000 only eſcaped with life, the Romans loſing but 14. 7 Orchomenon, no leſſe memorable for another victorie obtained by the ſame L. Sylla, againſt Dorilaus another of that Kings Commanders, having an armie of 80000 men, of which 20000 loſt their lives that day. After which victories, when Sylla might eaſily have deſtroyed that King, he ſuddenly patched a peace up with him, that he might haſten unto Rome, where Marius and Cinna had trodden his faction under foot; preferring by that act the purſuit of his own private quarrels before that of his Countrie; endangered more by Mithridates after his return, then it had been formerly. 8 Aulis, a Port town on the ſhores of the Ægean Sea, where the Grecians took ſhipping when they went to the war of Troy; here making Oath never to give over the enterprize untill they had deſtroyed that Citie. Concerning which, thus ſhe in Virgil:

Non ego cum Danais Trojanam excindere Gentem
Aulide juravi.

That is to ſay:

I took no oath at Aulis to deſtroy,
As did the Greeks, the Town and State of Troy.

But the chief Citie of this Country, and ſuch as had a ſpeciall influence over all the reſt, was the Citie of Thebes, ſituate on the banks of the River Cephiſus, where built by Cadmus the Phœnician after all his wandrings. Famous in old times for the wars between Eteocles and Polynices, the ſons of the unfortunate Prince Oedipus, and of his Mother and wife Jocaſta. The hiſtorie of which war is the moſt ancient piece of ſtorie, that we finde of all Greece; the former times and writings containing nothing but fables, little ſavouring of humanity, and leſſe of truth; as of men changed into Monſters, the adulteries of the Gods, and the like. In this town lived Pelopidas and Epaminondas, who ſo cruſhed the Lacedemonians at the battell of Leuctra and Mantinea: that they could never after re-obtain their former puiſſance. This Common-wealth long flouriſhed, and at laſt being overburthened in the Phocian war, was glad to ſubmit it ſelf to the protection of the Macedonians, under the leading of King Philip: who by this means firſt got footing in Greece, into which afterwards he thruſt his whole body. Upon the death of Philip, Thebes revolted from the Macedons; but Alexander his ſucceſſour quickly recovered it: and to diſhearten the Greeks in the like attempts, he razed the Citie, ſelling all the inhabitants of age and ſtrength; only Pindarus houſe he commanded to be left ſtanding, in honour of that learned Poet. At this ſack of the town, one of the Macedon ſouldiers entred the houſe of a principall woman, named Timoclea, raviſhed her, and rifled her coffers; but ſtill demanding more treaſure ſhe ſhewed him a deep Well, ſaying, that there all her money was hidden. The credulous villain ſtooping down to behold his prey, ſhe tumbled into the Well and over-whelmed with ſtones; for which noble act, the generous Prince not only diſmiſſed her unhurt, but moſt highly commended her. It was after re-edified by Caſſander, and followed for the moſt part, as the reſt of the Bœotians did, the fortunes of Macedon. Reduced at this time to the State of an ordinarie Burrough, and called Scibes by the Turks.

4 PHOCIS is bounded on the Eaſt with Bœotia, on the Weſt with Doris and Locris, on the North with the River Cephiſus, and on the South with the Bay of Corinth. A Country ſomewhat ſwelled with Mountains, but thoſe of eminent note in the elder times. The chief whereof 1 Helicon, 2 Citheron; both conſecrated to the Muſes, and both contending with Parnaſſus for height and bigneſſe. 3 Parnaſſus, of ſo great an height, that in that great deluge, in which moſt of theſe parts of Greece were over-whelmed with the waters, Deucalion and Pyrrha ſaved themſelves, and many others, on the top hereof: for which and for its two ſummits reaching to the clouds, of great renown amongſt the Poets; as in Ovid thus:

Mons ibi verticibus petit arduus aſtra duobus,
Nomine Parnaſſus; ſuperatque cacumine nubes.

Parnaſſus there with his two tops extends
To the toucht ſtars, and all the clouds tranſcends.

Places of moſt obſervation in it, 1 Anticyra ſituate near the Sea, and famous for the Helleborum there growing, an herb very medicinall for the Phrenzie; whence the Proverb, Naviget Anticyras, applyed to mad men. 2 Pytho, or Pythia, ſaid to be ſeated not only in the middle of Greece, but of all the world: Strabo relating how Jupiter deſirous to know the exact midle of the earth, let looſe two Eagles, one from the Eaſt and the other from the Weſt, which flying with an equall wing (ſo we muſt conceive) and meeting at this very place, ſhewed it apparently to be the Navell of the World. By reaſon of which convenient ſituation in the heart of Greece, it was made a Seſſions town for all the Grecians, and honoured with the Court and generall Aſſemblie of the Amphictiones, men choſen out of the prime Cities of Greece, who had power to decide all Controverſies, and to make Lawes for the Phocis. common good. A Court first instituted by Acrisius, as Strabo telleth us; or as Halicarnasseus more probably, by Amphictyon the son of Helles, from whom they seeme to have their name. The Commissioners from the severall Cities, with reference to the places for which they served, had the name of Pylagoræ; when assembled, they were called the Amphictyones: their meetings, at the beginning of the Spring and Autumn. Some instances concerning their authoritie will not be amisse. In the time of Cimon, the Cyrrhenians having by Piracie wronged the Thessalians, were fined by this Councell. And after that the Lacedæmonians for surprizing Cadmea; and the Phocians for ploughing up the Land of Cyrrha, which belonged to the Temple of Delphos, were by them amerced: and because they continued obstinate, and paid not their amercements, their Dominions were adjudged to be confiscate unto that Temple. But they disobeying this Decree also, spoiled the Temple it self: for which, war being proclaimed against them by the rest of the Grecians, who by the assistance of Philip King of Macedon, brought them to obedience; the Councell was again assembled. In which it was decreed that the Phocians should raze the wall of their Cities; that they should pay the yearly tribute of 60 Talents; that they should no more keep Horse and Arms, till they had satisfied the Treasurie of the Temple; nor any longer have a voice in those Conventions. It was also then enacted, that the lost suffrages of the Phocians should be vested in King Philip and his successours Kings of Macedon; on whom they also did confer the perpetuall Presidentship, and made them Princes of that Senate. A Court to which the Sanhedrin of the 70 Elders among the Jewes; and in our times, the Diets of the Empire, and the Assemblies of the Switzers, carry most resemblance. 3 Cyrrha, on the Sea side, the Port town to Delphos. 4 Crissa, so called from Crissæus the son of Phocus, and grandchild of Æacus, situate on the edge of the Bay of Corinth, called sometimes from hence Crissæus Sinus. 5 Scarphia, memorable for the defeat of Critolaus Captain of the Achæan Armie, by Metellus one of the Roman Prætors: the losse of which battell drew after it the destruction of Corinth. It was observed in the successe of this great fight, that a band of Arcadians escaping out of the battell came unto 6 Elatea, another Citie of this Province, and were there kindly entertained on memorie of some former alliances, till news came of the overthrow of Critolaus: when ordered by the State of Phocis to relinquish the town, (for adversitie seldome meeteth with returns of friendship) they were set upon, and all slain by the Romans, in the selfe-same place in which their Ancestors had unworthily forsaken the rest of the Grecians in their war against Philip King of Macedon, for the publick Libertie. 7 Daulis, a Citie appertaining to Tereus King of Thrace, who having married Progne the daughter of Pandion King of Athens, ravished her sister Philomela, and cut out her tongue the better to keep his villanie undiscovered. But Progne being made acquainted with the double injury, first made him ignorantly eat his own son Itys, whom she had baked in a Pye; and after killed him, with the help of her ravished sister. 8 Delphos, renowned in old times for the famous Temple of Apollo, in which with that of Jupiter Hammon in Marmarica, (now reckoned as a part of Egypt) were the most famous Oracles of the ancient Gentiles: dark Riddles of the Devill, couched and contrived with so much cunning, that the meaning of them was most hidden when it was thought most easie to be discerned. Instance of which that given to Crœsus, in the war by him projected against the Persian, which was thus delivered:

Crœsus Halyn penetrans magnam subvertet opum vim.

When Crœsus over Halys goes
A mighty Nation he o'rethrows.

Which he interpreting according to his own hopes, crossed the River; was vanquished by Cyrus King of Persia, and his Kingdome conquered. The like we finde of Pyrrhus King of Epirus, who before he made war against the Romans, consulted with the Oracle, and received this answer.

Aio te Æacide Romanos vincere posse.

Which doubtfull prediction he thus construed; Te posse vincere Romanos, that he should overcome the Romans; but found it unto his cost that the meaning was, Romanos posse vincere te, that the Romans should overcome him; as indeed it happened. By another kinde of the same fallacie which the Logicians call Amphibolia, did this great enemy of mankind overthrow another: who demanding of the Oracle what successe he should have in an expedition which he was in hand with, received his answer in these words:

Ibis redibis nunquam per bella peribis.

Which he thus pointing, Ibis, redibis, nunquam per &c. engaged himself in the war, and was therein slain. Whereupon his followers canvassing the Oracle found the meaning of it to be this, Ibis, redibis nunquam, per &c. The like jugling he also used in those supernaturall Dreams which Philosophers call Ἀμφιδόπεμπλα. For Cæsar dreaming that he carnally knew his own mother the night before he passed over the Rubicon, became Lord of Rome, the common mother of the Romans: and Hippias the son of Pisistratus the Tyrant of Athens, having upon the same projects the same dream, was killed and buried in the bowels of his mother the earth: so that had Cæsar miscarried in his action, and

Hippias

Hippias thrived: yet ſtill had the Devill been reputed his crafts-maſter, and the father of truths. But as the Eccleſiaſticall hiſtory telleth us, that Julian the Apoſtata conſulting with the Devill, was told that he could receive no anſwer, becauſe that the body of Babylas the Martyr, was entombed nigh his Altar: ſo neither could the Devils deceive the world as formerly they had done, after Chriſt the truth it ſelf was manifeſted in the fleſh, and tormented theſe unclean ſpirits, though as they alledged, before their time. Auguſtus, as Suidas telleth us, in whoſe time our Saviour was born, conſulting with the Oracle about his ſucceſſour, received this not ſatisfying anſwer: Locris.

Παῖς ἑβραῖος ἀλεγεί με θεοῖς μακάρεσσιν ἀνάκτων
Τὸν δὲ νόμον θεσπεσίης ἐκ δώμων ἔνδοις ἰκέσθαι, Λοιπὸν ἀπὸ σκηῶν ἐκ βωμῶν ἡμετέρων.

An Hebrew child, whom the bleſt Gods adore,
Hath bid me leave theſe ſhrines and pack to hell;
So that of Oracle I can no more:
In ſilence leave our Altar, and farewell.

Whereupon Auguſtus coming home, in the Capitol erected an Altar, and thereon in capitall Letters cauſed this inſcription to be ingraven, HÆC EST ARA PRIMOGENITI DEI. Now as the Devils had by Chriſts birth loſt much of their wonted vertue, ſo after his paſſion they loſt it almoſt altogether. Concerning which Plutarch in a tract of his Morals, called Περὶ τῆς ἀπολωλότων χρηστηρίων why Oracles ceaſe to give anſwers, telleth us a notable ſtory, which was this. Some company going out of Greece into Italie, were about the Echinades becalmed; when on the ſuddain there was heard a voice, loudly calling on one Thamus an Egyptian, then in the ſhip. At the two firſt calls he made no anſwer, but to the third he replyed, ſaying, Here I am: and the voice again ſpake unto him, bidding him when he came to Palodes, to make it known, that the great God Pan was dead. When they came unto the Palodes, which are certain ſhelves and rocks in the Ionian Sea, Thamus ſtanding on the poope of the ſhip, did as the voice directed him: whereupon was heard a mighty noiſe of many together, who all ſeemed to groan and lament with terrible and hideous ſhreekings. News hereof coming to Tiberius he cauſed the learned men in his Empire, to enquire out of their Books who that Pan ſhould be; by whom it was anſwered, that he was the ſon of Mercury and Penelope; with ignorance enough, and little ſatisfaction to the buſineſſe propounded to them. Such therefore as more narrowly obſerved the circumſtances of this accident, found it to happen at the time when our Saviour ſuffered on the Croſſe; who was indeed the true God Pan, the chief Shepherd and Biſhop of our ſouls, as the Scripture calleth him: and that upon this divulging of his death and paſſion, the Devils who uſed to ſpeak in Oracles, did with great grief and lamentation forſake that Office, which had been ſo gainfull to them in ſeducing mankind. That all Oracles at that inſtant ceaſed, I dare not ſay; though it be certain that about that time they began to fail: it being ſaid by Juvenal who lived in the reign of Domitian, Delphis Oracula ceſſant, that the Oracle of Delphos was then ſilent; the reſt decaying ſenſibly in a ſhort time after.

But to proceed, the Temple of Apollo being ſpoiled by the Phocians, as before was noted, cauſed the war betwixt them and the Thebans called the Holy War: in which the Thebans being likely to have the worſt, ſent for Philip of Macedon, who made an end of the quarrell by ſubduing both. The treaſure which the Phocians found in the Temple, was reckoned at 60 talents of Gold: but it proved Aurum Toloſanum, and brought a ſudden ruine on their State and Nation: Sacriledge being ſo impardonable a crime, even amongſt the Heathen, that the fault of ſome few countenanced by the reſt of a people, hath brought deſtruction on them all. It was afterwards with the like ill fortune ranſacked by Brennus and his Gaules, in the main of the Macedonian Empire; all of them miſerably periſhing who had any hand in it.

5 LOCRIS is bounded on the Eaſt with Phocis and a branch of the Ægean Sea; on the Weſt with Ætolia; on the North with a long ridge of hils which part it from Theſſalie; and on the South with parts of Achaia, Bœotia, Phocis, the Bay of Corinth, the Straits of Antirrhium, and a part of the Ionian Sea. So that for largeneſſe of extent, and the commodiouſneſſe of the Seas, it yeeldeth to no Province in Attica, though not ſo fruitfull as ſome others. Divided into the three Nations of the Locri, 1. Azolæ, lying towards the South, on both ſides of the Straits; ſo called from ſome ill ſmels of the Country or people; 2 the Epicnemidii, inhabiting the middle parts, ſo named from Mount Cnemis, not far from Parnaſſus; and 3. the Opuntii, ſo called from Opus their chief Citie, lying on the North ſide of the River Cephiſus on the Coaſts of the Ægean or Eubœan Seas.

Chief Cities of the whole, 1 Opus, the head Citie of the Opuntians, ſituate on the River Aſopus, being one of the main branches of Cephiſus. 2 Cynus, the Port town to Opus. 3 Thronium, the prime town of the Epicnemidii, mentioned by Polybius, Livie, Ptolemie. 4 Cnemides, at the foot of Mount Cnemis, whence they had their name. 5 Amphiſſa, the chief Citie of the Ozolæ, ſituate in the Inland parts of it: the people whereof refuſing to yeeld to the ſentence of the Amphictyones, againſt their confederates the Phocians, were the cauſe that Philip of Macedon returned into Greece. Againſt whom grievouſly infeſting the Bœotians, and manifeſtly aſpiring to the command of Greece, the Athenians deſperately oppoſed, not ſo much with poſſibility of prevailing, as by the ſharp and biting orations of Demoſthenes, made againſt his proceedings: which being by him called Philippicks, occaſioned tioned Tully to call his bitter invectives against M. Antonius by the ſame name alſo. But the ſucceſſe hereof was ſuch as commonly attendeth a broken fortune, the Athenians being vanquiſhed at Charonea, and Philip declared Captain of Greece againſt the Perſians, obtaining under that title the command he ſought. 6 Evantia, as Ptolemie; Oeantia, as Plinie and Pauſanias call it; oppoſite to Ægira in Achaia propria. 7 Molychria, by Ptolemie placed here; but by others reckoned in Ætolia. 8 Naupactus, ſo called from the building of ſhips there by the Heraclidæ, ſituate on the Corinthian Bay near the mouth thereof. Given by the Citizens of Athens to the poor Meſſenians, when after the end of the third war, the Lacedæmonians unwilling to have them troubleſome neighbours (and they ſcorning to be quiet ſlaves) compelled them to ſeek new habitations. It hath of late been called Lepanto, giving the name of the Colfe of Lepanto to the Bay of Corinth; by that name ſubject for a while to the Venetians, and from them taken by the Turks, anno 1499. Of theſe Locrians, thoſe of Italie were a branch or Colonie, whoſe Lawgiver was Zaleucus ſpoken of elſewhere.

6 DORIS is bounded on the Eaſt with Phocis, on the Weſt with Ætolia, on the North with the hill Oeta, and other Mountains which divide it from Theſſalie; and on the South with Ætolia, and part of Locris. The air hereof is very healthy, and the ſoil ſufficiently fruitfull if well manured, but now the greateſt part lyeth waſte, for want of tillage. Firſt peopled by the Dores or Dorienſes, deſcended from Dorus the ſon of Hellen and grandchild of Deucalion; by whom placed in Theſſalie, afterwards ſpreading into this Country which they left their name to, as their proper dwelling: though many of them following the Heraclidæ into Peloponneſus, poſſeſſed themſelves of the greateſt part of Laconia alſo, imprinting on the ſame their Dialect or form of ſpeech, from them called the Doricke.

Chief Cities hereof are 1 Doris, ſo called in memorie of Dorus, the firſt Progenitour of this people. 2 Erineus, ſeated at the foot of Parnaſſus, mentioned by Thucydides, Strabo, Mela, Ptolemie, and the reſt of the ancients. 3 Bium, as Ptolemie; or Boion, as Strabo and Plinie call it. 4 Cytinum, near Parnaſſus alſo, in the common impreſſions of Diodorus Siculus the Hiſtorian, falſly called Cynthinium. 5 Lilæa, ſituate not farre from the ſpring or fountain of the River Cephiſus; which riſing hereabouts paſſeth thorow the whole length of Achaia and falls into the Ægean or Eubœan Sea.

7 ÆTOLIA hath on the Eaſt Locris, on the Weſt Epirus, on the North Doris, on the South the Ionian Sea. Said to be ſo called from Ætolus the ſon of Mars, who being by Salomoneus caſt out of Elis, fix'd himſelf in this Country.

Here is the Forreſt Calydon, where Meleager and the flower of the Greek Nobility ſlew the wild Bore. Here is the River Evenus, over which the Centaure Neſſus having carryed Deianira, wife of Hercules; and intending to have raviſhed her, was ſlain by an arrow which Hercules on the other ſide of the River ſhot at him. Here alſo is the river of Achelous, of whom the Poets fable many things, as that being rivall with Hercules in the love of Deianira, he encountred him in the ſhape of a Bull; and that when Hercules had pluckt off one of his horns, the Nymphs made of it their ſo much celebrated cornucopia.

The people of this Country were the moſt turbulent and unruly people of all Greece, never at peace with their neighbours, and ſeldome with themſelves. The Macedonians could never tame them, by reaſon of the craggineſſe of the country: yet they brought them to ſuch terms that they were compelled to let the Romans into Greece, who quickly made an end of all.

Principall towns hereof, were 1 Chalcis, ſituate near the ſpring-head of Achelous before mentioned. 2 Arachthus, near the river ſo called, which ariſing hereabouts paſſeth into Epirus, and falleth into the Bay of Ambracia, not far from Nicopolis. 3 Olenus, not far from the Forreſt of Calydon. 4 Pleurona, giving name to the adjoyning Country, called hence Pleuronia: the people whereof had the name of Curetes: ἀπὸ τῆς κειρᾶς, from their ſhaving; it being their cuſtome to ſhave the fore-parts of their heads, and let the hair grow on the hinder parts only: ne hoſtes eos cæſarie apprehenderent, becauſe their enemies ſhould not lay hold on them by the foretops, and ſo pull them down. 5 Thermus, the Parliament-Citie or place of generall Aſſembly for all the Eſtates of Ætolia, which meeting was called Panætolium, choſen for thoſe meetings, in regard of the ſituation and ſtrength thereof; as ſituate welnear in the middeſt of the Country, environed with rockie Mountains, of ſteep and difficult aſcent. For that cauſe made alſo the receptacle of their wealth and treaſure in all times of danger; but taken by the laſt Philip of Macedon, with all the ſpoile in it, in his war againſt them. 6 Calydon, near the forreſt ſo called, giving name unto it; the royall ſeat of Oeneus father of Meleager; divided into two parts by the River Evenus, which runneth through it, according unto that of Ovid:

Et Meleagream maculatus ſanguine Neſſi, Evenus, Calydona ſecat.

That is to ſay:

Calydon, Meleagers town, the flood
Even divides, defil'd with Neſſus bloud.

Adjoin-

Adjoining hereunto were the the Athamanes, whom Plinie makes a people of it, who gave name unto a little Province called Athemania; but ſuch, (as little as it was) as gave it the title of a Kingdom to Animander: a Prince whom the Ætolians made eſpeciall uſe of in their wars againſt Philip King of Macedon the father of Perſeus, ſuggeſting to him and his children, that they were deſcended of the houſe of Alexander the great, and ſo ingaging them in a hope of that Kingdom to hazard the quiet of their own. The places of moſt note is 1 Dium, 2 Athenæum, both took by Philip in that warre. Achaia

Theſe as they were the laſt Actors on the ſtage of Achaia, ſo had they the moſt deſperate part in all the tragœdie of that Countrie. The affaires whereof, governed ſucceſſively by that State which was moſt, powerfull were for a long time managed by the Athenians: whoſe counſels and concluſions went for law amongſt them. But that Eſtate being broken, if not ſubverted by the power of Sparta, the Thebans and Bœotians who came next in play had the chief command, uniting almoſt all the reſt in deſign with them againſt the Spartans; who now grow terrible to all. Becoming inſolent by the courſe of too much proſperitie, and the many great victories which they had againſt the Spartans; and thereupon quarrelling with the Phocians, they were the cauſe of Philips coming into Greece; who as he had learned amongſt them the uſe of arms, ſo made he uſe thereof at laſt, and of their diſſenſions, to unite all the States of Greece under his command. Thebes it ſelf being took and ſacked by Alexander the ſon of Philip, as before is ſaid. The Macedonians thus prevailing, partly by force, but ſpecially by art and practiſe, there was no people in Achaia that durſt oppoſe them till theſe Ætolians, a reſtleſſe and impatient people took the cauſe in hand: Who thrived ſo well under Antigonus and Philip: two of the laſt Kings of Macedon, that they took from them many towns, invaded Theſſalie, attempted Macedon it ſelf: and when they could not otherwiſe obtain their purpoſe in the deſtruction of that Kingdome, opened a paſſage for the Romans to effect it for them. But finding no ſuch favour at the Romans hands as they did expect, they began to murmur, and afterwards to excite Antiochus and the Greeks againſt them, drawing thereby thoſe forces againſt themſelves which they had invited into Greece: and were the firſt people of all the Grecians that were conquered by them: though by the mediation of the Rhodians and ſome other friends, their Countrie was reſtored unto them, with the loſſe only of Cephalenia, Zant, and ſome other Iſlands which the Romans were reſolved to keep as the fruits of the war. This was about the 564 year of the building of Rome, Fulvius Nobilior being then Conſul, and chief Commander in this war. After which time the ſeverall Eſtates hereof enjoyed ſo much liberty, as the Romans their new Maſters thought fit to give them: till finally made abſolutely ſubject in the time of Veſpaſian, by whom Achaia was reduced into the form of a Province, Peloponneſus being reckoned as a part thereof. In the diviſion of the Empire by Conſtantine the Great, the Weſt parts hereof being divided from the reſt, was called New Epirus; but both of them made Provinces of the Dioceſe of Macedon, under the Præfectus Prætorio for Illyricum: the principall office of this part being called the Proconſul of Achaia: continuing under him and his ſucceſſours, Emperours of Conſtantinople, till the deſtruction of that Empire by the power of the Turks. But ſo that it remained not alwayes under the command of one ſole Officer, the politie of that State being altered, and this Country parcelled out into many Governments: eſpecially after the taking of Conſtantinople by the Latines or Weſtern Chriſtians. At what time Theodorus Angelus, a noble Grecian, and one of the (then) imperiall familie, ſeiſed on Ætolia and Epirus, part of which laſt, and all the firſt he left to Michael his ſon: who held them though with ſome diſpute betwixt him and Michael Paleologus, the firſt Emperour of Conſtantinople after the expulſion of the Latines. Charls the laſt Prince of that familie dying without iſſue about the year 1430. bequeathed Ætolia to another Charls, the ſon of his brother: and Acarnania (being that part of Epirus, which the Princes of Ætolia held) to his baſe ſons, Memnon, Turnus, and Hercules. But many quarrels hapning upon this diviſion, Amurath the 2. having then newly conquered Theſſalonica, compoſed the differences by taking all unto himſelf, anno 1432. There were at that time other Princes of like authoritie, as of Athens, Phocis, and Bœotia, but the firſt the chiefeſt: as honoured not only with the title of Dukes of Athens, but the Princes of Achaia alſo: ſuch being the fortune of that Citie, as to have the firſt and laſt great ſway in the affairs of Achaia. For at the tranſlation of the Empire upon the Latines, Godfrey of Troyes, a French man, was made Duke of Athens, and Prince of Achaia, of whom Paulus Æmilius ſpeaketh, anno 1220. which honour afterwards was conferred on a kinſman of John di Brenne, the laſt King of Jeruſalem, Protectour of Baldwin the 2. the laſt Emperour of the Latines, mentioned by the ſaid Æmilius, anno 1288. By the heir generall of this houſe it was conveighed in marriage to Izaulus di Accio, a Noble man of the Realm of Naples: whoſe ſon Walter for a time obtained the ſoveraigntie of the State of Florence, anno 1342. but loſt it ſuddenly again by his too much cruelty. Francis di Acciavol, the laſt Prince of this houſe, having been brought into the Court of Mahomet the Great, as one of his Favourites, ſurrendred his eſtate herein, at the perſwaſion of that Tyrant, in exchange for the Countrie of Bœotia, and the Dukedom of Thebes: which he no ſooner had received but he was ſent by Mahomet to Zoganus, his Lieutenant in Morea, by whom at firſt courteouſly received, at laſt cruelly murdered. And ſo the whole Country of Achaia fell into the hands of the Turks, anno 1454. or thereabouts.

EPIRUS.

Epirus.

EPIRUS.

EPIRUS is bounded on the East with Ætolia, on the West with the Adriatick; on the North with Thessaly, Macedon, and some part of Albania; and on the South with the Ionian Seas. So called from the solidities and firmnesse of it; the word Epeiros in the Greek tongue, signifying as much as terra firma, or the firm land. But by the Turkes at this day it is called Albania, which name they give to all the lands and Countries in their possession, lying upon the Adriatick and Ionian Seas.

In this Countrey was born Olympias, mother of Alexander the Great; and Pyrrhus, who conquered the Realm of Macedon, and was the first foreiner, who made tryall (though to his owne losse) of the power and puissance of Rome; accounted by Hannibal, next to Alexander, the second great souldier of the world. Here is also Mount Pindus sacred to Apollo and the Muses, dividing this countrey from Thessaly, and therefore common unto both: as also the Acroceraunian hils, so called, because they are much subject unto thunder and lightning; eminent for their height and much feared by Mariners: who when they see a little cloud rising on the top hereof, are sure of a tempest. Finally here are the famous Rivers Acheron, and Cocytus, which for their black waters and unsavoury taste are said to be the Rivers of Hell: from which last the sacrifices and solemnities made in honour of Proserpine whom Pluto ravished and brought hither, had the name of Cocytia. Whence by a Metonymie, these Rivers are taken sometimes, for hell it selfe, as in that of the Poet;

Flectere si nequeo superos, Acheronta movebo.

Since those in Heaven I cannot move,
The powers of Hell I meane to prove.

The soyle hereof is very barren, and in many places full of Forrests, and thin of people; but towards the Sea side reasonably fruitfull: plentifull of Oxen, Dogs, and Sheep, of more then ordinary bignesse, and yeelding the best breed of Horses. The people use a distinct language from the Grecians, though of the Greek tongue not utterly ignorant: and by reason of the barrennesse of their own countrey, become great wanderers, especially in summer time, when they travell into Thrace, Macedon, and Asia minor, hiring themselves to work in harvest under the Turkes, as also to thresh, winnow, and make clean their Corn; and in the Winter time return to their wives and children. Able of body, swift of foot, apt to undergoe any toyle and labour; having withall good courages and high projections, which makes such of them as delight not in works of drudgerie, to look for action in the warres, and otherwise to rob and spoile in the neighbouring mountaines of Albania. Till their subjection to the Turkes, much used both by the Kings of Hungary, and the State of Venice, in their severall warres; serving on Horse, or Foot, as occasion was: as Mercenary as the Switzers in the Western parts, but not so faithlesse to the party by whom entertained.

Antiently it was divided into Chaonia, (which was the proper Epirus) lying on the West, and Acarnania, bordering on Ætolia, from which parted by the river Achelous; the middle parts hereof being Amphilochia, Thesprotia, and Almene: all very populous in old times, and so continued till Paulus Æmilius, on the conquest of Macedon, overthrew 70 of their Cities. Few of which being since reedified, and the Countrey for a long time languishing under the Turkes, here are not any faire Townes or well-peopled Cities at the present to be spoken of; and therefore we must look on such as flourished in the times foregoing. The principall whereof, 1 Dodona, one of the Cities of Chaonia, memorable for the Temple and Oracle of Jupiter, hence called Dodonæus, situate in a fair grove, the trees whereof were said to be Vocall, and to give the Oracle; though others say, it was delivered first by a paire of Pigeons; whereof the one afterwards fled to Delphos, the other to the Temple of Jupiter Hammon in Ægypt. It was the antientest Oracle of all Greece; and so perhaps was the Town also. Said to be first built by Dodone the sonne of Jupiter and Europa: more probably so called from Dodonim the sonne of Javan and Grandchild of Japhet, who first inhabited this Region; the whole Countrey (Greece I mean) being called Javan from the Father (by which name commonly it occurreth in the Hebrew text,) this Town Dodona from the Sonne. 2 Cassiope, a Port Town, with a faire Promontory of the same name adjoining to it. 3 Onchesimus, by Strabo called Orchimus, and by Pliny Echinus, a Port town also now called Santi Quaranta. 4 Panormus, on the Sea side also, retaining still the old name, and but little else. 5 Antigonia, more within the land, founded or repaired by Antigonus a King of Macedon, now called Argiro-Castro, as Niger thinketh. 6 Phœnice, once the chief Town hereof, which being sacked by the Illyrians under Teuta their Queen gave the Romans an occasion of quarrell with them; upon complaint made to them by the Epirots. 7 Pelades, a Port town, the principall in that part which was called Thesprotia; as 8 Torona, on the River Thyamis, and 9 Sybota, an antient Haven Town (now called Syoita) was in that part hereof which was called Almene. 10 Argos, the chief Town of the Amphilochians. This part hereof was first named Molossia, from Molossus the son of Pyrrhus and Andromache, remarkable for the best breed of Mastives, hence called Molossi; and afterward Chaonia, by Helenus the son of Priamus, by Pyrrhus the son of Achilles setled in this Countrey, who having unfortunately slain his brother Chaon, caused cauſed it in memory of him to be called Chaonia; Chaoniamq; omnem Trojano à Chaone dixit, as it is in Virgil. Of theſe Moloſſians, Pluto the third ſon of Saturn was ſometimes King, called from the flat and hollow ſituation of this countrey, conſiſting much of deep valleys, the King of Hell.

Townes of eſpeciall note in Acarnania, 1 Anactorium, on the bay of Ambracia, now called Vanizza. 2 Ambracia, the Regall Seat or Court of Pyrrhus, giving name unto a fair and capacious Bay, now called Golfo di Larta, from Larta an adjoining Town, ſituate in or neer the place where Ambracia ſtood. Once ſubject unto Periander, King or Tyrant of Corinth, who being ſlain by a woman named Lionna, whom he kept as his Concubine, occaſioned the Inhabitants from that time forwards, in memory of their deliverance to worſhip a Lion. Afterwards being taken from the children of Pyrrhus by the Macedonians, and from them wonne by the Ætolians in the time of their greatneſſe, it was beſieged by Fulvius a Roman Conſul ſpoken of before. Who ſeeing that he could not force it, was willing at the mediation of the Athenians, Rhodians, and other friends of both parties, to conclude a peace: but ſo that he diſpoiled this City at his going hence of much excellent Imagery, carrying away with him unto Rome the Pictures of the nine Muſes moſt admirably well done by the hand of Zeuxis, the rareſt Painter of his times. 3 Buthrotum, a Roman Colony, by Pliny called Colonia, ſimply; now a ſmall Village called Butrinte. 4 Leucas, ſituate on the point of a Promontorie of the ſame name alſo, antiently memorable for the Temple of Apollo; from the top of which Promontorie by leaping into the Sea, ſuch as unfortunately loved were cured of that malady: the firſt triall of that kinde being made by Sappho, that famous Poeteſſe. At that time joined unto the ſand, but ſince by the violence of the Sea, or the hand of man made into an Iſland; according unto that of Ovid,

Leucada continuam veteres habuere Coloni,
Nunc Freta circumeunt; ——

That is to ſay:

Leucas in former times join'd to the land,
Environ'd round with waters now doth ſtand.

It was called Leucas, from the whiteneſſe of the Rock or Promontorie, having before the ſeparation or disjunction of it been called Neritos; the chief Town of it varying with the name of the Iſle and Promontory: both town and Iſland at this time called S. Maure, taken by Bajazet the ſecond, from the State of Venice, and by him given unto the Jews, (who doe ſtill inhabit it) at their expulſion out of Spaine. 5 Nicopolis, a Colonie of the Romans, of great both wealth and beautie in the time of S. Paul, who from hence dated his Epiſtle to Titus: called in that Poſtſcript, Nicopolis of Macedonia, becauſe Epirus at that time was part of the Province of Macedon, though afterwards a diſtinct Province of it ſelfe. It was firſt built by Auguſtus Cæſar, on a Promontory oppoſite unto Actium, on the other ſide of the Bay: that being the place, where his Land ſouldiers were incamped before the Navall battell betwixt him and Mark Anthony: and was thus called either in memory of his victory; or from a poor man and his Aſſe, whom he met there the day before. For asking the mans name, he told him that his name was Eutyches, i. e. Fortunate; and that the name of his Aſſe was Nicon, i. e. Conquerour; which happy Omen made his ſouldiers courageous, and hopefull of victory: and he in memory thereof erected here two brazen Images, the one of the Aſſe, the other of his Maſter. It is now a ſmall village called Preveſa.

6 Actium, on the Sea-ſhore, nigh unto which Auguſtus and Antony fought for the Empire of the world. The Navy of the later conſiſted of 500 Gallies; the former had 250 onely, but thoſe crowned with victory: Antonius ſhamefully deſerting his ſouldiers to follow after Cleopatra; who on the very firſt charge fled away for Egypt. The town now ruined, the Promontory upon which it ſtood called Cabbo di Figulo.

The Countrey was firſt peopled by Dodonim the ſon of Javan, or at leaſt by ſome of his poſterity, coming hither from the Iſle of Rhodes, whoſe memory was preſerved a long time in the Towne of Dodona, him, or from him ſo denominated. Afterwards being parted into ſeverall Nations, and thoſe Nations united in the common name of Epirots: it became a great and powerfull Kingdome, governed by a race of Kings deſcending from Pyrrhus the ſonne of Achilles, and continuing till the time of Pyrrhus the ſonne of Æacides. A man of ſuch courage and magnanimity, that he did not onely recover his owne Kingdome, of which Caſſander had deprived his Father; but got the Kingdome of Macedon from Caſſanders children: outed of which he tried his fortunes with the Romans, Anno Mundi 5683. V. C. 471. After his death this Kingdome was ſhrewdly ſhaken by the Macedonians, and ſhortly after ſubdued by Paulus Æmilius, who (as we now ſaid, deſtroyed 70 Cities hereof in one day. For, deſirous to ſatisfie his ſouldiers after his victory in Macedon, he ſent unto the Epirots for ten of the principall men of every City. Theſe he commanded to deliver up all the gold and ſilver which they had; and to that end as he gave out, he ſent certaine companies of ſouldiers along with them; unto whom he gave ſecret inſtructions, that on a day by him appointed, they ſhould fall to ſack every one the town, whereunto they were ſent. A barbarous and bloudy decree, 70 Cities confederate with the Romans ruined in one day, and no fewer then 150000 Epirots made and ſold for ſlaves. But the chief motive which induced him to ſo great a cruelty, was by diſpeopling this countrey, lying with a long and faire Sea-coaſt over againſt Italy, to give the Romans opportunity to land their Armies, without any reſiſtance, for the further progreſſe of their Forces into Macedon, Thrace, Moeſia, or where elſe they pleaſed. Which ungodly policie was afterwards imitated by William the Conquereur, who laid waſt all that part of Hampſhire, ſince called New Forreſt, and therein 36 Pariſh Churches: that he might have a ſafe landing place for his Norman Forces, if the Engliſh ſhould at any time endeavour to make head againſt him. Being made ſubject to the Romans, it was a while part of the Province of Macedonia; but afterwards when Macedonia, was made a Dioceſe, it became a diſtinct Province of it ſelfe, called by the name of Old Epirus, to difference it from the Province of New Epirus, which lay Eaſtward of it. At the diviſion of the Empire it belonged to the Conſtantinopolitans; and ſo continued till the taking of Conſtantinople by the Weſtern Chriſtians: at what time Theodorus Angelus, a Prince of the Imperiall family, ſeiſed on Ætolia and Epirus, as before is ſaid; and ſped ſo well in his deſigns that he took the ſtrong City of Durazzo from the State of Venice (to whom it fell in the diviſion of that ſpoil) and cunningly (if not treacherouſly) intercepted Peter the third Emperor of the Latines, whom, as ſome ſay, he cauſed to be murdered at a banquet. After his death, his whole Eſtate being divided into two parts; Ætolia with that part hereof which is called Chaonia, continued in his houſe till the time of Charles Prince of Ætolia and Epirus ſpoken of before, after whoſe death it was ſubdued by Amurath the ſecond, as before was ſaid. The reſidue hereof, together with that part of Macedon which is called Albania, fell to the family of the Caſtriots: the laſt of which named John (the Father of Scanderbeg) ſeeing himſelf unable to reſiſt that Tyrant, who had already ſwallowed up all his neighbour Princes; ſubmitted his eſtate unto him, and gave unto him all his ſonnes for hoſtages. No ſooner was the old Prince dead, but Amurath ſeiſed on his eſtate, murdered his three eldeſt ſonnes; and cauſed George the youngeſt, to be trained up in the Law of Mahomet: who afterwards eſcaping out of his power, and recovering all his Fathers countries aſſumed alſo the ſtyle or title of Prince of Epirus. After whoſe death his children not being able to make good their game, loſt it to Mahomet the Great, as ſhall be ſhewn more fully in the ſtorie and deſcription of Albania, which is next to follow.

4 ALBANIA.

ALBANIA is bounded on the Eaſt with Macedonia; on the Weſt with the Adriatick: on the North, with Sclavonia; on the South with Epirus. The countrey mountainous and barren; watred with few Rivers, and thoſe of no great note amongſt the Antients, as 1 Laus, 2 Apſus, 3 Panaſus, 4 Celidnus; all of them falling into the Adriatick.

It took this name from the Albani, once the Inhabitants of this tract; from whom the chiefe City hereof was called Albanopolis. Other townes of moſt conſideration, are 1 Stetigrade, or Veſtigard (called by ſome the Holy City) ſituate in the borders of Epirus on the top of an hill, where it is fenced about like an Eagles neſt: one of the laſt townes in all this Countrey which was taken by Scanderbeg, at his recovery of his birthright and eſtate herein; but being once taken by him held good courageouſly againſt the Turke, the ſouldiers neither fainting in their oppoſitions, nor corrupted by mony. There was in the town one only Well, into which a treacherous Chriſtian caſt a dead dog; at the ſight of which, being the next day drawn up, the ſouldiers gave up the town: being ſo unſeaſonably ſuperſtitious; that no perſwaſion, nor the example of the Captaine, or the Burgo-maſters, could make them drink thoſe (as they thought) defiled waters. 3 Durazzo, a town of great ſtrength, firſt called Epidamnum, and afterwards Dyrrhachium. Under the wals of which town, was the firſt bickering between the ſouldiers of Cæſar, and Pompey, not onely to the preſent loſſe, but alſo the utter diſcomfiture of Cæſar, as he himſelfe confeſſed; if the enemies Captain had knowne how to have overcome. I muſt not omit the valour of Sceva at this ſiege, who alone ſo long reſiſted Pompeys Army that he had 220 darts ſticking in his ſhield, and loſt one of his eyes, and yet gave not over till Cæſar came to his reſcue.

Parq; novum fortuna videt concurrere, bellum
Atque virum----denſamq; ferens in pectore ſylvam.

Fortune beholds an unaccuſtom'd fight,
An Army and a man together fight,
Whoſe breſt a wood of Arrowes covered quite.

In the diviſion of the Eaſtern Empire amongſt the Latines it fel into the power of Venice; taken at laſt after a long and tedious ſiege by Amurath the ſecond, an. 1474. 4 Dibra, in the hill countries, neer Epirus: the firſt town which ſubmitted to the valiant Scanderbeg, at his revolting from the Turks, ſuppoſed to be the Deborus of Ptolemie; 5 Croia, conceived to be Epicaria of Ptolemie, the chief Town of all this countrey, ſeated amongſt inacceſſable mountains, and made impregnable by Art: not got by Scanderbeg, but by wile: who having got into his power the Secretary of the principall Baſſa, forced him to write letters in his Maſters name unto the Governour hereof to deliver it unto him; which was done accordingly; afterwards in vaine beſieged by Amurath the ſecond, who under the wals hereof gave up his wretched ſoule to the Devill, and thrice beſieged by Mahomet his ſon and ſucceſſour, before he could againe poſſeſſe it, but taken at the laſt after Scanderbegs death; as if the Genius or tutelar

Deitie

Deity of the place had departed with him. 6 Petrella, a town of great ſtrength, ſeated on the top of an hill (as almoſt all the Townes of Albania are) about 25 miles from Croia; delivered unto Scanderbeg at his firſt ſitting down before it; as alſo was 7 Petra Alba, three miles from Petrella, neer the borders of Macedon, and ſituate like the other on the top of a mountaine; the River Emathus running under the bottom of it. 8 Stellusa, fifty miles from Croia, built on the top of an high hill in the middle of a pleaſant and fruitfull valley, with great and ſpacious plains about it. 9 Dagna or Dayna, a place of great importance in the hill countrey towards Sclavonia; for the poſſeſſion whereof aroſe a war betwixt Scanderbeg, and the State of Venice: but the Venetians being worſted at the battell of Drivo, relinquiſhed their pretenſions to it. 10 Aulon, a Port-town now called Vallona, ſituate over againſt Hydruntum or Otranto in Italy, from which diſtant about 60 miles. The town unwalled, but fortified with a very ſtrong Caſtle. A town unfortunately fit for the invaſion of Italy, and was accordingly made uſe of by Achmetes the chief Baſſa under Mahomet the Great, who from hence paſſed his Army over into Apulia, took the Town of Otranto: and had not the death of Mahomet, and the combuſtions thereon following amongſt the Turkes, altered the deſigne, might have opened them a very fair way for the adding of Rome unto Conſtantinople. 11 Apollonia, a town of great note in the time of the Romans, a Sea-town furniſhed with a commodious Haven, which they held as their entrance into Greece, to that purpoſe ſerving them as commodiouſly, as Calice did the Engliſh in their wars with France. Albania.

This countrey antiently was a part of Macedon, inhabited by the Talautii, Æſtræi, and Albani, from which laſt (but not till theſe later times) it had the name of Albania: but whether theſe Albani, were a Colonie of the Albanians of Aſia, (though it be very probable) I determine not. When made a Province of the Empire it contained all Prevalitana, and ſome part of Macedonia Salutaris; under the Dioceſe of Dacia, in the time of Juſtinian, but at firſt of Macedon, Diſmembred from the maine body of it, when the Latines had ſubdued Conſtantinople; it fell unto the Noble family of the Caſtriotes: who though they tooke unto themſelves the title of Kings or Princes of Epirus, (moſt of which they held) as the countrey of more note and eminence; yet was Albania the greateſt ſtrength, and Croia the chief City thereof, the ſeat of their reſidence; called in that reſpect by ſome writers, the Kings of Albania. John Caſtriot, the Father of Scanderbeg, ſeeing himſelfe unable to reſiſt the Turkes, became their Homager, and delivered four ſonnes for Hoſtages; whom Amurath the ſecond in their Fathers life time, cauſed to bee circumciſed, and turne Mahometans; and after his deceaſe murdered the three eldeſt, and ſeized upon Croia the chief City, with the reſt of the countrey. But George the youngeſt of thoſe ſons, being reſerved for better fortunes, was carefully brought up by Amurath (who ſomewhat paſſionately loved him) in the arts of war; though ſome of his Courtiers then told him that he nouriſhed a Serpent in his boſome which would one day ſting him. Amurath to make triall of his diſpoſition, offered him on a time the Crown of Albania: to which he prudently replyed, that he preferred the honour of his ſervice before all the Kingdoms of the World, and that he held his hand fitter for a ſword, then his head for a Crown. Satisfied with which anſwer the Tyrant preferred him to the place of a Sanziack or Provinciall Governor: & gave him ſome Office of Command in all thoſe Armies, which he ſet out againſt the Chriſtians. Eſcaping out of the battell wherein Caramben the great Baſſa was overthrown and taken Priſoner by Huniades, he got the Town of Croia by a peece of wit, as before was ſaid: and in a very ſhort time after, made himſelfe Maſter of Petrella, Petra Alba, Stelluſa, and all the reſt of the countrey by the reputation and terrour of his firſt ſucceſſe. Having recovered his inheritance out of the hands of the Turkes, he reconciled himſelfe to the Church of Chriſt: ſtyling himſelfe the Souldier of CHRIST JESUS, from that time forwards. Invaded by a vaſt Army of Turkes, he overcometh Alis Baſſa, and kils 20000 of his men. With no more then 20 horſe and 50 foot, he aſſaulteth Muſtapha in his Camp; in which 5000 Turkes were ſlain, and 300 taken: with whom encountring not long after in the open field, he ſlew 10000 of his men, took many priſoners, and Muſtapha himſelf for one, whom he ranſomed for 25000 Ducats. Falling upon the Hoſt of Amurath, then beſieging Croia, he killed Periſſes Baſſa, hand to hand in a ſingle combat: and in the time of Mahomet who ſucceeded Amurath, vanquiſhed Iſaac the great Baſſa; routed his whole army, had the ſpoil of his Camp, took 20 of his faireſt Enſignes, and ſlew 30000 of his ſouldiers. Not to inſtance in the reſt of his noble actions, it is reported that in the courſe of his war againſt the Turkes, he killed no fewer then 3000 of them with his own hands: uſing a Turkiſh Scymitar in all his fights, of great weight and bigneſſe. Which when Mahomet on a peace between them had deſired to ſee, and afterwards returned againe with this cenſure of it, that he ſaw nothing in it more then ordinary: the gallant Prince ſent back this anſwer, that the vertue of the weapon depended on the ſtrength of his Arm, which hee could not ſend him, for that he did reſerve it for the death of his Enemies. Finally having held his Cards againſt Amurath and Mahomet, two moſt fortunate Gameſters, for the ſpace of 24 yeares, he ſet up his reſt at laſt a winner: dying in peace at Lyſſa, then belonging to the State of Venice; Jan. 17. an. 1466. and was there honourably interred. At the taking of which Town by the Turkes about nine years after, his body was digged up by them, not in ſpight, but honor: that man accompting himſelf happy who could get any of his bones to preſerve as a relick; ſuppoſing that as long as he had it about him, he ſhould be invincible. But with him died the liberty of his Countrey alſo, not long after ſubdued by the Turkes, and made a Province of that Empire, as it ſtill continueth: the name of Albania being by them extended over all Epirus, and ſo much of Dalmatia alſo as is under their power.

The armes of this kingdome (or rather of the Kings thereof) were Gules an Eagle Sable.

5 MACEDONIA.

MACEDONIA is bounded on the Eaſt with the Ægean Sea, on the Weſt with Albania; on the North with Mœſia Superior, and part of Thrace, and on the South with Epirus, and Achaia.

It was firſt called Æmonia from Mount Hæmus, which ſhutteth up that ſide hereof which is towards Mœſia; after Æmathia, from a King of it callled Æmathus; Macedonia from Macedo, the ſon of Deucalion and the Father of Caranaus, the firſt King of the line of Alexander: and finally Kittim or the Land of Kethim, whereof ſee Maccab. c.1. *v.*1 & *cap.*8. *v.*5. from Kittim the ſonne of Javan, and Grandchild of Japhet who was planted here. Antiently of more large extent then it is at the preſent; extending from the Ægean Sea unto the Adriatick, till the taking of Albania out of it, which hath ſtraitned it upon that ſide, but the reſt as formerly.

The Countrey, taking it together is very fruitfull and pleaſant, though on the outward parts thereof begirt with rough mountaines and thick forreſts: in former times much celebrated for its mines of gold and ſilver, but long ſince exhauſted. It contained formerly the Provinces of Æmathia, Pieria, Pelasgia, Hſtiotis, Phiniotis, Theſſalie, Mygdonia, Amphaxitis, Paraxia, Edonis, and many others of leſſe note inhabited by 152 ſeverall Nations: now principally divided (beſides Albania) into Theſſalie. 2 Macedon ſpecially ſo called, and 3 Mygdonia, which the Turkes call Jamboli.

1 THESSALIE hath on the Eaſt the Ægean Sea, on the Weſt Albania; on the North Macedon and Mygdonia; on the South, Achaia. A ſweet and delectable countrey, the pleaſures and delights whereof inclined the people to be very effeminate and diſſolute in their courſe of life; in love with luxury and eaſe, and much like the Perſians in behaviour: whoſe entrance into Greece they did therefore favour. Yet notwithſtanding this debauchednеſſe, they were eſteemed the beſt Horſemen of all the Grecians: by their excellent managing of which creature (as if they had been one peece with it, and either lent the Horſe their mindes or borrowed his body) they gave occaſion unto the fiction of the Centaures, halfe men, halfe beaſts.

It is now called Comenolitati, and of old was very famous for many things, eſpecially for the hill Olympus, of ſo great height, that it ſeemeth to tranſcend the clouds; and therefore frequently by the Poets tooke for Heaven it ſelfe. 2 For the hill Othrys, inhabited by the Lapithæ, over whom Pirithous was King. 3 For the Mountaines of Pelion and Oſſa, the dwelling places of the Centaures, who intending to raviſh Hippodame the Bride of Pirithous, on her wedding day, were ſlaine by Hercules and the Lapithæ. 4 For the delectable Valley of Tempe, ſituate betwixt Oſſa and Olympus; extending in length ſix miles, and five in breadth: ſo beautified with Natures gifts, that it was ſuppoſed to be the Garden of the Muſes. 5 And laſtly, for the Dolopes, and Myrmidones, (who did here inhabit) over whom Achilles had command at the ſiege of Troy: theſe laſt, by reaſon that they were a laborious and thrifty people, being fabled by the Poets to have firſt been Emmets; transformed unto men at the prayers of Æacus when he wanted ſouldiers.

——————Mores quos ante tenebant,
Nunc quoq; habent, parcum genus eſt, patiensq; laborum,
Quæſitiq; tenax, & quod quæſita reſervet.

The cuſtome they of Emmets ſtill retain,
A ſparing Folk, and unto Labour ſet;
Strangely addicted to all kinde of gain,
And wary Keepers of what ere they get.

Places of moſt obſervation in it, 1 Tricca, the Epiſcopall See of Heliodorus, the Authour of that ingenious peece called the Æthiopick Hiſtory: which he ſo prized, that hee choſe rather to loſe his Biſhoprick then conſent to the burning of his Booke, which a Provinciall Synod had adjudged to the Fire. A peece indeed of rare contexture, and neat contrivances, without any touch of looſe or laſcivious language: honeſt and chaſt affection being the ſubject of it; not ſuch as old or modern Poets ſhew us in their Comedies, or other Poems. For here we have no inceſtuous mixture of Fathers, and daughters; no Pandariſm of old Nurſes; no unſeemely action ſpecified where heat of bloud and opportunity doe meet; nor indeed any one paſſage unworthy of the chaſteſt Ear. 2 Lamia, where the Athenians after the death of Alexander, hoping to recover their freedomes, beſieged Antipater: which was the laſt honourable enterpriſe undertaken by that great and renowned City; known in old Hiſtories by the name of Bellum Lamiacum. 3 Lariſſa, ſituate on the South of Demetrias, but on the ſame Bay; memorable for the birth of Achilles; from hence called frequently in the Poets Lariſſeus Achilles. 4 Demetrias, ſituate on the Bay called Sinus Pelaſgicus (now the Golf of Armenia) of very great ſtrength by Art and Nature. Which being held by the Macedonians, together with Chalcis in the Iſle of Eubœa, and the City of Corinth; kept all Greece in awe, and were therefore commonly called the Fetters of Greece: the Grecians never thinking themſelves at liberty, till thoſe townes were diſtrantled by the Romans. 5 Pharſalis, nigh to which was fought the great battell betwixt Cæſar and Pompey, for the Soveraignty of the Roman Empire: a battell more famous famous then bloudy, 6000 only of 300000, which were in the field on both ſides, being therein ſlain. A battell before which the Pompeians were in ſuch a miſerable ſecurity, that ſome of them contended for the Prieſthood which was Cæſars Office; others diſpoſed of the Conſulſhip, and preferments in the Citie of Rome: Pompey himſelf being ſo rechleſſe, that he neither conſidered into what place it were beſt to flie if he loſt the day; or by what means he might provide for his own ſafety, and end the war. As if the war had been made againſt ſome ignoble Enemie, and not againſt that Cæſar, who had taken 1000 Towns, conquered 300 Nations, tooke priſoners one million of men, and ſlain as many. 6 Philippi, ſo named from Philip the Macedonian, the firſt founder of it; ſituate in the further part of the ſame plains of Pharſalia; and famous for as memorable a Battell as that before, and of no leſſe conſequence: that namely, betwixt Auguſtus and M. Antonius on the one ſide, againſt Brutus and Caſſius on the other; theſe later being rather overcome by chance then valour. For either of them thinking the other vanquiſhed, ſlew himſelf in the field: being the two laſt that ever openly ſtood out for the common Liberty, and therefore called by Cremutius Cordus, Ultimi Romanorum, or the laſt of the true Roman Spirits. 7 Gomphi, an ancient Citie bordering on Epirus. 8 Phera, in which Citie Alexander the Tyrant reigned; againſt whom that noble Captain Pelopidas the Theban fighting, was ſlain in battell: the Tyrant being not long after murdered by his wifes brother, and by that means all Theſſalie recovering liberty. 9 Pagaſa, ſituate on the Bay called Sinus Pelaſgicus, which from hence is ſometimes named Pegaſicus; in which the ſhip called Argo, was ſaid to be built, ſo famous for the renowned voyage of the Argonautes. The hill Pelion ſpoken of before, is not far from hence. 10 Pythion, or Pytheum, of great note for the Pythian games there celebrated in the honour of Apollo, who hereabouts killed the Serpent Python: the Conquerour in which games, were crowned at the firſt only with an oaken Garland, but afterwards with one of Lawrell. Of which thus the Poet: Theſſalie.

Neve operis famam poſſet abolere vetuſtas
Inſtituit ſacros celebri certamine ludos, Pythia de domiti Serpentis nomine dictos, &c.

Thus made to ſpeak Engliſh by G. Sandys:

Then leſt the well-deſerved memorie
Of ſuch an act in future times ſhould die
He inſtituted the ſo famous Games
Of free contention, which he Pythia names.
Who ran, who wreſtled beſt, or rak'd the ground
With ſwifteſt wheels, the Oaken Garland crown'd.

Theſe games, together with the Olympick, Iſthmian, and Nemæan ſpoken of before; made the four annuall meetings amongſt the Grecians; renowned for the univerſall concourſe of the nobleſt ſpirits. 11 Doliche, which together with Pythium, and 12 Azorium, another Citie of this tract, ſtanding near together, are called in Livius the Hiſtorian by the name of Tripolis. 13 Hypata, the Metropolis of Theſſalie, ſo called by Heliodorus in his Æthiopick Hiſtorie before mentioned: who placeth it near the Bay called Sinus Maliacus, now Golfo di Ziton, and not far from Mount Oeta, bordering on the Province of Doris: upon which Mountain, Hercules being tortured with a poiſoned ſhirt, ſent by his innocent wife Deianira, ſaid to have burned himſelf; thence called Hercules Oeteus. Of all which Towns, Lamia, Pagaſa, and Demetrias, are in the Region called Phthiotis; Lariſſa, Doliche, Phthium, and Azorium, in that called Pelaſgia; Gomphi, and Tricca, in Eſtiotis; the reſt in Theſſalie, properly and ſpecially ſo named.

This Country at firſt called Æmonia, afterwards Pelaſgia, then Pyrrhæa from Pyrrha the wife of Deucalion, and finally Theſſalia, from Theſſalus one of the companions of Hercules; by Plinie is called Driopis, Eſtiotis by Strabo, Pelaſgia by Diodorus, and by Homer, Argos; the name of ſome chief Citie or particular Province, being figuratively uſed for the whole. Divided commonly into four parts, 1 Theſſaliotis, 2 Eſtiotis, 3 Pelaſgiotis, and 4 Phthiotis: the name of Theſſalie or Theſſaliotis in the end prevailing, accordingly diſtributed into ſeverall governments, united finally in the perſon of Philip the father of Alexander; who partly by force, but ſpecially by art and practiſe, made himſelf Maſter of the whole. Continuing in a mixt condition betwixt free and ſubject, under the Macedonian Kings of the ſecond Race; it became ſubject with that Kingdome to the State of Rome: firſt reckoned as a part of the Province of Macedon, after a Province of it ſelf, when Macedon was made a Dioceſe, part of which it was. But from a Province of that Dioceſe, and a member of the Eaſtern Empire it was made a kingdome: given with that title to Boniface Marqueſſe of Mont-ferrat in exchange for Candie, together with the Citie of Theſſalonica, and ſome part of Peloponneſus, at the diviſion of that Empire amongſt the Latines. Which title he affected in regard that Reiner the brother of Boniface his Grandfather, had formerly been created Prince of Theſſalie, by the Emperour Emanuel, whoſe daughter Cyri Maria (or the Lady Mary) he had took to wife. In him as it began, ſo this title ended; Theſſalonica falling to the State of Venice, Theſſalie reverting to the Empire when the Greeks recovered it: from whom ſubdued, and added to the Turkiſh Empire in the reign of Amurath the 2. anno 1432.

Macedon.

2 MACEDON ſpecially ſo called, is bounded on the Eaſt with Mygdonia, on the Weſt with Albania, on the North with Mount Hæmus, on the South with Theſſalie. The Country for the moſt part fruitfull, as before was ſaid; but not ſo ſurfeiting with delights as to make the people wanton or effeminate in their courſe of life; as being naturally good ſouldiers, exact obſervers of military diſcipline, and inured to hardneſſe: which their many ſignall victories doe moſt clearly evidence, both in Greece and Aſia.

The Greeks in the pride of their own wits reckoned them amongſt the barbarous Nations; and yet by a ſtrange kinde of contradiction aſcribe unto their Country the ſeats of the Muſes. For in this Country was Mount Pimple, with a fountain of the ſame name at the foot thereof; both conſecrated to the Muſes, from hence called Pimpleides. Here alſo was the hill Libethris, and the Province of Pieria, from whence the Muſes had the names of Libetbrides, and Pierides; by this laſt called more frequently then by any other name what ever, eſpecially by the Greeks themſelves. But the birth of Ariſtotle in this Country doth more convince the Grecians of this fooliſh arrogance, then all the Muſes in the world. A man ſo admirable in the generall courſe of learning, ſo univerſally comprehenſive of all Arts and Sciences: that the beſt witted Grecian might have been his ſcholar, and thought it a great happineſſe, as King Philip did, that they had any children but to be tutored by him.

The principall Rivers hereof, beſides Erigon and Aliacmon, ſpoken of before; are 1 Axius, now called Vardari, riſing out of the hill Scardius, a branch of Mount Æmus, and paſſing through the whole extent of this Country into Sinus Thermaicus, or the Golfe of Theſſalonica, as it is now named: the faireſt River of thoſe parts, and of ſweeteſt waters; but ſuch as maketh all the cattell black which drink of it. 2 Chabris, 3 Echedorus, both riſing out of the mid-land Countries, and both falling into the ſame Bay alſo. Beſides which there are three other fair and capacious Bayes aſcribed to Macedon, though two of them belonging properly to Mygdonia, that is to ſay, Singeticus, now Golfo di Monte Sacro; and Toronicus, now the Golfe or Bay of Aiomana; and the third common unto Thrace alſo, which is Sinus Strimonicus, now the Bay of Conteſſo.

Towns of moſt obſervation in it, according to the ſeverall Regions and parts hereof, were for the Almopes, 1 Hormia, called afterwards Seleucia. 2 Europus, of which name there were four in Macedon. 3 Apſalus. Of Syntice, 4 Triſtolus, 5 Paroræcopolis, 6 Gariſcus, 7 Heraclea, for diſtinction called Heraclea Syntica; there being many others of that name in Greece. In Edonis bordering towards Thrace, 8 Scotuſa, 9 Berga, 10 Amphipolis, on the River Strymon, with which encompaſſed, whence it had the name; ſeated ſo cloſe on the edge of Thrace that it is queſtionable to which of them it belongs of right, once garriſoned by the Athenians, and from them took by Philip the Macedonian, in the firſt riſe of his fortunes. 11 Crenides, bordering on Thrace alſo, and by ſome Writers laid unto it, but I thinke erroneouſly: repaired and beautified by Philip before mentioned, by whom called Philippi: ſituate in a Country ſo rich in mines of gold, that the ſaid Philip drew thence yearly 1000 talents, which make 600000 French Crowns, or 140000 l. of our Engliſh money. Afterwards made a Roman Colonie and accounted the chief Citie of Macedonia, as appeareth Acts 16. 12. to the people of which S. Paul writ one of his Epiſtles. Next in Emathia, we have 12 Tyriſſa in the midlands, bordering upon Theſſalie, now called Cereſi. 13 Ædeſſa, called afterwards Ægeas, and now Vodena; the firſt town of all this country taken by Caranaus, the founder of the firſt race of the Kings of Macedon. 14 Berœa on Sinus Thermaicus, honoured with the preaching of Paul and Silas; the Citizens whereof are by S. Luke commended for their readineſſe in receiving the Goſpell. 15 Pella, on the ſame Bay alſo, the birth-place of Alexander the Great, from hence called Juvenis Pelleus. 16 Pydna, upon the ſame Bay at the influx of the River Aliacmon, in which Caſſander beſieged and took Olympias the mother, Roxane the wife, and Hercules the heir apparent of Alexander; all whom he barbarouſly murdered. This cruelty he committed, partly to revenge himſelf of Alexander, who had once knocked his head and the wall together; and partly to cry quit with Olympias, who had before as cruelly murdered Aridæus the baſe ſon of Philip, and Eurydice his wife, with whom Caſſander was ſuppoſed to be over-familiar. Memorable alſo is this Town for the great battell fought near it betwixt Perſeus the laſt King of Macedon, and P. Æmilius the Conſul, in which Perſeus having ſhamefully deſerted his Armie, loſt both the battell and his Kingdome, with no leſſe then 20000 of his foot which were therein ſlain: the Romans having ſo cheap a victory, that it coſt them not above an hundred or ſixſcore men. 17 Dium, not far from the hill Olympus, and about a mile from the Sea; of which mile the River Helicon becoming there a Lake, and called Baphyrus, taketh up one halfe: ſituate in the borders towards Theſſalie, the way unto it out of the Tempe being ſtrait and narrow, and almoſt impaſſable, by reaſon of the ſpurs of the Mountains, running overthwart it: which had it been well defended by the Macedonians, would have kept their Country from the Romans, who that way attempted it. But Perſeus hearing that the Enemy had got into Tempe, only took care to get his treaſure out of Dium, and ſo abandoned both the paſſage, and the town together. 18 Phylace, more within the land: as is 19 Eribœa. But theſe four laſt are in that part hereof which is called Pieria.

3 MYGDONIA hath on the Eaſt the Ægean Sea, on the Weſt Macedon, properly and ſpecially ſo called; on the North Edonis and Sinus Strimonicus, on the South Sinus Thermaicus, or the Golfe of Theſſalonica. So that it is almoſt a Peninſula, environed on three ſides with water.

Here is in this Country the hill Athos, ſtanding in a Peninſula (the Iſthmus being once cut thorow by Xerxes, but ſince cloſed again) ſaid to be 70 miles in circuit, 3 dayes journey long, halfe a dayes in breadth, reſembling the ſhape of a man lying with his face upwards: the higheſt point whereof covered perpetually with ſnow, is ſaid to caſt a ſhadow as far as Lemnos. Exceeding fruitful in graſſe, fruit, oil, and wine; and wondrous plentifull in hares; according to that of Ovid: Macedon.

Quot Lepores in Atho, quot Apes paſcuntur in Hybla.

How many Hares in Athos feed,
What ſwarms of Bees on Hybla breed.

Inhabited only by Greek Monks whom they call Caloires, of the order of S. Baſil, to whom the hill commonly called the Holy Mountain, hath been long ſince dedicated: the place being ſo priviledged by the Grand Signeur, that neither Turke nor Grecian may inhabit in it, except ſuch Grecians only as profeſſe this life. Of theſe there are about 6000, diſperſed in 42 Monaſteries, built after a militarie manner for fear of Theeves and Pyrats, wherewith much infeſted in times paſt: frequented with great concourſe of people coming thither to behold and adore ſome Relicks (for which they are of much eſteem:) the free oblations of thoſe Pilgrims, and ſome benevolence from the Turks which do much reſpect them, being the chief means of their ſubſiſtence. The manner of their life is like that of the ancient Hermits, poorly clad, their ſhirts of Woollen, which they both ſpin and weave themſelves; none of them idle at any time, doing ſtill ſomewhat for their lively-hood, and the advancement of the houſe of which they are, as dreſſing vines, felling timber, yea and building ſhips: few of them giving themſelves to ſtudy, and ſome of them of ſo groſſe an ignorance, that they can neither write nor read: bound by their Order to lodge and entertain ſuch ſtrangers as have occaſion to paſſe that way according to their rank and calling, and that of free coſt, if it be deſired.

Towns of moſt note, according to the ſeverall Regions and parts hereof, are for Mygdonia ſpecially and properly ſo called, 1 Antigonia, ſo called from Antigonus a King of Macedon, the firſt founder of it. 2 Xilopolis, 3 Terpillus, 4 Phyſco, 5 Aſſorus, all mentioned by Ptolemie, but not elſe obſervable. 6 Apollonia, for diſtinction ſake called Apollonia Mygdoniæ, to difference it from Apollonia in Albania, then a part of Macedon: famous for the ſtudies of Auguſtus Cæſar, who here learnt the Greek tongue. For Amphaxitis, there was 7 Arethuſa, 8 Stagira, now called Nicalidi, renowned for the birth of Ariſtotle, hence named Stagirites. 9 Theſſalonica, ſituate on the bottome of Sinus Thermaicus, now called the Bay of Salonichi, by the name of the town. Anciently the Metropolis or head Citie of Macedon, the ſeat of the Præfectus Prætorio for Illyricum, after the removall thereof from Sirmium; as alſo of the Primate of the Greek Church, who reſided here. To the people of this Citie did S. Paul write two of his Epiſtles continuing in great power and credit till the fall of the Conſtantinopolitan Empire into the hands of the Latines: at which time it was beſtowed firſt on Boniface Marqueſſe of Montferrat, the new King of Theſſalie: after whoſe death it fell unto the State of Venice, who held it till the year 1432. when forced by Amurath the 2. to become Turkiſh. Which notwithſtanding it ſtill preſerves the reputation of a beautifull and wealthy Citie, inhabited by rich Merchants who drive here a great trade, eſpecially for the commodities of the Indies; for beauty, riches, and magnificence, little inferiour unto Naples: and though the Turks and Jews make the greateſt number of Inhabitants, yet here are reckoned 30 Churches for the uſe of Chriſtians. As for the Jews they ſwarm here in ſuch great abundance, that in this Citie and that of Conſtantinople only, there are reckoned 160000 of them; but generally hated and contemned by all ſorts of people. 10 Syderocaſpæ, of old called Chryſites, remarkable for its mines of gold and ſilver, ſo beneficiall to the Turk that he receiveth hence monthly 18000 and ſometimes 30000 crowns de claro. Next for Chalcidice, there was 11 Panormus, a Port town, 12 Stratonice in the Peninſula of Mount Athos. 13 Athos or Athoſa, in the ſame Peninſula, with a Promontorie of the ſame name, nigh which it ſtood. 14 Acanthus, now called Eryſſa, on the Bay of the Holy Mountain. And finally in Paraxia, we have 15 Ampelus, 16 Torone, giving name to the Bay adjoining, called anciently Sinus Toronicus, now Golfo di Aiomama. 17 Caſſandria, on the Sea ſide, ſo called from Caſſander King of Macedon, who repaired and beautified it; being before named Potidea. 18 Derris, 19 Merillus, 20 Pallene, ſituate in the Cherſoneſe or Demy-Iſland, called Petalene, and by ſome Petalia; formerly conſecrated to the Muſes: but before that infamous for the war which the Giants are fabled to have made here againſt the Gods; at what time it was called Phlegra, the fields adjoyning Campi Phlegræi, in which this great battell is ſuppoſed to be fought. The occaſion of the Fable was, (as both Theagenes and Eudoxus do expound the ſame) that the Inhabitants hereof in thoſe elder times being men of a moſt impious and inſolent life, got the name of Giants: whom when Hercules endeavoured to ſubdue and reduce to reaſon, it happened that there fell a great tempeſt of thunder and lightning, by which they were conſtrained to flee and ſubmit themſelves. Hence the report that thoſe Giants made war againſt the Gods. Others have placed theſe Phlegræan fields in Theſſalie, and perhaps more probably. Certain I am that ſome place nearer to the hils of Pelion, Oſſa, and Olympus, doth agree beſt with it: if at leaſt Ovid were not out in his narration, who makes thoſe Mountains to be heaped upon one another for their better reaching to the skies, and fighting upon even ground as the ſaying is. For thus that Poet:

Affectaſſe ferunt regnum cæleſte Gigantes,
Altaque congeſtos ſtruxiſſe ad ſydera Montes.
At pater omnipotens miſſo perfregit Olympum
Fulmine, & excuſſit ſubjectum Pelion Oſſæ.

Macedon.

Which may be Engliſhed in theſe words:

The Giants once the Throne of heaven affected
And hils on hils unto the Stars erected.
Till Jove with thunder high Olympus brake,
And Pelion did from under Oſſa take.

But from thoſe Fables to proceed to more reall ſtories: this Country was firſt peopled by Citim the ſon of Javan, paſſing over out of Aſia Minor; in memorie whereof, here was not only a town called Citium, ſpoken of by *Livie l.*42. but the whole land of Macedon is in the book of Maccabees called the land of Kettim, *Maccab.*1. *v.*1. and the inhabitants hereof called Citims, in the 8 chapter of the ſame book, *v.*5. ſpreading in tract of time from one Sea to the other, from the Ægean to the Adriatick, ſome Colonies of them paſſed from hence to Italie, and firſt inhabited that Countrie, as hath there been ſaid. Such as continued in theſe parts, divided into ſeverall tribes, as in all parts elſe, became in time to be united in the name of Macedons: a people not much taken notice of in the former times, living a poor and painfull life, Goatherds and Shepherds for the moſt part, ſcarce able to defend their own Mountains from the next invader; much leſſe to dream of conquering either Greece or Perſia. And therefore Alexander told them, and not much unfitly, (though by him ſpoke in paſſion and to their diſgrace) that his father Philip had firſt made them Gentlemen. For Philip having learned the Rudiments of war under Epaminondas, (being then an Hoſtage with the Thebans) and by that means acquainted with the temper and ſtate of Greece: not only freed his own Kingdome from the Illyrians, Thracians, and other barbarous Nations who had gained upon it; but taking advantage of the factions raiſed amongſt the Grecians (which he knew how to feed and cheriſh for his own improvement) brought them at firſt wholly to rely upon him, and after to be ſubject to him. Inſomuch that never any Monarchy had a ſwifter growth, nor a more ſpeedy diſſolution: there paſſing not ful 40 years from the firſt of Philip to the laſt of Alexander: in which ſpace it was both begun, perfected, and broke to pieces. For the foundation being laid in murder, perjurie and treaſon, as at firſt it was, was never likely to be bleſſed with a long continuance.

The KINGS of MACEDON.

Of theſe 23 Kings, only ſix are famous: viz. Caranaus the firſt King, originally of Argos, of the race of Hercules, and by an Oracle commanded to lead a Colony into this country, and to follow the firſt flock of Cattell he ſaw before him. Being here arrived in a tempeſtuous ſtormy day, he eſpyed a herd of Goats flying the fury of the weather. Theſe Goats he followed unto Ædeſſa, into which by reaſon of the darkneſſe of the air, he entered undiſcovered, won the town, and in ſhort ſpace became Lord of all the Country. 2 Perdiccas the fourth King, who at Æga, built a buriall place for all his ſucceſſors; aſſuring the people that as long as their Kings were there buried, his race ſhould never fail; and ſo it happened. For the Kingdom of Macedon, after the death of Alexander the great, who was buryed at Babylon, was tranſlated to the ſons of Demetrius. 3 Europus, who in his infancie was carryed in a cradle againſt the Illyrians his enemies, and returned victorious. This the Macedons did either becauſe they thought, they could not be beaten their King being preſent: or perſwaded themſelves that there was none ſo void of honour and compaſſion as to abandon an infant, no way able to ſave himſelf from deſtruction, but by the valour and fidelity of his ſervants. 4 Alexander, the ſon of Amintas, famous for a notable exploit on the Perſian Embaſſadours; who being ſent from Megabizus, requeſted a view of the Macedonian Ladies. No ſooner were they entred, but petulantius eas Perſis contrectantibus, as Juſtine relateth the ſtory, they were called back by this Alexander, ſending in their ſteads young ſpringals maidenly attired; who upon the like indignities offered, ſlew theſe effeminate Aſians. After which he behaved himſelf ſo diſcreetly, that the Perſian Monarch gave him all Greece, between Hæmus and Olympus. Philip father unto Alexander, who governed firſt as Guardian to the ſon of Perdiccas his elder brother; but afterwards took unto himſelf both the Kingdom and title of King: which he continued in the depoſition of his Nephew and naturall Soveraign, the murder of the reſt of his brethren, and the deſtruction of all ſuch as oppoſed his practiſes. But being otherwiſe a man of approved abilities, he cleared his own Country of the Illyrians, ſubdued Achaia, Thrace,

and a great part of Peloponneſus: and was choſen Generall of the Greeks againſt the Perſians. But as ſoon as he had made all things ready for this expedition, he was ſlain by one Pauſanias a young Gentleman, whom he had formerly abuſed. 6 Alexander the ſon of Philip, who recovered ſuch parts of Greece, as on the death of his father had befooled themſelves with an hope of liberty. He ſubdued Darius the great King of Perſia, Taxiles and Porus Kings of India; founded the Monarchie of the Grecians; and in the height of his ſucceſſes was poiſoned at Babylon by Caſſander, one of his great Captains: his Revenue at the time of his death, amounting to 300000 talents yearly. After his death his new got Empire was much controverted in the point of ſucceſſion; he himſelf having bequeathed it to him, who was thought moſt worthy by his Armie: and the Souldiers, according to their ſeverall affections and relations, thought their own Leaders moſt deſerving. At laſt the title of King (and in effect nothing but the title) was by conſent of the Commanders caſt on Aridæus, a baſtard of Philip, to whom Perdiccas was appointed to be Protectour (for Aridæus was a little crazed in his braine) and to be Generall of the Armie. As for the Provinces they were aſſigned unto the Government of the chiefe Commanders, viz. Egypt to Ptolemie, Syria to Laomedon, Cilicia to Philotus, Media to Pytho, Cappadocia to Eumenes, Pamphylia, Lycia, and Phrygia major to Antigonus, Caria to Caſſander, Lydia to Minander, Pontus and Phrygia minor to Leonatus, Aſſyria to Seleucus, Perſis to Peuceſtes, Thrace to Lyſimachus, and Macedon it ſelf unto Antipater: the other parts of the Perſian Empire being left to them, unto whoſe hands they were committed in the time of Alexander. But this diviſion held not long. For Perdiccas being once ſlain by Ptolemie, and Eumenes made away by Antigonus, theſe two became quickly too great for the reſt: Ptolemie adding Syria and Cyprus to the Kingdom of Egypt; and Antigonus bringing under his command not only all Aſia minor, but Aſſyria, Media, and almoſt all the Eaſtern parts of the Perſian Empire. Antipater in the mean time ſucceeding in the Protectourſhip, baniſhed Olympias the mother of Alexander, out of Macedonia, as bearing but a ſtep-dames love unto Aridæus. But he being dead, ſhe returned out of Epirus, (the place of her baniſhment) into Macedonia, where raiſing a ſtrong partie among the people, ſhe put Aridæus and his wife Eurydice to death; proclaiming Hercules the ſon of Alexander, King: both ſlaine not long after by Caſſander the ſon of Antipater; who to make ſure work, murdered alſo with the like cruelty Roxane and her ſon, another Alexander, the laſt ſurviver of that houſe. And ſo the royall familie being rooted out, Antigonus took unto himſelf the title of King: as did Seleucus, who had now recovered all the Perſian Provinces beyond Euphrates; the like did Ptolemie in Egypt and Caſſander in Macedon.

Macedon.

The ſecond Race of the MACEDON KINGS.

A.M.

3648 1 Caſſander, ſonne of Antipater, ſuppoſed to have been the poiſoner of Alexander, rooted out the blood-royall of Macedon: his reigne full of troubles and difficulties, 19.

3667 2 Alexander and Antipater, ſons to Caſſander, but not well agreeing, called unto their aide Lyſimachus, and Demetrius; by whom they were both in ſhort time murdered, 4.

3671 3 Demetrius, ſonne to Antigonus, the powerfull King of Aſia, after he had in one battell againſt Seleucus, loſt both his father, and all his Aſian Dominions; ſettled himſelfe in Macedon: but being there outed by Pyrrhus, he fled to Seleucus, and with him dyed, 6.

3677 4 Pyrrhus King of Epirus, was by the ſouldiers, voluntarily forſaking Demetrius, made King of Macedon; but after 7 months, the ſouldiers revolted to Lyſimachus, as being a Macedonian born.

3678 5 Lyſimachus King of Thrace, being thus made King of Macedon, was in the end vanquiſhed and ſlain by Seleucus, the laſt ſurviver of Alexanders Captains, 7.

3685 6 Ceraunus, or Ptolemie Ceraunus, ſon to Ptolemie of Egypt, having traiterouſly ſlain his friend and Patron Seleucus, ſeiſed on Macedon, but loſt it, together with his life, unto the Gaules; who then plagued theſe Countries. After whoſe death this Kingdome being diſtracted amongſt many Competitors, ſettled at laſt upon 3687 7 Antigonus Gonatas, the ſon of Demetrius, who for his valour ſhewn in expulſing the Gaules, was made King of Macedon. And though for a while he gave way to Pyrrhus, then returning from Italie; yet after the death of Pyrrhus he again recovered his eſtate; but outed once again by Alexander the ſon of Pyrrhus, 36.

3723 8 Demetrius II. ſon of Antigonus, recovered Macedon from the power of Alexander the ſon of Pyrrhus, 10.

3733 9 Antigonus II. ſurnamed Doſon, left by Demetrius as Protectour to his young ſon Philip, uſurped the Kingdom. He divers times vanquiſhed and cruſhed the Grecians, beginning then to caſt off the yoke of Macedon, 12.

3745 10 Philip, the ſon of Demetrius, 42.

Thrace. 3787 11 Perſeus the ſon of Philip, the laſt King of Macedon; the ſubverſion of which eſtate was firſt begun in the time of his Father, who had not onely warred upon the Ætolians and others of the Greekes, whom the Romans had taken into their protection; but ſided with Hannibal againſt them. Upon which grounds they ſent firſt Titus Qu. Flaminius, one of their Conſuls, by whom Philip was vanquiſhed at the battell of Cuxos-cephalos, and his Kingdome made tributary unto Rome. After which picking a quarrell againſt Perſeus alſo, managed with variable ſucceſſe by Licinius, Martius, and others of their Commanders; they diſpatched Paulus Æmilius with an Army into Macedon, to bring him to abſolute ſubjection: Who ſped ſo well, that Macedon was made a Province of the Roman Empire, and Perſeus led captive unto Rome, anno 3789. In which triumph, beſides the pomp of leading a Captive King in bonds, Æmilius cauſed the ready money which he brought out of Greece to be carryed in 750 Veſſels, every veſſell containing 3 Talents; which made ſo infinite a ſumme, that the Roman people were free for many years after from all taxes and impoſitions.

3798 Macedon thus made a Province of the Roman Empire, and afterwards divided into three parts or Provinces, that is to ſay Macedonia Prima, Macedonia Secunda or Salutaris and Prevalitana; in the new modell of Conſtantine became a Dioceſe, the Dioceſe hereof containing the Provinces of Crete, Achaia, old and new Epirus, Macedonia Prima, and the greateſt part of Salutaris, the reſidue of Salutaris and Prevalitana, (which makes up the Countrey now called Albania) being laid to the Dioceſe of Dacia. It continued part of the Eaſtern Empire, till towards the laſt fatall diſſolution of it, though many times haraſſed and depopulated by the Sclavonians, Bulgarians, Roſſes, and others of the barbarous people, at their ſeverall invaſions of it: finally conquered by the Turkes, firſt under the conduct of Bajazet their fourth king taking Nicopolis, a town hereof bordering on Thrace, and lying North of Sinus Strimonius, now the Bay of Conteſſo; and after under Amurath the ſecond their ſixt King, making themſelves maſters of Theſſalonica the chief City of it, and therewith of all the countrey. By reaſon of which many invaſions and laſt deſolation by the Turkes, there is ſcarſe one of all thoſe many Cities before mentioned now of any eminence; except Theſſalonica onely: the reſt being miſerably deſtroyed. And for the Countrey it ſelfe it is governed by a Turkiſh Sanziack under the Beglerbeg of Greece, his annual Revenew being but 8000 Crownes: nor any thing elſe required of him then to maintaine 100 horſe in ordinary pay, for defence of his Province, and to finde 400 Horſe on extraordinary occaſions, as the Grand Signeur ſhall command him.

THRACE hath on the Eaſt, Pontus Euxinus, Propontis, and Helleſpont; on the Weſt Macedon; on the North, the hill Hæmus; on the South, the Ægæan Sea, and part of Macedon. A very large and goodly Province, extending 20 dayes journey in length, 7 dayes journey in breadth: and in relation to the heavens, reaching unto the 44 degree of Northern latitude, ſo that the longeſt day in ſummer is about 15 houres three quarters.

By ſeverall men, according to the times they lived in, it hath been called by divers names: by Stephanus, Aria; by Suidas Odryſa; by Lycophron, Creſtona; by ſome writers, Scythia; by Joſephus the Hebrew, Thyras. But generally it is called Thrace or Thracia, and that as ſome ſay from Thrax, the ſon of Mars; as others from Thraca, an Inchantreſſe; more probably from the ſerity and barbarous condition of the firſt Inhabitants; the name in the Originall Greek bearing that conſtruction: moſt likely from Thyras the ſon of Japhet, who firſt planted here, in memory of whom it did retaine the name of Thyras in the time of Joſephus; beſides many other footſteps and remembrances of him, in the name of many of their townes, and ſome of their Princes; of which we have already ſpoken in our generall Preface. Finally by the Turkes it is called Romania, either from the many Roman Colonies which were planted here; or becauſe Conſtantinople the chief City of it was antiently called Nova Roma: and by that name it is now called in moſt modern Writers.

The Countrey generally is neither of a rich ſoyle nor a pleaſant air, the corn and other fruites by reaſon of the coldneſſe of the Climate leiſurely ripening, the Vines yeelding more ſhade then juice, and the trees for the moſt part more leaves then fruit: yet in ſome parts there be many large and goodly plaines, where they reape good ſtore of corn, but of Pulſe eſpecially; and towards the Seaſide they have plenty of wine, which Pliny much commended both for ſtrength and goodneſſe.

The people antiently were very bold and valiant, and called by ſome Αυτόνομοι becauſe every man was a law to himſelfe. So that it was truly ſaid by Herodotus, that if they had either beene all of one minde, or under one King, they had been invincible. Of manners they were rude and ſavage, ſomewhat neer to bruiſhneſſe; buying their wives, and ſelling both their ſonnes and daughters, as in open market: in which, ſince imitated by the Turkes, who poſſeſſe their Countrey. The men were more courageous then comely, wearing cloathes according to their conditions, ragged and unſeemly. The marryed women were in love to their husbands ſo conſtant, that they willingly ſacrificed themſelves at their funerals. The Virgins were beſtowed, not by their own parents, but the common Fathers of their Cities. Such as brought neither beauty nor vertue for their dowry, were put off according to their money; moſt times ſold as other cattell, in the markets. In matters of Religion, they worſhipped Mars, Bacchus, Diana, Mercury, as did other Gentiles: ſwearing eſpecially by the firſt, from whom they bragged themſelves to have been deſcended

ded. But their chiefe nationall deity, was one Zamolxis, sometimes a native of this Countrey, who having been brought up under Pythagoras, and returning home, prescribed them good and wholesome Lawes, assuring them that if they did observe the same, they should goe unto a place when they left this world, in which they should enjoy all manner of pleasure and contentment. By this means having gotten some opinion of a divinity amongst them, he absented himselfe, after was worshipped as their God. Upon these principles, when any one was born amongst them, his Parents and other friends sitting round about him, lamented bitterly his coming into the world, ripping up all the miseries and afflictions whereto he was to be exposed in this present life, and so deplored his condition as absolutely miserable and unhappy. But on the contrary, when any one chanced to dye, they buryed him with all joy and alacrity highly rejoycing that by this means he was freed from the crosses and dysasters of this wretched World. Expressed thus briefly, after his wonted manner by mine Authour. Lugentur Puerperia, natiq; deflentur; funera contra festa sunt, & veluti sacra cantu lusuq; celebrantur. A peece of such sound and Orthodox Divinity, that I wonder how they hit upon it in these times of darkenesse; and savouring very much of the Primitive piety: by which the Obits of the Saints were kept as Festivals, no notice being taken of the day of their births. According to that of the good old Writer, Non nativitatem sed mortem Sanctorum Ecclesia pretiosam & festam judicat. Thrace.

Here lived the Tyrant Polymnestor, who villaniously murdered Polydorus, a younger sonne of Priamus; for which fact, Hecuba the young Princes mother, scratched him to death. Here also lived the Tyrant Tereus, of whom before in Phocis: and Diomedes, who using to feed his Horses with mans flesh, was slaine by Hercules, and cast unto his horses. And finally here reigned King Coys, whom I mention not as a Tyrant, but propose as a pattern of rare temper, both in mastering and preventing passion. For when a neighbour Prince had sent him a present of Glasses, of the purest metall, and no lesse accurate in the workmanship or fashion of them: (having dispatched the messenger with all the due complements of Majesty and gratitude) he broke them all to peeces; lest if by mishap any of his servants should doe the like, he might be stirred to an intemperate choler.

Chief mountaines in this couhtrey, besides Hæmus spoken of already, are 1 Rhodope, the highest next Mount Hæmus in those parts of the World, craggy, and rough, the top whereof continually white with snow: memorable for the fate and fable of Orpheus, who in a melancholy humour (having lost his wife) betooke himselfe unto these mountaines: where with his Musick he affected both Woods and Beasts, who are said to have danced unto his Musick: from this place of his abode called Rhodopeius, from his countrey Thracius; Non me Carminibus vincet nec Thracius Orpheus, &c. as the Shepheard boasteth in the Poet. The truth is, that he was a man of an heavenly Muse, and by his dictates and good Counsell laid down in verse, first of all civilized this people; and weaned them by degrees from their bestiality. Hence the occasion of the Fable. But for Mount Rhodope it selfe, it is in the midst of this Countrey, thwarting it from Mount Hæmus towards the West: which with the spurres and branches of it, and the plaines adjoining lying betwixt the River Nessus on the West, and Melas or Niger on the East, made up the Province of the Empire, called Rhodope, by the name of the Mountaine. 2 Pangæus, rich in Mines of Silver; 3 Melampus, shooting towards the Sea, full of rocks and cliffes; and 4 Orbelus, lying towards Macedon, where there is a little Region from hence called Orbelia.

Principall Rivers hereof besides Strymon spoken of before, the boundary in some places betwixt this and Macedon, are 1 Nessus, by the Grecians, now called Mestro, by the Turkes, Carasou, which rising out of Mount Hæmus falleth into the Sea, near the Isle of Thassus. 2 Athyras, in which name the memory of Thyras the sonne of Japhet, seemes to be preserved; which rising in Mount Hæmus also, loseth it selfe in the Propontick; as doth 3 Bathynias; another river rising from the same Mount Hæmus. 4 Hebrus, the most noted River of this countrey, rising out of Mount Rhodope, and falling into the Ægean neer the Isle of Samothrace, a river of so slow a course that it is not easie to discerne which way it goeth: but memorable in the Poets for the fate of Orpheus, who being torn in peeces by the Thracian women, had his limbes thrown into it by those Furies. 5 Thearus, good against the scab both in man and Beast, issuing out of 30 Fountaines, some hot, some cold; with the pleasantnesse of whose waters Darius the King of Persia, was so delighted, that he erected a pillar in honour of it.

The chief Towns 1 Abdera, now called Polystilo, situate not far from the fall of the River Nessus into the Ægean, the birth place of Democritus, who spent his whole life in laughing at the follies of others. 2 Potidea, of old a Colonie of Athens, from whom it revolted and submitted to the State of Corinth. But the Athenians not enduring the affront, beleaguered it, and after two yeares siege, and the expence of 2000 Talents, could not recover it againe but on composition. 3 Adrus, on the Ægean Sea, a town of great strength and safety, and therefore used by the later Constantinopolitan Emperours for the securing of great persons. For hither Michael Palæologus sent Jathatines the Turkish Sultan, flying to him for aid; and hither Mahomet the Great sent Demetrius, Prince of Peloponnesus, when he yeelded up his countrey to him; both under colour of providing for their ease and safety, but in plain terms to keep them in honourable Prisons. 4 Lysimachia, on the Sea-shore, once of great importance, built by Lysimachus, who after Alexanders death laid hands on this Countrey: afterwards garrisoned by Philip the Father of Perseus, on the withdrawing of whose Forces for some other service, it was taken and razed to the ground by the barbarous Thracians, and all the people of it carried into captivity; but by Antiochus the Great re-edified and new peopled again, moved thereunto by the convenient situation and former glories of the place. 5 Philippolis, so called led from Philip King of Macedon the father of Alexander, who built and fortified it as a bridle to hold in the Thracians: called also Trimontium, from three hils on which it was situate: beautified in the time of the Romans with a goodly Amphitheatre, continuing entire and whole till these latter days, and might have lasted longer by many Ages; did not the Turks dayly take away the stairs thereof, which are all of marble to make money of them. Here are also many other antient Monuments, though the town be much wasted and destroyed, the Scythians at one time killing in it above 100000 persons: which notwithstanding it is populous, and well frequented, by reason of the convenient situation of it on the River Hebrus, which they now call Mariza. 6 Trajanopolis, so called from the Emperour Trajan, by whom either founded or repaired; indifferently well peopled, and still preserving its old name. 7. Selimbria, on the coast of the Propontick Sea, beautified with a commodious port for receipt of small vessells; and many Bayes adjoyning capable of greater: by Ptolemy called Selibria, and Olibria by Suidas. 8 Apollonia, upon Pontus Euxinus, or the Black Sea, now Sisopoli. 9 Rhinopolis, on the same Sea also. 10 Nicopolis, at the foot of the Mount Hæmus; there being another of that name neer the River Nessus. 11 Perinthus, on the Propontick sea, near the influx of the River Arsus. A town of great note in the antient businesses of Greece, of great strength, and peopled formerly with men of such resolutions, that they maintained their liberty against Philip of Macedon, after almost all the rest of Thrace had submitted to him. 12 Heraclea, at once a Colony of the Thebans; and afterwards of much request in the time of the Romans, as being beautified with the Palaces of Vespasian, Domitian, and Antoninus, Emperours of Rome; as also with an Amphitheatre, cut out of one entire Marble, and accounted one of the worlds seven Wonders: and finally, made the Metropolitan City of the Province of Europe, one of the Provinces of the Diocese of Thrace, whereof more anon. 13 Olynthus, called by Xenophon, the greatest City of Thrace; as possibly enough it was in power and riches, though not in greatnesse of extent. A Colony of the Athenians, rich in Trade, and mistresse of a fair and goodly territory adjoyning to it: the people whereof had been malitious enemies to the Kings of Macedon, which principally induced Philip, spoken of before, to set upon them. In which attempt he sped so well, that what he could not get by force, he obtained by money; bribing some of the principall Officers to betray it to him: for the recovery whereof, Demosthenes oft moved the people of Athens in those elaborate Orations called the Olynthiacks. 14 Sestos, in the Thracian Chersonese: which being a Peninsula abutting over against Troas, on the Asian side, is now called Saint Georges Arme. Opposite whereunto, on the other side of the Water, in the town of Abydus, remarkable for the Tragicall Loves of Hero, and Leander, celebrated by Musæus, an old Greek Poet. 15 Callipolis, on the Northern Promontory of this Chersonese, the first City of note that ever the Turkes possessed in Europe, taken by Solyman, the sonne of Orchanes, the second King of the Ottoman race, anno 1358. from whence they easily, and in little time, spred themselves all over the rest of Thrace: the ordinary passage of late times betwixt Europe, and Asia, by reason of the convenient Harbour, and safe Anchorage. 16 Cardia, seated on the Western side of it, opposite to the Isle of Lemnos, and the birth-place of Eumenes: who being a poor Carriers son, attained to such ability in the Art of Warre; that after the death of Alexander the Great, under whom he served, he seized on the Provinces of Cappadocia, and Paphlagonia: and siding (though a stranger to Macedon) with Olympias, and the Blood-royall, against the Greek Captains; vanquished and slew Craterus, and divers times drave Antigonus (afterward Lord of Asia) out of the field: but being by his own souldiers betrayed, he was by them delivered to Antigonus, and by him slain. 17 Sardica, situate towards Mount Æmus, memorable for the Councel there held against the Arians, an. 351. 18 Adrianople, seated near the midst of Thrace, called antiently Uscudama, but got this name from Adrian the Emperor, who repaired, and beautified it, made subject to the Turks by Bajazet, an. 1362. from the first taking of it made the Seat of the Turkish Kings, til the taking of Constantinople, by Mahomet the Great: by whom removed unto that City. 19 Pera, opposite to Constantinople, on the further side of the water (as the word doth signifie in the Greek) by some called Galata: once peopled by a Colony of Genoese, as the Mart and Factory of that State; taken by Mahomet the Great, an. 1453. but still repleni shed, for the most part, with Christian Merchants, and Artificers.

But the chief glory of this Country, and of all the East is, the renowned City of 20 Constantinople, seated in so commodious a place for Empire, that it over-looks both Europe and Asia; and commands not onely the Propontis, and the Bosphorus, but the Euxine Sea. First, founded by one Byza, from whom named Byzantium: but being taken by the Persians, and from them recovered by the Spartans, (unwilling that the Persians should grow strong in Europe) it was repaired and fortified by Pausanias, one of their Commanders, 663 years before the Birth of our Saviour. In vain besieged by Philip of Macedon, and of great strength in the flourish of the Roman Empire. The walls of a just height, every stone whereof was so joyned with Couplets of Brasse, that the whole seemed but one intire piece; adorned besides with Turrets, Bulwarks, and other Arts of Fortification. Siding with Niger, in his war against Severus the Emperour, it indured a siege of three years against all the forces of the Romans: during which time, the people were so distressed by Famine, that men meeting in the streets, would draw, and fight; the Conquerour feeding on the Vanquished. For want of Artillery to discharge on the Assaylants, they cast down upon them whole Statuas made of Brasse, and the like curious Imagery. Houses they pulled down to get timber for Shipping; the women cutting off their hair to inch out their tackle: and having thus patched up a Navy of 500 Sail, lost it all by one Tempest. Compelled to yeild by this misfortune, the principall of the Nobility were put to the Sword, the wealth of the Inhabitants given for a prey to the Souldiers; the walls thereof dismantled, the Town left in rubbish. Yet there appeared so much of Majesty and Beauty in the very Ruines: Ut mireris utrum eorum qui primi extruxerunt, vel eorum qui deinceps sunt demoliti, vires sint potiores, as Herodian hath it. Re-edified afterwards by the Emperour Conſtantine, he honoured it with his own Name, and made it the chief Seat of the Roman Empire. The City finiſhed May 11. anno 331. And being ſo finiſhed, was endowed with all the Priviledges of Rome, an equall number of Senators, one of the Annuall Conſuls, and all other Officers of State choſen out of both; the Citizens of the one being Free of the other, and capable of all places of moſt truſt and power. For that cauſe called NOVA ROMA, in ſome following times. This City he adorned alſo with magnificent Buildings, curious Statues, and ſuch like Ornaments, tranſported hither from Old Rome: which City he ſpoiled of more coſtly pieces then any twenty of his Predeceſſours had brought unto it. At this day the chief Buildings are the Turks Seraglio, and the Temple of Saint Sophia: which as they differ not much in place and ſituation, ſo as little in magnificence and ſtate. The Temple of Saint Sophia, was, if not built, yet re-edified by the Emperour Juſtinian. It is built of an ovall form, ſurrounded with pillars of admirable workmanſhip, adorned with ſpacious and beautifull Galleries, roofed all over with Moſaique work: and vaulted underneath very ſtrongly for the fabrick, and pleaſing for the eye. The doors are very curiouſly wrought and plated; one of which, by the ſuperſtitious people is thought to have been made of the planks of Noahs Ark: and yet this Temple is little more then the Chancell of the ancient Church, which contained in length 260 foot, and 180 in breadth: and to our Saint Pauls in London, may ſeeme for the bigneſſe, to have been but a Chappell of eaſe. But what it wants in Greatneſſe, it hath gained in Beauty, and in the elegancy of the building, wherein it is thought to exceed all the fabricks in the whole world: the ſides and floor, all flagged with excellent Marble; and before the entrance a goodly Portico, or Porch, in which, as well the Chriſtians, who viſit it out of curioſity, as the Turks, who repair thither for Devotion, are to leave their ſhoos. By Mahomet the Great, after the taking of the City, converted to a Turkiſh Moſque, as it ſtill continueth; frequented by the Signeur almoſt every Friday, which is the Sabbath of that people. Near hereunto ſtandeth the Palace, or Seraglio of the Ottoman Emperours, on the north-eaſt Angle of the City, where formerly ſtood the antient Byzantium: divided from the reſt of City by a wall, containing three miles in circuit, and comprehending goodly groves of Cypreſſes intermixed with Plains, delicate Gardens, artificial Fountains, and all variety of pleaſures which luxury can affect, or treaſure compaſſe. The Palace it ſelf injoying a goodly proſpect into the Sea, was firſt built by Juſtinus the Emperour, afterwards much enlarged by the Ottoman race; containing three great Courts one within another: the buildings yeilding unto thoſe of France, and Italy for the neat contrivance; but farre ſurpaſſing them for coſt, and curiouſneſſe. Conſtantinople.

As for the City it ſelf, it is ſaid to be 18 miles in compaſſe, and to contain 700000 living ſouls; yet would be more populous then it is, if the Plague, like a cruell Tertian Ague, did not every third year ſo rage amongſt them. Fortified towards the Land with three ſtrong, and high Walls, the one higher then the other, the outermoſt higheſt of them all: towards the Sea with one wall onely, built after the old faſhion with many Turrets, which very ſtrongly flanker, and defend the ſame. But formerly both the Town and Cherſonneſe in which it ſtandeth, was defended from the incurſions of the barbarous people, by a ſtrong wall built on the very Iſthmus of it, ſome ten miles from the City, reaching from one Sea to the other. The work of Anaſtaſius, who ſucceeded Zeno, anno 494. A City which a farre off gives to the eye a moſt pleaſing object; ſo intermixt with Gardens, and beſet with Trees, that it ſeemes a City in a Wood: but being entred, much deceiveth the expectation which it promiſed, the buildings of it being mean, if not contemptible. The ſtreets for the moſt part exceeding narrow, but raiſed on each ſide for the greater cleanlineſſe: the houſes but of two ſtories high, ſome of rough Stone, and ſome of Timber; without any outward grace, or exterior garniſhing: in many places nothing but low Sheds, or rowes of ſhops, and in ſome places long dead walls belonging unto great mens houſes. The principall beauty of the whole, next to ſome Monuments of Antiquity, which are ſtill preſerved, and the Tombs, or Sepulchres of ſome of the Ottoman Kings; which are very ſumptuous; are the Moſques or Temples of the Turks, about eight thouſand in number; And the Port or Havent, ſo conveniently profound, that Ships of greateſt burden may ſafely lay their ſides to the ſides thereof, for the receit or diſcharge of their lading; and ſo commodiouſly ſeated on the Thracian Boſphorus, that there is no winde, whatſoever it be, which brings not in ſome ſhipping to it. But that which gives the greateſt pleaſure to the ſight, from the hills adjoyning, is the ſituation of it on ſeven Mountenets, moſt of them crowned with magnificent Moſques, built all of white Marble, round in form, and finiſhed on the top with gilded Spires, reflecting the ſun beames with a marvellous ſplendour. On the firſt whereof, ſtandeth the ruines of Conſtantines Palace, exceeding ſtately to behold; on the ſecond, a fair Turkiſh Moſque, built on the Palace antiently belonging to the Greek Patriarch; on the third, a ſtately Moſque, the Sepulchre of Mahomet the ſecond, and a very large Hoſpitall, for entertainment of Pilgrims, and relief of the poor; the Annuall rents whereof are valued at 200000 Checquines: On the fourth and fift, the Sepulchres of Selimus the firſt, and Baiazet the ſecond. On the ſixt, the Moſque, and Sepulchre of Solyman the Magnificent, numbred amongſt the preſent wonders of the world; and on the ſeventh, the Temple of Saint Sophia, and the Turkes Seraglio, ſpoken of already. In which reſpect it is called Ῥώμη ἑπτάλοφος, by Nicetas; Urbs ſepticollis, by Paulus Diaconus; and ſo acknowledged to be by Janus Douza, Phines Moriſon, G. Sandys, and others of our modern Travellers, the eye-witneſſes of it. So that if there be any Myſtery in the number of Seven, or that the ſitting of the Great Whore on a ſeven-headed beaſt, be an aſſured direction to find out the Antichriſt: we may as well look for him in Conſtantinople, or Nova Roma, where the Great Turk, the profeſſed enemy of Chriſt, and the Chriſtian Faith, hath his ſeat and reſidence, as amongſt the ſeven hils of Old Rome, where the Pope reſideth: Or if his ſitting in the Temple of God, ſhew us where to find him, we may as well look for him in the Temple of Saint Sophia, now a Turkiſh Moſque, as in Saint Peters Church at Rome, ſtill a Chriſtian Temple.

But to return again unto Conſtantinople, as it was made by Conſtantine the Imperiall City, and conſequently the chief City of the Eaſt in all Civill matters: ſo it became in little time to have a great ſway alſo in affaires of Religion. The Chriſtian Faith ſaid to be firſt preached in Byzantium, by Saint Andrew the Apoſtle, the firſt Biſhop thereof: afterwards ſpreading over Thrace, and the Churches of it regulated by many Biſhops: the chief preheminence in matters which concerned thoſe Churches, was given unto the Biſhop of Heraclea, Heraclea being at that time the Metropolis, or principall City of the Province. But after that Conſtantinople was built by Conſtantine, and made the Imperiall City as before was ſaid: it did not onely over-top Heraclea, and draw unto it ſelf the Metropolitan dignity, but ſtood in competition with the other Patriarchall Churches, for the Supreme Power, inſomuch as at the ſecond Generall Councell, holden in this City, it was unanimouſly decreed, that the Patriarch hereof, ſhould in degree of honour be next unto the Biſhop of Rome, and above thoſe of Antioch, and Alexandria; the ſame Decree confirmed in the Councell of Chalcedon alſo; by which not onely all the Churches in the Dioceſe of Thrace, but alſo of Natolia, or Aſia Minor (except Cilicia and Iſauria, which remained to the Patriarch of Antioch) were containing no leſſe then 28 of the Roman Provinces, were made ſubject to him. And though Pope Leo the firſt pretending onely the preſervation of the Priviledges of thoſe two great Churches, but indeed fearing leſt New Rome might in the end get the precedency of the Old, did oppoſe this Act; and ſome of his Succeſſours perſiſted in the ſame reſiſtance: yet they were forced in the end to give way unto it, eſpecially after the Emperour Juſtinian had by his Imperiall Edict confirmed the ſame. By whom it was finally ordained, Senioris Romæ Papam primum eſſe omnium Sacerdotum; beatiſſimum autem Archiepiſcopum Conſtantinopoleos, Novæ Romæ, ſecundum habere locum: that is to ſay, that the Pope of Rome ſhould have the firſt place, in all Generall Councels, and the Biſhop of Conſtantinople, or New Rome, ſhould have the ſecond. Encouraged wherewith, and with the countenance and favor of the Emperor Mauritius, John Patriarch of Conſtantinople, in the time of Gregory the Great, took to himſelf the title of Univerſal or Oecumenical Biſhop, the Paſtor Generall (as it were) of the Church of CHRIST. And though Pope Boniface, by the grant of that bloody Tyrant PHOCAS, got that title from him: yet the Patriarchs of Conſtantinople made good their ground, never ſubmitting either themſelves, or their Churches to the Popes Authority; for that cauſe ſpecially, accounted by the Church of Rome for Schiſmaticks, accordingly reviled, and perſecuted with all kind of indignities. How it ſucceeded with theſe Patriarchs in the times enſuing, and by what means their juriſdiction was extended over all Greece, Muſcovie, part of Poland, and many other Churches in the North and Eaſt, hath been ſaid already. Certain it is, the conſtant reſidence of the Emperours, from the time of Conſtantine, gave great ground unto: of whom I ſhould here adde the names, but that I muſt firſt ſumme up the affairs of Thrace, before the building of this mighty and predominant City; and take a brief view of the reſt of thoſe Provinces which we have comprehended under the name of Greece.

Concerning which, we are to know, that the antient Inhabitants of it had the names of Strimonii, Bardi, Dolongi, Sapæi, Saii, and ſome others; united by moſt writers in the name of Thracians. Governed at firſt by the Kings or Princes of their ſeverall Tribes, as moſt Nations elſe: diſtinguiſhed from the common people, as in other pompes, ſo moſt eſpecially by their Gods, which their Kings had to themſelves apart, and were not to be worſhipped by the beſt of their Subjects. Theſe not agreeing well together for the common good, gave the Athenians, Spartans, Thebans, and other Nations of the Greeks, a good opportunity, to invade their Country, to ſeize on the Sea-townes thereof, and plant Colonies in them: the Country in thoſe times being meanly peopled, and conſequently giving that advantage unto the Grecians, as the Indies in theſe later times have to the Spaniards, Portugueze, Engliſh, Hollanders, and all other Adventurers. Such of them as lay next to Macedon, proving bad neighbours hereunto upon all occaſions, at laſt provoked Philip, the Father of Alexander, to put in for a ſhare; who being choſen Arbitrator betwixt two Competitors for that Kingdome (drawn at laſt into fewer hands) came not unto the Councell with ſuch poor attendants as Juſtice and Piety, but with a great and puiſſant Army; wherewith having vanquiſhed and ſlain the two Pretenders, he pronounced ſentence for himſelf, and made Thrace his own, compelling the Inhabitants to pay him the tenth part of their Revenue for his yearly Tribute. After the death of Alexander, this Country was ſeized on by Lyſimachus, as his part of the ſpoil, who here built the City Lyſimachia; from hence invading Dacia, Macedon, and the neighbouring Regions: and he being dead, the Thracians now accuſtomed to a forrein yoak, were either Subjects, or at leaſt Tributaries to the Macedonians. Aiding them in their warres againſt the Romans, they incurred the diſpleaſure of that people, who having ſetled their affairs in other places, and repulſed the Cimbri: thought it fit time to call the Thracians to accompt for their former Actions; but ſped ſo ill in the attempt, that Porcius Cato loſt his whole Army in the onſet, cunningly intercepted in their woods and faſtneſſes. Didius the Prætor coming in, whilſt the Thracians were buſie in the chaſe, gave them ſuch a ſtop, that he deſerved a Triumph for it: and the Victory more eaſie to Metellus, who ſucceeded Cato in that charge, and triumphed alſo over them; as alſo did Lucullus on another Victory, A. U. C. 680. Broken with ſo many ill ſucceſſes, they were finally ſubdued by Piſo in the time of Auguſtus: becoming ſo obſequious to that fortunate Prince, that Rhiſemalces, a great and puiſſant King hereof, aided him with a ſtrength of Horſe againſt the Pannonians and Illyrians, who had then rebelled.

After-

Afterwards made a Province of the Roman Empire, in Conſtantines new Modell it became a Dioceſe, under the Præfectus Præfetorio Orientis: Thrace it ſelf being caſt into four Provinces, that is to ſay, Thrace ſpecially ſo called, Hæmimontum, Rhodope, and Europa; Scythia, and the Lower Maſia, ſpoken of before, being added to it: of which the Preſidents of Rhodope and Hæmimontum, were not to be appealed from to the Præfectus Prætorio, as the others were; but onely to the Præfect of Conſtantinople, the Imperiall City. But as Alfonſus, King of Caſtile, ſurnamed the Wiſe, was once heard to ſay (never the Wiſer for ſo ſaying) That had he ſtood at the elbow of Almighty God, when he made the World, he would have ſhewed him how ſome things might be better ordered: ſo give me leave to play the fool, and to ſay this here, that had I ſtood at Conſtantines elbow, I would have counſelled him to lay the Dioceſe of Thrace to the Præfecture of Illyricum, who had originally onely the Dioceſes of Macedon and Illyricum under his command; and not have placed it under the Præfect of the Eaſt, who had both Aſias, and all Ægypt under his Authority. For being that there lay Appeals from the Vicars of Lieutenants of the ſeverall Dioceſes to their ſeverall and reſpective Prefects: how great a trouble muſt it be to the ſubjects of Thrace, on every occaſion of Appeal, to poſt to Antioch, there to complain unto the Prefect of the Orient; when Sirmium and Theſſalonica, the ordinary reſidences of the Præfectus Prætorio for Illyrium, were ſo hard at hand. But Conſtantine was an abſolute Prince, and might doe what he liſted. He had not elſe removed his ſeat ſo farre towards the Eaſt, and left the weſtern parts of the Empire open to the barbarous people, out of a fancy onely to preſerve the Eaſtern. For that it was a fancy onely the event did ſhew, the Perſians for all this, prevailing more then ever formerly; and Thrace it ſelf, though honoured with the Imperiall City, and planted with ſo many Roman Colonies, ſo ill inhabited, that a great part thereof lay waſt and deſert many Ages after. Inſomuch as the Goths being by the Hunnes driven over the Danow, where by the Emperour Valens plainted in this Country, (the Emperour having a deſigne to uſe them in his following warres) where not contented with the portion allotted to them, they bid fair for all, waſting the whole Province, taking divers townes, and endangering Conſtantinople it ſelf, from whence not driven, (Valens himſelf being killed in the warre againſt them) but by the coming of ſome Saracens to the aid of the Citizens. Nor could the reſidence of the Emperours ſo protect this Country, but that it was continually haraſſed, and depopulated by the Sclaves, Bulgarians, Roſſes, Saracens, and other barbarous people falling in upon it: nor hinder one Bryonnius in the time of Michael Ducas, and Nicephorus Botoniates from aſſuming to himſelf the title of King of Thrace; nor finally prevent the Turks of the Ottoman race from getting ground every day on the leſſer Aſia, incroaching upon Thrace it ſelf, and in the end obtaining the Imperiall City. Thrace.

And here perhaps it is expected, conſidering the Turks are now poſſeſſed of Thrace, and the reſt of Greece, that we ſhould make relation of the nature of that People, their cuſtomes, forces, policies, originall, and proceedings. But the diſcourſe thereof, we will deferre till we come to Turcomania, a Province of Aſia: from whence they made their firſt inundations, like to ſome unreſiſtible torrent into Perſia; and after into the other parts of the world now ſubject to them. And therefore letting that alone till another time, we will proceed to our Deſcription of the reſt of Greece, conſiſting of the Ilands ſcattered in the Pontick, Propontick, Ægean, Cretan, and Ionian Seas: leaving out ſuch as properly belong to Aſia to our deſcription of that Country, though otherwiſe Greek Ilands, and ſo accompted both for their Language and Originall.

The ISLANDS of the PONTICK and PROPONTICK SEAS.

Before we come to the deſcriptions of theſe Ilands, we muſt firſt look upon the Seas in which they lie: beginning with the PONTICK firſt, becauſe the Greateſt, and that which doth communicate and convey its waters unto all the reſt. A Sea made up Originally of the confluence of thoſe mighty Rivers, (the greateſt in thoſe parts of the World) which do fall into it: that is to ſay, the Danow, Boryſthenes, and Tanais falling out of Europe, beſides many other fair and large Rivers (though of leſſer note) to the number of at leaſt an hundred, which pay Tribute to it: the whole compaſſe of it being 2700 miles; in form, by ſome reſembled to a Scythian Bow when it is bended. A Sea not ſo ſalt as many others, and therefore much annoyed with ice in winter; ſeldome remitted in the ſpring on the Northern ſhores: the Traffick of it wholly in a manner engroſſed by the Turkes, who is maſter of all the Sea-coaſt of it, ſave what belongs to the Polonian and Crim-Tartar. At firſt called Ἄξεινος from the inhoſpitableneſſe of the neighbouring people; which being brought to ſome conformity, cauſed the Sea to be called Εὔξεινος. By Florus it is called Mare Siniſtrum, becauſe in the way from Rome to Aſia Minor it lay upon the left hand, as the Mediterranean did upon the right. It is commonly called at this time Mare Maggiore, for its greatneſſe; and the Black Sea, becauſe of the great miſts thence ariſing. Others not unprobably affirme, that it is called the Black Sea, from the dangerous and black-ſhipwraks here happening. For it is a very dangerous ſhore full of Rocks and Sands: and for this cauſe there is on the top of an high tower, a lanthorn, in which there is a great pan full of pitch, rozen, tallow, and the like, in dark nights continually burning, to give warning to Mariners how near they approach unto the ſhore. This Sea being the biggeſt of all thoſe parts, gave occaſion to them

Propontis. them which knew no bigger, to call all ſeas by the name of Pontus, as Ovid, Omnia pontus erant, deerant quoque littora ponto; and in another place of the ſame Poet,—— nil niſi pontus & aer; a better reaſon doubtleſſe of the name, then that of the Etymologiſts: Pontus, quia ponte caret. Of this Sea the chief Iles are Thimius, and Erithininus, little famous. From hence the Sea bending Southward, is brought into narrow bounds, not being fully a mile broad; and called Thracius Boſphorus: Thracius, for its ſite nigh Thrace; and Boſphorus, for that Oxen have ſwomme over it, and hath no Iland worth naming.

This Strait having continued 26 miles in length, openeth it ſelf into the Propontis, 30 miles in compaſſe; confined with Thrace on the one ſide, and with Bythinia on the other: ſo as they which ſaile in the midle, may deſcry the land on all parts. Now called Mare di Marmora, from the Iland Marmora, which formerly called Proconneſus, hath for its abundance of Marble purchaſed this new name. The ſoile apt for Vines, and not deſtitute of Corn, yeilding alſo good paſturage for Goats, whereof here is plenty, with an incredible number of Partriges amongſt the Rocks: the Country of Ariſtæus, a famous Poet, who flouriſhed in the times of Cræſus. Antiently it had in it two Cities of the ſame name with the Iland, called the Old and New Proconenſus, the former firſt built by the Mileſians, an Aſian people; the latter by the natives of this Iland. But both theſe being long ſince decayed; it hath now onely a ſmall Village towards the North, with an Haven to it; inhabited by Greeks, as is all the reſt of the Iland: ſuch Chriſtian Slaves as are in great numbers employed here by the Turkes in digging Marble for their Moſques, and other buildings, being onely ſojourners, not houſe-keepers, and therefore not accompted amongſt the Inhabitants. Here is alſo in this Propontick Sea, the Ile of Cyzicus; but being it is on Aſia ſide, we ſhall there ſpeak of it.

The Sea having gathered her waters into a leſſer Channell, is called Helleſpont, from Helle, daughter to Athamas, King of Thebes, who was here drowned. Over this famous ſtrait did Xerxes, according to Herodotus, make a bridge of boats to paſſe into Greece: which when a ſuddain tempeſt had ſhrewdly battered, he cauſed the Sea to be beaten with 300 ſtripes; and caſt a pair of Fetters into it, to make it know to whom it was ſubject. Xerxes in this expedition wafted over an Army conſiſting of two millions, and 164710 fighting men, in no leſſe than 2208 bottomes of all ſorts. When all the Perſians ſoothed the King in the unconquerableneſs of his forces; Artabanus told him, that he feared no enemies but the Sea and the Earth; the one yeelding no ſafe harbour for ſuch a Navie; the other, not yeelding ſufficient ſubſtance for ſo multitudinous an Army. His return over this Helleſpont was as dejected, as his paſſage magnificent; his Fleet being ſo broken by the valour of the Greeks, and the fury of the ſea: that for his more ſpeedy flight, he was compelled to make uſe of a poor fiſher-boat. Neither yet was his paſſage ſecure; For the boat being overburdened, had ſunk all, if the Perſians by caſting away themſelves, had not ſaved the life of their King. The loſſe of which noble ſpirits ſo vexed him, that having given the Steerſman a golden Coronet, for preſerving his own life: he commanded him to execution, as a Co-author of the death of his ſervants. It is now called the Caſtles, or the ſea of the two Caſtles; which two Caſtles ſtand one on Europe, the other on Aſia ſide; in the Townes of Seſtos, and Abydos. Theſe Caſtles are exceeding well built, and abundantly furniſhed with munition. They ſearch and examine all Ships that paſſe that way: they receive the Grand Seignieurs cuſtomes, and are in effect the principal ſtrength of Conſtantinople. At theſe Caſtles, all Ships muſt ſtay three dayes; to the end, that if any Slave be run away from his maſter, or theeves have ſtolen any thing, they may be in that place purſued and apprehended. So that theſe Caſtles are as it were the out-works of Conſtantinople to defend it from all invaſions, and from any forces which may come unto it by Sea, out of the Mediterranean. And for the ſafety thereof, from ſuch as may finde paſſage into the Euxine, there are ſituate at the very entrance of the Thracian Boſphorus two ſtrong Caſtles alſo: the one above Conſtantinople on Europe ſide, anciently called Damalis, and now the Black tower, ſtrongly fortified, and compaſſed with a wall twenty two foot thick, which with the oppoſite Caſtle on the Aſian Shore, doe command that entrance. No Europæan Iſle of note in either Strait. And therefore on unto

The ISLANDS of the ÆGEAN SEA.

Helleſpont, after a forty miles courſe, expaciateth its waters in the Ægæan Seas; ſo called either from Ægæus, the father of Theſeus, who miſdoubting his ſons ſafe return from the Minotaure of Crete, here drowned himſelf: or ſecondly, from Ægæ, once a principall City, in the prime Iſland Eubœa: or thirdly, becauſe that the Iſlands lie ſcattered up and down like the leaps of a wanton Goat, from the Greek αἴγειος.

The chief Ilands of it are 1 Samothrace, 2 Thaſſus, 3 Imbrus, 4 Lemnos, 5 Eubœa, 6 Salamis, 7 Ægina, 8 the Cyclades, 9 the Sporades, and 10 Cythera: all which, eſpecially from Eubœa Southwards, are called the Iſlands of the Archer; the Sea, being by the Mariners called the Archipelago, in regard of its greatneſſe, compared unto the narrow Seas which lie about it.

1 SAMOTHRACE is a ſmall Iland oppoſite to the Coaſt of Thrace, where the Hebrus falls into the Sea; ſo called, quaſi Samos Thraciæ, to difference it from the Aſian Samos, bordering on Ionia.

For-

Formerly it was called Dardania, from Dardanus the Trojan, who fled hither when he carried the Palladium thence. But Ariſtotle writing of the Common-weal of theſe Samo-Thracians, telleth us that it was firſt called Leucoſia, and afterwards Samus from Saus, the ſonne of Mercury and Rhene, the letter M being interpoſed. It is now called Samandrachi, plentifull in Honey, and Wilde Deer, and better ſtored with commodious harbours, then any other in theſe Seas. It hath a town of the ſame name with the Iland, ſituate on an high hill on the North part hereof, over-looking a capacious Haven; of late, by the Pirates frequent infeſting of theſe Seas in a manner deſolate. Lemnos.

II THASSUS, another little Iland on the ſame Coaſt, oppoſite to the influx of the River Neſſus, lying betwixt that and Athos in Macedonia, at the mouth of the Strymonian Bay: by Pliny called Æria, and Æthria; by Ptolemy Thalaſſia, at the preſent Thaſſe. In compaſſe betwixt forty and fifty miles; ſufficiently fruitfull, well repleniſhed with woods, and yeilding good ſtore of the beſt Wines: mountainous in ſome places, but thoſe mountains fraught with Quarries of excellent Marble, which the Romans called Thaſſium, from the Iland: and in the times of Philip, and Alexander the Great, ſo rich in Mines of uſefull metals, that thoſe Kings received yearly 80 talents for their Cuſtomes of them. It hath one town of the ſame name with the Iland, ſituate on a large plain in the north part of it, bordering on a goodly Bay, which ſerves for an Haven to the Town: and on the South parts where the Country is more mountainous and hilly, there are two towns more, each of them ſituate on an hill; but the names thereof occur not amongſt my Authors.

III IMBRUS, another ſmall Iland, now named Lembro, is ſituate betwixt Samothrace and the Thracian Cherſoneſe; in compaſſe about thirty miles, but more long then broad, ſtretching north and ſouth; and diſtant from Samothrace about ten miles. The Iland mountainous for the moſt part except towards the Weſt; where it hath ſome pleaſant and well-watered Plaines: in which a town of the ſame name, ſituate at the foot of the mountain, once ſacred unto Mercury, but not elſe obſervable.

IV LEMNOS, an Iland of more note, lyeth betwixt Thrace and Macedon, not far from Imbrus; memorable amongſt the Poets for the fabulous fall of Vulcan, who being but an homely brat, hardly worth the owning, was by Juno in great paſſion thrown out of Heaven; and falling on this Iland, came to get his halting. Howſoever, he was antiently worſhipped by the people hereof, and from hence called Lemnius. In compaſſe about an hundred miles, but more long then broad, extended from the Eaſt to the Weſt; on every ſide well furniſhed with convenient Creeks, and ſome pretty Havens; by which the want of Rivers is in ſome ſort recompenſed.

The Country for the moſt part plain, if compared unto the adjacent Ilands; but otherwiſe ſwelled with riſing mountainets, the enterpoſed valleys being very fruitfull of wheat, pulſe, wine, fleſh, cheeſe, wooll, flax, linnen, and all other neceſſaries: onely wood is wanting. And though here be no Rivers, as before was ſaid, yet have they good fiſhing on the Sea-coſt, for their uſe and ſuſtenance; and in ſome parts Hot-bathes for health and medicine. But the chief riches of this Iland is in a Mineral Earth here digged, of excellent Vertue for curing wounds, ſtopping of fluxes, expulſing poiſons, preſervative againſt infections, and the like: called Terra Lemnia, from the place; and Terra Sigillata, from the ſeal or Character imprinted on it. For being made up into ſmall pellets, and ſealed with the Turks Character or Signet, it is then (not before) ſold unto the Merchants; by whom diſperſed over moſt parts of the Chriſtian world. Upon the ſixt of Auguſt yeerly they goe to gather it; but not without much Ceremony, and many religious preparations, brought in by the Venetians, when they were Lords of this Iland; and ſtill continued by the Greek Monks or Caloires, who are the principall in the work. There is one hill onely where it groweth, the top whereof being opened, they diſcover the vein, reſembling the caſting up of wormes; and having gathered as much of it that day, as the Prieſts think fit, it is cloſed again: certain bags of it being ſent to the Grand-Signeur yeerly, the reſidue ſealed up, and ſold to the forain Merchant.

But to return to the Topographie of the place, the eaſtern parts hereof are ſaid to be fat and fruitfull, the weſtern very dry and barren: in both containing 57 Towns and Villages, all of them inhabited by the Greeks, except only three, and thoſe three garriſoned by the Turks; who being Lords of the whole Iland, have new named it Stalimene. In former times, from two prime Cities in it, it was called Dioſpolis: Of which the firſt was called Lemnos, by the name of the Iland, as large, and well-peopled now, as ever formerly, but of no great eſtimation, when it was at the beſt; ſeated upon an high hill looking over the Sea; with a handſome market-place, on which mount Athos caſts a ſhadow, though diſtant 87 miles from it. It was formerly by another name called Myrina; but that held not long, the name of Lemnos ſtill remaining. 2 The ſecond of the two Cities was then called Hephæſtias, memorable for the temple of Vulcan, hence called Hephæſtiades, ſince deſolate and deſtroyed, and a new town built in the place of it, being called Chochino: This town not great, but of a reaſonable ſtrength, memorable for the ſtout reſiſtance, which a notable Virago named Marulla, made againſt the Turkes, in the time of Mahomet the Great, the Venetians then being Lords of the Iland. For ſuddenly landing, when they were not looked for, with a purpoſe to ſurpriſe this town, they found more reſiſtance at the gates then they did expect: none more commended then this Maiden, who ſeeing her Father ſlain, took up ſuch weapons as lay by him, and manfully made good the place, untill the reſt of the Citizens wakened with the Alarum, came unto her reſcue, and forced the enemy to retire. Near hereunto is the hill on which Vulcan is fabled to have fell; more eminent for the mineral earth here onely gathered. And not far hence Pliny reports a Labyrinth to have ſtood in the dayes of old, little inferiour unto thoſe of Crete or Ægypt: the ruines of it ſo decayed, that Eellonius, who took great pains in it, was not able to trace them. 3 The third place of note is Setira, though an ordinary Village, yet memorable for the Chappell in which the Greek Caloires begin their Oriſons on the ſixt day of Auguſt, before their gathering of the Earth, ſo often mentioned.

Beſides theſe on the Coaſt of Thrace, there are alſo ſome of leſſe note on the ſhores of Macedon, the principall whereof are 1 Peparinthus, as Ptolemy; Euonus, as Pliny calls it, containing about 40 miles in compaſſe: now, called Sarquius, as Caſtaldus, or Limene, as Niger hath it; fortified on the Eaſtern part with a Caſtle built upon a Rock. Others of leſſe note are, 2 Scyathos, now Scyati; 3 Scopelos, 4 Alonejus, 5 Cicynthus, now Pontico; and 6 Dromus; of which little memorable: all which, together with thoſe formerly deſcribed on the Coaſt of Thrace, being but the Acceſſories of the ſeverall Continents, upon which they border, following the fortune of the Principall, and were conquered in them.

V EUBOEA known to the antients by the names of Macris and Abantis; to the moderns, by that of Necropont; frontireth all along the Coaſt of Achaia, parallel to which it is in fertility: one part hereof, torn away from it by an Earth-quake, and lying ſtill ſo near unto it, that between the Iland and the Continent is onely a little Euripus, which ebbeth and floweth ſeven times in one day: the reaſon of which, when Ariſtotle could not finde, it is ſaid, that he threw himſelf in the Sea, with theſe words, Quia ego non capio te, tu capies me. In this Iland is the Promontory Capareus, where Nauplius, the father of Palamedes, placed his falſe fires, to the deſtruction of ſo many Greeks. For underſtanding how his ſon Palamedes, whom he deemed to have been ſlain by the hand of Paris, was treacherouſly circumvented by the policy of Ulyſſes, and Diomedes: he conceived ſuch a diſpleaſure againſt the whole hoſt of the Grecians, that he intended their generall deſtruction. To this end he cauſed fires to be made on the tops of the moſt dangerous and unacceſſible rocks in this whole Iland: which the Greeks taking (according to the cuſtome of the time) to have been the marks of ſome ſafe Haven, made thitherward; and were there miſerably caſt away, there periſhing 200 Ships, and many thouſand men. But when Nauplius underſtood how Diomedes and Ulyſſes, whoſe ruine he principally intended, were eſcaped, he drowned himſelf, for very vexation, in this very ſame place. Palamedes, this Nauplius ſon, is ſaid to have invented four of the Greek letters, viz. $\vartheta, \chi, \xi, \varphi$; to have firſt inſtituted Sentinells in an Army, and to be the firſt inventour of their Watch-word.

It is in length 150 miles, ſtretched out from the North-weſt to the South-eaſt, in breadth, not above twenty, where it is broadeſt; the whole compaſſe 365 Italian miles: The Queen of the Ægean Sea, not onely for greatneſſe, but for fertility and ſtrength; plentifull in Corn, Wine, Oyle, Fruit, and wood fit for Shipping; enriched with many fair Harbours, and capacious Bayes, and thoſe well fortified: watred alſo with the Rivers of Cireus, and Neleus; two Rivers of ſo ſtrange a nature, that if a ſheep drink of the former, his wool turneth white, but coal-black, if he drink of the latter: For the credit whereof I refer the Reader unto Strabo. Here is alſo ſaid to be a ſtone called Amianthus, which is drawn into threed like hemp, and good cloth made of it: which, when it is ſtained, in ſtead of being ſent unto the Fullers, is thrown into the fire, and ſo cleanſed. But whether this be ſo, or not, (for I put it onely upon hear-ſay) certain it is, that it was once enriched with Mines both of Braſſe, and Iron, though thoſe now decayed; and quarries of pure Marble, which continue ſtill.

The Iland, before it was conquered by the Turks, was very populous: but the people moſt delighted to live in Villages; the Cities, or walled towns being onely three. 1 Cariſto, antiently Caryſtus, with little or no variation, but by Plinie called Ægea, and Chironia; memorable for its marble quarries, of which were made the Pillars called Columnæ Caryſtiæ. 2 Chalcis, now Negropont, by the Turkes, Eribos, ſeated on a plain near the waters ſide, there growing into a fair and goodly Bay, called the Golf of Negropont; a populous, ſtrong, and wealthy City, ſo fortified with Walls and Bulwarks, that in the judgement of moſt men, it was held invincible, when the Turks firſt ſate down before it. Nor was it purchaſed by the Turk (though Mahomet, who had took Conſtantinople, undertook the buſineſſe) at a lower price then the loſſe of forty thouſand men, who were ſpent, upon it: but taken at the laſt, and the people put unto the Sword, without conſideration of Sex, or Age. A town in former times of ſo great wealth and power, that it ſent Colonies abroad into Macedonia (a principall Region of the which was hence called Chalcidice, as alſo into Sicil, and ſome parts of Italy: and had a ſtrong influence on the affaires of Achaia alſo, as being ſituate near the Continent, that it was joyned to it by a bridge. When it was in the hands of the King of Macedon; this town, together with Demetrias in Theſſaly, and the Caſtle of Acrocorinth, were called the fetters of Greece: inſomuch, that when the Roman Senate commanded Philip, the Father of Perſius, to ſet the Grecians at liberty, the Grecians made anſwer, that in vaine was their liberty reſtored them, unleſſe theſe three towns were firſt diſmantled. Permitted by the Romans to live according to their own Lawes; in memory of that benefit, they refuſed to declare againſt them in behalf of Antiochus, who thereupon made himſelf maſter of the Town, and conſequently of the Iland. But forced to leave the place upon the loſſe of the battell at Thermopylæ, it became free again; till finally made ſubject unto Rome, with the reſt of Greece; and with it made a part of the Eaſtern Empire.

In

In the diviſion whereof amongſt the Latines, it fell to the ſhare of the Venetians; who from hence uſed with their Gallies to inteſt the ſhores of Turkie, and diſturb their trade. Provoked wherewith, eſpecially with their taking of Ænus a City of Thrace, under the conduct of Nicolas Canalis, the Venetian Admirall, who in that enterpriſe had took 2000 Turks, which he carried with him into this Iſland: Mahomet the Great reſolves upon the conqueſt of it; and with a puiſſant Army ſets before the Town. And though it coſt him dear, yet at laſt he got it, and therewith all the Iſland alſo, which depended on the fortunes of it, an. 1471. Salamis

SALAMIS is nigh unto Megaris, one of the Provinces of Achaia, famous for the overthrow of the populous Navy of Xerxes, by the Athenians, and their confederates. What was the number of the ſouldiers and gallies of the Perſian ſide, hath been already declared. The Grecian Fleet conſiſted of no more then 270 veſſels, whereof 127 were rigged and ſet forth at the charge of the Athenians only: the reſt by the aſſociates. Yet was the admiralty committed to Eurybiades a Lacedæmonian; the Athenians preferring the main care of the common ſafety, before an unſeaſonable contention for priority. The Spartans ſeeing the inequality of forces, intended not to have hazarded the battell, but with full ſayl to have retired to Peloponneſus, into which countrey the Perſians had made incurſions; reſpecting more the welfare of their own countrey yet defenſible, then the deſperate eſtate of Attica. This deſigne was by Themiſtocles, (as carefull for the eſtate of Athens, as they for Sparta) ſignified to Xerxes: who getting between them and home, compelled them to a neceſſitie of fighting; but to his own ruine. For in the conflict more then 200 of his ſhips were ſunk, and moſt of the reſt taken; the confederates having loſt of their Navy, forty onely. Between the Athenians and Megarenſes, were many contentions for this Iſland: the fortune of the Athenians in the end prevailing. It hath in it a City of the ſame name, the royall ſeat of Telamon the father of Aiax, ſo famous in the warre of Troy: more memorable for giving birth to Solon the Legiſlator of Athens, one of the ſeven wiſe men of Greece.

VII. ÆGINA, now called Engie, an Iſland ſituate over againſt Sinus Saronicus, being that Bay of Corinth which openeth into the Ægean; hence called Golfo di Engia, the Realm of Æacus, made for his juſtice and integrity one of the three Judges of Hell: the other two being his brother Rhadamanthus, and Minos the King of Crete. It had formerly beene called Oenone, and Oenope; but tooke this name from Ægina the daughter of Aſopus a King of Bœotia, on whom Jupiter is ſaid to have begot both Æacus and Rhadamanthus: The people hereof are properly called Æginenſes and Æginetæ, much ſpoken of in the wars of Athens, from which diſtant about 12 miles. The ground hereof is very ſtony, but good for barley, of which very plentifull: inhabited in former times by a laborious and thriving people, to whom they gave in thoſe dayes the name of Myrmidons, (the Iſland being alſo called Myrmidonia) quod formicarum more terram foderent, becauſe Emmet-like, they digged up and under the earth, to make it the more fit for tillage, and dwelt at firſt in Caves without any houſes. Hence the occaſion of the fable of turning Emmets into men at the prayers of Æacus; both tale and people, after (I know not how) carried into Theſſaly, where before we found them.

VIII. The CYCLADES, ſo called becauſe they lie in a circle round about Delos, are in number 53. They are alſo called the Iſlands of the Arches, becauſe they are in the ſea called Archipelago. They ſtand ſo cloſe together, that in a clear day a man may ſee 20 of them at a time, for which cauſe it is with good reaſon accounted to be a dangerous place for ſaylers in a ſtorm. The chief of theſe Cyclades, are 1 DELOS, quaſi δῆλος, ſignifying apparent, becauſe when all the earth had abjured the receipt of Latona at the requeſt of Juno; this Iſland then under water, was by Jupiter erected aloft, and fixt to receive her; and in it was ſhe delivered of Apollo and Diana: of which thus Ovid:

——— Erratica Delos
Errantem accepit, tunc cum levis inſula nabat.
Illic incumbens, ſub Palladas arbore, palmæ:
Edidit, invita, Geminos Latona, noverca.

Unſetled Delos floating on the wave,
A little Iſland entertainment gave
To wandring Laton, ſpight of Juno's head,
Under Minerva's Palme-tree brought to bed.

Notable alſo is this Iſland for the Temple of Apollo, and a cuſtome neither permitting men to die, or children to be born in it; but ſending ſick men, and great-bellied women to Rhene, a ſmall Iſland, and not much diſtant. By a more antient name it is called Ortygia; and by that name mentioned in many of the Poets both Greeke and Latines. The chief town of it called alſo Delos, is ſituate on a plaine environed with rocks, neer the hill called Cynthus: whence Apollo had the name of Cynthius, and Diana of Cynthia, as of Delius and Delia from the Iſland. In this towne had Apollo both his Temple and Oracle, delivered here more plainely then in other places, and for that reaſon (as ſome ſay) called Delos; the word in Greek ſignifying manifeſt, or apparent: made famous by the reſort of people from all places hither, eſpecially from the neighbouring Iſlands, who ſent yearly multitudes of men and troopes of Virgins, to celebrate his ſolemnities with heards of Sacrifices. More wealthy afterwards by the removing of the trade of Corinth hither, that town being utterly destroyed by the Romans, and this made choice of by the Merchant, partly by reason of the immunities of the place, but principally in regard of the convenient situation betwixt Europe and Asia. Continuing in great wealth and power till Mithridates laid it waste; and at last on the ceasing of Oracles utterly forsaken. Both Town and Island now called Dilos. By which name also Rhene an adjoining Island (before mentioned) is at this day known; chained to the other by Polycrates the Tyrant of Samos, and now united to it at the least in name.

2 TENOS by Aristotle called Hydrusa, by some Ophiussa, by the Modernes, Tyna. The chiefe Town of it of the same name; so called from one Tenes, the builder of it, and giving name unto the Island. Memorable for a fountaine called Dipnosus, of which Aristole and Athenæus doe both affirm, that the waters will not mix with wine. The onely Island of this seat, which remaineth under the power of the State of Venice; the rest being subject to the Turk, deserving therefore the first place in our description of those Islands that incompasse Delos, though antiently

3 ANDROS, (prima inter Cyclades) was reckoned chief amongst the Cyclades, or first at least in order, because next to Delos: originally called Cauron, afterwards Antandros, and at last Andros, from Andrus the son of Eurymachus, who founded the chief town in it, of the same name also. Memorable for a pleasant fountaine mentioned by Pliny, the waters whereof, on the nones of January, yearly, had the taste of wine. It still retaines the name of Andros.

4 NAXOS, now Nicsia, one of the biggest of the pack, as being about 80 miles in compasse. In antient times called Veneris insula, or the Island of Venus, afterwards Dionysia by reason of its aboundance of wine and the goodnesse of those Wines together, consecrated to Bacchus, whom the Greekes call Dionysius: From its wonderfull plenty of Wheat, called by some Sicilia Minor, or the lesser Sicil; but at last Naxos from one Naxos, who had the conduct of a Colony of Carians hither. But notwithstanding this new name Bacchus did still retaine the honour to be worshipped in it, in regard of his love unto the place; marrying here Ariadne, (as the Poets fable) whom Theseus had left upon the Rocks; whose Coronet or Chaplet being by his meanes made one of the heavenly Constellations is by Columella called Ardor Naxius, by the name of the Island, though commonly by Astronomers Corona Ariadnes, from the name of the Lady. The women of this Island are said by Pliny to be delivered generally in the eight moneth; as Bacchus was: more certainly famous in true story for the beauty and fertility of it; and for a kinde of excellent Marble called Ophitis, or Serpentinus, the ground whereof is green, diapred with blew or purple spots; in much esteem amongst the Romans. When these Islands fell to the Venetians, they conferred this on one John Quirino a Patritian, or Gentleman of that City (as they did divers of the rest on other Undertakers) from whom it came to the Noble family of the Crispos, who held it till the year 1572. James the last of that house lost it to Selymus the second.

5 GYAROS, a little Island into which the Romans used to banish delinquents: hence that of Juvenal cited by Sir G. Sandys.

Aude aliquid brevibus Gyaris, vel carcere dignum,
Si vis esse aliquid: probitas laudatur, & alget.

If thou intend'st to thrive, doe what deserves
Short Gyaros, or Gives: prais'd vertue sterves.

6 PAROS, now Paria, by some of the Antients called Pactia, by others Minois, but obtained this new name from Parus, a son of Jason, memorable for quarries of the whitest Marble, of which commonly the Statuas of the Gods were made, called from hence Marmor Parium by the Latines. In compasse about 50 miles running in a long Plaine from East to West, having once a Town of the same name seated in the North, once famous, but now utterly ruined. The Inhabitants hereof were noted to be very careless of keeping their promises and contracts: whence ἀναπαίστους grew into a by-word applyed to those who made no reckoning of their promises. There is now a town in it called Cephalo, but of no great note.

7 SCYROS opposite to Magnesia in Asia Minor, famous for the birth of Neoptolemus or Pyrrhus, and that it was the lurking place of Achilles. For his mother Thetis being forewarned by an Oracle that he should be slain in the Trojan war, sent him to Lycomedes King of this Island, where hee was brought up in womans attire among the Kings daughters, and deemed a Virgin; till by getting Pyrrhus on Deidamia the Kings daughter, it was proved to be otherwise. Others relate that Ulysses discovered him by a wile, who coming thither like a Pedler or Petit-Merchant, with trinkets, and other ware to avoid distrust; exposed his Merchandise to the view of the Damosels: and that the other Ladies falling on the tires and Laces, Achilles took into his hand the Speare and Shield. Which when Ulysses had observed he made him leave that company, and away for Troy. The handsomnesse of the fraud take from Ovid thus,

Consci

Conscia venturi genitrix Nereia fati
Dissimulat cultu natam; & deceperat omnes;
In quibus Ajacem, sumptæ fallacia vestis.
Arma ego fœmineis animum motura virile m
Mercibus inserui, &c.

Englished by G. Sandys in his Translation of the Metamorphosis.

The whole designe in Order to relate,
Thetis fore-knowing great Achilles fate,
Disguiz'd her sonne, so like a Virgin dreſt
That all mistook, and Aiax with the rest.
When Armes with womens trifles, which might blind
Suspect, I brought to tempt a manly mind.
Yet was the Heros Virgin-like arraid;
Who taking the Shield and Speare, I said
O Goddesse-born, for thee the fate of Troy,
Her fall reserves; why doubtst thou to destroy Great Pergamus! then made him d'off those weeds,
And sent the mighty unto mighty deeds.

There is another of this name, betwixt Negropont and Lesbos, which Ortelius conceives to be the Scene of this action: but the generall opinion is for this, (though that the greater) to which the situation of it amongst the rest of those Islands, where reigned so many of the Greek Kings interessed in the war of Troy, seems to give good countenance: the name and power of Greece not reaching in those dayes, so much towards the North.

8 MELOS, situate betwixt Crete, and Peloponnesus, and equally distant from them both: the Promontories of Scylleum in the one, and that of Dictymeum in the other, shooting out against it. Inhabited in former times by a Colony of Phœnicians, who coming out of Biblus, a town of that countrey, gave that name unto it, gave that name unto it, called Melos afterwards by the Greekes, from its aboundance of Honey. The birth-place of Diagoras the Philosopher, hence surnamed Melius, but more properly Ἄθεος, or the Atheist: the first who in those dark times of ignorance, absolutely denyed that there was a God. Protagoras Deos in dubium vocavit, Diagoras excluſit, saith Lactantius of him. It is now called Milo, round in form, and containing 80 miles in compasse. The soyle sufficiently fruitfull in corn and oyl, but defective in wine. Here is great plenty of marble curiously bespotted, and no small store of milstones: as also great quantities of pitch, and brimstone, and some sulphurie or hot springs, good for many diseases. The chief town of it called Milo also.

9 SERIPHUS, 20 miles from Delos, memorable of old for the education of Perseus, the son of Danae. It is reported of this Island, that the Frogs bred there are naturally mute; but such as are brought from other places, keep their naturall tone: from whence Proverbially, silent and sullen persons were called Ranæ Seriphiæ. It is now called Serphena, a stony and rocky Island, and hath a town of the same name.

10 CIA, by some called CEOS, and now Zea, opposite to the Promontory of Achaia called Sunium, in compasse about 50 miles, made towards the West in fashion of a Crescent or half Moon. Mountainous and hilly, except towards the North. By Pliny said to have been torn from Eubœa by a sudden violence of the Sea, many men perishing in the waters. Of old times beautified with three faire towns, 1 Julis, 2 Carthæa, and 3 Careſſus; of which there is nothing now remaining.

Others there are whose names occurre amongst the Antients, as Miconus now called Micole, 12 Cythnus, now Cauro; 14 Syphnus, now Sifino; 15 Theraſia or Theuſia, now Santorini. 16 Cimolis called formerly Echinuſa, but now Polino; 17 Olyarus now Quiminio; 18 Sicenus, now Sicino; 19 Polyegros, now Falconara; 20 Amorgos, now Morgo, one of the biggest of them all, but not else observable.

The SPORADES, so called from σπείρω spargo, eo quod in mari sparsæ sunt, & non in circulum coactæ, because they lie dispersed and scattered; not formed into a Circle as the Cyclades are. In number twelve, viz. 1 Anaphe, so called by the Argonautes, ἀνὰ τὸν ἀναφανέντα σωτῆρα, because the Moon did suddenly, and beyond her naturall course appear unto them, then grievously distressed by tempest. Apollo worshipped here, is hence called Anaphæus. It is now called Nanfio. 2 Astypalea, now Stampalia, in compasse 88 miles; by some of the Antients called Theon Trapeza, or the table of the Gods. In Astypale, the chief town of it was Apollo worshipped, from hence sometimes called Astypaleus. 3 Helene, so called from that fair Greek Dame, whom Paris is here said to have first deflowred; now called Macronisso. 4 Los, fifteen miles from Naxos, where Homer is said to have been buried: But others finde his grave at Naxos, and some at Chios, the difference being almost as great Sporades. great about the place of his buriall, as the place of his birth. There are 5 Laguſa, 6 Phocuſa, 7 Phecaſia, 8 Philocandros, 9 Schinuſa, 10 Strybia, of little note either in Poetry or ſtory. And finally Thera, not far from Ægina, before mentioned, formerly called Calliſte, but named thus by Theras a Theban Gentleman; the ſon of Autesion conducting hither a Colony of Spartans and Minyans, (theſe laſt of Theſſaly) caſt out of Lemnos by Pelaſgus: in memory of whom, as the founder of their name and Nation, the Iſlanders uſed to celebrate an Annuall Feaſt. A ſedition after happening amongſt this people, the weaker party under the conduct of one Battus, admoniſhed ſo to doe by the Oracle of Apollo, paſſed over into Africk, and there built Cyrene, the birth-place of the Poet Callimachus, who aſcribes his Originall to this Iſland, as, himſelfe thus witneſſeth.

Καλλίστη φερεπάροιθε, τὸ δ' ὔστερον οὔνομα Θήρη,
Μήτηρ ἰοέσσης πατρίδος ἡμετέρης.

That is to ſay:

Calliſte, which men Thera now doe call,
Of my deare Countrey the Originall.

X CYTHERA now called Cerigo, lyeth in the bottom of this Sea, not above five miles diſtant from Capo Malo in Peloponneſus, formerly called Porphyris from the aboundance of Marble, whereof the Iſland yeelds good plenty. In compaſſe about 60 miles, enriched with a delightfull ſoyle, and many havens, but thoſe ſmall, and unſafe, and very difficult of entrance: environed on all ſides with rocks, of themſelves inacceſſible, by which defended from the Turkes who hitherto have ſuffered the Venetians to enjoy it, to whom it fell in the diviſion of the ſpoile amongſt the Latines, ſo often ſpoken of before. It had a Town of the ſame name, ſome two furlongs from the Haven ſtood the Temple of Venus, (the antienteſt dedicated to that Goddeſſe which the Grecians had) and therein her Statua in complete Armour, like another Pallas. Out of this Temple (the ruins whereof are ſtill to be ſeen) was Helen the wife of Menelaus, willingly raviſhed by Paris the ſon of Priam; but not enjoyed by him till he had brought her to a ſmall Iſland of the Sporades, by her name called Helene, as before is ſaid. From the devotions of this people paid ſo duely to her, did Venus get the Adjunct of Cytherea, by which often called in the Poets. Thus, for one, in Virgil.

Parce metu Cytherea, manent immota tuorum Fata tibi.

That is to ſay:

Drive feare faire Cytherea from thy minde,
Thou thy ſonnes Fate immoveable ſhall finde.

And ſo I paſſe from the Ægean to the Cretan Sea, obſerving this onely by the way, that moſt of the 69 Kings, which accompanied Agamemnon in the warre of Troy, were Kings onely of theſe ſmall Iſlands, or elſe of other places as inconſiderable for wealth and potency: every ſmall Town and territory having in thoſe early times amongſt the Grecians (when ambition had not taught the great ones to devoure the leſſe) a peculiar King.]

The ISLANDS of the CRETAN SEAS.

The CRETAN SEA is properly that part of the Ægean or Ionian Seas, which lyeth about the ſhores of Crete, and formerly was under the command and power thereof: as in thoſe times, the Sea about Carpathos, another Iſle of the Ægean had the name of Carpathian; and that about Icaria, the name of Icarian, though ſituate in the Ægean alſo. The Iſles hereof are 1 Crete, 2 Claudi, 3 Dia, and 4 Letoa: for Melos and Cimolis, named by Ptolemie amongſt the Iſlands which adjoin on Grete, have been already ſpoken of amongſt the Cyclades, in the accompt whereof they paſſe by conſent of Writers.

1 CRETA, now Candie, hath on the Eaſt the Carpathian Sea; on the Weſt, the Ionian; on the North the Ægean; on the South, the African or Libyck: In form extending Eaſt and Weſt, with three points or Promontories, whereof that towards the Eaſt, called antiently Samonium, is now called Cabo di Salamone, that on the South-weſt, looking towards Afric, formerly named Hermea, now Capo Grabaſſe; and finally that on the North-weſt towards Peloponneſus, of old called Cimarus, and now Capo Cheſtin. This laſt directly oppoſite to Malea, a Promontory of Laconia, the Sea betwixt them being ſo troubleſome and tempeſtuous, eſpecially on Laconia ſide, that at laſt it grew into an ordinary caveat, Maleam prætervectus obliviſcatur quæ ſunt domi, viz. that he which was to ſaile by the point of Malea, ſhould lay aſide the care of all other matters and attend his preſent ſafety onely.

It

It hath in ſeverall Ages and in ſeverall Authors obtained ſeverall names: by Homer and Euſtathius called Hecatompolis from the number of an hundred Cities then contained in it; by Plinie and Solinus, Macaros and Macaroneſos, that is to ſay, the happie Iſland, from the goodneſſe of the ſoil, and temper of the air. By Stephanus, Idæa, from Ida, a famous Mountain of it; by Giraldus, Telchionia, from the Telchini, the Prieſts of Cybele, who was here had in great requeſt. At the preſent, Candie, either a Candore from the whiteneſſe of the rocks wherewith environed, or from Candie the Metropolis or chief town thereof. But the general name, which hath prevailed moſt in all ſorts of writers, is that of Crete, ſo called quaſi Cureta, by a Syncope, or abbreviation from the Curetes, the firſt inhabitants hereof; who together with the Corybantes and Telchini were the Prieſts of Cybele, the principall goddeſſe of this Iſland; and they ſo called ἀπὸ τῆς κουρᾶς, from their tonſure, or ſhaving of the head. A cuſtome much in uſe amongſt the Prieſts of ſome of the Pagan Deities, and poſſibly enough from them tranſmitted to the Church of Rome. And to this Etymologie I do rather incline then either to derive the name from Crete the ſon of Jupiter and the Nymph Idea, or from Crete the daughter of Heſperus, though both theſe have their Authors alſo. Nor dare I to reject the conceit of Bochartus, who fetching the Etymons of moſt people from the Punick language or Originall, will have the Cretans to be deſcended from the Cerethites, a Nation of the Philiſtins well known in Scripture: the word Cereth being abbreviated into Creth, from which into Crete, and Cretans, is no difficult paſſage. But in my mind his conjecture is better then his proof. For though it may be granted without inconvenience, that the chief arms of the Philiſtins, were their Bow and Arrows, as appears 1 Sam. 31.3. and that the Cretans anciently were expert at thoſe weapons alſo: yet this concludes no more that the Cretans are of the race of the Philiſtins, then that almoſt all Nations elſe had the ſame Originall; the Bow and Arrows being the ordinary weapons of moſt people formerly, till cuſtome and experience trained them up to others of a later date, as he himſelfe acknowledgeth in many places of his excellent and elaborate tractates. Crete.

In reference to the heavenly bodies it is ſituate under the beginning of the fourth Climate, ſo that the longeſt day in Summer is no more then 14 hours and a quarter. And in relation to the earth ſet in the middle of the Sea, at ſo even a diſtance from Europe, Aſia, and Africk as if naturally deſigned to be what Ariſtotle hath pleaſed to call it, the Lady and Miſtris of the Sea. For it is diſtant from Peloponneſus an hundred miles, as many from Aſia the leſſe, and not above 150 from the ſhores of Africk: So verifying that of Virgil, Creta Jovis magni medio jacet inſula Ponto.

Joves birth-place Crete, a fruitfull land,
In the middle of the Sea doth ſtand.

It is in length 270. in breadth 50 miles, in compaſſe about 590. The ſoil is very fruitfull, eſpecially of wines, which we call Muſcadels, of which they tranſport yearly 12000 Buts: together with Sugar-Candie, Gums, Honey, Sugar, Olives, Dates, Apples, Orenges, Lemmons, Raiſons, Melons, Citrons, Pomegranats. Yet as other Countries of the like hot nature, it is not a little deficient in corn: the moſt or greateſt part of which is yearly brought hither from Peloponneſus.

The Iſland is very populous, inſomuch that it is thought that upon any ſudden occaſion, the Signeury of Venice can raiſe in it 60000 men able to bear arms. The people have formerly been good ſea-faring men; a vertue commaculated with many vices, which they yet retain, as envie, malice, and lying; to which laſt ſo infinitely addicted that an horrible lye was called proverbially Cretenſe mendacium. This fault was aimed at by the Poet Epimenides, a native of this Iſland, whoſe words thus cited by S. Paul in that to Titus, cap. 1. v. 2.

Κρῆτες ἀεὶ ψεῦσται, κακὰ θηρία, γαστέρες ἀργαί.

The Cretans alwayes lyers are;
Unrulie beaſts, of labour ſpare.

To which this Proverb may be added, viz. Τρία Καππαδόκια, that is to ſay, There are three Nations whoſe names begin with the letter K, worſe then any others; viz. Καππαδόκαι, Κρῆτες, Κίλικες, the Cappadocians, Cretans, and Cilicians: though ſome I know apply this Proverb to the Cities of Corinth, Capua, and Carthage, beginning all with the ſame letter, and all conceived to be very dangerous to the State of Rome. At this day they are ſick of their old diſeaſes, as great Lyers, and as idle as ever formerly; covetous withall and very ſubtile, impatient of labour, and not caring to learn any ſcience perfectly: only well practiſed in ſhooting to which accuſtomed from their youth, and therein thought more expert then the Turks themſelves.

The language generally ſpoken is the Greek tongue, though the Gentleman and Merchant by reaſon of their dependence on the State of Venice, ſpeak Italian alſo. Both languages uſed alſo in divine offices, the people being generally of the Communion of the Church of Greece; but the Latine ſervice uſed alſo in many places, ſince the ſubjection of this Iſland to the Venetians. Converted firſt unto the faith by S. Paul the Apoſtle, who having planted the Goſpel of life amongſt them, left the watering of it unto Titus, whom he made Biſhop of this Iſle, recommending unto him the care of the Churches there, with power of Ordination and Eccleſiaſticall cenſure, as appears clearly by the Text.

Which

Crete. Which power that it belonged to Titus as Bishop, and not their Evangelist only, is affirmed expresly, not only by the subtcription of the said Epistle, where he is plainly called ὁ Κρητῶν ἐκκλησίας πρῶτος Ἐπίσκοπος, the first Bishop of the Church of the Cretians: but by the concurrent testimonies of Eusseb. Eccl Hist. l.3.c 4 S. Ambr. in præfat. Ep. ad Tit. S. Hieron. in Tit. c.1.v.5. and in his tract de Scriptor. Ecclesiasticis. Theodoret cited by Oecumen. in præfat. ad Ep. Tit. Oecumenius himself in Tit.1. and finally by Theophylact, in his preface to the same Epistle. All which in plain terms call him Bishop, and the Bishop of Crete, according to that sense and meaning of the word Episcopus, as it was used in their times distinct from Presbyter. The Church hereof whilest wholly under the Greek Patriarchs was governed by four Archbishops, and 21 Bishops: but since the subjection of this Island to the State of Venice, there is but one Archbishop, which is he of Candie the chief Citie, and eight Bishops only; besides the titular Patriarch of Constantinople, who hath here his residence: some Prelate of the Latine Church having been alwayes honoured with that emptie title ever since the recoverie of that Citie from the Western Christians.

Famous was this Island amongst the Ancients for many things, memorized both by the Poets and old Historians. For here reigned Saturn in the first ages of the World, father of Jupiter, born here and secretly nursed in the hill called Ida. For seeing that by the compact betwixt Saturn and his brother Titan, Saturn was to enjoy the Kingdom for his own life only, but all his male children to be murdered as soon as born: Jupiter, by the care of his mother Cybele, was conveyed away, and secretly nursed in Mount Ida, as before was said: the crying of the Infant, being drowned by the noise of loud-sounding Cymbals, purposely used by his Rockers to avoid discovery. Whence afterwards the Corybantes or Priests of Cybele, used in her sacrifices the like musicall instruments, continually sounding and withall shaking of their heads (like Fidlers) in an antick and ridiculous manner. Alluding whereunto thus the Poet Claudian.

Non te progenitum Cybeleius ære canoro
Lustravit Corybas.

That is to say:

No Cybeleian Corybas that day
That thou wast born, did on his Cymbal play.

Here also lived Minos and Radamanthus, whose lawes were after imitated in the prime Cities of Greece, and who for their equitie on earth are fained by the Poets to be (together with Æacus) the Judges in Hell. In this Island also lived the lewdly-lustfull Pasiphae, wife of Minos, who is fabled by the Poets (if it be a fable) to have doated on a white Bull, who, they say, begat on her the Minotaure: Dædalus having framed for her an artificiall cow into which she conveyed her self, and by that means obtained her desire. The fable is thus expounded, that Pasiphae was in love with Taurus, one of Minos Secretaries; whose company by the pandarisme of Dædalus she enjoying, was delivered of two sons; one called Minos; the other, Taurus. And whereas it is said, that the Minotaure was slain by Theseus, like enough that the annuall tribute of 7 children which the Athenians paid to Minos, was laid up in some prison; Minos and Taurus, being the keepers or jaylors. As for the action of Pasiphae, I think it not altogether impossible to be true: considering how Domitian, to verifie the old relation, exhibited the like beastly spectacle in his amphitheatre at Rome: for thus saith Martial:

Junctam Pasiphaen Dictæo, credite, Tauro
Vidimus: accepit fabula prisca fidem.
Nec se miretur (Cæsar) longæva vetustas,
Quicquid fama canit, donat arena tibi.

The fable's prov'd a truth, our eyes did see
The Cretan Bull sport with Pasiphae.
What cause hath then antiquity to glory?
We saw it done, she only heard the story.

Finally, here was the so much celebrated Labyrinth, made by Dædalus for the including and safe keeping of the Minotaurus; so full of various windings and turnings, that when any one was got to the end thereof it was impossible for him to come out but by the help of a clew of threed. By this Minotaure (half a man half-bull) the children of the Athenians paid yearly to Minos in way of tribute are said to be murdered; till killed by Theseus son of Ægeus King of Athens, with whom Ariadne the daughter of Minos falling in love taught him a means to kill the Monster, and gave him the clew of threed before spoken of, to conduct him out again: the morall or historie whereof hath been shewn before. Nor must it be forgotten, that Strabo the Geographer who flourished in the time of Tiberius Cæsar was of Cretan parents (though born in the Citie of Amasia, in the Realm of Pontus) which addes unto this Island as much true renown, as any of the fictions or stories, (be they which they will) of the former times.

Things most observable at the present are these that follow, 1 that it breeds no serpents nor venemous venemous worm, or ravenous or hurtfull creature; ſo that their ſheep graze very ſecurely without any Shepheard: 2 If a woman bite a man any thing hard, he will hardly be cured of it; which if true, then the laſt part of the priviledge foregoing (of breeding no hurtfull creature) muſt needs be falſe. 3 They have an hearb called Alimos, which if one chew in his mouth hee ſhall feel no hunger for that day, if Quade may be beleived who ſpeakes it. 4 Here is (beſides many other medicinall herbs) that called Dictamum or Dictamnos, of eſpeciall virtue againſt poiſon, either by way of prevention or preſent cure; peculiar onely to this Iſland: it affordeth great ſtore of Laudanum, a juice or gum forced with incredible labour out of a certaine tree Ciſto, of which the mountaines yeeld aboundance, good to cauſe ſleep, if moderately and carefully taken, but if not very well prepared and taken with moderation, it brings the laſt ſleep upon a man, out of which not to be awakened, till the ſound of the laſt Trumpet raiſe him.

Chief Mountaines of it, 1 Ida, now Pſiloriti, ſituate in the midſt of the Iſland, begirt about with many fair and pleaſant villages, ſheltred by it from the violence of winde and Sun, the hill being ſo high that from the top hereof both ſides of the Iſland may be eaſily ſeen. Here Jupiter is ſaid to have been ſecretly nurſed, from hence called Ideus. And at the bottom of it the Cretans uſe to ſhew ſome tracts of the antient Labyrinth, being indeed no other then the ruines of ſome larger Quarry: the Labyrinth made by Dædalus being ſo defaced in the time of Pliny, that he knew not where to finde any ruins of it. 2 Dicte, now called Sethia, in ſome places Laſti, ſo high that all the winter long it is covered with ſnow; yet all the ſides thereof garniſhed with Cypreſſe trees, a mountaine of ſuch ſuch fame, that the whole Iſland ſometimes had the name of Dictæa, the City Dictinna, the Promontorie Dictymæum, and the Herb Dictamnos, all ſeeming to take name from hence. 3 Leuci, a long chaine of hils ſo named from the whiteneſſe of them, now called De Marara and by ſome La Spachia.

Rivers of any eminence here are few or none. The principall of thoſe that be are 1 Melipotamus, 2 Scaſinus, 3 Epicidnus, and 4 Divotro towards the North; 5 Populiar towards the Eaſt, and 6 Limens towards the Weſt: none of them navigable, or capable of Ships of burden, ſcarſe of little Barkes. But that defect ſupplyed by the neighbouring Sea, which affordeth many Creeks and Bayes, ſome capacious Havens, and great ſtore of fiſh, among which a kinde of bearded mullet reckoned among the delicacies of the antient Romans. By the convenience of which Harbours, their Fiſh-trade, and the ſituation of it in the midſt of the Sea; the people antiently were eſteemed ſo good Sea-faring men, that when the people of thoſe times did tax a man with any incredible report, they uſed to ſay, Cretenſis neſcit pelagus, meaning thereby the matter to be as improbable as for one of Crete to be no Sayler.

In former times there were reckoned in this Iſland an hundred Cities, thence called Hecatompolis, of which about 40 were remaining in the time of Ptolemie: for ſo many of their names he gives us. Thoſe of moſt note were 1 Gnoſſus, the ſeat-royall or Court of Minos, whence Ariadne, the daughter of Minos, had the name of Gnoſſis; in former times called Ceratus, from a little River of that name running not far off. 2 Cydon, or Cydonia, a Midland City (as the former) memorable for an excellent kinde of Apple, which the Latines called Poma Cydonia, amongſt whom they were in great requeſt, as they are at this day, (though by the name of Adams apples) amongſt the Turkes, the moſt antient of all the Cities of Crete, many of which were at firſt Colonies of this; for which reaſon it was called commonly mater urbium. 3 Eleuthera, as Ptolemie, Erythræa, as the printed copies of Florus, corruptly call it, one of the firſt Cities taken here by the Romans. 4 Miletum, mentioned by Strabo, though omitted by Ptolemie, the place in which S. Paul left Trophimus ſick, as is mentioned 2 Tim. 4.20. which happened when the Apoſtle hovered about that coaſt, as is ſaid Act. 27, 7, 8. &c. For that it could not be that Miletum to which he congregated the Elders of Epheſus, appeareth by his being at Hieruſalem, Act. 21. 19. and other circumſtances of the ſtory. 3 Cortyna, nigh to which ſtood the Labyrinth made by Dædalus: memorable alſo for a reed, growing on the River Lenæus, (neere to which it ſtood) of which they made their ſtrongeſt Arrowes, by Virgil, Æneid. 11. called Spicula Cortynia, as alſo for a light garment much uſed by Hunters, which Claudian calls Cortyniam veſtem, apparelling Diana the great Huntreſſe with it. 6 Dictamum, as Ptolemie, or Dictynna, as Pliny cals it, ſo named from the hill Dicte, near to which it is ſituate; one of the chief Cities of the North parts of this Iſland; as 7 Ampelus, ſo named from its plenty of vines was upon the South. 8 Minoa a Port town (now called Altomara) ſo named from Minos, in the Eaſt; and 9 Corytus on a Promontorie of the ſame name in the Weſt ſide of it.

But theſe and almoſt all the reſt ſpoken of by Ptolemie, being ſo deſtroyed by time and warres, that the ruines of them are hardly viſible, we muſt behold it in the preſent condition and eſtate thereof: divided into four parts or Provinces, aceording to the names and number of the four chief Cities, that is to ſay, 1 Sittia, 2 Candie, 3 Rhetimum, and 4 Canea.

In the firſt part called SITTIA, lying towards the Eaſt, are 74 Villages, and but 17 Pariſhes, of which ſix onely are of the Church of Rome, the reſidue holding the Communion of the Church of Greece; the principall whereof are 1 Sittia or Cytia, conceived by ſome to be the Ciſteum of Ptolemie, a ſmall Town, but populous and very well fortified. 2 Gerapetra betwixt Sittia and Candie, ſeated on the Sea ſide on a lofty rock, at the bottom whereof is ſaid to be a dangerous whirl-pit, ſuppoſed to be the Panormus of Ptolemie. 3 S. Macor, the dwelling place of one of the Biſhops of the Latines.

2 In the ſecond part hereof called the Territory of CANDIE, lying directly Weſt of Sittia, are reckoned 465 Townes and Villages, making up amongſt them 99 Pariſh Churches; whereof 77 are of the Communion of the Church of Greece, the other 22 onely of the Church of Rome. Of theſe

Crete. theſe the principall, 1 Candia, an Archbiſhops See, the Metropolis or head City of the Iſland, which takes name from hence; ſituate on the North-coaſt hereof towards the Ægean, beautified with a ſafe and commodious Haven, and fortified ſo ſtrongly, that it ſeems impregnable; affirmed by ſome to be the Matium of the Antients; but I find no ſuch place in Ptolemie, or in Ortelius his Theſaurus. The City fair and large, built for the moſt part of free ſtone, with low rooфes after the manner of Italy, the ſtreets broad and ſpacious: from whence a faire and pleaſant plain leadeth to a place called the Cave of Minos, reported by the common people to be the Sepulchre of Jupiter. 2 Malviſin, 3 Themene, Caſtell nuvo, 5 Boniſacio, 6 Belvedere, 7 Mirabello, of which little memorable.

3 In the third part, being the territorie of RHETIMO, lying North-weſt of the territorie of Candie, are accounted 265 Townes and Villages, making up 44 Pariſhes, whereof 36 are Grecians, and but 8 of the Latines. The chief of which are 1 Rhetimo in the ſhore of the Northern Sea, as Candie is, well fortified, and a Biſhops See; but not elſe obſervable. 2 Milopotamo, an Epiſcopall See alſo, ſo called of the River Milopotamos, on which it is ſeated. 3 Agiſtiman, 4 Mandrus, 5 Loppa, hardly worth the naming.

4 In the fourth and laſt part hereof, being the territorie of CANEA, taking up all the Weſt of the Iſland, are contained 240 Towns and Villages, diſtributed into 47 Pariſhes: of which 33 are of the Greek Church, and the 14 remaining of the Church of Rome. Thoſe of moſt note are 1 Canea, built by a Colonie or Plantation of Venetian Gentlemen on the North Coaſt alſo, ſuppoſed to ſtand in the ſame place where once Cydon did; ſecond to none but Candie for wealth and beautie, but far before it for the commodiouſneſſe of the port, commonly called Porto della Suda, capable of more then a thouſand good Gallies at a time, and therefore ſtrongly fortified with two Citadels or Caſtles, on each ſide of the Haven, one; as the door and entrance of the countrey. 2 Chiſamo, in Latine called Cyſamum, old and decayed, the wals thereof onely holding good againſt the ruines of time, ſituate in a low mooriſh place towards the Ægean. 3 Selino, built upon an hill on the Seaſide, oppoſite to Chiſamo. 4 Sfachia or Spachia, ſituate on the foot of the mountaines, of old called Leuci, now della Spachia from this town: unwalled, but fortified with a Caſtle, built for a place of refuge againſt the incurſions of ſuch Pirates as annoied the Coaſts; in which the Governour for this part hath his chief aboad. By which account it will appear that in the whole Iſland are no more then 1044 Townes and Villages, 207 Pariſh Churches: of which there be but 48 which are accompted Members of the Church of Rome, the reſidue, 159 in number, retaining their Communion with the Church of Greece.

As for the ſtory of this Iſland, wee can aſcend as high as the times of Saturn, for his Antiquity affirmed to be the ſonne of Uranus and Veſta, or of Heaven and Earth: who better favoured by his mother, obtained the Kingdome of Crete, his elder brother Titan being quite excluded. Hereupon wars ariſing betwixt the Brethren it was ordered thus, that Saturn for his own life ſhould enjoy the Kingdome, which after his deceaſe ſhould return to the Titans: and for performance of this contract the ſonnes of Saturn to be ſtrangled aſſoone as born. But Cybele the wife of Saturn unawares to her husband, preſerved firſt Jupiter, and after others of her ſonnes, which comming to the knowledge of Titan and his ſons, they made war againſt Saturn, but in concluſion were ſubdued by the aid of Jupiter: whence grew the Fable of the Titans warring againſt the Gods, Saturn and Jupiter his ſon, being after reckoned in that number. The Titans being vanquiſhed a new war aroſe betwixt Saturn and Jupiter, occaſioned onely (as many unnaturall warres ſince theſe times have been) by fears and jealouſies: which ended at the laſt in the flight of Saturn, Jupiter became ſole King of Crete, reigning there in great power and honour till the time of his death; and dying was interred at Gnoſſus, with this inſcription or Epitaph in old Greek letters ὁ Ζεὺς τοῦ Κρόνου, that is to ſay, Jupiter the ſon of Saturn. After his death, worſhipped by the blinde Gentiles, as the chief of their Gods, and honored frequently with the title of Πατὴρ ἀνδρῶν θεῶν τε, the father both of Gods and men, though moſt incongruouſly and abſurdly, as Lactantius noteth, there being many thouſands living, in and before the times of Saturn, when Jupiter was yet unborn. But to proceed, he being dead, Minos begotten by him on Europa, ſucceeded here: who wiſely taking the advantage which the convenient ſituation of the Iſland gave him, made himſelfe maſter of the Seas; and afterwards enlarged his Dominions by the conqueſt of the Megarenſes and Athenians, upon which laſt he impoſed amongſt other hard conditions, a tribute of ſeven male children yearly, to be kept as hoſtages; determined after three years by the valour and good fortune of Theſeus. But Minos being ſlain in Sicil, and his poſterity extinct, the Cretans would no longer admit of Kings, but governed themſelves after the manner of a Common-wealth or Free-eſtate: the Lawes and Ordinances whereof firſt deviſed by Minos, were of ſuch eſteem, that they were much imitated by Lycurgus, and are at large deſcribed by Ariſtotle in the ſecond Book of his Politicks, ch. 8. Under this government it continued till the Romans having taken in all the reſt of Greece, picked a quarrell with them. For though it was pretended that they had been aiding unto Mithridates in his war againſt them, yet Florus ſtates the matter rightly, affirming that the warre was undertaken on no other ground, but ſola nobilem inſulam vincendi cupiditate, a covetous deſire onely of ſubduing ſuch a wealthy Iſland. And to this war they went with ſo proud a confidence, that M. Antony who commanded in it, carryed more chaines with him to bring home his Priſoners, then Armes to conquer them. An inſolence which he paid right deare for, his navy being vanquiſhed by the Cretans, the bodies of his ſlaine ſouldiers hanged upon the Maſts, and himſelfe periſhing in the action, by a fit of ſickneſſe. Metellus who ſucceeded him in that charge went went on more ſucceſſefully, firſt taking Gnoſſus, Eleuthera, (or Erythræa, as Florus calls it) and Cydonia, their principall Cities; and not long after all the Iſland: uſing the vanquiſhed Iſlanders with ſuch inhumanity, that moſt of them poiſoned themſelves to avoid his cruelty: rewarded with no other honour for ſo great a victory, then that he got the ſurname of Creticus; his Triumph being denyed by the faction of Pompey, againſt whoſe will he had put himſelfe upon that ſervice. Thus added to the Roman Empire it was united unto Cyrenaica by Auguſtus Cæſar, both making up one Province onely, governed by a Proconſul, till the death of Nero: afterwards ſeparated from it, but the time I finde not. During the reign of Conſtantine, in 36 yeares together here fell no reign, ſo that this Iſland was in a manner wholly deſolated. But Helena the mother of Conſtantine having obtained rain for it by her prayers to God, it was again new-peopled by ſeverall Colonies brought out of Egypt, Syria, Greece, and the parts adjoining. By Conſtantine made a Province of the dioceſe of Macedonia, it continued a member of the Eaſtern Empire till the time of Michael Balbus, when ſubdued by the Saracens: from whom recovered under the more fortunate conduct of Nicephorus Phocas, who came unto the Empire, anno 963. In the diviſion of the ſpoile amongſt the Latines it was firſt given to Boniface Marqueſſe of Monſferrat, by whom ſurrendred willingly to the State of Venice, who had a minde to be poſſeſſed of all the Iſlands of that Empire: he being recompenſed with the Kingdome of Theſſalie, the faire and wealthy City of Theſſalonica, and many townes and territories in Peloponneſus. Under that State it ſtill continueth, in vain attempted by Selimus the ſecond, in the yeare 1571. at what time he invaded and conquered Cyprus: and gallantly defended for this yeare laſt paſt, againſt all the forces of Ibrahim the late Grand Seigneur. What the ſucceſſe of this war will be we ſhall ſee hereafter. Crete.

For the defence hereof againſt the inſurrections of the Inhabitants who did at firſt ill brooke the Venetian Government, there are ſome ſtanding forces kept in conſtant pay; beſides ſuch as are maintained in ſeverrall Garriſons, the City of Canea having in it no fewer then ſix companies of ſouldiers; Candie 2000 ſouldiers, and the leſſer Cities proportionably: over which there is ſet ſo ſtrong a guard, that a naturall Cretan is not permitted to enter weaponed into any of them. And for the preſervation of their intereſſe in it from a forain power, they have furniſhed the Iſland with 70 or 80 Gallies for the defence of the ſhores: and have exceedingly fortified the haven of Suda, with two ſtrong Caſtles: this haven being capable of more then 1000 veſſels, and therefore meritoriouſly reputed the door and entry into the Countrey. It is reported that the King of Spain, Philip the ſecond, did offer unto the Venetians for this haven, money more then enough; but it could not be accepted. For though the Spaniard ſeemed only to intend the retreat and relief of his own Navy, when he ſhould undertake any expedition againſt the Turk: yet the wiſe Venetians ſaw, that by this haven he might at all times awe, and when he liſted, ſurprize the whole countrey.

¶ The other Iſlands of this Sea, as of leſſer note, will be paſt over in few words. The firſt of which is called CLAUD, mentioned, Act. 27. 16. ſituate on the South weſt of Crete, by Mela called Gaulos; wherein in Plinies time was a town or City named Gaudos; now called Gozo, with the Iſland. 2 DIA, now Standia, a very ſmall Iſland, and of little note. 3 LETUA on the South-eaſt of Crete, now called Chriſtiana. And 4 ÆGILIA, or Ægialia, by Pliny Æglia, more in the Sea towards Peloponneſus; now called Ceterigo by Sophianus. Of which and others of leſſe note (if leſſe may be) there is no more to be ſaid but that they have alwayes followed the fortunes of Crete, on which they ſeen to have their principall dependence.

The ISLANDS of the IONIAN SEA.

The IONIAN SEA is ſo called either from one Ionius, the ſon of Dyrachius, whom Hercules having ignorantly killed threw into this Sea, giving that name unto it to preſerve his memory, as Didymus is of opinion: or from Iona, a Region in the extremity of Calabria, as Solinus, or from Io the daughter of Inachus, as Lycophron the Poet hath it. It containeth all that part of the Mediterranean which lieth from the Ægean or Cretan Seas unto the Adriatick, from which parted about Epidamnum, (otherwiſe called Dyrrachium) as is ſaid by Ptolemie: or rather at the ſhooting out of the Acroceraunian hils; as affirmed by Pliny and other writers; and ſo along the ſhores of the two Calabrias, to the Iſle of Sicil. Chief Iſles whereof which paſſe in the accompt of Greece, (for of thoſe lying on the coaſt of Italy we have ſpoke elſewhere) are 1 the Strophades, 2 Zacynthus, 3 the Echinades, 4 Cephalenia, 5 Corcyra, and 6 Ithaca.

1 The STROPHADES are two ſmall Iſlands now called Strivali, lying againſt Meſſene in Peloponneſus; famous for nothing but the Harpies, ravenous birds affirmed to have the faces of women, but the talons of Vultures, ſent by the offended Gods, (as the fable goeth) for the puniſhment of Phineus King of Arcadia, who had put out the eyes of his ſons by a former wife, at the inſtigation of their Step-dame. For which ſo plagued by theſe Harpies, that he could ſet no meat on his table whereſoever he was, but theſe ravenous creatures firſt devoured it, and then bewrayed the diſhes in which it was. Much pitied by the Argonauts, whom he had curteouſly entertained, they ſent Zethus and Calais the winged iſſue of Boreas and Orythia, who drave them thence, and having purſued them to thoſe Iſlands turned back again: whence the name of Strophades. Under which fable was contained the ſad condition of ignorant or unhappy Princes, devoured by Flatterers, Informers, Zant. and falſe accuſers, by whom their name and Government was made diſtaſtfull: till by good counſel they had purged their Courts of ſuch ugly monſters: concerning which Alphonſus King of Naples was uſed to ſay, that theſe Harpyes had left the Strophades and dwelt at Rome. They are inhabited onely by ſome few Greek Friers: and in one of them there is a ſpring of freſh water, which hath his fountaine in Peloponneſus, and paſſing under the Sea ariſeth here. The Greek Prieſts are called Caloirs, quaſi καλοὶ ἱερεῖς boni Sacerdotes. About 30 in number: they weare long hair, never eat fleſh, and but ſeldome fiſh: feeding uſually on hearbes, olives, oyl and the like. They never goe out of the Iſlands, neither doe they, on any occaſion, permit women to come amongſt them. They all labour for their ſuſtenance, ſome in tillage, ſome in vineyards, ſome in fiſhing, ſo that among very many of of them three or foure onely can read. But of theſe ſomewhat hath beene ſaid elſewhere already.

2 ZACINTHUS, or Zant, is 60 miles in compaſſe; and diſtant from Peloponneſus 20 miles, ſo called of Zacinthus ſon to Dardanus. The countrey is wonderfully ſtored with oile, wines, currans: of which laſt they made yearly 150000 Zechines, for their own coffers; and 48000 Dollars, which they pay for cuſtome to the ſigneurie of Venice. They were a very poore people when the Engliſh uſed to traffique there firſt, but now they grow rich and proud. At our Merchants firſt frequenting the countrey, they much marvelled to what end they bought ſo many currans, and demanded whether they uſed to dye cloathes, or fat hogges with them; for ſo they themſelves did: but now they have learned a more profitable uſe of them. Here are alſo very good ſalt-pits, freſh water plenty, but little or no wood, and leſſe Corn; their ground being husbanded, as the caſe ſtands with them, to their better advantage: but ſo that many times they are ready to ſtarve, if either the wind or the Sea prove croſſe unto them, and hinder them from fetching their proviſions both of fleſh and corn out of Peloponneſus. In which reſpect they are faine to hold fair Quarter with the Turkes conſidering how eaſie it is for him to diſtreſſe them for want of victuals. The Iſland is much troubled with earthquakes, commonly once a week; in regard whereof they build their houſes very low; and when they perceive them coming, the Prieſts are to ring the Bells, to ſtirre the people to prayers. They have a cuſtome here at weddings to invite many young men whom they call Compeeres; of which every one giveth the Bride a Ring. Which done it is accompted as deteſtable a ſinne as Inceſt, to accompany her in any carnall kinde; and therefore they chooſe ſuch to be their Compeeres, who have formerly been ſuſpected of too much familiarity with her.

The Iſland is very populous and well inhabited, but the people of a ſpitefull and vindicative nature; not to be reconciled, if angred. It containeth in it 48 Townes and Villages, the chief whereof which paſſeth by the name of a city is called alſo Zant, ſtretched out about the length of a mile on the foot of a mountaine, but in breadth not anſwerable: beautified with a faire and convenient Haven opening towards Greece, ſafe from the danger of Pirats, though not of windes, capable of great fleets of ſhipping both for bulk and number; and ſo frequented from all parts, that he who hath a minde to goe out of it, need not ſtay for a paſſage: yet notwithſtanding this great concourſe and reſort of ſtrangers, the Town is rather rich, then well built or beautifull: the ſtreets hereof uneven and rugged, and the buildings by reaſon of the often Earthquakes very low. On the Eaſt ſide of it, on a round ſteep Mountaine, ſtandeth a very ſtrong Caſtle, a little City of it ſelfe, well garriſoned, impregnably fortified, and of a very difficult entrance: which commandeth not the City and Harbour onely, but a great part of the Sea adjoining. Upon the wall thereof continually ſtands a watchman, to deſcrie what ſhipping is at hand, and hangeth out as many flags as he diſcovereth Veſſels. And over the doore of the Town-hall (the better to inſtruct the Magiſtrares in their publick dutie) it is ſaid theſe verſes are inſcribed.

Hic locus 1 odit, 2 amat, 3 punit, 4 conſervat, 5 honorat,
1 Nequitiam, 2 pacem, 3 crimina, 4 jura, 5 probos.

Thus Engliſhed by George Sandys, whence I had the Latine,

This place doth 1 hate, 2 love, 3 puniſh, 4 keep, 5 requite,
1 Voluptuous riot, 2 peace, 3 crimes, 4 Laws, 5 th' upright.

In matter of Religion, the people being generally Greeks both in birth and language, are for the moſt part of that Church alſo; but ſome adhere unto the Latine; each party having their own Biſhop: of which the Greek Biſhop hath his Cathedrall in the Church of S. Nicolas near unto the Haven (which it giveth name to) and therein a Monaſtery of Caloires or Monkes of Baſil; the Latine Biſhop hath his reſidence and Cathedrall within the Caſtle, and therein a Convent of Franciſcans. The Jews have in this Town their Synagogue alſo: but there are not many of them, if not lately increaſed. In civill matters they are ſubject to the State of Venice, the Governour hereof (whom they call the Providore) having his reſidence in the Caſtle, aſſiſted by a Chancellour, and two Counſellours, (all Gentlemen of Venice) whom they change every third year. The fortunes of this Iſland in former times, and by what means it fell to the Venetians, we ſhall ſhew anon.

The ECHINADES are certain little Iſlands, or rather great rocks, now called Curzolari, famous for no-nothing but the great battell of Lepanto fought nigh them betwixt the Venetians and the Turkes: the Turks having in their Navy 207 ſayle of ſhips, the Venetians and their confederates but 145of all ſorts. But it pleaſed God to give the victory to the weakeſt: the iſſue of it being ſuch, that the Turkes loſt 29000 men, who were killed in the fight; 39000 more which were taken priſoners, 140 of their Gallies,400 peece of Ordinance, and 200 Chriſtian Captives which were then redeemed: the Chriſtians buying this great victory with the death of 7656 men or thereabouts: too great a price,could it have been purchaſed with a leſſe. A victory obtained not far from the point of Actium, wherein Auguſtus overcame the Navie of Marcus Antonius; and thereby got the Empire to himſelf alone, of which before he was but Joint-tenant with his Adverſary.So that this place ſeems to be marked out for a Stage of eminent actions; and that this later Navall fight was but the ſecond part of the firſt. Cephalenia

But to return unto theſe Iſlands,they ſtand juſt againſt the mouth of the River Achelous; of which thus the Poet,

Turbidus objectas Achelous Echinadas exit;

Fierce Achelous with the Sea is mixt
Where the Echinades (great rocks) are fixt.

Theſe Iſlands are in number five, faigned by the Poets to be ſo many Naiades, or Sea-Nymphes whom Achelous the River God upon ſome diſpleaſure Metamorphoſed into theſe Rocky Iſlands. But the truth is, that they were cauſed by the dirt and mud, which this River carried with it into the Sea, where at laſt it ſetled to firm ground. Of which himſelf ſaith thus in Ovid.

——————Fluctus noſtriq; mariſq;
Continuam deducit humum, pariterq; revellit,
In totidem, mediis (quod cernis) Echinadas, undis.

The fury of the Sea-waves, and mine own,
Continuall heaps of mud, and Earth drew down;
Which parted by the inter-running Seas,
Made, as thou ſeeſt, theſe five Echinades.

4 CEPHALENIA.

CEPHALENIA, the moſt populous Iſland of this Sea,is ſituated over againſt Acarnania,part of the Province of Epirus, having on the South-Eaſt Zant, on the North-weſt Corcyra or Corfu.In length containing 80 miles, 40 in breadth, the whole compaſſe being reckoned at 160. Once called Tetrapolis from the number of foure Cities in it: but three of them were decayed in the time of Ptolemie, who takes notice of no more then one,and that of the ſame name with the Iſland.Woody and mountainous in moſt places; but the mountaines intermixt with Valleys, and the Woods with champagne: plentifull in Wheat, Honey, Currans, Manna, Oyle, incomparable though not long-laſting Muſcadels; as alſo in Cheeſe, Wool, Turkies: and Powder for the dying of Scarlets. So deſtitute of water, as having no River and not many Fountaines, that when their Cattell would drink,they gape both morning and evening to receive the dew diſtilling inſenſibly from the clouds.

The people are for the moſt part Greeks,ſome few Italians naturalls of the Signeury of Venice being intermixt: the whole number of the Inhabitants computed at 6000 families; the number of the townes and villages to 200 or thereabouts. The principall whereof 1 Cephalenia, fortified with good workes, and a very ſtrong Caſtle. 2 Argaſtolie, an haven town, diſtant ſix miles from Cephalon; the Port thereof capable of a ſufficient Navie. 3 Sydre,another Port-town alſo, lying towards the South.

As for the fortunes of this Iſland, it was firſt called Melena; after Teleboas: and being known by that name, was made ſubject to Thebes, by the valour and good conduct of Amphitryon, the Theban Generall, by whom Pterelas, the King hereof, was ſlaine inbattell. During which warre, and the ſtay of Amphitryo in this Iſland it hapened that Cephalus, a noble Athenian, having by miſadventure killed his wife Procris with an Arrow, which he ſhot at a Deer, not daring to abide in his own countrey, fled unto Amphitryo his old friend, then newly victorious over the Teleboans: who pitying his caſe, made him the Governour of this Iſland, (ſince from his name) called Cephalenia. Having continued for ſome time in the power of the Thebans, it paſſed together with Zant, and ſome other Iſlands into the hands of the Macedonians; from whom in the declining of their affairs,the Acheans got the Iſle of Zant, and the Ætolians, Cephalenia: But long they had not held them when the Romans began to look towards Greece, who under colour of ſetting the Continent at liberty, made themſelves maſters of both the Iſlands; that ſo they might at leiſure poſſeſſe the whole,as in fine they did. In the diviſion of the Empire they fell as parts of Greece, to the Conſtantinopolitans: and on the taking of that City by the Weſtern Chriſtians, they fell with almoſt all the reſt of the Iſlands, to the State of Venice: the Governors whereof retaining Corfu, and ſome others of moſt importance in the hands of the Signeury, permitted theſe, (as many other of leſſe note) unto private Adventurers. At the concluſion of the peace betwixt Mahomet the Great, and the State of Venice, theſe two with Neritos or Leniadia, (ſpoken of in Epirus) were ſeiſed on by that Tyrant in deſpight Corcyra. of that treaty or conclusion; as belonging unto private persons, not to the Republick: recovered afterwards by the Venetians, in the reign of Bajazet the second, in the name of the State, and as parts thereof still governed and defended by them.

6 CORCYRA.

CORCYRA (now CORFV) more antiently was called Phæacia; but took this later name from a Nymph so called, whom Neptune is reported to have here deflowred. Situate over against Epirus, from which 12 miles distant, stretched out from East to West in the form of a Bow, the length thereof being 54 miles, 24 the breadth; and so the biggest of these Seas. Commodiously seated for the trade and estate of Venice, as the Center of their Dominion, and command by Sea.

The Southern parts hereof are mountainous, and defective in water, much subject to be blasted with Southernly windes, and therefore they sow little corn, and plant lesse Fruites. The Northern parts levell and delightfull, adorned with whole Groves of Lemmons, Orenges, Figtrees, Olives, and Pomegranates; enriched with plenty of grain, aboundance of Wines, great store of Oile, and Olives, and most excellent Honey. Blest with a very temperate and healthfull Air, made Odoriferous by most pleasant and sweet-smelling fruites; which grow most plentifully in each part hereof. Alcinous, who so curteously entertained Ulysses after his ship-wrack, was once king of this Island: whose Gardens answerable to the naturall delights and sweetnesse of it, are so much celebrated by the Poets. One of which thus.

Quid bifera Alcinoi referam pomaria; vosq;
Qui nunquam vacui prodistis in æthera, Rami?

Which may be Englished in these words,

Why should I name Alcinous fertile ground,
And trees which never without fruit are found?

Townes of most note and strength herein, 1 Pagiopoli, 2 Castello S. Angelo, of good esteem in respect of many others, but farre short of 3 Corfu, the chief and strongest of the Island, which the Turks have found by their frequent repulses to be impregnable. For it is situate at the foot of a Mountaine, on the top of which are built two inaccessible Fortresses as being strongly fenced with a naturall Rock. The one is called The old Fortresse, and the other, The New: justly esteemed the chief Bulwarks of Venice, whose Trade and Power would soon decay, should these Forts be lost. For which cause the two Governours (for each Fort hath one) are sworn before the State of Venice, never to hold intelligence with one another, by word or writing: lest by the treachery of the one, the other might be wrought also from his faith and duty. Neither is their command here for more then two yeares; their commission then terminating, and new successours being sent them. The town inhabited for the most part by Grecians, as is all the residue of the Island; beautified with one of the most commodious havens in all the Adriatick, and the residence of an Archbishop. A town of such a publick concernment, in regard of the strength and situation, that it is accompted of as the key of Venice, and one of the strongest Bulwarkes of Christendome against the encroachment of the Turke. The story of it since dismembred from the Eastern Empire, at the taking of Constantinople by the Latines, we have had before.

7 ITHACA.

ITHACA, now called Val de Campare, lieth on the North-east of Cephalenia, being in compasse 50 miles: most famous for the birth of Ulysses, the son of Laertes; of which thus the Poet, Effugimus scopulos Ithacæ, Laertia Regna.

Et terram altricem sævi execramur Ulyssis.

From th' Ithacan Rocks, Laertes Realm we fled,
And curs'd the Land which dire Ulysses bred.

It was also called Dulichium, or else there was some other Island of that name, not farre from Ithaca, whereof Ulysses was also King; who is hence called Dulichius Heros, among the Poets: and in this Taunt of Aiax to him, Dulichius vertex signifieth the head of Ulysses.

Sed neq; Dulichius, sub Achillis casside, vertex Pondera tanta feret;

Achilles helm's too great a weight I trow,
For weak Ulysses head to undergoe.

But

But as weak a man as Ajax thought him: he was the Maſter-wit of Greece, for the times he lived in, and one that did as good ſervice in the war of Troy, as the beſt ſword-man of them all. A warre to which he went ſomewhat unwillingly as fearing the ſad conſequences and events thereof: inſomuch that he faigned himſelf mad, ploughing the ſhore, and ſowing ſalt in ſtead of corn. But Palamedes to make triall whether this was reall, or but counterfeit only, caſt young Telemachus the ſon of Ulyſſes before the Plough: which he obſerving, either drove the Plough beſides him, or lifted it over him. Diſcovered by this means, and engaging with the reſt in the Trojan war, he found out the deſign of Thetis, and brought Achilles to it alſo; in the courſe whereof by his wit and courage, he did very good ſervice: aſſociated with Diomedes in the action againſt Rhesus King of Thrace; and with Palamedes in forraging the Countrie for proviſions. By his policie was the Palladium ſtollen out of Troy, and conſequently the Citie taken and deſtroyed; whoſe fate depended on the preſervation of that fatall Relick. After the ending of the war which held out ten years, he was with-held from Ithaca ten years longer by winds and tempeſts, and the diſpleaſure of the Gods which favoured Troy: in which he ſaved himſelf from the inchantments of the Sirens, the allurements of Circe, the crueltie of Polyphemus; and after many dangers came home in ſafety. A man of ſo compleat a vertue, that Homer maketh him the pattern of a temperate and prudent man, in the Books called Odyſſes, (by his name as the Greeks pronounce it) as he doth Achilles, in his Iliads, of a compleat and perfect ſouldier.

The Countrie is generally very rockie, and barren, exceeding plentifull of Goats, but no Hares live in it: inhabited for the moſt part by Pirates and exiles, men baniſhed out of civill ſociety, and willingly acknowledging no Superior over them: but ſubject, if to any, to the State of Venice: which hitherto hath maintained theſe Iſlands againſt the Turks, though many times attempted by them in the moſt proſperous times of their arms and victories. For the Venetians being gratified at the taking of Conſtantinople by the Latines, with almoſt all the Iſlands of the Ægean and Ionian Seas (as being a people ſtrong in ſhipping, and ſo moſt able to preſerve a poſſeſſion of them:) ſome of the greateſt and moſt conſiderable either for their riches or the commodiouſneſſe of ſituation, were furniſhed with convenient garriſons in the name of the State. The reſt they did beſtow on the better ſort of the Citizens, to be defended and made good at their own coſts and charges; who accordingly poſſeſſed themſelvs of one, two, or more of them, as they were of abilitie to ſet out their Gallies for the keeping of them: the Signeurie having nevertheleſſe a care of all, and to that end keeping a Fleet at Sea continually under one of their Admirals: whereby they did not only preſerve thoſe Seas from the Genoa Pirats, but for long time defended all their Iſlands alſo as well againſt the Greeks, as the Turkiſh Emperours. But all the Iſles of the Ægean being loſt to the Turk, except Cythera, and Tenos on the European, and Carpathos, or Scarpanto on the Aſian ſide: they have now only Crete with the Iſles adjoyning, and thoſe of the Ionian Sea, under their command; and theſe (but ſpecially the Iſle of Crete) endangered at the preſent by the Turkiſh Tyrant.

Thus having tooke a view of the ſeverall Provinces and Iſles which belong to Greece, according to the ancient and preſent ſtate of each particular: let us next take a view of the Grecian Emperours, who have had here their principall reſidence, and poſſeſſed the whole, though for a while their Empire was extended over all the Eaſt; as they here follow in this enſuing Catalogue of

The Conſtantinopolitan Grecian, or Eaſtern EMPEROURS.

A.Ch.
331	1	Conſtantine, ſurnamed the Great, having reigned 21 years in Rome, tranſlated his Imperiall Seat to Conſtantinople which himſelf had founded.
341	2	Conſtantius the 3. ſon of Conſtantine, in the diviſion of the Empire, had for his partage Thrace, Conſtantinople, and all the Provinces of the Eaſt. After the death of his two brethren he remained ſole Emperour, but reſided for the moſt part in the Eaſt, a great Patron of the Arians, and as great a Perſecuter of the Orthodox Chriſtians.
366	3	Julian, ſurnamed the Apoſtata, ſon of Conſtantius, the brother of Conſtantine the Great; at firſt a Chriſtian, afterwards a profeſſed enemie of the Goſpel: fortunate in his wars againſt the Almans, Franks, and other Tranſalpine Nations, whileſt he was a Chriſtian: prodigiouſly ſlain in the Perſian war, when become a Perſecuter.
368	4	Jovian, or Jovinian, choſen by the armie, a religious Prince, made peace with the Perſian, and ſetled the affaires of the Chriſtian Church: who being dead, Valentinian, one of meane birth, but great abilities in war, was elected Emperour.
368	5	Valens, the brother of Valentinian, made partner in the Empire with him, ruled in Conſtantinople and the Eaſt; Valentinian taking more delight in Rome and the Weſtern parts. A great Patron of the Arian faction, and the firſt who brought in the Goths on this ſide of the Danow, whom he placed in the deſert parts of Thrace, to the deſtruction of the Empire and himſelf to boot.
382	6	Gratian, the eldeſt ſon of Valentinian, ſucceeded his father in the Weſt, and his uncle Valens in the Eaſt; after whoſe death he left Italie and the Weſt to Valentinian his younger younger brother. Distressed by the Gothes, he made Theodosius partner in the Empire with him, and was treacherously murdered by Andragathius, at the appointment and command of the Tyrant Maximus.

383 7 Theodosius, a Spaniard born, revenged the death of Gratian on the tyrant Maximus, and of Valentinian the 2. on the traitour Eugenius. He vanquished the Goths, utterly suppresst the Pagan superstitions, which till his time continued even in Rome it self; and strengthened the Church of Christ with good Laws and Ordinances.

399 8 Arcadius, the eldest son of Theodosius, succeeded his father in the East, as his brother Honorius did in the West: the Roman Empire after this last division of it, being so distracted and torn in pieces, that it was never since united.

412 9 Theodosius II. son of Arcadius, made peace with the Goths, whom he employed against the Hunnes and Persians, his more dangerous Enemies, and caused the Ephesine Councell to be called against Nestorius.

454 10 Martianus, Lieutenant to Theodosius, succeeded his Master, and marryed with Pulcheria his Masters sister; he called the Councell of Chalcedon against Dioscorus.

461 11 Leo a Thracian born, elected by the joint consent of the Senate and Souldiery, sitting the Councell of Chalcedon; the Acts whereof he approved and ratified.

478 12 Zeno, the son-in-law and Lieutenant of Leo, sent Theodorick and the Goths into Italie against Odoacer: A tyrant and a great drinker, in one of his drunken fits, buryed quick by his Empresse. In his time Constantinople was almost wholly destroyed by fire; in which perished amongst other things 120000 Volumes of good Manuscripts.

494 13 Anastasius, a mean Officer, of the Court, by the power and favour of the Empresse created Emperour; a great Patron of Eutyches; yet fortunate in his wars against the Persians and Arabians. In his time Constantinople besieged by the Scythians, was likely to have fallen into great distresse, if Proclus, a famous Mathematician, like another Archimedes, had not fired their Gallies.

521 14 Justin the son of a Thracian shepherd, and Captain of the Guard unto Anastasius, a catholick Prince, and Patron of the Orthodox Clergy, whom he called from banishment.

528 15 Justinian, the sisters son of Justinus, with whom first consort in the Empire, recovered Africk from the Vandals, by Belisarius, and Italie from the Goths by Narses: and finally reduced the laws of Rome into form and method.

566 16 Justin II. nephew of Justinian, instituted the Exarchate of Ravenna, and lost a great part of Italie to the Lombards. Unable of himselfe to oppose the Persians, he chose 577 17 Tiberius, one of his chief Commanders to be consort with him, who afterwards succeeded in the sole command.

584 18 Maurice, a Cappadocian born, fortunate in his wars against the Persians, from whom he recovered Mesopotamia in the time of Tiberius; by whom at his return marryed to Constantine his daughter, and declared his successour. Refusing to ransome some of his souldiers, taken prisoners by Caganus King of Avares, he lost the affections of his armie.

604 19 Phocas, a common souldier, in a military tumult chosen Emperour, murdered the Emperour Mauritius, with his wife and children; and made Pope Boniface supreme Bishop or head of the Church: slain in a popular tumult by the common people for his lusts and cruelties.

611 20 Heraclius, a noble man of Constantinople, chosen by the generall consent repaired the ruines of the Empire, vanquished the Persians, recovered Hierusalem out of their hands, and brought home the Crosse unto Constantinople in triumphant manner, whence the feast called Exaltatio crucis, Septemb. 14. In his time Mahomet began to disperse his dotages.

641 21 Constans or Constantine II. son of Heraclius, unfortunate in his wars against the Saracens, who prevailed in all places; picking a quarrell with the Romans he defaced Rome, robbing it of all the choicest Ornaments, which the Goths and other barbarous people had left: and ransacking the Isle of Sicil, was there slaine by the women.

670 22 Constantinus III. son of the former Constantine, from his long or early beard surnamed Pogonatus, repulsed the Saracens from Constantinople, but could not hinder the Bulgarians from passing over the Danow.

687 23 Justinian II. son of Constantine the 3. subdued Mesapotamia, Armenia, and some part of Persia; forcing the Saracens to sue for peace, and become his tributaries. Against whom Leontius on the one side, and Abstmarus on the other, severally taking arms were declared Emperors; Justinian taken by Leontius, hath his nose cut off, and his person committed to custodie: but making an escape, by means of Trebellin King of the Bulgarians, recovered his Imperiall dignitie; and being too violent in the pursuit of his revenge, was finally murdered at the Altar by the command of 713 24 Philip-

713 24 Philippicus Bardanes, Admirall of his Navie, elected Emperour by the Souldiers, a great enemy of Images, which he cauſed to be caſt out of the Church: whereby incurring the diſpleaſure of 715 25 Anaſtaſius II. called alſo Artemius, his principall Secretarie, who thruſt himſelf into the Empire; forced to relinquiſh it by that armie which he had raiſed againſt the Saracens: in which tumult the Citie of Conſtantinople was ſacked and ſpoiled.

717 26 Theodoſius III. made Emperour in this tumult by the ſouldiers, hearing of the approach of Leo, Commander of the Eaſtern Armies, reſigned the Empire, and took Orders to preſerve his life.

718 27 Leo Iſauricus, in whoſe time Caliph Zulciman beſieged Conſtantinople the ſpace of three years: and when by cold and famine 300000 of the Saracens were ſlain, they deſiſted. At this ſiege was that fire invented, which we for the violence of it, call wild fire; and the Latines, becauſe the Greeks were the Authors of it, Græcus ignis: by which the Saracens ſhips were not a little moleſted. He was alſo a great Enemie to images, for which cauſe hated by the Pope and Clergie of Rome, who gave him thereupon the nick-name of Iconomachus.

741 28 Conſtantinus IV. ſon of Leo, ſurnamed Copronymus, for that when he was baptized, he berayed the font; followed his fathers zeal in removing images, which created him much trouble, one Artabardus being choſe Emperour againſt him, but at laſt defeated.

777 29 Leo III. ſon of Conſtantine Copronymus, commonly called Leo the 4. (Leontius the uſurper (as I conjecture) being reckoned for one) an enemie of Images, and fortunate in his wars againſt the Saracens.

782 30 Conſtantine V. the ſon of Leo and Irene, firſt governed the Empire with his Mother; by whom at laſt ſupplanted, and deprived of ſight, he dyed of melancholy.

798 31 Irene wife of Leo the 3. firſt conſort with Conſtantine her ſon, and afterwards ſole Empereſſe of Conſtantinople: for her better ſupport in which eſtate ſhe ſided with the Popes of Rome, and called the ſecond Councell of Nice for defence of Images. In her time Charls, ſurnamed the Great, was by the Pope and people of Rome created Emperour of the Weſt. For the Popes knowing their own greatneſſe to grow out of the ruines of the temporall power, committed the Empire of the Weſt unto the French Princes: whereby the Greek Emperours became much weakened; and the French being the Popes creatures, were in tract of time brought to their devotion. In following times, when Frederick Barbaroſſa was by Pope Alexander the 3. pronounced non-Emperour; Emanuel of Conſtantinople ſued for a re union of the Empires: but the crafty Pope returned this anſwer, Non licere illi conjungere, quæ majores ejus de induſtria disjunxerunt: Let no man preſume to joyn, what the God of Rome, the Pope, hath put aſunder.

803 32 Nicephorus a Patritian, made Emperour by the ſouldiers, perſwaded that Irene had made choiſe of him to be her ſucceſſour, ſlaine in a pitcht field againſt the Bulgarians.

812 33 Michael, ſurnamed Curopalates from his office, (the Mayre of the Palace as it were) husband to Procopia the daughter of Nicephorus, aſſumed the Empire: which finding his own weakneſſe, he did ſoone relinquiſh, and betooke himſelfe unto a Monaſterie.

814 34 Leo V. ſurnamed Armenius from his Country, Generall of the horſe to Michael, demoliſhed the images which his predeceſſour had ſet up; ſlain in the Church during the time of divine ſervice.

821 35 Michael II. ſurnamed Balbus, having murdered Leo, aſſumed the Empire; unfortunate in his government, and dyed of madneſſe.

830 36 Theophilus, the ſon of Michael Balbus, an enemy of images, like his father, and as unfortunate as he; loſing many battels to the Saracens, at laſt dyed of melancholy.

842 37 Michael III. ſon of Theophilus, firſt with his mother Theodora, who took unto her ſelf the ſupreme command; and after of himſelf ſole Emperour; his mother being made a Nun.

866 38 Baſilius, ſurnamed Macedo, from the place of his birth, made conſort in the Empire by Michael the ſon of Theophilus, whom he baſely and treacherouſly murdered; killed caſually by a Stag.

886 39 Leo VI. for his learning ſurnamed Philoſophus, the ſon of Baſilius, a vigilant and provident Prince; moſt of his time, with variable ſucceſſe ſpent againſt the Bulgarians.

912 40 Conſtantine VI. commonly called the VII. ſon of Leo Philoſophus, firſt under his uncle Alexander, next under Zoe his mother, and after under Romanus Lacopenus, governed the Empire: by which laſt ſo miſerably depreſſed that he was fain to get his livelyhood by painting. But Lacopenus being depoſed and turned into a

Monaſterie

Monaſterie by his own ſons, Conſtantine at laſt obtained his rights, and reſtored learning unto Greece.

961 41 Romanus, the ſon of Conſtantine.

963 42 Nicephorus, ſurnamed Phocas, firſt Governour or Protectour to the young Emperour Romanus; after whoſe death created Emperour by the armie, he recovered Antioch, Cilicia, and the greateſt part of Aſia minor from the power of the Saracens; ſlaine in the night by John Zimiſces, his wife Theophania being privie to it.

971 43 John Zimiſces, Emperour in the place of Nicephorus Phocas, governed the Empire better then he did obtain it; vanquiſhing the Bulgarians, Roſſes, and others of the barbarous Nations: and left it at his death to the ſons of Romanus.

977 44 Baſilius II. ſurnamed Porphyrogenitus, as many of the Emperours had been before him, in regard that at their births they were wrapped in purple (which the Greeks call Porphyrie) the Imperiall colour: ſubdued the Bulgarians, and made them Homagers to the Empire.

1027 45 Conſtantinus, VII. or VIII. brother of Baſilius, and with him partner in the Empire; after whoſe death he governed three years by himſelf, but did nothing memorable.

1030 46 Romanus II. for his prodigalitie ſurnamed Argyropolus, husband of Zoe the daughter of Conſtantine the 8. drowned in a Bath by the treaſon of his wife and her Adulterer.

1035 47 Michael IV. ſurnamed Paphlago from his Country, firſt the Adulterer, and afterwards the husband of Zoe: but dyed very penitent.

1042 48 Michael V. ſurnamed Calaphates, a man of obſcure birth, adopted by Zoe, whom he depoſed from the Government, and turned into a Monaſterie. Out of which being again taken, in a popular tumult, ſhe put out the eyes of Calaphates, and being then 60 yeares of age, beſtowed both the Empire and her ſelfe upon 1043 49 Conſtantine IX. ſurnamed Monomachus, formerly husband to a Neece of Romanus the 2.

1055 50 Theodora, ſiſter unto Zoe, after the death of Conſtantine, managed for two years the affairs of the Empire with great contentment to all people. But grown in age ſurrendred it to

1057 51 Michael VI. ſurnamed Stratioticus, an old but militarie man, depoſed within the year by

1060 52 Iſaacius, of the noble familie of the Comneni; valiant, of great courage and diligent in his affairs: which having managed for two years, he left it at his death, with conſent of the Senate and people, to 1063 53 Conſtantine X. ſurnamed Ducas, a great Juſticier, and very devout, but exceeding covetous, whereby he became hated of his ſubjects and contemned by his enemies.

1071 54 Romanus III. ſurnamed Diogenes, marryed Eudoxia the wife of Conſtantinus Ducas, and with her the Empire. Took priſoner by the Turks, and ſent home again, he found a faction made againſt him; by which Eudoxia was expelled, himſelf at his return depoſed, and ſo dyed in exile.

1075 55 Michael VII. the ſon of Conſtantinus Ducas, ſurnamed Parapinacius, by reaſon of the famine which in his time happened, made Emperour in the aforeſaid tumult. But being found unable for ſo great an honour (the Turks prevailing in all places) he was depoſed again and put into a Monaſterie.

1081 56 Nicephorus II. ſurnamed Bolionates, of the houſe of the Phocas, ſucceeded in the place of Parapinace, depoſed within 3 years by the Comneni.

1084 57 Alexius Comnenus, ſon of the Emperour Iſaacius Comnenus, obtained the Empire: in whoſe time the Weſtern Chriſtians with great forces prepared for the recovery of the Holy Land. Of whoſe purpoſes being very jealous he denyed them paſſage through his Countrie; in the end forced to finde them victuals and other neceſſaries.

1113 58 Calo-Johannes, the ſon of Alexius, had a good hand againſt the Turks, from whom he tooke Laodicea and ſome other places of importance. He alſo vanquiſhed the Scythians or Tartars paſſing over the Iſter, moſt of which he either ſlew in battell, or ſold as captives; permitting the remainder to abide on this ſide that River. He alſo conquered the Servians and Bulgarians, tranſporting many of them into Bithynia.

1142 59 Manuel, or Emanuel, the younger ſon of Calo-Joannes, an under-hand enemie to the Weſtern Chriſtians, and an open enemie to the Turks: by whom intrapped in the dangerous ſtraits of Cilicia, and his Armie miſerably cut off; he was on honourable terms permitted to return again.

1180 60 Alexius II. ſon of Manuel, depoſed and barbarouſly murdered by Andronicus, the Couſin Grman of his father, with his wife and mother.

1183 61 Andro-

1183 61 Andronicus Comnenus, confined by Manuel to Oenum in Paphlagonia, by reaſon of his dangerous and ambitious practiſes; after his death, pretending to reform the State came unto Conſtantinople: firſt made Protector, afterwards conſort in the Empire with young Alexius. Whom having barbarouſly ſlain, and got the Empire to himſelfe, he was not long after cruelly torne in pieces in a popular tumult.

1185 62 Iſaacius Angelus, a noble man of Conſtantinople, and of the ſame Comnenian race, deſigned to death by Andronicus, was in a popular election proclaimed his ſucceſſour; depoſed by Alexius his own brother, and his eyes put out.

1195 63 Alexius Angelus deprived his brother, and excluded his Nephew from the Empire; but it held not long.

64 Alexius Angelus II. ſon of Iſaac Angelus, who being unjuſtly thruſt out of his Empire by his uncle Alexius, had recourſe to Philip the Weſtern Emperour, whoſe daughter Mary he had marryed: who ſo prevailed with Pope Innocent the 3. that the armie prepared for the Holy Land, was employed to reſtore him. On the approach whereof Alexius the Uſurper fled, Alexius the young Emperour is ſeated in his fathers throne, and not long after ſlain by Alexius Ducas. In revenge whereof the Latines aſſault and win Conſtantinople, make themſelves Maſters of the Empire, and divide it amongſt them: alotting to the Venetians Candie, many good towns of Peloponneſus, and moſt of the Iſlands: to Boniface Marqueſſe of Montferrat the Kingdom of Theſſalie; to others of the Adventurers other liberall ſhares; and finally to Baldwin Earl of Flanders, the main body of the Empire with the title of Emperour.

EMPERORS of the LATINES in CONSTANTINOPLE.

1200 65 Baldwin Earl of Flanders, firſt Emperour of the Latines reigning in Conſtantinople, taken in fight by John King of Bulgaria coming to aid the Greeks, and ſent priſoner to Ternova, where he was cruelly put to death.

1202 66 Henry the brother of Baldwin, repulſed the Bulgarians, out of Greece, and dyed a Conquerour.

1215 67 Peter Count of Auxerre in France, ſon in law of Henry, cunningly entrapped by Theodorus Angelus a great Prince in Epirus, whom he had beſieged in Dyrrachium. But of an Enemy being perſwaded to become his gheſt, was there murdered by him.

1220 68 Robert the ſon of Peter, having ſeen the miſerable uſage of his beautifull Empereſſe, whom a young Burgundian formerly contracted to her, had moſt deſpitefully mangled, cutting off both her noſe and ears; dyed of hearts grief as he was coming back from Rome, whither his melancholy had carried him to conſult the Pope in his affairs.

1227 69 Baldwin II. ſon of Robert by a former wife, under the protection of John de Brenne the titularie King of Hieruſalem, ſucceeded in his fathers throne: which having held for the ſpace of 33 years; he was forced to leave it: the Citie of Conſtantinople being regained by the Greeks, and the poor Prince compelled to ſue in vain for ſuccours to the French, Venetians, and other Princes of the Weſt.

The EMPIRE reſtored unto the GREEKS.

1260 70 Michael VIII. ſurnamed Palæologus, extracted from the Comnenian Emperours, Emperour of the Greeks in the Citie of Nice, moſt fortunately recovered Conſtantinople; the town being taken by a partie of 50 men ſecretly put into it by ſome Country labourers under the ruines of a mine. Preſent in perſon at the Councell of Lyons, at the perſwaſion of the Pope, he admitted the Latine Ceremonies into the Churches of Greece; for which greatly hated by his ſubjects, and denyed the honour of Chriſtian buriall.

1283 71 Andronicus II. vexed with unnaturall wars by his Nephew Andronicus, who rebelled againſt him.

1328 72 Andronicus III. firſt partner with his grandfather, afterwards ſole Emperour.

1341 73 John Palæologus, ſon of Andronicus the 3. in whoſe minoritie Contacuzenus his Protectour uſurped the Empire, and held it ſometimes from him, and ſometimes with him, till the year 1357. and then retired unto a Monaſterie: leaving the Empire unto John, during whoſe reign the Turks firſt planted themſelves in Europe.

1384 74 Andronicus IV. the ſon of Johannes Palæologus.

1387 75 Emanuel Palæologus, the ſon of the ſaid John, and brother of Andronicus the 4. in whoſe time Bajazet the ſixt King of the Turks did beſiege Conſtantinople; but found ſuch notable reſiſtance that he could not force it.

1417 76 John

1420 77 John III. ſon of Emanuel Palæologus, in perſon at the Councell of Florence for reconciling of the Churches; in hope thereby to get ſome aid from the Weſtern Chriſtians: but it would not be.
1444 78 Conſtantinus Palæologus, the brother of John the 3. In whoſe time the famous Citie of Conſtantinople was taken by Mahomet the Great, 1452. the miſerable Emperour, who had in vain gone from door to door to beg or borrow money to pay his ſouldiers, (which the Turks found in great abundance when they took the Citie) being lamentably trod to death in the throng. Now concerning this Empire of the Greeks, we may obſerve ſome fatal contrarieties in one and the ſame name: as firſt, that Philip the father of Alexander laid the firſt foundation of the Macedonian Monarchie: and Philip the father of Perſeus ruined it. Secondly, that Baldwin was the firſt, and Baldwin the laſt Emperour of the Latines in Conſtantinople. Thirdly, that this town was built by a Conſtantine, the ſon of Helena, a Gregory being Patriarch: and was loſt by a Conſtantine the ſon of a Helena, a Gregory being Patriarch alſo. And fourthly, the Turks have a Prophecie, that as it was won by a Mahomet, ſo it ſhall be loſt by a Mahomet. So Auguſtus was the firſt eſtabliſhed Emperour of Rome, and Auguſtulus the laſt: Darius the ſon of Hyſtaſpes, the reſtorer; and Darius the ſon of Arſamis the overthrower of the Perſian Monarchie. A like note I ſhall anon tell you of Hieruſalem. In the mean time I will preſent you with a fatall obſervation of the letter H, as I find it thus verſed in Albions England.

Not ſuperſtitiouſly I ſpeak, but H this letter ſtill,
Hath been obſerved ominous to Englands good or ill.
Firſt Hercules, Heſione, and Helen were the cauſe
Of war to Troy; Æneas ſeed becoming ſo outlawes.
Humbor the Hunn with forein arms did firſt the Brutes invade, Helen to Romes imperiall Throne, the Britiſh Crown conveyd.
Hengiſt and Horſus, firſt did plant the Saxons in this Iſle:
Hungar and Hubba firſt brought Danes, that ſwayed here long while.
At Harold had the Saxon end, at Hardie-Cnute, the Dane:
Henries the firſt and ſecond did reſtore the Engliſh raign.
Fourth Henry firſt for Lancaſter did Englands Crown obtain.
Seventh Henry, jarring Lancaſter and Yorke, unites in peace:
Henry the eight did happily Romes irreligion ceaſe.

A ſtrange and ominous letter; every mutation in our State being as it were uſhered by it.

What were the Revenues of this Empire ſince the diviſion of it into the Eaſt and Weſt, I could never yet learn. That they were exceeding great, may appear by three circumſtances, 1 Zonaras reporteth that the Emperour Baſilius had in his treaſury 200000 talents of gold, beſides infinite heaps of ſilver and other moneys. 2 Lipſius relateth, how Benjamin a Jew in his diſcourſe of Europe, ſaith, that the cuſtome due to the Emperours, out of the victuals and merchandize ſold at Conſtantinople only did amount to 20000 crowns daily. 3 We find, that at the ſack of Conſtantinople, there was found an invaluable maſſe of gold, ſilver, plate, and jewels, beſides that which was hid in the earth. For ſo the covetous Citizens choſe rather to employ their wealth, then afford any part of it to the Emperour: who with tears in his eyes, went from door to door to beg and borrow mony, wherewith he might wage more ſouldiers for the defence of the town.

The arms of the Empire were Mars, a croſſe Sol between four Greek Betz's of the ſecond: the four Beta's ſignifying, (as Bodin ſaith) Βασιλεὺς, Βασιλεῶν, Βασιλεύων, Βασιλεῦσι.

It may perchance be expected that we ſhould here make an additionall Catalogue of thoſe Turkiſh Emperours, who have reigned in Conſtantinople, ſince the taking of it: and being they are poſſeſſed of Greece and do now inhabit it, that we ſhould here alſo ſpeak of the Turks themſelves, their cuſtoms, forces, policies, originall, and proceedings. But the diſcourſe of thoſe things we intend to reſerve for Turcomania, a Province of Aſia, from whence they made their firſt inundation into Perſia, and afterwards into other parts of the world now ſubject to them, the only Province which retains any thing of their name. And though the Peninſula called anciently Taurica Cherſoneſus (now part of Tartaria Procopenſis) be within the bounds of Europe alſo: yet we will deferre the deſcription and ſtory of it, till we come to the affairs of the Tartars: and will here conclude our diſcourſe of Europe, and prepare for Aſia.

And ſo much for GREECE, the laſt of the Provinces of EUROPE.

of the Leſſer and Greater

ASIA,

And all the principall Kingdomes, Provinces, Seas, and Iſles thereof.

OF ASIA.

ASIA is bounded on the Weſt with the Mediterranean, and Ægean Seas, the Helleſpont, Propontis, Thracian Boſphorus, and the Euxine Sea; the Palus Maotis, the Rivers Tanais, and Duina; a line being drown from the firſt of the two ſaid Rivers unto the other; by all which parted from Europe. On the North it hath the main Scythick Ocean; on the Eaſt the Streits of Anian (if ſuch there be) the Indian Ocean, and Mare Del Zur, by which ſeparated from America: on the South, the Mediterranean, or that part of it which is called the Carpathian, waſhing the ſhores of Anatolia; and the main Southern Ocean, paſſing along the Indian, Perſian, and Arabian coaſts: and finally, on the South-weſt the Red Sea or Bay of Arabia, by which parted from Africk. Environed on all ſides with the Sea, or ſome Sea-like Rivers, except a narrow Iſthmus in the South-weſt, which joynes it to Africk; and the ſpace of ground (whatſoever it be) betwixt Duina, and Tanais, on the North-weſt, which unites it to Europe.

It took this name, as ſome will have it, from Aſia, the daughter of Oceanus and Thetis, the wife of Japetus & (by him) mother to Prometheus: as others ſay from Aſius the ſon of Atis, a King of Lydia, from whence that Conntrey firſt, afterwards all Anatolia or Aſia Minor, and finally, the whole Continent had the name of Aſia. Others again (but more improbably) derive the name from Aſius the Philoſopher, who gave the Palladium unto the Troians; in memory whereof that Countrey firſt, and after the whole Continent did receive this name. But theſe Originations being very uncertain, Bochartus (out of his great affection to the Punick or Phœnician language) will have it called ſo from Aſi, a Phœnician word, ſignifying Medium, or the middle: becauſe Anatolia or the Leſſer Aſia, which gives name (as he conceiveth) to the Greater alſo, lieth in the middle, as it were betwixt ſome parts of Europe and Africa. And ſo farre the Conjecture doth find countenance from ſome antient writers; that Aſia is ſaid by Plinie to be inter Africam & Europam, to be betwixt Africa and Europe; by Mela, Medium noſtris aquoribus excipi, to be embraced in the middle of two Seas (he meaneth Pontus Euxinus and the Mediterranean) and finally, by Euſtathius (conceive them all of Anatolia or the Leſſer Aſia) μέσην ἀμφοῖν ἔχειν διάθεσιν, to have a middle ſituation betwixt Europe and Africa. But by what name, and on what grounds ſoever it be called by the Greeks and Latines; it is otherwiſe, and with better reaſon called in holy Scriptures by the name of Semia; as being that portion of the world, wherein the whole poſterity of Sem had their ſeates and dwellings: if the observation of Maginus be of any weight.

It is situate East and West from the 52. to the 169 degree of Longitude: and North and South from the 82 degree of Latitude to the very Æquator; some onely of the Islands lying on the South of that Circle: so that the longest Summers day in the Southern parts is but twelve houres onely; but in the most Northern parts hereof for almost four whole moneths together no night at all. And for a measurement by miles, it stretches in length 5200. and in bredth 4560. miles.

This Countrey hath heretofore been had in especiall honour, 1. For the Creation of man, who had his first making in this part of the world 2. Because in this part of it stood the garden of Eden, which he had for the first place of his habitation. 3. Because here flourished the four first great Monarchies of the Assyrians, Babylonians, Medes and Persians. 4. Because it was the Scene of almost all the memorable actions which are recorded by the pen-men of the holy Scriptures. 5. Because that here our Saviour CHRIST was born, here wrought he most divine miracles, and here accomplished the great work of our Redemption. 6. And finally because from hence all Nations of the World had their first beginning, on the dispersion which was made by the sonnes of Noah, after their vain attempt at Babel.

The chief Mountains of this great Continent, not limited within the bounds of any one Province (for of those we are to speak in their severall places) are 1. Mount Taurus, which having its beginning in Lycia, a Province of Anatolia, passeth directly East-wards to the Indian Ocean: and reckoning in its severall windings, & turnings with its spurs and branches every way, is said to be 6250. miles long, and 357 m. broad. This Mountain, or rather Ridge of hils, divideth the Greater Asia (as the Æquator doth the World into North and South: memorable for three difficult passages from the one to the other, the first out of the rest of Anatolia into Ciliciæ, called Pylæ Ciliciæ; the second out of Scythia or Tartarie, into Turcomania, called Caucasiæ Portæ; and the third out of Scythia into Persia, called Portæ Caspiæ. Of which and of the whole course of this Mountain, more at large hereafter. 2. Imaus, which beginning neere the shores of the Northern Ocean runneth directly towards the South; dividing the Greater Asia (as the Meridian doth the World) into East and West, and crossing Mount Taurus in right Angles, in or about the Longitude of 140. This on the North of Taurus hath no other name among the Latines, then Imaus onely: and by that name divideth Scythia into Scythia intra Imaum, and Scythia extra Imaum: but by the Tartars is called Altay, by some writers Belgion. And on the South-side of that Mountain is known in Ptolomy by the name of Bittigo, extending from Mount Caucasus, or some other Branch of the Taurus to the Cape of Comari in the Southern Ocean: supposed by some to be Mount Sephar mentioned, Gen. 10. v. 30. of which we shall say more also when we come into India.

The estate of Christianity in this vast Continent is in ill condition, discountenanced and oppressed, though not quite extinguished. For all the great Princes and Commanders of it being either Mahometans or Pagans; the most that can be hoped for of the Christian Faith, is a toleration or connivence: and that not found but with an intermixture of such afflictions as commonly attend discountenanced and disgraced Religions. Yet is not Christianity so over-powered either by Mahometanisme or Paganisme, but that in Asia the Lesser, Syria, Palestine, and Armenia, a great part of the inhabitants do retain the Gospel, under their severall Patriachs and Metropolitans: differing in some few points from one another; but in many from the Church of Rome, with which they hold neither correspondency nor Communion. Nor want there many Christian Churches in the Empire of Persia, nor in those of Tartarie and the Indies, antiently planted in those Countreys; besides the late increase thereof in the Eastern Islands, by the diligent preaching of the Jesuites and some late Factories there setled by the English and Hollanders: of all which I shall write in place convenient.

In reference to the Roman Empire, whose Dominion did not often extend beyound the River Euphrates, this Continent conteined onely three Dioceses or Juridicall Circuits; that is to say, the Diocese of Pontus, Asia properly so called, and the Orientall: which with the Dioceses of Thrace and Egypt, were under the command of the Præfectus Prætorio Orientis; the greatest Officer of power and jurisdiction, next to the Emporours themselves in the Roman Monarchie. And these three Dioceses conteined in them to the number of thirty seven Provinces, viz. the Provinces of Bithynia, 2. Helenopontus. 3. Pontus Polemoniacus. 4. Galatia Prima. 5. Galatia Salutaris. 6. Honorius. 7. Paphlagonia. 8. Cappadocia prima. 9. Cappadocia secunda. 10. Armenia prima, and 11. Armenia secunda, conteined in the Diocese of Pontus, and governed by the Vicarius or Lieutenant thereof: II. the Provinces of Pamphylia. 2. Lycia. 3. Caria. 4. Pisidia. 5. Lycaonia. 6. Lydia. 7. Phrygia Pacatiana. 8. Phrygia Salutaris. 9. Asia specially so called. 10. Hellespont, and 11. the Isles of Anatolia, making up the Diocese of Asia: whereof the three last were governed by a peculiar Officer called the Proconsul of Asia, the others by the ordinary Lieutenant or Vicarius. III. The Provinces of Isauria. 2. Cilicia prima. 3. Cilicia secunda. 4. Cyprus. 5. Phœnices. 6. Phœnices Libani. 7. Syria. 8. Syria Salutaris. 9. Palestina prima. 10. Palestina secunda. 11. Palestina Salutaris. 12. Euphratensis. 13. Osroene. 14. Mesopotamia, and 15. Arabia, constituting the Diocese of the Orient, under the Comes Orientis. The rest of Asia subject unto the Parthian or Persian Kings, besides those of India (and of many Regions and Countreys not then discovered) was never conquered by the Romans, and therefore not within the compasse of this distribution.

At this time Asia stands divided amongst nine great Monarchs, that is to say, the Turke commanding all those parts and Provinces which antiently belonged to the Roman Empire: 2. The Persian, ruling in all the Provinces beyond Euphrates, possessed by the Persian Kings in the time of Alexander the great, or the Arsacidæ or Parthians in the times of the Romans. 3. The Great Cham of Tartarie, commanding over all the North parts of Asia, antiently known by the name of Scythia: 4. The King of China governing in that large and populous Countrey. 5. The King of Barma, whose dominion comprehends all or the greatest part of India beyond the River of Ganges; and the Great Mogor, whole Empire is extended over all India on this ſide of that River. And ſome there be who in the deſcriptions of this great Continent follow this diviſion. But for our parts for the better underſtanding of the Greek and the Roman ſtories and the eſtate of the Aſſyrian, Babylonian and Perſian Monarchies, to which the holy Scriptures do ſo much relate: we ſhall conſider it as divided into the Regions of 1. Anatolia, or Aſia Minor. 2. Cyprus. 3. Syria. 4. Paleſtine. 5. Arabia. 6. Chaldea. 7. Aſſyria. 8. Meſopotamia. 9. Turcomania. 10. Media. 11. Perſia. 12. Tartaria. 13. China. 14. India, and 15. the Oriental Iſlands.

ANATOLIA or ASIA MINOR.

ANATOLIA or ASIA MINOR, is bounded on the Eaſt with the River Euphrates, by which parted from the greater Aſia on the Weſt with the Thracian Boſphorus, Propontis, Helleſpont, and the Ægean Sea, by which parted from Europe: on the North with Pontus Euxinus, called alſo the Black Sea, and Mare Maggiore, and on the South by the Rhodian, Lydian, and Pamphylian Seas, ſeveral parts of the Mediterranean. So that this it is a demi-Iſland or Peninſula, environed on all ſides with waters, excepting a ſmall Iſthmus or neck of land extending from the head of Euphrates to the Euxine Sea, by which joined to the reſt of Aſia.

It was antiently called Aſia Minor, to difference it from the reſidue of this great Continent; afterwards Anatolia, ἀπὸ τῆς ἀνατολῆς, from the more Eaſtward ſituation of it in reſpect of Greece; and now Natolia by the Turks, with little deviation from the former name. But here it is to be obſerved, that as this Leſſer Aſia was a part of the greater, and the Dioceſe of Aſia a part of Aſia the Leſſe: ſo was Aſia properly & ſpecially ſo called, but a part only of the Aſian Dioceſe; the Lydian Aſia a part of Aſia properly ſo called, and the Proconſular Aſia but a part of that. The limits of Aſia the Leſſe and the ſeveral Provinces conteined in the Aſian Dioceſe, have bin ſhewn already. And as for that part hereof which had the name of Aſia properly and eſpecially ſo called, it contained only the two Phrygia's both the Myſia's, Æolis, Ionia, Lydia, and Caria: which falling unto the Romans by the laſt Will and Teſtament of Attalus the laſt King of Pergamus; were by them made into one Province, and called Aſia, after the name of the whole Continent, this being as it were the earneſt-penny, to make ſure the reſt. So witneſſeth Strabo, where he ſaith, Ῥωμαῖοι ἐπαρχίαν ἀπέδειξαν τριῶν Ἀσίαν πεσσαγορίσαντες ὁμώνυμον τῇ ἠπείρῳ, Lib. 13. And for the Lydian Aſia, that contained onely ſo much of the Roman or proper Aſia, as antiently did belong to Lydia, that is to ſay, Lydia it ſelf, together with Æolis and Ionia, and ſome parts of the Greater Myſia adjoining to it. Which as it had originally the name of Aſia, from Aſia a chief City of it neer the foot of mount Tmolus, which both Suidas and the Great Etymologiſt have taken notice of; before that name became to be communicated to the Greater Continent: ſo it reteined that name to it ſelfe in ſeveral, diſtinct both from the Greater and the Leſſer Aſia, as alſo from the Aſia propria of Ptolomie, and others of the antient writers. And of this Aſia only is it, which the Scriptures ſpeake; both in the Book of the Acts, and the Revelation: the ſeven Churches mentioned in the one being found in this Lydian Aſia; and the paſſages in the other concerning Aſia, not to be underſtood of any but of this alone. For whereas it is ſaid Acts XVI. That when they had gone throughout Phrygia and the Region of Galatia, and were forbidden of the Holy Ghoſt to preach the Word in Aſia, after they were come to Myſia they aſſayed to go into Bithynia, and came down to Troas: moſt clear it is, that neither Galatia nor Bithynia though Regions of the Leſſer Aſia, nor Phrygia, Myſia, or Troas, all Regions of the Proper Aſia, were any part of that Aſia which the Scripture ſpeaks of. So alſo where it is affirmed that upon St. Pauls preaching and diſputing for two years in Epheſus, all they which dwelt in Aſia heard the word of the Lord: Acts XIX. V. 10. It is not to be meant of any but the Lydian Aſia, whereof Epheſus at that time was the principal City. So alſo Acts XIX. V. 22. 26. 31. and chapter XX. V. 18. Finally for the Proconſular Aſia, which together with Helleſpont and the Iſles, made up a Government apart, exempt from the command of the Vicarius or Lieutenant of the Aſian Dioceſſe, it contained onely Æolis and Ionia with the South part of Lydia, or the Countreys lying about Epheſus. So witneſſeth St. Hierome for the Chriſtian writers, where he affirmes that although all the whole Peninſula have the name of the Leſſer Aſia; Specialiter ubi Epheſus Civitas eſt, Aſia Vocatur, yet more particularly the parts adjoining unto Epheſus have the name of Aſia. And this appeareth by the diſtribution of the Provinces before laid down, where Lydia is reckoned for a Province of the Aſian Dioceſe, diſtinct from the Proconſular Aſia which we now inſiſt on.

So having cleered our way in regard of the name proceed we next unto the Regions or place thus named, according to the notion in the largeſt latitude, extending from the Helleſpont to the River Euphrates, and from the Euxine Sea to the Mediterranean. By which account it reacheth from the 51. to the 72. degree of Longitude, and from the 36. to the 45. degree of Latitude: the length hereof from the Helleſpont to the River Euphrates, being eſtimated at 630. miles; the breadth from Sinus Iſſicus in Cilicia to the City of Trabezond, at 210. As for the ſituation of it in reference to the Heavenly bodies, it lieth almoſt in the ſame poſition with Italy, extending from the middle Parallel of the fourth Clime to the middle Parallell of the ſixt: ſo that the longeſt ſummer day in the Southern parts, is about fourteen hours and a halfe; and one hour longer in thoſe parts which ly moſt towards the North.

The temperature of the aire is exceeding ſound, and the ſoile generally exceeding fruitfull; abounding in moſt excellent paſtures, and antiently very plentiful of all fruites both for uſe and pleaſure, as ſtill it would be were it cultivated as in former times. Once very populous and repleniſhed with goodly Cities, now in a manner waſte and deſolate, lamenting the deſtruction of 4000. Townes, ſome of them deſtroyed by Earth- quakes, (the falling sickneſſe of moſt great Cities in the Eaſt) but moſt by warre; and have little now to boaſt of but the comodiouſneſſe of the Havens which are very many, though moſt of them but meanly traded, as in a Countrey ill manured; and of little manufactures.

The people antiently, eſpecially thoſe of Greek original, and the nations bordering on the Euxine, were very warlike and induſtrious: the reſt, eſpecially the Lydians and thoſe of the greater Phrygia, as idle and effeminate, wholly addicted to their pleaſures. All of them at this time affected with the ſame diſeaſe; inſomuch that the Turkes; (unleſſe compelled thereto by extreame neceſſities) never inroll their Children in the number of Janizaries. The greateſt part of them generally profeſſe the Chriſtian faith; but overpowered by Mahometaniſme, which is here moſt prevalent: all followers of the Church of Greece, and ſubject all (except thoſe of Iſauria and Cilicia,) to the Patriarch of Conſtantinople. And as they are of the Communion of that Church, ſo they retaine the Greek liturgies for Sacred Offices; not ſo well underſtood amongſt them in former times, when it was more generally ſpoken there then it is at the preſent; now over-topped in moſt places by the Turkiſh and Sclavonian tongues. And though in former times by reaſon of the many Greek Colonies planted in this Countrey, the Conqueſt of it by Alexander the Great, and the ſubjection of it to the Syrian Kings of the Macedon race, that language became generally underſtood amongſt them: in ſomuch as three of the Greek Dialects, viz. the Doricke, the Ionian, and the Æolick, were ſpoken here: yet did it never ſo prevaile as to become the Vulgar language of the People, or to extinguiſh any of the Vulgar tongues: For it is ſaid of Mithridates King of Pontus, that he underſtood two and twenty languages without any Interpreter; which were no other then the languages of ſo many Nations ſubject to himſelfe, whoſe Dominion was contained for the moſt part within Aſia Minor.

Principall Mountains of this Countrey are Hermione in Pontus, Argæus in Cappadocia, Ida in the Leſſer Phrygia, Olympus in Myſia, Tmolus in Lydia, Amanus in Cilicia, and finally Antetaurus and Scordiſcus in Armenia Minor. Out of which for the moſt part flowe the chief Rivers hereof, that is to ſay. 1. Iris, (now Caſilmach) 2. Thermodor. 3. Halis. (now Ottomangruch) 4. Parthenius (now Dolop) 5. Sangarius, now Sangri, all of them falling into the Euxine Sea. 6. Aſcanius. 7. Rhyndacus. 8. Æſapus. and 9. Granicus, paſſing into the Propontis. 10. Simoeis. 11. Scamander called alſo Xanthus, ending their ſhort courſe in the Helleſpont. 12. Caicus. 13. Hermus. 14. Cayſtrus, and 15. Maander, looſing themſelves in the Ægean. 16. Calbis. 17. Xanthus called alſo Lycus. 18. Limyrus. 19. Cataractes, diſchannelling into the Mediterranian; and 20. Melas, adding to the waters of the great River Euphrates. Of moſt of which we ſhall ſpeak more particularly in their ſeveral places.

In reference to the State of Rome, it contained the whole Dioceſſe of Pontus, except Armenia the Greater; the Aſian Dioceſſe intirely without any exception; and the peculiar juriſdiction of the Proconſull of Aſia; together with the Provinces of Iſauria and Cilicia, parts of the Dioceſſe of the Eaſt. But becauſe the names of many of thoſe Provinces were of new invention, and ſome of them of as ſhort continuance; we will conſider it according as it ſtood divided antiently, and before the Romans had made any conqueſts in it, into the Provinces of 1. Bithynia. 2. Pontus. 3. Paphlagonia. 4. Galatia. 5. Cappadocia. 6. Armenia Minor; which (together with Armenia Major) made up though in other names, the Portick Dioceſſe. 7. Phrygia Minor. 8. Phrygia Major. 9. Myſia the Greater and the Leſſer. 10. Æolis and Ionia. 11. Lydia. 12. Caria. 13. Lycia. 14. Lycaonia. 15. Piſidia. 16. Pamphilia. 17. the Province of the Rhodes, all comprehended under the command of the Vicarius and Proconſul of Aſia. 18. Iſauria. 19. Cilicia, parts of the Dioceſe of the Eaſt as before was ſaid.

1. BITHYNIA.

BITHYNIA is bounded on the eaſt with Pontus, and the River Sangarius; on the weſt with part of the Euxine, the Thracian Boſphorus, and part of the Propontis; on the North wholly with the Euxine; and on the South with Myſia and Phrygia Minor: Formerly called Bebrycia, afterwards Mygdonia, and at laſt Bithynia, and that as ſome ſay from Bithynius, once a King hereof; more probably from the Thyni, a people of Thrace, who paſſed over the Boſphorus and ſubdued it, called therefore by ſome writers Thracia Aſiatica. So witneſſeth the Poet Claudian ſaying, Thyni Thraces erant, qua nunc Bithynia fertur.

By Juſtin the Hiſtorian it is called by the name of Metapontus, by reaſon of its neighbourhood to the Euxine, and the Ponticks Region.

The Countrey naturally rich, and in thoſe parts hereof which lie next the Boſphorus, oppoſite to Conſtantinople, ſo plentifully enriched with fruitful hills, and pleaſant orchards, when kept by the more curious Chriſtians, that it was thought not to be inferiour to the ſo much celebrated Tempe: now robbed of all thoſe former beauties by the careleſſeneſſe of the Turks, who affect neither art nor ſumptuoſitie in their retirements and delights.

Chiefe Rivers hereof are Phillis. 2. Sangarius now called Sangri, both falling into the Euxine Sea; this laſt ariſing from Mount Dindymus, in the furtheſt parts of Phrygia Major; and making two long reaches in his journey hither. 3. Aſcanius, which riſing alſo in Phrygia Major, but more neer the borders of this Countrey, falleth into the Propontis, making the Bay called Sinus Aſcanius. Which with a lake in the ſame Countrey called Lacus Aſcanius doth plainely manifeſt that the Bithynians are derived from Askenaz, the Sonne of Gomer and grand-ſon of Japhet.

The principal Townes hereof are 1. Scutari over againſt the Haven of Conſtantinople, called antiently Chryſopolis for that there the Perſians received their tribute from the other Cities of all theſe parts of Aſia Minor. An ample Town, well garriſoned within, and ſurrounded round about with moſt pleaſant Orchards chards, and honoured with the neighbourhood of a Royall Seraglio. Not far off is a Tower called the Maiden-Tower, serving both for a Fort and watch-tower; and being furnished for defence with twenty pieces of Ordnance. 2. Calcedon on the same shore also, a Colonie of the Megarenses, called blinde by the Oracle, for neglecting Byzantium and chooſing the loſſe convenient place for their habitation. And yet did Conſtantine the Great reſolve upon the ſame place alſo for his Regall Citie: but changed his reſolutions on a kinde of miracle: it being obſerved that when his workmen began to draw the plat-forme, ſome Eagles conveyed away their lines to the other ſide of the Boſphorus, and let them fall directly upon Byzantium. Memorable after that for the fourth Generall Councell there aſſembled by Command of the Emperour Martianus, for repreſſing the hereſie of Neſtorius; in which were five hundred and thirty Biſhops: now ſo decayed that it can onely ſhew ſome few of the ruines of it: Scutari being riſen on the fall thereof. 3. Nicomedia, ſo called from Nicomedes King of Bithynia (the ſon of Zipes, and grand child to that Bithynian King, who ſo valiantly defended his own and his Countreys liberty againſt Calantius, one of great Alexanders Captains,) by whom founded: Situate on the top of an hill, environed with a pleaſant and delightfull Plain: honoured with the ſeate and reſidence of many of the Roman Emperors, when their affaires called them into the Eaſt, before the building of Conſtantinople; on that occaſion made the Throne on which many of Gods Saints received the Crown of Martyrdome, eſpecially in the perſecution under Dioclesian. In thoſe times wealthy and of fame, now much decayed, but notwithſtanding well inhabited both by Greeks and Turks for the commodiouſneſſe of the freſh Springs which are thereabouts. 4. Libuſſa, betwixt Nicomedia and the River Aſcanius, memorable for the death and Sepulture of the famous Annibal, who to prevent his being made Priſoner to the Romans when Pruſius King of Bithynia intended unworthily to betray him, here made away himſelf by poiſon. 5. Pruſa, founded by another Pruſius, whoſe name it beareth; a large and wealthy City as moſt in Aſia, honoured for a long time with the reſidence of the Turkiſh Kings till the removall of their ſeat to Adrianople by Mahomet the firſt; and ſtill ennobled with the ſepulture of the Princes of the Ottoman race, except the Emperours themſelves. By the Turks called Burſa. 6. Nica or Nicaa, by the Turks called Neichia, but moſt commonly Iſnichs, ſituate, neer the fennes of the River Aſcanius, occaſioned by the frequent overflowings of that River: by ſome affirmed to be the Metropolis of Bithynia; but I think Nicomedia hath more right to claime that honour. Firſt named Antigonia from Antigonius the founder of it; and afterwards Nicaa by the name of Nica wife unto Lyſimachus, both of them Captaines of the Great Alexander; which laſt had the happineſſe to ſurvive the overthrow of the former, and was the longeſt liver of thoſe great Commanders. Sufficiently famous both in Eccleſiaſticall and Civill ſtory for the firſt Generall Councill there holden, by the appointment of Conſtantine the Great Anno 314. for ſetling the peace of the Church then miſerably diſtracted by the Arian Hereſie. The number of Biſhops there aſſembled no more then 318. yet of ſuch high eſteem for learning and piety, that never Councel hath been held in ſo great an Honour. Here was alſo held the Counceł by the Empereſſe Irene, for eſtabliſhing the veneration of Images; that paſſing by the name of the Nicene Councel, the Acts thereof might be of greater reputation amongſt ignorant men. In which it was decreed by ſuch doubtfull Arguments, as Let us make man after our own Image, once mainly inſiſted on by a Legate of the Eaſtern Churches, that they ſhould be reverenced and adored in as ample and religious manner, as the bleſſed Trinity it ſelf. This City was alſo the Imperiall City of the Greek Emperours, after the taking of Conſtantinople by the Weſtern Chriſtians; and there continued till the expulſion of the Latines: Under theſe

Emperours of the GREEKS reſiding at NICE.

A. Ch.

1200. 1. Theodorus Laſcaris ſon in law to Alexius Angelus the Uſurper; upon the taking of Conſtantinople by the Latines paſſed over into Aſia, and fortifying the City of Nice made it the head City of his Kingdome, conteining Bithynia, both the Phrygia's, both the Myſia's, Lydia, Æolis and Ionia.

1223. 2. John ſurnamed Ducas, the husband of Irene daughter of Theodore Laſcaris, ſucceeded his Father in law in the Empire; to which he added Pontus, moſt of the Iſles of the Ægean, and not a few places of importance in Thrace it ſelf.

1256. 3. Theodorus II. the ſon of Ducas.

1259. 4. John II. the ſon of Theodore the ſecond, an Infant of about ſix years old, ſupplanted firſt, and after cruelly depoſed and deprived of right.

1259. 5. Michael Palæologus, deſcended from the Imperiall family of the Comneni, firſt took upon him as Protector of the Infant-Emperour, and afterwards as his aſſociate in the Empire: in which confirmed by many fortunate ſucceſſes as well againſt the Latines as ſome Greek Uſurpers in Theſſaly and Peloponeſus, eſpecially the taking of Conſtantinople; he deprived the young Emperour of his ſight, made himſelf ſole Emperour, and left it unto his poſterity, who held it with a great deal of trouble and continuall diſquiets, till the year 1452. when Conquered by Mahomet the Great, as before was ſaid. But this recovery of Conſtantinople was the loſſe of Nice, taken not long after the removall of the Imperiall ſeate by Sultan Ottomans, Anno 1299. who preſently thereupon took on himſelfe the ſtile of King, from which before he had abſtained.

As for the fortunes of Bithynia it ſelf, I look upon the Bithynians as a Thracian people, whom both Strabo and Herodotus ſpeak of as the founders of the name and Nation. Of ſuch a King of theirs as Bithynius I finde ſome mention in my Authors; and poſſibly it might be he who had the leading of the Thyni, or Bithyni, in this expedition: that being the name rather of his Nation, then his proper Family. But for the line of Kings which held out till the flouriſh of the Roman greatneſſe, they begun to reign here ſome few generations before the time of Philip and Alexander the Macedonians: by whom having other imployment, and lying out of the road towards Persia they were little troubled. Calantus one of Alexanders Captains, made an expedition into their Countrey, and was vanquished by them: and afterwards they had to do with one of the Lieutenants of Antigonus, (one of Alexanders greatest Princes) who though he humbled them for the present, yet got he neither title nor possession by it. And thus they held it out till the time of Prusias, so shuffling with the Macedonian and Syrian Kings, that betwixt both they still preserved their own estates. This Prusias, when the Romans became so considerable, as that no danger need be feared from Greece or Syria, peeced himself with them: and having aided them in their warres against Philip and Antiochus both, and most unworthily promised to deliver Annibal (who had fled to him for succour) unto their Embassadours, made all sure on this side. His Sonne and successour Nicomedes, being outed of his Kingdome by Mithridates King of Pontus, and restored again unto it by the power of the Romans, held it as their Fendatarie, as did Nicomedes his next Successour simamed Philometor: who dying without issue in the time of Augustus, gave his whole Kingdome to the Romans. By them, with the addition of that part of Pontus which lay next unto it, it was made a Province of their Empire, by the name of Pontus and Bithynia; continuing so till the division of that Empire into the Eastern and the Western; when falling to the share of the Constantinopolitans, and with them to the power of the Turkish Tyrants who do still possesse it.

2. PONTUS.

PONTUS is bounded on the East with Colchis, and Armenia; on the West with Bithynia and the River Sangarius; on the North with the Euxine Sea; and on the South with Phrygia Major; Paphlagonia; Galatia and Cappadocia. So that it taketh up the whole length of Anatolia or Asia Minor from Bithynia to the River Euphrates, which parts it from Armenia Major; but not of answerable breadth; and gives name to the Sea adjoining, a Ponto regione illi adjacente ita appellari, as Ortelius hath it; called from hence Pontus by the Latines, the adjunct of Euxinus comming on another occasion, which we have spoken of before. A Countrey of a large extent, and therefore divided by the Romans (when Masters of it) into these four parts, viz. Metapontus, or Pontus specially so called. 2. Pontus Galaticus. 3. Polemoniacus; and 4. Pontus Cappadocius.

1. PONTUS specially so called or Metapontus bordering on Bithynia and bounded on the East with the River Parthemius which divided it from Paphlagonia; had for the Chief Cities thereof 1. Claudiopolis, so called in honor of Claudius the Roman Emperor; as 2. Flaviopolis, in honor of Flavius Vespasianus; and 3. Juliopolis, in honor of the Julian family, all midland Towns. 4. Diospolis, on the Euxine Sea, so called from a Temple consecrated to Jupiter, of great resort. 5. Heraclea, a Colonie of the Phocians, called for distinctions sake, (there being many of that name) Herclea Ponti: memorable of late times for being the seat or residence of a branch of the Imperial family of the Cõneni; when at the taking of Constantinople by the Western Christians, David & Alexius Comneni fled into these parts: the first fixing here his Royal residence commanded over this part of Pontus and Paphlagonia; the other possessing himself of Cappadocia and Galatia, made Trabezond his Regall or Imperiall City. But these two Empires, though of the same date, were of different destinies: that of Heraclea and Pontus being partly conquered by the Greek Emperours residing at Nice, and partly seized on by the Turks in the beginning and first fortunes of the Ottoman family; the other keeping up the Majesty and State of an Empire, till the year 1461. when subdued by Mahomet the Great. 6. Phillium, at the mouth or influx of the River Phillis, upon which it is seated. 7. Amastris, the farthest Town of this part towards the East, on the Sea-side also; once of great strength, but taken by Lucullus, together with Heraclea, Sinope, Amisus, and other Townes, in the war against Mithridates the great King of Pontus.

2. Eastward of Pontus specially so called, or Metapontus, as Justin the historian call's it, lyeth PONTUS GALATICUS, so named because added to Galatia in the time of the Romans. The chief Cities whereof were 1. Sinope, pleasantly seated on a long point or Promontorie shooting into the main, remarkable in antient storie for the birth and sepulture of Mithridates before mentioned; and in the later times for being the chief seat of the Isfendiars and noble Family of the Turkes, who had taken it with the rest of this tract from the Comneni, and held it till the same year in which the Empire of Trabezond was subdued by Mahomet. First built by the Milesians, and continuing in a free estate, till taken by Pharnaces a King of Pontus, and made the Metropolis of that Kingdome. 2. Castamona, the head City of the Principality of the Isfendiars before mentioned; preferred by them for strength and conveniency of situation, before Heraclea, or Sinope. 3. Themiscyra, now called Favagoria, seated on a spacious plain neer unto the Sea, and antiently giving name to the Province adjoyning. 4. Amasia, the birthplace of Strabo the Geographer, remarkable in the Ecclesiastical Histories for the Martyrdome of St. Theodorus; and of late times for being the residence of the eldest Sonnes of the Grand Signeur, sent hither as soon as circumcised, never returning back again till the death of their Father. Accompted now amongst the Cities of Cappadocia, and the chief of that Province, a midland Town, as also is 5. Cabira, called afterward Diopolis, memorable for the great defeat which Lucullus gave there unto Mithridates; more for the trick which Mithridates there put upon Lucullus. For being well acquainted with the covetousnesse of the Romans, he saw no better way to save himself and the rest of his forces after the defeate, then to scatter his treasures in the way which he was to take: that by that meanes his enemies might slacken the pursuite to collect the spoiles, and he preserve himself to another day: and so accordingly it proved. 6. Comana, to difference it from another of that name, called Comana Pontica; to which other being of Cap-

padocia, or Armenia Minor, Mithridates came in safety by the trick aforesaid, and thence escaped unto Tygranes the Armenian King, with 2000. horse.

3. Eastward of Pontus Galaticus lieth Polemoniacus, so called by the Romans either from Polemonium a chief town of this tract, or from Polemo the last King hereof, after whose death this Kingdome came unto the Romans. Places of most importance in it, 1. Polemonium on the Sea-side, spoken of before. 2. Hermanassa, a Sea-town also, more in the land. 3. Neo-Cæsarea, (now Nixaria) the Metropolis of Polemoniacus, when made a Province of it self. 4. Zela, enlarged by Pompey, and called Megalopolis, by Constantine laid unto the Province of Helenopontus. 5. Sebastia, so called in honour of Augustus, whom the Greeks called Sebastos; a place of great strength, and one of the first Townes in the Lesser Asia, which held out against Tamerlane; in revenge whereof when he had took it, he caused 12000. men women and children to be most cruelly buried alive in some hollow pits, which he had digged for that purpose. Nigh to this City is Mount Stella, where Pompey gave Mithridates his fatal overthrow: where also Tamerlane with an Army of 800000 of his Tartars, encountred with Bajazet the Turke, comming to the reliefe of Sebastia, with an Armie of 500000. fighting men. The issue of which fight was this, that Bajazet having lost 200000. of his souldiers, was himself taken prisoner, and carried by the insolent Conqueror in an iron cage, against the barres whereof he beat out his brains. 6. Barbanissa. 7. Megalossus. 8. Gozalvia, &c. not much observable in Story.

In this part of Pontus is the rise and fall of the River Thermodon, on the bankes whereof the Amazones, a sort of Warlike women are said to dwell, so called, either quasi ἀμάζας, because they used to cut off their right pappes, that they might not be an impediment to their shooting: or from α and μάζα sine pane, because they used not to eat bread; or from ἅμα ζῆν, because they used to live together. They were originally of Schythia, and accompanied their husbands to these parts, about the time of the Scythians first irruptions into Asia, in the time of Sesostris King of Egypt. The leaders of this people into Cappadocia, were Plinos and Scolpythus, two young men of a great house, whom a contrary faction had banished. They held a great hand over the Themiscyrii, who inhabited this region, and the Nations round about them; At last they were by treachery all murdered. But their wives now doubly vexed, both with exile and widowhood; and extremity of grief and fear producing its usual effect, desperatenesse: they set upon the Conquerors under the Conduct of Lampedo and Marpesia; and not onely overthrew them, but also infinitely inlarged their Dominions.

1 { Lampedo. / Marpesia. } First Queens of the Amazones in these parts.
2. Ortera.
3. Antiopa, whose sisters Hippolyte and Menalippe, challenged Hercules and Theseus to single combate: and were at last hardly vanquished, to their eternal credits.
4. Penthesilea, who came with a troope of brave Viragoes, to the aid of Priamus King of Troy: she invented the Battaile axe, and was at last slaine by Pyrrhus, sonne to Achilles. Long after her death reigned Thalestris; who came to Alexander being in Hyrcania, and plainly told him she came to be his bed-fellow; which done she returned; and at last by little and little this Female Nation was extinct. They used in matters of copulation to go to their neighbouring men thrice in a year: if they brought forth males, they sent them to their fathers; if females, they kept them and trained them up in all discipline of war and courage. Of these more elsewhere.

4. the most Eastern part of Pontus, called CAPPADOCIUS, for that it bordered on that Province, and for a time was added to it by the Romans, extended from Polemoniacus to Colchis, and the River Euphrates, the utmost boundaries of this Countrey. Places of most consideration in it. 1. Pharnacia, built by Pharnaces a King of Pontus. 2. Cerasu, by Constantine laid unto the Province of Polemoniacus, from whence Cherries were brought first to Rome, Anno V.C.680 called therefore Cerasa by the Latines. 3. Ischopolis, on the Euxine Sea, as the others are. And so is also 4. Trapezus, now Trabezond, the Imperial City of the Comneny, here raigning over Cappadocia, Galatia, and these parts of Pontus. An Empire founded first by Alexius Comnenus (Nephew of the great Tyrant Andronicus Comnenus by his Son Emanuel) who at the taking of Constantinople by the Western Christians fled unto these parts; which willingly submitted unto his command, Anno 1200. Here his posterity flourished in great prosperity, preserving the Majesty of the Empire in a better measure then the Constantinopolitans themselves till the time of David the last Emperour, in whose reign the City of Trabezond, and therewith all the whole dominion belonging to it, was taken by Mahomet the Great; the poor Emperour ledde prisoner into Greece, and there cruelly murdered. A famous Emporie and specially for the trade of fish, caught by the People on the shores of the Euxine Sea; here salted, and from hence transported in great quantities, to Constantinople, Caffa, and other places. And for their better help herein, it is said that there is a Mountain not far from this City, affording a black stone, which being beaten in a Mortar serves instead of salt, wherewith they season the fish, which they send abroad. A City honored heretofore with the residence of the Lord Deputies or Lieutenants of the Grecian Emperour, for defence of the outparts of the Euxine against the Persians, and now the Station of such Gallies as are maintained by the Grand Seignur, to scoure the coasts of the Black Sea, and secure their trade. More in the land stand. 5. Zephyriam. 6. Aza. 7. Cocalia. 8. Cordyle, and many others named in Ptolomy, but not else observable.

The antient Inhabitants of this Countrey were called LEUCOSYRI or White Syrians, governed by a race of Kings descended from the Royall house of Achemenes King of Persia. The first of them called led Mithridates, one of the seven Competitors for the Persian Kingdome, on the death of Cambyses. But that honour failing on Darius (of which more hereafter) he seated himself in these remote parts of Asia Minor; the Ancestour of many great and puissant Princes, but none more memorable then one of his own name, Regum Orientis post Alexandrum Magnum Maximus, the most potent King of all the East since the time of Alexander the great, as my Author hath it. A Prince of great abilities both in war and councill, and one who longer held it out against the Romans; then Pyrrhus, Annibal, and the great Kings of Macedon and Syria had done together. This was that famous Mithridates, who being once a friend and confederate of the Romans, took their part against Aristonicus; who would not consent to the admission of the Romans unto Pergamus, according to the will of Attalus. Afterward, conceiving an ambitious hope to obtain the Monarchy of Asia; in one night he plotted and effected the death of all the Roman Souldiers dispersed in Anatolia, being in number 150000: in like manner, as in after times the English, taught perhaps by this example, murdered all the Danes then resident in England; and the Sicilians massacred all the French inhabiting Sicilia, as we have formerly declared. He dispossessed Nicomedes, sonne to Prusias, King of Bithynia; Ariobarzanes, King of Cappadocia; and Philomones, King of Paphlagonia of their estates; because they persisted faithful to his enemies of Rome. He excited the Grecians to rebell, possessed himself of Athens, and divers places of importance in Greece, Thrace, and Asia; and allured all the Isles, except Rhodes, from their obedience to the Romans. And finally having disturbed their victories, and much shaken their estate, for the space of 40. years: he was with much ado vanquished by the valour and felicity of L. Sylla, Lucullus, and Pompey the Great; three of the greatest Souldiers that ever the Roman Empire knew. Yet did not the Roman puissance so much pluck down his proud heart, as the rebellion of his son Pharnaces, against him; which he no sooner heard, but he would have poisoned himself; but having formerly so used his bodie to a kind of poison allaied (which from his inventing of it, we now call Mithridate) that the venome could not work upon him; he slew himself. He is said to have been an excellent Scholler, and to have spoken perfectly the languages of 22. Nations; the languages of so many nations which were subject to him. But neither his learning nor his courage could preserve him from those common miseries, which ordinarily attend a falling greatnesse. And so ended this long and tedious war, exceeding troublesome to the Romans, but withall very beneficial. For under colour of giving aid to Mithridates, they took in Crete, Galatia, Colchis, Iberia, and both Armenia's: insomuch as it is truely said by L. Florus, totum pene Orientem & Septentrionem involvit, that in his ruines he involved both the East and North. But to proceed: after his death the Kingdome continued unto his posterity, but Tributaries to the Romans, till the time of Nero, when Polemo the last King hereof dying without issue; it was contoned and divided into many parts, and laid unto the Provinces of Bithynia, Galatia, and Cappadocia; onely that part of it which was called Polemoniacus retaining the dignity of a Province distinct and separate. And so it remained till the reign of Constantine the Great, who changing the names, lessening the bounds, and increasing the number of the Provinces, left onely the Province of Pontus, and Bithynia in the state he found it. And for the rest he cast it into two new Provinces, that towards the East, retaining the name, but not the bounds of the old Polemoniacus, wherein were the Cities of Trapezus, Neo-Cæsarea, Cerasus, Comana Pontica, Palemonium, and Petræorum Civitas, called afterwads Justiniana; of which Neo-Cæsarea was the Metropolis. That towards the East, separated from the Province of Pontus and Bithynia by the River Parthemius, he caused to be called Helenopontus, by the name of his Mother; and thereunto assigned the Cities of Amasia the Metropolis of it, Ibora, Euchaita, Zela, Andrapus, Ægeum Climacus, Sinope, Amisus, and Leontopolis. But this division held not long, both being united into one and called Helenopontus by Justinian; continuing after that a member of the Eastern Empire, till the comming of David and Alexius Comneni from Constantinople, whereof the one reigned in Heraclea, and the other in Trabezond, as before s said. But their estates being overthrown, it remains wholly to the Turkes, who do now possesse it.

The Armes of the Emperours of Trabezond the greatest Princes of these parts till the Turkes subdued them, were Or, an Eagle volant Gules.

3. PAPHLAGONIA.

PAPHLAGONIA is bounded on the East with the River Halys, by which parted from Cappadocia; on the West by the Rivers Parthemius, which part it from the Province of Ponthus and Bithynia; on the North with that part of the Kingdome of Pontus which was named Galaticus; and on the South, with Phrygia Major and Galatia. So called of Paphlago the Sonne of Phineus, estated in it by his Father who had newly conquered it.

The Countrey was but small, and of little power, and consequently the Cities were not very many, and of no great note. The principall of such as were, were 1. Gangra, observable for a Councill holden there in the Primitive times, Anno 339. commonly called Synodus Gangrensis. 2. Conica, or Cinata, of so convenient a situation that it was entrenched and fortified by Mithridates, when he was master of this Countrey. 3. Pompeiopolis, raised out of the foundations of some lesser town, by Pompey the great, and by him so named. 4. Germanopolis. 5. Xoana. 6. Andrapa, called afterwards Nava Claudiopolis, to difference it from another City of that name in Pontus.

This Province though but small in circuite, was heretofore the seat of four different Nations, viz. 1. the Tibareni, of whom it is said, that they never waged warre on any enemy, but they faithfully certified them before-hand, of the time and place of their fight. 2. The Heptacometa. 3. The Mossynoeci, both which were a people so beastly and shamelesse, that they used to performe the work of generation in publique; publique; not knowing that Multa sunt honesta factu, quæ sunt turpia visu: and 4. the Heneti, to whom the Venetians, as we have already said, do owe their first originall. The Kings which ruled in this Countrey derived themselves from Philomenes, who assisted Priamus King of Troy in his defence against the Greeks: in memory of whom this Region for a while was called Philomenia. Applying themselves unto the times, they were alwaies favourable to the strongest, serving the Persian, and submitting to Alexander as he passed that way; and so maintained their estate without much molestation, till the time of Mithridates King of Pontus: who finding them firme unto the Romans, then growing to great power in the Lesser Asia, deprived Philomenes then King hereof, and took the Kingdome to himselfe, fortifying the chiefe townes and places of it. Restored again unto his Kingdome by the power of the Romans, he gave it to them at his death. But the Countrey being very much wasted, and most of the Cities of it destroyed and desolated in the course of that warre; it was not thought worthy a particular care, and therefore laid unto Galatia. Not reckoned a distinct Province in the time of Saint Peter, who writing to the Jewes, dispersed in Pontus, Cappadocia, Galatia, Asia, and Bithynnia, takes no notice of this Paphlagonia; nor was it otherwise esteemed then as a member of Galatia, in the time of Ptolomie. Afterwards it was joyned to Pontus by the Emperour Constantine: part of it after that, with some parts of Pontus and Bithynnia, being made into a new Province by the Emperour Theodosius, and called Honorias, in honour of his sonne Honorius, whereof Claudiopolis, a Citie of Pontus, properly so called, was made the Metropolis. But by Justinian, the name of Honorius being abolished, and that of Paphlagonia revived again; the whole Countrey, as before limited, was governed by an Imperiall Officer, whom he called Prætor Justinianus: continuing under the command of the Constantinopolitans, till the taking of that Citie by the Latines. After which made a Member of the Empire of Trabezond till the conquest of it by the Turkes, by whom called Rom.

4. GALATIA.

GALATIA is bounded on the East with Cappadocia; on the West with the River Sangarius, and some part of Pontus specially so called, or Metapontus; on the North with Paphlagonia; on the South with Pamphylia. So called from the Gaules, who having ranged over Greece, passed into Asia, and brought a great part of it under their command: but being broken by Attalus King of Pergamus, and drove out of Mysia, and the Lesser Phrygia, were at last confined to this Countrey. It was also called Gallo-Græcia, from that mixture of Gaules and Grecians, who uniting into one body when they came for Asia, were commonly called Gallo-Græci. By Suidas, Græco-Galli, and the Countrey suitably Græco-Gallia.

The Countrey very plentifull of all manner of fruites, even unto voluptuousnesse; and providently provided of the Stone called the Amethyst, which is said to preserve from drunkennesse the man that weareth it. The name doth signifie as much, derived from A privativum, and μέθυσος, ebrius, which commeth from μέθυ, signifying wine.

The people had a custome in their publique funerals, to cast letters fairely written, into that last and fatall fire wherein the dead body was to be burned, supposing that their friends should read them in the other world. Much given to Sacrifices, in the number and frequency whereof they excelled all Nations: insomuch that Athenæus telleth us of one Ariamnes a rich Galatian, that he feasted the whole Nation for a year together with the Sacrifices of Buls, Sheep, Swine, and other provisions, boyled in great Caldrons made for that purpose, and distributed amongst them in Tents and Boothes erected for that entertainment. A brave flash of a vain-glorious hospitality.

Rivers of note here are not any but what are common unto them with their neighbouring Nations, as Halys, Sangarius, and some others. The Towns of most consideration in it were 1. Ancyra on the banks of the River Sangarius, the chief Citie of the Tectosages a Gallick Nation, and the Metropolis of the whole Countrey; memorable in Church-story for a Synod here held in the Primitive times, Anno 299. called Synodus Ancyrana; but of most note at the present for the making of Chamlets; now called Angauri. 2. Olenus. 3. Agrinama, Cities of the same people also. 4. Tavium, or Tanium (for I finde both names) the chiefe Citie of the Trocmi or Trogmi, where was a brazen statue of Jupiter, whose temple there was a privi ledged Sanctuary. 5. Androsia. 6. Phabarena, Cities of that nation also. 7. Therma, a Roman Colonie, so called of the hot Bathes there, the chief Citie of the Tolibosti, as Ptolomy, or Tolistobogi, as Strabo nameth them. 8. Talachbachora, belonging also to that people.

Besides the Nations above named, here dwelt also the Byceni and Proseliminita, who had also their peculiar Cities, mentioned by name in Ptolomie, but of little or no observation in the course of story. Of all which Nations, onely the Tectosags, were of Gallick originall; who with others of their Countreymen under the conduct of Belgius and Bremius, having ransacked Pannonia and Illyricum, fell at last into Macedon; where having tyrannized a while, and laid waste the Countrey, they were at last vanquished and expulsed by Antigonus Gonatas. After this overthrow under the conduct of Lamnorius, and Luterius, they ferried over the Hellespont, and subdued almost all Asia Minor on this side the Taurus; employed there, by those petty Kings and States against one another: their reputation grown so great, that no Prince thought himself secure without their alliance, or able to make warre without their assistance. The very Switzers of that age; as mercenary, but more faithfull unto those that hired them. But being over rigorous in compelling their neighbor Princes to become their Tributaries, and too severe in the exacting of their Tributes: they inforced Attalus King of Pergamus, by whose favour they had setled about the Hellespont, to become their enemy. Vanquished by him, they were constrained to contein themselves within the bounds of this Province, which from them in the following times was called Galatia, and Gallogræcia. Here for a while they kept their antient courage and estimation, molesting many times their neighbours, and sometimes setting themselves to hire in the wars of others: but in the end they lost both courage and esteem, and were Gaules onely in name, retaining little in them of their Ancestours valour. For as most plants and trees lose much of their vertue, being transplanted into another soile, so these men lost their native courage, strength, and hardinesse, being weakened by the Asian pleasures and delicacies. For as Tully saith, for a man to be good in other places, is no mastery; but in Asia to lead a temperate life, is indeed praiseworthy: So might one have said to the Gaules, that to be couragious and patient of travell amongst the mountains, was no whit to be admired; but to have continued so amidst the delights of Asia, had been indeed meritorious in them. But these men were so farre from assailing the Romans in the Capitol, that they lost their own Countrey to Manlius a Roman General. A warre which Manlius undertook for no other cause, but that they had been aiding to Antiochus against the Romans: nor was there any memorable act performed herein, but that of Chiomena the Kings wife, who being ravished by one of the Roman Captains, took her advantage whilest he busied himself in telling the money agreed on for her ransome, to cut off his head; which she presented to her husband. But Manlius got little honour by this successe, not being welcomed with a triumph, at his comming home, according to the Roman custome; because he undertook the warre of his own accord, without commission from the Senate. And yet the Senate was content to enjoy the fruites of it, keeping the Galatians as their Subjects, and the Kings their Feudataries. This happ'ned anno V. C. 564. After which time, I find Deiotarus by consent of the Romans, to reign here as King: who siding with Pompey in his warre against Cæsar, incurred the anger of the Victor; and had died for it, had not Tullie pleaded his cause and obtained his pardon. But he being dead, his Countrey in the time of Augustus was made a Province of the Empire; Lollius Paulinus being the first President or Governour of it: enlarged afterwards with the addition of Paphlagonia, and some part of Pontus, from whence called Galaticum. Reduced to its first bounds by the Emperour Constantine; and divided into two Provinces by Theodosius, the one called Galatia Prima; the other Salutaris, from its medicinall waters. Of both which Ancyra remained the Metropolis. In the falling of the Eastern Empire it was partly seised on by the Turks; not totally come into their hands, till the subverting of the Empire of Trabezond, upon which it depended. By the Turks at this day called Chianger.

5. CAPPADOCIA.

CAPPADOCIA is bounded on the East with Armenia Major, and some part of Armenia Minor; on the West with Galatia; on the North with Pontus Polemoniacus, and Cappadocius; and on the South with Lycaonia, and the rest of Armenia Minor. So called of a River, as Plinie telleth us, which runneth betwixt it and Galatia.

The Countrey very plentiful of wine, and most kind of fruits, rich in mines of Silver, Brasse, Iron, and Allom: affording also besides a mean sort of Alabaster, good store of Crystall, Jasper, and the Onyx stone. But the greatest wealth hereof is their breed of horses, infinite almost in numbers, and fit for any service they can be put to. And this is universal, in all parts of the Countrey, but not the other, there being some parts of it mountainous and very barren, especially about the spurres and branches of the Antitaurus: which is a chaine of hils thrusting out of the Taurus, and bending themselves unto the North, upon the edges of this Countrey and the two Armenia's. Here is also in this Countrey the mountain Argæus, said to be of so great an height, that from one of the summits or tops thereof, a man of perspicacious eyes may discern the Euxine on the one hand, and the Mediterranean on the other.

The People of this Countrey in the time of the Romans were of ill report, so vicious and lewd of life, so monstrously addicted to all kind of wickednesse, that besides the share they had in the old Greek proverb, of τειὰ Καππὰ κάκισα, they had some proverbs to themselves: Καππαδόκης, & Καππαδόκιον τέρας, that is to say, a man of Cappadocia, and a Cappadocian Monster, being used proverbially, to signifie a man most extreamly wicked. The words so used by Gregory Nazianzen, speaking of Gregory or George, the Arian Patriarch of Alexandria, if either Suidas or Erasmus, two right learned Criticks, understand him rightly. And they made good the Proverb in the times of the Gospell: Gregory that bloody Butcher of Alexandria, Auxentius, Asterius, Eustathius, principal Patrons of the Arians, and that Arch-Heretick Eunomius, being all of this Countrey. Yet such is the influence of Christianity, where once entertained, that this lewd disposition of the Cappadocians was so corrected and restrained by it; that this Countrey afforded as many godly Prelates, and couragious Martyrs, as any other whatsoever. Highly commended for it by Nazianzen before remembred, who with Gregory Nyssen, and St. Basil, all learned and religious Bishops, were all Cappadocians. And amongst many Martyrs of great faith and constancy, St. George, a noble Coppadocian, Collonell or Tribune of Souldiers under Diocletian, more celebrated in the Churches both East and West, then any other Saints in all the Calender, the blessed Apostles and Evangelists excepted onely, & for that reason made Patron of the Order of the Garter by K. Ed. the 3. Finally, it is reported of these Cappadocians, that they were not onely morally wicked, but naturally venomous also: insomuch that if a Serpent did bite any of them, the mans blood was a poison to the snake and killed him.

Principal Rivers of this Countrey, were 1. Halys, spoken of before, which had here its fountain and Originall; the end of Cræsus Empire both in site and fate, the utmost bound of his dominions on that side; which purposing to passe over in his way to Media, which he intended to invade, he was encountred with and vanquished by Cyrus the great King of Persia. 2. Iris, which ariseth in this Countrey also, and passing thorough thorough it and a part of Pontus, diſchannelleth it ſelf, as the other doth in the Euxine Sea.

Places of moſt obſervation in it, 1. Mazaca, beautified and enlarged by the Emperour Tiberius, after the uniting of this Province to the Roman Empire; and in honour of Auguſtus Cæſar, by him called Cæſarea: the Metropolis of Cappadocia, and the Epiſcopal See of renowned St. Baſil. 2. Nyſſa, the See of Gregory, ſurnamed Nyſſenus, the brother of Baſil. 3. Nazianzum, the Epiſcopal See of another Gregory, ſurnamed Nazianzenus: three men, which as for the piety of their converſation they were not equalled in thoſe times; ſo for their admirable abilities in all kind of learning, nothing inferiour to the moſt eminent of the antient Grecians. 4. Tyana, the Metropolis of Cappadocia ſecunda, after the ſubdiviſion of it by the Emperour Valens. 5. Archelais, in the Prafecture of Gardnacreta, ſo called from Archelaus a Cappadocian King, the founder or repairer of it. 6. Comana, for diſtinctions ſake called Comana Cappadocia, to difference it from another of that name in Pontus; by Ptolomie placed, I know not why, in Armenia Minor, as is alſo Nyſſa before mentioned. Memorable in old times for a Temple conſecrated to Bellona, whoſe Prieſts and other inferiour Officers of both ſexes, amounted in the time of Strabo to 6000 and upwards; for maintenance of whom the Prieſts received the Revenue of the Region next adjoyning to it; in honour next unto the King, and commonly of the ſame kindred alſo. 7. Dio-Cæſarea; called formerly Cabira, as we find in Strabo. 8. Fauſtinopolis, ſo called in honour of Fauſtina, wife of the Emperour Antoninus. 9. Andraca. 10. Phiara. 11. Salambria. 12. Campe, ſpoken of by Ptolomie, with many others as obſcure, and not worth the naming. Of more note, though not found in the antient Writers, is 13. Erzirum, ſituate on the very confines of the Greater Armenia, for that cauſe made the Rendez-vous, or place of meeting for the Turkiſh Souldiers when there is any expedition in hand againſt the Perſian; at which place alſo after the ending of the warre for the preſent year, they are disbanded and ſent home to their ſeveral quarters. And 14. Pterium, not named in Ptolomie, but memorable for the great battel fought in ſight thereof between Cræſus King of Lydia, and Cyrus of Perſia; in which Cræſus having loſt the field, and with it his Kingdome, found the Oracle true, (though not in the ſenſe which he expected) that Cræſus paſſing over the River Halys, ſhould overthrow a great eſtate, as indeed he did: but it was his own, and not the Perſians.

That the Cappadocians are derived from Togarma, the Sonne of Gomer, hath been ſo fully proved already in our Generall Preface, that we ſhall not trouble our ſelves to repeat it here: Nor ſhall we need to ſay more in confuting of their opinion, who would fetch Capththorim out of Egypt from the reſt of his brethren, to plant him in this Countrey, than hath there been ſaid. Their fortunes in the former times I find little of: ſubjected by the Perſian with the reſt of Aſia Minor, after the overthrow of Cræſus, who before had given the law unto it; as to the Phrygians, Paphlagonians, Bithynians, Myſians, and others of the neighbouring Nations. By Cyrus given together with Atoſſa his Siſter to Pharnaces a noble Perſian, who had ſaved him from the fury of a ravenous Lion running upon him with full mouth, as he was a hunting. A noble loyalty, and no leſſe royally rewarded. From him deſcended Ariarathes King hereof in the time of Alexander the Great, continuing ſtedfaſt in his duty to the Crown of Perſia, when almoſt all the reſt of the Kings of Aſia yielded to the Enemy. Nor did Alexander call him to accounts in his march for Perſia. But after his deceaſe, Perdiccas having the command of the Army, ſet upon him, vanquiſhed him, and moſt cruelly crucified him, together with as many of his kindred as could be found. One of his Sonnes, who fortunately had eſcaped this ſlaughter, ſpying his time, when the Macedonians were at warres amongſt themſelves, recovered his eſtate again, and paſſed it over to his off-ſpring: continuing in his line, without any ſubjection, till the time of that Ariobarzanes, who by Mithridates was deprived of his dominion, as was told before. Reſtored again unto his Kingdome by the power of the Romans, he became their Homager, holding, as did his Succeſſours, by their courteſie onely: Continuing yet in ſtate of Kings, till the death of Archelaus the laſt King hereof. Who having angred Tiberius, for not attending on him when he lived at Rhodes, during the life-time of Auguſtus, as did others of the tributary States and Princes, was by him then poſſeſſed of the Empire, cited unto Rome under colour of projecting ſomewhat againſt the State. Where the old Prince even ſpent with Age, the Gout, and ſome other diſeaſes, had without queſtion been condemned by the ſervile Senate: but that one of the Witneſſes depoſed, that he had ſaid that if ever he went back into Cappadocia, Tiberius ſhould find, quales ſibi nervi eſſent, what a man he was. Which moved ſuch a laughter in the Senate, the old King being neither able to ſit nor ſtand, that he was diſmiſſed: Tiberius thinking that he could not puniſh him more effectually, than to let him live. A favour which the old King conſtrued to the beſt, and in the way of gratitude, bequeathed his Kingdome at his death to the Empire of Rome. Being added to the Roman Empire, it was exceedingly enlarged by the addition of the greateſt part of the Kingdome of Pontus: and ſo it ſtood in the time of Ptolomy, who reckoneth Pontus Galaticus, Cappadocius, and Polemoniacus, as parts and members of this Province. Divided beſides thoſe into theſe eight Præfectures, that is to ſay, Clamanienſis, Sargaranſene, Gardaocreta, Cilicia, Tyanidis, Lycaonia, Antiochiana, and Cataonia. But Pontus, Lycaonia, and Antiochiana (he meanes Piſidia as I take it) being made Provinces of themſelves, by the Emperour Conſtantine: it returned unto its naturall bounds, and made one Province of the Empire, of which Cæſarea, as is ſaid before, was the Metropolitan: and ſo remained, till the Emperour Valens a great Patron of the Arian faction, of purpoſe to deſpight St. Baſil, who oppoſed that hereſie, created another Province out of it, called Cappadocia ſecunda, whereof the Metropolis was Tyana. After this it continued part of the Eaſtern Empire, till the erecting of the new Empire of Trabezond; together with which it fell unto the hands of the Turkes; by whom the whole Province with the addition of Pontus, is now called Amaſia; after the name of that City, which the Beglerbeg of Anatolia honoureth with his reſidence; and is ſaid to yield yearly to the Grand Seigneur 60000. Ducats.

6. ARMENIA MINOR.

ARMENIA MINOR is bounded on the East with Euphrates, which parteth it from Armenia Major; on the South with Mount Taurus, which separates it from Cilicia; on the West and North with a long chain of hills called Mons Scordiscus, by some called Mons Amanus, by others Anti-Taurus, according to the change of places; by which divided from Cappadocia. Of the reason of the name hereafter.

The Countrey of the same nature with Cappadocia, before described, in some parts over-grown with Mountains, by which and by the River Euphrates so inclosed and fenced, that it is difficult of entrance: in others pleasant and delightfull; well watered with sweet streams, and some fair Rivers issuing out of the Mountains, the principall whereof is Melas, so called from the blackness of the water thereof, which falleth into the Euphrates.

Divided in the time of the Romans into these four Regions, that is to say, Laviana, Aravena, Melitene, lying on the Euphrates; Marianna more within the land towards Cappadocia: each of which had their severall Cities, whose names are to be found in Ptolomie. The principall 1. Melitene, the chief City of the Region so called, and the Metropolis of the lesser Armenia. Called afterwards Malaxia, and now Sunr: the territory thereof abounding in Oyle and Wine, not inferiour to the best of Greece. The City said by Onuphrius to be a Colonie of the Romans: much spoken of by Eusebius and other writers of Ecclesiasticall story, for the piety of the Christians there inhabiting in the fiery times of Persecution. 2. Nicopolis, and 3. Oromandus in the Mountain Countries; the former built by Pompey, in memory of his victory there obtained against the forces of Tigranes, King of Syria and both Armonia's. 4. Garnace, a well fortified town, mentioned by Tacitus in the twelfth book of his Annals, and by him called Gorneas. 5. Cuonsun, and 6. Arabyssus, memorable for the exile of Saint Chrysostome, Patriarch of Constantinople, confined unto these places by the power and malice of the Empresse Eudoxia, by whom hated for his Orthodoxie in points of faith; who dying afterwards at Comana of Cappadocia, was there interred.

This Countrey was once part of Cappadocia, till the Armenians by their incursions and Colonies possessed themselves of it, and gave unto it the name of Armenia Minor: continuing part of their estate till the warre of Mithridates against the Romans. Who being discomfited by Lucullus, fled with two thousand horse to the Court of Tigranes the Armenian, who had married his daughter. By whom at first neglected, and not suffered to come into his presence; but afterwards on the apprehension of the common danger more esteemed and set by: insomuch that his royall entertainment there, and the refusall of Tigranes to yield him up when required by the Romans: occasioned Lucullus to bring his forces into these parts, subduing all before him to the bankes of Euphrates. His victories being seconded by Pompey, and confirmed by Augustus, this Countrey was made a Province of the Roman Empire: the greater Armenia, lying on the other side of that River, though conquered also in that warre, not being taken into the accompt of the Roman Provinces, till the time of Traian; Augustus thinking it an high point of wisdome (as no doubt it was) not to extend the Empire beyond those bankes. After this it continued Roman, till the declining times of the Eastern Empire; when wasted by the Persians, and subdued by the Turkes; by whom called Genech, or as some say Pegia.

And so much of the Provinces of the Pontick Diocese lying within Anatolia, or Asia Minor; converted to the Christian faith by the two great Apostles of Jews and Gentiles; as appeareth by Saint Paul's Epistle to the Galatians, and Saint Peter's to the Strangers dispersed in Pontus, Galatia, Cappadocia, Asia, and Bithynnia.

7. ASIA PROPRIA.

COme we now to the ASIAN Diocese, and first to that part thereof which Ptolomie and others (for the reasons spoken of before) call Asia Propria. Antiently the most rich and flourishing part of all this Peninsula; and so affirmed to be by Tullie, who telleth us that the tributes which the Romans had from other places, hardly sufficed to defray the publick charges for defence thereof. Asia vero tam opima est & fertilis ut & ubertate agrorum, & varietate fructuum, & magnitudine pastionis, & multitudine earum rerum quæ exportentur, facile omnibus terris antecellat. But as for Asia (saith he) it is so fertile and so rich, that for the fruitfulnesse of the fields, variety of fruites, largenesse of pasture-grounds, and quantity of commodities which were brought from thence; it very easily excelled all other Countreys. The fortunes of the severall Provinces we shall see anon. Brought under the command of the Persians, they continued subject to that Crown, for some generations: but at last taken from them by the Grecians, under the prosperous ensignes of victorious Alexander. After whose decease, the Empire being divided among his Captains, Asia fell to the share of Antigonus; whose sonne Demetrius seized on the Kingdome of Macedonia: and left Asia to Seleucus Nicanor, King of Syria and the East, being also one of Alexander's heires. The sixt from this Seleucus was Antiochus called the Great: who waging warre with young Ptolomy Philopaters, King of Egypt, committed by his father to the protection of the Romans; and otherwise practising against their estate; provoked the Senate of Rome to send Scipio (surnamed from his Asian victories) Asiaticus against him: who compelled him to forsake Asia, which the Romans presently took into their possions. But finding it agreeable to the present estate of their Affaires (the Kingdome of Macedonia standing in their way) to make further use of Eumenes King of Pergamus, and the people of Rhodes, who had been aiding to them in the former warre; they gave unto Eumenes the Provinces of Lycaonia, Phrygia, Phrygia, Myſia, Ionia, Lydia, Lycia and Caria to the Rhodians: knowing full well, that they could eaſily take them back again, when they ſaw occaſion. More hereof in the ſtory of the Kings of Pergamus: on the deceaſe of Attalus the laſt King thereof, theſe Provinces returning fully to the power of the Romans.

It contained only after the accompt of Cicero, the Provinces of Phrygia, Myſia, Caria, Lydia, as he reckoneth them up in his Oration for Flaccus: computing the two Phrygia's for one Province only, and comprehending Æolis and Ionia, under that of Lydia. But for our more punctuall and particular proceeding in it, we will conſider it as divided into 1. Phrygia Minor. 2. Phrygia Major. 3. Myſia. 4. Æolis and Ionia, or Aſia more eſpecially ſo called. 5. Lydia, and 6. Caria.

8. PHRYGIA MINOR.

PHRYGIA MINOR, is bounded on the Eaſt with Myſia, interpoſing betwixt it and the Greater Phrygia; on the Weſt, with the Helleſpont; on the North, with the Propontis; on the South, with the Ægean Sea. Called Phrygia from Phryx a River in the Greater Phrygia; or as ſome ſay, from Phryxus, the ſonne of Athamas King of Thebes; who flying from the treacherous ſnares of his Mother in law, did here ſeat himſelf. Minor was added to it to diſtinguiſh it from the other Phrygia, which being the bigger of the two had the name of Major. It was alſo called Phrygia Helleſpontiaca, from its ſituation on that Streit: and Troas, from Troas the chief City of it; by which name it occurreth in the book of the Acts. It was called alſo Epictetus, but the reaſon of the name I finde not, except it came from the Epicteti, a People dwelling on the Eaſt parts of Bithynnia, and conſequently neere this place.

Chief Rivers of it, 1. Scamander, on whoſe Bankes ſtood the renowned Citie of Troy, honoured by Heſiod with the title of Divine Scamander: in which the Virgins of this Countrey a litle before they were to be married uſed to bath themſelves, and to ſay theſe words, λάβε τὴν ἐμὴν Σκάμανδρε παρθενίαν, that is to ſay, Take O Scamander my Virginity. Which opportunity, Cimon an Athenian taking, clapped a Coronet of Reeds upon his head, like a River-god, and ſo deflowred Callirhoe a noble Virgin, then betrothed to another: occaſioning thereby the leaving off of this fooliſh cuſtome. It was alſo called Xanthus by the Poets, Xanthúmq; bibiſſent, as in Virgil; and watered a litle Region called Lycia, of which more anon. 2. Æſopus, parting this litle Region from the Leſſer Myſia; the boundary of it on the North, as the Promontory called Lectium is the furtheſt point of it towards the South. 3. Simoeis, now called Simores, falling into the Helleſpont not far from the Promontorie called Rhœteum (memorable for the Statue and Sepulchre of Ajax): but riſing out of Mount Ida, an hill of this Region, on which Paris (being by his Father expoſed to the fury of wild Beaſts) judged the controverſy of the golden ball in favour of Venus; reſpecting neither the great riches of Juno, nor the divine wiſdome of Pallas, but tranſported with a ſenſuall delight fatall in the end to the whole Countrey.

Cities of moſt obſervation in it, 1. Dardanum or Dardania, the Town and Patrimony of Æneas. 2. Aſſus, mentioned Acts 20. v. 13. by Plinie called Apollonia; who telleth us that the earth about it is of ſuch a nature that it will conſume a dead body in fourty daies. 3. Trajanopolis, whoſe name declareth its founder. 4. Sigæum the Port-town to Troy, neere a noted Promontory of the ſame name. 5. Troy, ſituate on the River Scamander, the beauty and glory of the Eaſt: called Ilium, and Pergamus for the reaſon to be ſhewn anon. A famous Town, from the people whereof, all Nations deſire to fetch their originall. The beauty of it may be (as ſome write) yet ſeen in the ruines, which with a kind of majeſty entertain the beholder: the walls of large circuit, conſiſting of a black hard ſtone cut four-ſquare; ſome remnants of the Turrets which ſtood on the walls, and the fragments of great Marble Tombes and monuments of curious workmanſhip. But certainly theſe are not the ruines of that Ilium, which was deſtroyed by the Grecians, but 6. Troas or New Troy, built ſome four miles from the ſituation of the old, by Lyſimachus, one of Alexanders Captains, who peopled it from the neighbouring Cities, and called it Alexandria, or Troas Alexandri, in honour of Alexander the Great who begun the work, but lived not to bring it to any perfection. In following times called Troas onely, and by that name mentioned Acts 20. v. 6. then the Metropolis of this Province, now a ruine onely, but every day made more ruinous then other by the Turks, who carry daily the ſtones and Pillars of it to Conſtantinople to adorn the houſes of the Baſſas. 7. Scamandria, a ſtrong piece, but of later foundation, cunningly ſurprized by Ottoman the firſt King of the Turkes, in the time of a funerall. Now concerning old Ilium, the buildings, glories, and fall of it, take this ſtory with you.

The Kings of TROY.

A. M.

2487. 1. Dardanus ſonne to Corinthus King of Corinth, having killed his brother Jaſius, fled into this Countrey, where he built this City, calling it Dardania; according to that verſe of Virgil, Dardanus Iliacæ primus pater urbis & autor.

Both of Troy Town, and Trojan race
Dardanus the firſt founder was.

2518. 2. Erichthonius, of whom litle memorable. 75.

2593. 3. Tros the ſonne of Erichthonius, who ſo much beautified and enlarged the Citie of Dardania, that from thence-forth it was called Troja, and the people Troës. By ſupporting the unnaturall malice of Saturn, againſt his ſonne Jupiter, he loſt his own ſonne Ganimedes: who being taken priſoner by Jupiter, who carried the Eagle for his Enſigne, is by the Poets ſaid to have been ſnatched up to Heaven by an Eagle. 60.

2653. 4. Ilus the ſonne of Tros, who built the Regall Palace called Ilium; and did withall ſo enlarge the City, and added ſo much Ornament and beauty to it, that it is frequently called Ilium, and the People Iliaci. The many Towers and Turretsof it, were of his erection, which being by the Greeks called Πύργοι, and ſometimes Πύργωμα, occaſioned the whole Citie to be called Pergamus. 54.

2707. 5. Laomedon, who new-built Troy: which afterwards Hercules and the Grecians (juſtly conceiving diſpleaſure againſt the treacherous King) twice took and defaced; Laomedon himſelf being ſlain the latter time. 36.

2743. 6. Priamus, who re-edified Troy; but giving leave to his ſonne Paris to raviſh Helena, wife to Menelaus King of Sparta, forced the Greekes to renew their ancient quarrell: who after a ten years ſiege, forced the Town, having loſt of their own men 860000. and killed 666000. of the Trojans, and their Aſſociates, A.M. 2783. So as that of Ovid was moſt true,

Iam ſeges eſt ubi Troja fuit, reſecandaq́; falce, Luxuriat Phrygio ſanguine pinguis humus.
Corne fit for ſithes now growes where Troy once ſtood,
And the ſoyle's fatted with the Phrygian bloud.

Concerning the taking of this Town, two things are to be conſidered First, whether the Grecians in theſe ten years lay continually before it, and it ſeemes they did not: but that rather they did beat up and down, waſting the Countrey. and robbing the Seas, for the firſt nine yeares; and in the tenth onely laid a formall ſiege. This is the more probable, becauſe that in the tenth year of the warre, Priam is recorded by Homer in the third of his Iliads, to have ſat on a high Tower; and to have learned of Helen the names and qualities of the Greek Commanders: which he could not be thought ignorant of, if they had ſo long together layn in eye-reach. Secondly, by what means the Town was taken, and here we finde a difference. For ſome Hiſtorians tell us, that Æneas and Antenor, being either weary of the warre, or diſcontented that it was not managed by their ſole advice, or otherwiſe corrupted by the Grecians, betrayed it to the enemy: but this Virgil could not brook, as prejudiciall to his Æneas; whom he intended to make the pattern of a compleat Prince. He therefore telleth us of a wooden-horſe: wherein divers of the Greek Princes lay hidden, which by Sinon one of the Grecians, was brought to Troy-gates: and that the people deſirous of that monument of the enemies flight, made a breach in their walls, that gate not being high enough to receive it. And that this fiction of Virgil might be grounded on hiſtory; it is thought by ſome, that over the Scæan Gate where the Greekes entered, was the portraiture of a large and ſtately horſe: and by others, that the walls were battered by a wooden Engin called an Horſe, as the Romans in after ages uſed a like Engine called a Ramme. Neither of which is much improbable: but with me perſwade not the integrity of Antenor or Æneas, for whoſe ſakes the fable of the wooden horſe was firſt invented.

The Citie being thus deſtroyed, the Trojans who remained in the Country, when Æneas and Antenor had forſaken it, began to think of ſome other place for their habitation: which having often ſhifted they fixed at laſt by advice of an Oracle, ſome four miles from the former; giving it the name of Ilium. A poor and ſorry village when Alexander came thither; who in the Temple of Minerva, (the onely one they had, and a meane one too) offered up his own ſhield and took down another, which he uſed after in his fights againſt the Perſians: honouring it with gifts, and promiſing the people to rebuild and inlarge their City. But what he lived not to make good was performed by Lyſimachus, who gave it the name of Alexandria, next called the Alexandrian Troas, at laſt Troas ſimply. A free City it continued till the warre of Mithridates againſt the Romans; in the courſe whereof Fimbria a Roman Quæſtor having ſeditiouſly ſlain the Conſul Valerius Flaccus in Bithynia, and made himſelf Maſter of the Armie, being refuſed entrance here as a theefe and a Rebell, beſieged the City, and in the ſpace of eleven daies took it. And when he boaſted that he had done as much in eleven daies as Agamemnon and the Greeks could do in as many yeers, one of the Ilians tartly anſwered, That they wanted an Hector to defend them. Afterwards Julius Cæſar emulous of Alexanders attempts, and deſcended from Julus of Trojan race, reſtored them to their liberty, and inlarged their territories: a Colonie, and an Univerſity of the Romans of no mean eſteem. But time and war, and the barbaritie of the Turks, have brought it unto rubbiſh, as before was ſaid.

In the diſtributing of the Provinces of the Roman Empire, this little Region, with that of Myſia Helleſpontiaca adjoining to it, made up the Province called by the name of Helleſpontus, ſubject with Æolis, Ionia, and the Aſian Iſles, to the exempt juriſdiction of the Proconſul of Aſia. Following the fortunes of Conſtantinople till the taking of that City by the Latines, it became then ſubject to the Greek Emperours reſiding at Nice: conquered not long after by the Turks of the Selzuccian family. In the diviſion of whole Empire on the death of the ſecond Otadine, the whole Province of Helleſpont, with part of the greater Myſia, and Æolis, adjoining to them, and ſome part of Lydia, were ſeized upon by Caraſus a man of great power amongſt the Turks; who here erected a ſmall kingdome, called from him Caraſia, or Caraſi-illi: long ſince ſwallowed up by the Ottoman race, in the time of Orchanes, ſon of Ottoman, and the ſecond King of that houſe.

9. PHRYGIA MAJOR.

PHRYGIA MAJOR is bounded on the Eaſt with Galatia; on the Weſt with Myſia interpoſed betwixt it and the leſſer Phrygia; on the North with Metapontus, or Pontus ſpecially ſo called; on the South with Lydia. Called Phrygia for the reaſons before laid down; the word Major being being added for distinctions sake, because the greater of the two.

The People of this Countrey were antiently more superstitious then the other Asians, as appeareth by the rites used in the Sacrifices of Cybele, and some other Godesses said to be also the Inventors of Augury, and other kindes of Divination. And yet for the most part men of after-wits, and all for had I wist; whence the Proverb, Serò sapiunt Phryges, applyed to those who wanted forecast, and knew better to lament misfortunes then to keep them off; and used not to bethink themselves of what would follow till it was too late. A people noted for effeminacy and lightnesse of conversation: and for fear they should not of themselves be wanton enough, their very Musick was so fitted as to dispose them to lasciviousnesse. Where by the way, I find three sorts of Musick spoken of amongst the Antients: the first, that which Aristotle calleth ἠθικὸν, because it setled and composed the affections; and Boëtius, the Lydian Musick, because much used by that people, before corrupted by long ease and ill example. It consisted principally of long notes or Spondees; such as is that supposed to be which Elisha called for, Kings 1. chap. 3. v. 15. to invite the spirit of prophesie to him, and was played by David before Saul to drive away the ill spirit from him. And of this sort was the Church-Musick of the Primitive times, fitted to calme mens passions, and raise their devotions; ut per oblectamenta aurium (as Saint Augustine hath it) assurgat animus ad pietatis affectum, that by the pleasure of the ears the passions might be calmed, and the soul inflamed with pious and devout affections. The second sort is that which Aristotle calleth πρακτικὸν, or Active (as the other ἠθικὸν or morall) commending it before the other in the education of youth, because more stirring them to action; consisting of Dactyles, or one long note and two short ones, by him and Boëtius both called Dorian, as most peculiar to that people. The third and last by the Philosopher called ἐνθουσιαστικὸν, or ravishing, because it unhingeth the affections and stirreth men to lascivious gestures, and wanton thoughts; consisting of short notes or Tribrachies; Boëtius termes it Phrygian, as most in use amongst this loose and ungoverned nation; such as the French Musick in our age. A sort of Musick forbidden to be used by Aristotle but upon the Theatre, for contentation of the rude and unpolished people, by reason of that influence which it had upon mens behaviour. Mutatâ Musicâ (saith the Orator) mutantur & mores; Curandum itaq; ut Musica quàm gravissima & sedatissima retineatur, that is to say, the change of Musick maketh an alteration of manners; care therefore to be taken in the Common-Wealth, that the Musick be composed and grave, and such onely used. But see how farre this fidling humour hath led me out of the way; I return again.

The Countrey very rich and pleasant, well watered with the River Sangarius and Marsyas. Of which the former hath its spring or fountain in this Countrey, but his fall in the Euxine; on the banks whereof standeth the City Gordium, and many others of good note. The later was so called from one Marsyas, who striving with Apollo for preheminence in Musick, was by him flead: which fact (say the Poets) was so lamented, that from the tears of the mourners grew this River. The chief Townes are 1. Gordion, the seat of Gordius, who from a plowman being raised and chosen King of this Kingdome; placed the furniture of his waine and Oxen in the Temple of Apollo, tied in such a knot; that the Monarchy of the world was promised to him that could untie it: which when Alexander had tried and could not undo it, he cut it with his sword. 2. Midaium, the seat of Midas, son to this Gordius, who being not a little covetous, intreated of Bacchus, that what ever he touched should be turned into gold; which petition granted, he was almost starved, his very victuall turned into gold till he had repealed his wish; and afterward for preferring Pan's pipe before Apollo's Harpe, his head was adorned with a comely paire of Asses eares. 3. Colosse where dwelt the Colossians, to whom Saint Paul writ one of his Epistles. 4. Pessinus where the Goddesse Cybele being worshipped, was called Dea Pessinuntia. The Romans were once told by an Oracle, that they should be Lords of the world, if they could get this Goddesse into their possession. Hereupon they send to the Phrygians to demand it. The Phrygians willing to please a potent neighbour especially the Romans, being their Countrey-men, as descended from Æneas and his Troians; granted their request, and the Goddesse is shipp'd away for Rome. But behold the unluckinesse of fortune. The Ship, Goddesse and all made a stand in Tiber; neither could it be advanced forward by force or art. It hapned that one of the Vestall Virgins named Claudia, being suspected of unchastity, resolved to put her self upon this experiment: and fastning her girdle to the ship prayed to the Goddesse, that if she were causelessely suspected, the ship might be suffered to go forward; which was no sooner heard then granted, Claudia drawing the ship up the water to Rome; where I leave the people wondering at the miracle, as well they might. But to return unto the City, it stands in the borders of Galatia, and is by some made to be the City of Gordius, and the Gordian knot plac'd in it also; but neither rightly. Not far off stood the mountain Dindyme, overlooking the City, in which the Priests of Cybele had their usuall residence, thence called Dindymene. 5. Apamea, situate not far from the banks of Meander, antiently a most flourishing Emporie, & the Metropolis of the whole Countrey, till Constantine divided it into the two Provinces of Salutaris, and Pacatiana: making 6. Synnada the Metropolis of the first. 7. Hierapolis, and 8. Laodicea, two noted Cities in those times, the principall of the other Province. 9. Juliopolis, and 10. Tiberiopolis, so called from the Emperours to whose honour dedicated. 11. Dorylaum, &c. Not known unto the antient Writers, but of more note in modern stories, are 1. Sagnta, the habitation of Ertogul, Father of Othoman the first King of the Turks. 2. Chara-chisar, by the Grecians called Melampyrgos or the Black Tower. 3. Billezuga. 4. Eineg'oll, places of consequence and importance taken by the said Ottoman from the Christians in the first rise of his fortunes.

As for the Phrygians, they descended (as was shewn before) from Gomer the eldest sonne of Japhet, and Askenaz the eldest sonne of Gomer: of which, Gomer first placed himself in the mountainous Countreys of Albania; and afterwards in the more pleasant plaines of the Greater Phrygia, where the City of Cimmeris

(the poſterity of Gomer being generally called Cimmerians) did preſerve his memory. And as for Aſkenaz, he firſt took up his dwelling in the Leſſer Phrygia, and the banks of the Helleſpont, where was antiently a City and Territory called Aſcania, ſome Iſles adjoining called Inſulæ Aſcaniæ, the name of Aſcanius alſo very frequent in Troy it ſelf. An antient people they were doubtleſſe, eſteemed the antienteſt of the world by Pſammiticus King of Egypt, upon this experiment. Deſirous to inform himſelf to what Nation the priviledge of Antiquity did of right belong, he cauſed two Children to be kept in a fold, where they were ſuckled by goates; all mankind being prohibited upon very great penalties; to have recourſe to them. All the language which the children learned from their ſpeechleſſe nurſes, was no more then Bec, which in the Phrygian language ſignifieth Bread, and being of no ſignification at all in any other which was then known to the Ægyptians, gave up the Verdict on their ſide. But other Nations of the world not yielding to this ſentence, by a Writ of Errour, or an Ad melius inquirendum impannell'd a new Jurie; wherein it was pronounced on the Scythians ſide, Scytharum gens ſemper antiquiſſima. Where by the way, Goropius Becanus makes the like uſe of this experiment, to prove the High-Dutch to be the Original or Mother-tongue of the world: becauſe Becker in that language ſignifieth, as with us a Baker, or a maker of Bread. In this Countrey reigned Niobe, who preferring her ſelf before Latona, the mother of Phœbus and Diana, had her Children ſlain before her face by an unſeen meanes, and was her ſelf turned into a ſtone, as the Poets fable. Here alſo reigned Tantalus, who being rich, and wanting wiſdome to make uſe of it: is feigned to ſtand in hell up to the chin in water, and that too under a tree whoſe fruit toucheth his lips; yet both the one and the other flie from him, when he offereth at them. Of which thus Ovid,

——Tibi Tantale nullæ
Deprenduntur aquæ, quæq; imminet, effugit arbor.

In Engliſh thus.

Thou canſt not, Tantalus, thoſe waters taſt,
The tree juſt at thy lippes, flies off as faſt.

But this race of Kings being worn out by the tyranny of time or war, the Phrygians were made ſubject to the Kings of Lydia; continuing under their command till the conqueſt of Lydia by the Perſians: with which they fell together to the Crown thereof, not made the ſtronger by the acceſſion of effeminate Subjects. Gained from them by the ſword of Alexander, they fell unto Antigonus one of his great Captains: and on his overthrow at the battell of Ipſus, to Seleucus the Conquerour, the firſt King of that race: following the ſame fortune after that with the reſt of Aſia, till they came to be poſſeſſed by the Romans, and made a Province of that Empire. But Conſtantine laying to it the Greater Myſia made two Provinces of it: the one called Salutaris, from ſome miraculous cures there wrought by the Arch-Angel Michael, as was then generally believed: the other called Pacatiana, from Pacatianus, who in the time of the ſaid Conſtantine was Præfect for the Prætorium of the Eaſt, and divers years before had began his honours with the Lieutenantſhip of Britain. In the declining of the Conſtantinopolitans it became a prey unto the Turkes of the Selzuccian Family; poſſeſſed by them till the death of Aladine the laſt King of that race: when ſeized upon together with the Greater Myſia, and thoſe parts of Lydia which lay next unto it, by Aidin, a great Turkiſh Prince, and made a peculiar Kingdome, called by his name Aidinia, or Aidin-Illi; extorted ſhortly from his heires by the houſe of Ottoman.

10. MYSIA.

INterpoſed betwixt the two Phrygia's lieth the Countrey of MYSIA, bounded on the Eaſt with Phrygia Major; on the Weſt with Phrygia Minor, and the Ægean Sea; on the North with parts of Bithynia, Propontis, and the Helleſpont; and on the South with part of Lydia, Æolis, and the Ægean. So called from the Myſians, the Inhabitants of it.

Whether theſe Myſians were originally a Phrygian Nation, or ſome inter-lopers which thruſt in afterwards amongſt them, I find not determined. Moſt probable it is they were naturall Phrygians; being as ſuperſtitious in the worſhip of their ſeverall Deities, as any Phrygian of them all: and that they had this name given them by the Lydians, from the abundance of Beech-trees which grow amongſt them, by them called Myſæ. A people of ſo baſe and contemptible quality that it grew into a common proverb to call a fellow of no worth Myſiorum poſtremus.

The principall Mountain of this Countrey is that called Olympus, ſituate in the north-parts hereof bordering towards Bithynia: which as it is called Olympus Myſius, to difference it from Olympus in Greece; ſo the people of the Greater Myſia, where this Mountain is, are called Olympeni, to difference them from the Myſii or Mœſi of Europe. And as for Rivers, thoſe of moſt note beſides Æſopus, parting it from Troas, or the Leſſer Phrygia. are 1. Caicus, on whoſe bankes ſtand's the City of Pergamus, and from thence paſſeth into the Ægean Sea, at the Bay of Elæa, and 2. the famous River of Granicus, which hath his fountain in Myſia Major, and paſſing through Myſia Minor, falleth into the Propontis. A River memorable for the Victory which Alexander obtained on the bankes hereof, in his firſt eſſay againſt the Perſians: by whom upon the firſt noyſe of his preparations he was ſo ſlighted, that Darius King of Perſia, gave command to his Leiutenants reſiding in Aſia Minor, that they ſhould take him alive, whip him with rods, and ſo convey him to his preſence, A notoble example of pride and fall of the Perſians. But Alexander ſoon taught them another leſſon. For though the Perſians were poſſeſſed of the higher bankes of the River, with an intent to ſtop his paſſage; yet he reſolved to charge them in the face of their ſtrength: knowing full well that if he could beat them on a place of ſo great advantage, he ſhould not one-ly lessen them in point of reputation, but beget an opinion of himself that he was invincible. And so accordingly it proved, the Persians being vanquished by him, and all the Kingdomes and Provinces of this Asia, submitting to him on the noyse of the Victory (as an Enemy not to be resisted upon equall termes) some few Townes excepted. And therefore it was wisely advised by Machiavell, that he who takes upon him to defend a passage, should with his ablest forces oppose the Assailant; because in all invasions where the Nations invaded have been beaten upon a great advantage of place, as defence of Rivers, Streets, and Mountaines; they do not onely dishearten their Souldiers from dealing afterwards on even ground with that enemy, but leave no hope unto their fellowes and partakers, of being succoured and defended by such weak Protectors. Which caution if the Persians Commanders had observed either here, or at Pyla Ciliciæ spoken of hereafter; Alexander had not so easily subverted the Persian Monarchy. But the fatall period of it was now drawing on, and the men either naturally Cowards, or els prodigiously besotted.

It is divided commonly into Mysia Minor, or the Lesser Mysia, which lying on the West towards Troas and the Hellespont, is called sometimes Mysia Hellespontiaca; and joyned unto Troas by the Emperour Constantine, made up that Province which he called the Consular Hellespont: and Mysia Major, called from Olympus which was in it, Mysia Olympena, and the Inhabitants Olympeni; which joyned by that Emperour to the western parts of Phrygia Major, made up that Province which he caused to be called Phrygia Salutaris, for the reason formerly delivered.

Places of most observation in the Lesser Mysia, were 1. Abydus, standing on the narrowest of the Hellespont, opposite unto Sestos in Thrace; first built by the Milesians with the consent of Gyges King of Lydia, to whom the Countrey then belonged. Memorable both in the antient and modern story. In antient story for the famous resolution of the Inhabitants, when besieged by Philip the Father of Perseus King of Macedon. For being brought by him into some distresse, and hopelesse of good conditions from him, the young men of the Town who had bound themselves by oath to die rather then fall into his hands, set fire thereof, and barbarously slew themselves with as many of the women and children as could be met with. Which newes being brought to Philip, moved so little compassion, that he said he would give the Abydeni three daies leisure to die; and therefore would not suffer any of his souldiers to enter the Town, then set open to him, either to take the spoile thereof, or hinder this bloudy execution, till the three daies end. In Modern story no lesse memorable for the taking of it by the Turkes, in the reign of Orchanes the sonne of Ottoman, through the treason of the Governours daughter: who bewitched with the person and valour of Abdevachmen, a young Turkish Gallant, whom she had beheld from the Towers of the Castle, threw a letter to him as he drew neer the wall, wherein she manifested her affection, and promised to make him master of that fortresse, if he would perswade his Generall to raise the siege, and come with a strong party in the dead time of the night to receive it from her, which was done accordingly. The Town continuing ever since in the power of the Turkes, well fortified, and one of the two Castles spoken of before, which defend Constantinople on that side from all force by Sea. 2. Cyzicus, seated in the Propontis, in an Island of the same name also, but so neer the Continent that it joyned to it by two bridges. The Metropolis of the Consular Hellespont, by consequence an Arch-Bishops See in the prosperous times of Christianity; as were all other Cities in the Roman Empire, which were the Mother-Cities or Metropoles of their severall Provinces. A town of wonderfull strength and beauty, when first known to the Romans, called therefore by L. Florus, the Rome of Asia: who gives this character also of it, Cyzicum nobilis civitas, arce, mœnibus, portu, turribusq; marmoreis Asiatica plaga littora illustrat, that is to say, that the noble City of Cyzicum by the excellency of the Walls, Bulworks Haven, and Towers of Marble, doth beautifie and illustrate the Shores of Asia. Honoured amongst many other goodly and magnificent buildings with a glorious Temple, the pillars whereof being four Cubits thick, and fifty Cubits high, were each of one entire stone onely; the whole fabrick all of polished Marble, every stone joyned unto the other with a line of Gold. In vain besieged by Mithridates in the time of his warre, who lost before it by the sword, pestilence and famin no fewer then 300000 men; and yet could not force it. Afterwards ruined by an Earthquake, the falling Sickneſſe of the East, as before is said, it could never be restored to its former luster: the very ruines of it daily made more ruinous by transporting the stones and Marbles to Constantinople, for the Embelishing of that City. 3. Lampsacus on the same Propontis, in which the beastly god Priapus was worshipped in as beastly a figure: quem non denudo (as wittily Lactantius scoffeth it) ne quid appareat risu dignum; supposed to be the same with the Syrian or Phœnician Baal, so often mentioned in the Scriptures. For this and on some other reasons, Alexander had conceived against it such an high displeasure when he was in Asia, that he resolved to raze it to the very ground. And seeing Anaximenes coming to him as an Ambassadour from the Town to obtain his favour, commanded him to hold his peace, and sware as by way of prevention that he would deny whatsoever he requested of him: whereupon Anaximenes intreated him to destroy the City, which now for his oaths sake he could not do; and so this wicked City at that time escaped. 4. Parium, so called, as some say, from Parius, the sonne of Jason, a Colonie at first of the Milesians, of the Romans afterwards: Troas and this, the onely two Roman Colonies in all the Province. By Homer called Adrastia: as Lampsacus in the same Author is called Pityusa. More in the Land. are 5. Scepsis. 6. Hieragerme, both mentioned by Ptolomy, but of more antiquity then fame.

Chief Cities in MYSIA MAJOR or OLYMPENA, are 1. Dainta, in the North-parts not far from Olympus. 2. Apollonia, near a large Lake sacred to Apollo, in the same parts also. 3. Palæ Scepsis, or Scepsis Vetus, on a Bay of the Ægean Sea, joining upon Troas, or the Lesser Phrygia. 4. Adramyttium mentioned, Acts 27. where Saint Paul took ship to go to Rome. 5. Antandrus on the same Sea also, now called Saint Dimitri, named at first Cimmeris from the Gomerites or Cimmeritans here inhabiting (which sheweth that Mysia antiently was a part of Phrygia) afterwards Edonis, and at last

Antandrus

Antandrus, either becauſe built or repaired rather by the men of Andros, an Iſland of the Ægean, ſpoken of before amongſt the Cyclades; or becauſe the Grecians having taken Polydorus the ſon of Priam, from the King of Thrace, received this City for his ranſome, or rather in exchange for him as the word doth intimate. 5. Protoſelene, on the ſame coaſt alſo. More in the land. 6. Præpemiſſus. 7. Troianopolis. 8. Alydda, of which little memorable. 9. Pergamus, the Regal City of this tract, ſituate in a goodly plain on the banks of the River Cycus, of a ſmall Town or fortreſſe made a ſtately City by the Kings hereof, and beautified with an excellent Library containing 200000. Volumes; for the writing or tranſcribing whereof, Parchment was here firſt invented, which from hence to this day is called Pergamenum. Here alſo were thoſe coſtly hangings firſt invented which we now call Tapeſtrie; by the Romans called firſt Aulæa, from Aula, ſignifying a Hall; the Hall of Attalus King hereof (by whom invented) being the firſt room furniſhed and adorned herewith. Here was born Galen the famous Phyſician, living very healthfully to the age of 140 years: his health preſerved to ſo great age, by theſe means ſpecially. 1. Never eating or drinking his fill. 2. Never eating any thing that was rawe; 3. Alwaies carrying about him ſome ſweet perfumes. Finally, this was one of the ſeven Churches to which Saint John writ his Revelation. For though it were originally a City of Myſia, yet being near unto the borders of Lydia, it was reckoned as a City of the Lydian Aſia; within the limits whereof thoſe ſeven Churches were all comprehended.

As for the Kings hereof which flouriſhed here for ſome ages in ſuch wealth and ſplendour, they came but from a poor and obſcure original. The firſt of them one Philetærus, an Eunuch,, belonging to Antigonus one of the Great Alexanders greateſt Captaines; and after his death to Lyſimachus King of Thrace, by whom truſted with his money and accompts. Fearing the furie of his Maſter then grown old and tyrannous, he ſeized on the Caſtle of Pergamus, and therein on 90000 talents, which he offered with his ſervice unto Seleucus the firſt King of Syria. But both Lyſimachus and Seleucus dying ſhortly after, he kept the money to himſelf, and reigned in this City as an abſolute King: leaving the Kingdome at his death to his Brother Eumenes, no better man then a poor Carter, till raiſed by the fortunes of this Eunuch. Eumenes furniſhed with money though of no great territory, was able by the Gaules and other Mercinaries; not only to preſerve himſelf againſt the Syrian Kings who laid claim to his City, but alſo to enlarge his bounds as he ſaw occaſion. But the main improvement of this Kingdome happ'ned in the daies of Eumenes the ſecond, the ſonne of Attalus, the brother and Succeſſour of this Eumenes: who being uſeful to the Romans in their warres againſt Philip of Macedon, and Antiochus the Great, King of Syria, was liberally rewarded by them with the Provinces of Lydia, Phrygia, Æolis, Ionia, Troas, and both the Myſia's; which they had taken from Antiochus in the end of that warre. The reſt of the affaires hereof till it fell in fine unto the Romans, take here in this ſhort Catalogue of

The Kings of Pergamus.

A. M.

3668. 1. Philetærus, the firſt King of Pergamus, of whom before. 20.

3688. 2. Eumenes, Brother, or as ſome ſay, the Brothers ſonne of Philetærus, vanquiſhed Antiochus ſirnamed Hierax, in a fight neer Sardis, and awed Seleucus Callinicus, both Kings of Syria. 22.

3710. 3. Attalus Brother of Eumenes, reſtored Ariarathes the Cappadocian to his Kingdome, and diſcomfited the Gaules, compelling them to keep themſelves within the Countrey ſince named Galatia. A Confederate of the Romans, and by them much courted.

3754. 4. Eumenes II. Sonne of Attalus gratified by the Romans with the ſpoiles of Antiochus. He was an hereditary Enemie to the Kingdome of Macedon, which he laboured the Romans to deſtroy, as in fine they did; and thereby finding no more uſe of theſe Pergamon Kings, began to grow to leſſe liking with them.

3782. 5. Attalus II. Brother of Eumenes, to whom the Kingdome was offered by the Romans in the life of his Brother then leſſe gracious with them; but he moſt gallantly refuſed it, to the great indignation of the Roman Senate.

3792. 6. Eumenes III. Brother of Attalus the ſecond, and Tutor or Protectour to his Nephew Attalus, in whoſe minority he governed the eſtate as King.

3813. 7. Attalus III. Sonne of Attalus the ſecond, ſucceeded on the death of his Uncle Eumenes, and having held the Kingdome but five years onely deceaſed without iſſue, & bequeathed it by his laſt Will unto the Romans. But before the Romans had poſſeſſion of ſo great a Legacy, Ariſtonicus the baſe Sonne of Eumenes made himſelf maſter of Mindus, Colophon, Samos, and many other Towns and eſtates hereof. Againſt whom the Romans making warre were aided by the greateſt part of the Aſian Kings; not ſeeing their own danger and deſtruction to draw neer unto them, by letting ſuch a potent neighbour come amongſt them to undo them all. But the Romans got little by this warre, though they had the better of it. For being now made maſters of the riches and ſweets of Aſia, they took with them their vices alſo: growing thereby to great riot, and unparalleled luxurie: which overcame the rigour and ſeverity of their former diſcipline, and made them apt for faction, and thoſe bloody quarrels, which proved the ruine of their State. So truly was it ſaid by Juſtine, Sic Aſia facta Romanorum, cum opibus ſuis vitia quoque ſua Romam tranſmiſit. This Kingdome taking it in the largeſt extent thereof being thus ſubdued and ſetled as a Roman Province., had the name of Aſia, according to the name of the Greater Continent; by Ptolomie and others called Aſia propria: continuing under the ſubjection of the Roman Emperours till the tranſlating of the Imperiall ſeat unto Conſtantinople; as after that unto the Emperours of of the East, till conquered piece-meal by the Turks of the Selzuccian family. Which being ended in the person of Aladine the second, those parts hereof which lay next Troas, made up the Kingdome of Caraſan, or Caraſa-Illi, as those which had been laid to the Greater Phrygia; made up the Aidinian: both of them swallowed up long since by the Ottoman Kings, the Acceſſories running the same fortune as the Principalls did.

II. ASIA SPECIALIUS DICTA.

BEsides the Proper Asia spoken of before, containing all the Provinces of the Pergamon Kingdome, there was one part hereof, which antiently had the name of Asia, before it was communicated to the greater Continent, or this whole Peninsula. This for distinctions sake the Romans called the PROCONSULAR ASIA; because committed to the government of one of their Proconsuls (who had his residence in Ephesus the principall City of this Province) together with the Consular Helleſpont, and the Province of the Isles of Asia. This we have spoken of before, as also how the Countrey lying about Ephesus, had more especially the name of Asia, then any other: so specially that Erasmus thereupon inferreth that by Asia in the New Testament, (but more peculiarly in the Acts) is meant that part of Asia in which Ephesus standeth.

This being agreed on for the name, we shall bound it on the East with Lydia, whereof it was antiently a part; on the West, with the Ægean Sea; on the North, with Mysia; and on the South, with Caria. And having so bounded it, we shall divide it into the two Regions of ÆOLIS and IONIA: that of Æolis lying on the North, towards Mysia; as Ionia doth upon the South, towards Caria: possessed both of them by Greek Nations, and of them so named.

Principall Towns in ÆOLIS, are 1. Acarnea, over against the Isle of Lesbos, the Royall seat sometimes of the Tyrant Hermias, who being once a Scholler of Aristotles but unworthy of so good a Master, seized on this City, and here committed so great cruelties, that at last he was taken by the people, sowed in an Oxes hide, and so baited to death. 2. Pitane, on a little River so named, falling into Caicus, not farre from the influx or fall thereof into the Ægean: in which Town they had an Art of making bricks which would swimme on the water. 3. Elæa, on the mouth of Caicus, the Port-Town to Pergamus. 4. Myrina, afterwards in honour of Augustus, called Sebastopolis. 5. Cene, by Strabo called Cane, by Mela, Canne, not farre from a Promontarie of the same name. 6. Cuma, the principal and greatest of all Æolis, the birth-place of Ephorus a learned man of elder times, and the habitation of Sibylla sirnamed Cumana, to difference her from Sibylla Cumæa, so named from Cuma, a City of the Realme of Naples. 7. Phocæa, a Colonie of the Athenians, so named from the multitudes of Sea-Calves (the Greeks call them Phoca) which thrust themselves a shore at the building of it. The people hereof over-burdened by the Persians, and impatient of so great servitude as was laid upon them; forsook their Countrey, binding themselves by a fearful oath, never more to return unto it: and after many and long wanderings came at last into Gaule, where they founded the famous City of Marseilles.

The Inhabitants of this little Region are by Josephus said to be descended of Elisha the Sonne of Javan, who therefore calleth them by the name of Elsei. And it is possible enough that so it was: Elisha being planted in Greece where he gave name to Elis, one of the Provinces of Peloponesus; from whence some of his race in succeeding times might passe over into Asia, and possesse those coasts. For that they were a Greek people is confessed by all; the Æolick dialect or phrase of speech, taking name from hence. Not otherwise much mentioned in the course of story, then as partakers of the same fortunes with the rest of their Asian Neighbours before related, and so not necessary to be now repeated.

IONIA, as a larger tract, requires a more particular & punctuall description. For here the River Lycus falleth into the Meander, and here Meander and Cayster, two of the most famous Rivers of Asia Minor: (of which more hereafter) fall into the Ægean. Here is the renowned City of Ephesus, honoured with one of the worlds seven wonders, the long abode of Saint Paul, and the death and sepulture of Saint John; the Promontory Trogyllium, with a little Isle adjoyning of the same name, mentioned Acts 20. v. 15.

Principall Cities of this tract, are 1. Myus, on an arme of the Sea, assigned together with Lampsacus, and Magnesia, by Artaxerxes to Themistocles; when being banished his own Countrey he fled to his greatest Enemie for entertainment; and there met with more safety then Athens would, and more honour then it could afford him: So that he well might say (as he often did) Periissem nisi periissem. And on the other side, the King was so overjoyed at his comming to him, (as having now upon his side the man who had most hindered him in the conquest of Greece) that many times in his sleep he was heard to clap his hands and say, Habeo Themistoclem Atheniensem. In after-times, the water drawing further off, the soyle brought forth such an innumerable multitude of fleas, that the inhabitants were faine to forsake the City, and with their bagge and baggage to retire to Miletus: Nothing hereof being left but the name and memory in the time of Pausanias. 2. Erythra, memorable for the habitation of one of the Sibyls, from hence called Sibylla Erythræa; of which Propheteſſes we shall speak more when we come to Africk. 3. Lebedus, of most note in the elder-times for those publick Plaies, which were here annually held in the honour of Bacchus. 4. Clazomene, situate in a small Ilet, neer unto the shore, of much esteem amongst the Romans for the wines there growing; and no lesse honoured by the Asians for a beautiful Temple of Apollo seated neer unto it. 5. Priene, the birth-place of Bias, one of the seven Wise-men of Greece. 6 Ipsus, renowned for the great battel betwixt Antigonus and Seleucus, two of Alexanders chiefe Commanders; the Victory wherein falling to Seleucus, with the death of his Adversary, estated him in all the Conquests of his Master, except Egypt onely. 7. Teos, the birth-place of Anacreon that lascivious and drunken Poet, hence sirnamed Teius; the Ovid of the Grecians both for wit and wantonnesse: of both which it may well be doubted whether the smoothnesse of the verse, or the wantonnesse of their expressions be the more predominant. 8. Smyrna, a faire and antient City, on a Bay thence named the Bay of Smyrna: the greatest part whereof lay towards the Sea, but the fairest on the side of an hill overlooking the waters. Destroyed by the Lydians, it was re-edified by Antigonus and Lysimachus, two of Alexanders great Commanders; of good accompt in the time of the Romans, and one of the seven Asian Churches, to which Saint John inscribed his Revelation: Much traded and frequented to this very day especially for Chamlets, Grograines, and such stuffes; made for the most part at Ancyra the Chief Town of Galatia, and here vended to the forreign Merchant. For government of the trade whereof, and of other commodities of these parts, the English Merchants have an Officer called the Consul of Smyrna. In old time there was in it amongst others, a goodly Temple, dedicated unto Homer, said to be born in this City, and to have writ his Poems in a Cave hard by. 9. Colophon, most memorable for the Inhabitants of it, so skilled in horse-man-ship, that the side on which they served in warre was sure of Victory; whereupon Colophonem addere, to put a good end to any businesse, grew into a Proverb. It was also another of those Cities, which so ambitiously contended for the birth of Homer; of which there were seven in all, as the old Verses tell us, saying

Septem urbes certant de stirpe insignis Homeri
Smyrna, Rhodos, Colophon, Salamis, Chios, Argos, Athenæ.

Whether Homer purposely concealed his Countrey, that all places might challenge him for theirs, I am not able to say. But sure I am that Paterculus speaketh it in the commendation of Hesiodus (the next Greek Poet after him in course of time) that he had specified his birth-place: Qui vitavit ne in id quod Homerus inciderit, patriam & parentes testatus est. 10. Ephesus, the Metropolis of the Roman Asia, and the seat of the Primat of the Asian Diocese: memorable in the purest times of Christianity, for being the Episcopall See of Timothy the Evangelist, the first Bishop hereof. 2ly In that Saint Paul directed to the people of it, one of his Epistles; and 3ly for the burial of Saint John the Apostle, who by some learned men of the elder times, is said to have gone alive into his Grave, and that he is not dead but sleeping; building that thought upon that saying which went abroad among the Brethren, that that Disciple should not die. John 21. v. 23. And no lesse memorable amongst the Gentiles for that sumptuous and magnificent Temple here consecrated to Diana: which for the largenesse, furniture, and workmanship of it, was accompted one of the Wonders of the World. The length thereof said to be 425. foot, 220. foot in breadth, supported with 127. Pillars of Marble, seventy foot in height, of which twenty seven were most curiously engraven, and all the rest of Marble polished. The modell of it contrived by one Ctesiphon, and that with so much art and curiosity of Architecture, that it took up two hundred years before it was finished. When finished it was fired seven times, the last time by Erastratus, onely to get himself a name: which hap'ning on the same night in which Alexander the Great was born, gave occasion to that weighty but witty scoffe, that Diana (she was counted one of the Godesses of midwifery) could not attend the preservation of her Temple, being then busied at the birth of so great a Prince.

As for those Iones, or Ionians, they were no doubt the descendants of Javan the fourth sonne of Japhet, as hath been shewn before in our generall Preface: but whether they came hither out of Græcia, or passed from hence into that Countrey, hath been made a question. The Athenians boasting of themselves to be Aborigines, men growing as it were out of the Soile it selfe, without any Ancestors, report that those Ionians were a Colonie of their Plantation. But Hecatæus in Strabo doth affirm the contrary, Saying that the Athenians or Iones of Greece, came from those of Asia: for that Attica was antiently called Ionia, Plutarch in the life of Theseus doth declare expresly. Most probable it is, that Hecatæus was in the right; these parts of Asia lying so directly in the way from the vally of Shinaar unto Greece, that Javan may very well be thought to leave some of his company here, when he ferried the rest over to the opposite Continent. I know Pausanias ignorant of their true antiquity, deriveth them from Ion the sonne of Xuthus and grandchild of Deucalion: wherein he came so neer the truth, though he missed the men, that it was the grand-son of that man who escaped the flood, from whom both the Athenians, and those Ionians had their true Originall. In regard of which relations betwixt the Nations, the Athenians gave aide to those Ionians against the Persians, who on the overthrow given to Cræsus, pretended to the Lordship or Dominion of Asia, and conquered them in the time of Cyrus, the first Persian Monarch. Upon which ground, and the sending of fresh aid to them upon their revolt in the time of Darius, that King first undertook the invasion of Greece.

After this yielding to the times they followed the fortune of the strongest, subject successively to the Persians, Macedonians, Romans, Constantinopolitans, and Turks; till the death of Aladine before mentioned: when both Æolis and Ionia got a new name, and are now called Sarcan, from Sarachan a Turkish Captain, who on the death of that Aladine seized upon this Countrey, and erected here a petit Kingdome. long since subdued by those of the race of Ottoman.

12. LYDIA.

LYDIA is bounded on the East with Phrygia Maior, and some part of Pisidia, from which separated by a branch of the Mountain Taurus; on the West, with Æolis and Ionia, or Asia specially so called; on the North, with the Greater Mysia; on the South, with Caria. So called from Lud the Sonne of Sem, by some of whose posterity it was first inhabited. In the full Latitude and extent thereof, of, as antiently comprehended in Æolis and Ionia, the adjoining Provinces, it made the Lydian Asia spoken of before; within the verge whereof all the seven Churches were contained, mentioned by Saint John in the Revelation.

The people of this Countrey are said to have been the first coyners of money, the first Hucksters and Pedlers, and the first inventers of dice, ball, cheſſe, and the like games: necessity and hunger thereunto enforcing them, according to that of Persius, Artis Magister, ingenii q, largitor venter. For being sorely vext with famine, in the time of Atis, one of the progenitors of Omphale; they devised these games; and every second day playing at them, beguiled their hungry bellies. Thus for 22 years, they continued playing and eating by turns: but then seeing that themselves were more fruitfull in getting and bearing children, then the soile in bringing forth sustenance to maintaine them: they sent a Colony into Italy under the conduct of Tyrrhenus, the Sonne of Atis, who planted in that Countrey, called at first Tyrrhenia, and afterward Tuscany.

This Countrey was also called Mœonia, and was thought to have been the native soile of Homer, in regard that Colophon and Smyrna, two of the seven contending Cities, and those which seem to have most colour for their claime, were antiently accounted as parts of Lydia, as was said before. Hence Homer hath the name of Mœonides, and Mœonius Vates: and in some Authors, Carmen Mœonium is used for Homers Poeticall abilities, as Carmine Mœonio consurgere, in Ovid. Bacchus is also called sometimes by the name of Mœonius, but for a very different reason; viz. because antiently there were no Trees in all this Countrey, but the Vine onely.

Principall Mountaines of this Countrey are 1. Sipylus, and 2. Tmolus; this last of most accompt in regard of the great fruitfulnesse of it, covered over with Vines, and yielding abundance of the best Saffron. Chiefe Rivers of it are 1. Hermus, which rising out of Phrygia Major, passeth onely by the skirts hereof, and so falleth into a fair Bay of the Ægean, opening towards the Isle of Clazomene. 2. Pactolus, which rising at the foot of mount Tmolus, falleth not long after into Hermus; famous amongst the Poets for its golden sands. 3. Caystrus, no lesse notable for the abundance of Swans, which swim thereon, whose fountain is in Phrygia Major also neer the borders hereof; and his fall in the Ægean also over against the Isle of Samos. 4. Mæander, which rising out of a branch of the Taurus in the furthest parts of the said Phrygia, towards Lycaonia, passeth by Magnesia, and endeth his course in the same Sea, neer the City of Ephesus. A River famous for its many turnings in and out, 600 at the least, as Prusæus counteth them. Of which in generall thus the Poet

Quique recurvatis, lud it Mæander in undis.
Mæander plaies his watry pranks,
In his so many winding banks.

The Countrey by reason of these Rivers was exceeding fruitfull, abounding in all sorts both of wealth and pleasures, well cultivated and manured above ground, and under-neath inriched with prodigall veines of Gold and Silver, and some precious gemmes. Which made the people, after their overthrow by Cyrus, to become more sensuall and voluptuous and lesse fit for action, then any plot of their new Masters could have brought them to; had not the naturall delicacies of the Soyle it self, contributed to the advancement of their design. And yet before, they were sufficiently infamous for their luxury, and excesse of riot, when best seen in warres: so that it is a marvel they were able to prevaile on the neighbour Nations, and bring them under their command; as in the times of some of Cræsus Predecessors it is said they did. Unlesse perhaps they did participate of the temper of Mœcenas, the great favorite of Augustus Cæsar, of whom Paterculus hath left this Character: ubi res vigiliam exigeret erat sanè insomnis, providens, & agendi sciens; simul ac aliquid ex negotio remitti posset, otio ac mollitie penè ultra fœminam fluens. No man more vigilant then he in times of businesse, nor woman more effeminate in his times of leisure.

Principall Cities of this Countrey were 1. Sardis, on both sides of Pactolus, the seat Royall of Cræsus and the Kings of Lydia; till the conquest of Lydia by the Persians. After which time, being taken by the Grecians it so startled Xerxes, that he commanded one of his Attendants, to say aloud every day whilest he was at dinner, that the Grecians had taken Sardis; continuing that Memento till it was recovered. Which course (I note this onely by the way) was commonly observed in the Parliaments of France, as long as Calice did remain in the hands of the English; and might be profitably revived till again recovered from the French. Overthrown by a most terrible Earth-quake, (to which disease most of these Asian Cities have been very much subject,) it was re-edified again at the cost of Tiberius; continuing long after the Metropolis of this Province, and one of the Seven Churches of the Lydian Asia, of which the holy Spirit took such speciall notice. The others (besides Pergamus, already mentioned in the Greater Mysia, and Ephesus, and Smyrna, in the Proper Asia) were 2. Philadelphia neer or on the banks of the River Caystrus the second City in accompt next to Sardis it selfe: and honoured with the dignity of a Metropolitan as appeareth by the Acts of the Constantinopolitan Councill, where Eustathius Bishop hereof doth subscribe himselfe, Ἐπίσκοπος τῆς Φιλαδελφέων Μητροπόλεως, Bishop of the Metropolis of Philadelphia, in the Province of Lydia. 3. Thiatyra, honoured with the same privilege also, as appears by the constant Order observed as well in the Civill as Ecclesiasticall Catalogues of the Cities belonging to this Province. The reason whereof (for otherwise it was contrary to the practise both of Church and State, to have in one Province more then one Metropolis) was the respect had to those severall Churches in regard of their primitive antiquity, and the foundation of them by Saint John the Apostle, as it was generally believed. 4. Laodicea, by Ptolomy placed amongst the Cities of this Province, as it stood in his time, and before: but afterwards laid by Constantine to the Greater Phrygia, and made the Metropolis thereof (which honour Hierapolis had before enjoyed) it being well observed by Strabo, that the Romans did not dispose of their

Provinces

Provinces according to Nations; ἀλλὰ καθ' ἕτερον τρόπον διατάξαι τὰς διοικήσεις, ἐφ' ἃις τὰς πολίτας δικαιοδοσίας, but according to those districts or Circuits, in which they kept their Courts of justice. Next unto these, there were of especiall consideration, 5. Magnesia ad Maandrum, so called because situate on that River, to difference it from 6. Magnesia penes Sipylum montem, another of the same name neer the hill Sipylus. The first assigned over to Themistocles together with Myus and Lampsacus, as was said before. The other memorable for the great battell fought neer unto it, betwixt Antiochus and the Romans: the losse whereof falling unto Antiochus, occasioned the losse of all his Asian Provinces on this side of Taurus, and the payment of 15000 talents for the charge of the warre, besides some other hard conditions then imposed upon him. 7. Alabanda, opposite to Magnesia on the other side of Maander, the people whereof, immediatly on the overthrow of Antiochus, not onely sent Ambassadors to Rome to congratulate with them, as many other Nations did, but built a Temple to it, and appointed Anniversary Games to be celebrated in the honour of that new-made Godesse. A thing more to be wondered at in the Roman Senate for receiving, than in this poor people for bestowing on their City, so divine an honour. 8. Trallis, on the banks of Cayster, to the Inhabitants whereof, Ignatius that Reverend Bishop, and godly Martyr, writ the Epistle ad Trallenses.

That the Lydians were derived from Lud the Sonne of Sem, is testified by the generall consent of such antient writers, as treat of the dispersions of the Sonnes of Noah: to which opinion the neerenesse of the names of Lud, Ludim, and Lydi (or λύδοι, as the Grecians call them) seems to give good countenance. Nor shall I here dispute it further, as a point unquestioned: the tale of Lydus, I know not what Nobleman that should name this Countrey, being taken up amongst the Greeks for want of more certain truths. Once setled here, they grew up suddenly to a Kingdome; Amongst the Antient Kings whereof are numbered Manes as the first, Cotis, and Atis, and then Asius (from whom Lydia first, and after all the Continent, had the name of Asia) as his immediate Successors. After them I find mention of one Cambletes, said by Athenaus to be so great a Gourmandizer, that in his sleep he eat his wife; and finding her hand in his mouth next morning, slew himself for shame: and of another named Andramytes, as infamous for his filthy lusts as Cambletes for gluttony. But the race of these Kings ending in Omphale the Mistresse of Hercules, who made that valiant Champion spinne amongst her Damosels; the Heraclida or posterity of Hercules succeeded next: of whom there is no constant and continued succession till the time of Ardisius the nineteenth in order of that line, who began his reign not long before the building of the City of Rome. Under his successors the affaires hereof so exceedingly prospered, especially under Haliattes the Father of Crœsus, that Phrygia, Bithynia, Paphlagonia, Mysia, Caria, Æolis, Doris, and Ionia, acknowledged themselves Vassalls to this Crown: conceived both in wealth and power to be equall to the Ægyptian, Babylonian, or Median Kingdomes, till the Conquest of Syria and Ægypt, by Nabuchadnezzer, gave him the preheminence. But being come unto the height it received a fall in the person of Crœsus the Successour of him who so much advanced it. The Kings hereof from the time of the said Ardisius, take in order following.

The Kings of Lydia.

A.M.

3190. 1. Ardisius. 36.
3226. 2. Haliactes. 14.
3240. 3. Melos, who overcame the people of Sardis. 12.
3252. 4. Candaules, who shewing his wife naked to Gyges, was by him slain; who marying his wife, succeeded him in his Kingdome. The whole story is this. Candaules had to his wife a woman of unparallell'd beauty; And supposing the greatnesse of his happinesse, not to consist so much in his own fruition, as the notice which others might take of it, intended to shew her in natures bravery to Gyges the master of his heards. Gyges at first disswaded him from an attempt so foolish: but seeing no perswasion could prevaile, he condescended. When he had seen the naked Queen, and was ready to depart, Candaules cryed to him, Esto fidelis, Gyges: which words the Queen marking, and seeing the back of Gyges as he left the chamber, the next morning sent for him. When holding a poynyard in her hand, she gave him his choise, either presently to be slaine, or else to kill the King and take her to wife, with the Kingdome for her Dower. Of which two evils he made choice of that which he thought the best, and so killed Candaules.
5. Gyges the first of this new line, added Ionia to his other dominions. A Prince of so great wisdome, for the times he lived in, that all other Kings his neighbours fate as (it were) in the light to him; and he as in the dark to them: occasioning thereby the fiction of a Ring he had, by which made invisible, when and as often as he pleased.
3305. 6. Ardis II. the Sonne of Gyges. 37.
3342. 7. Sardiattes. 15.
3357. 8. Haliactes II. of whom before. 57.
3406. 9. Crœsus the last King of Lydia, subdued Doris, and Æolis; after which victories, he was overcome by Cyrus King of Persia: in which battell, a Sonne of Crœsus who had been dumb from his cradle, seeing a Souldier ready to kill his father, suddenly broke out into these words, Rex est, cave ne occîdas. After this overthrow, and the captivity of Crœsus (one of the richest Kings that ever was of old) Lydia was made a Persian Province, A. M. 3420.

The

The Lydians after this rebelled; but being again ſubdued, Cyrus bereaved them of all their horſes of ſervice, diſpoyled them of all their armour, and trained them up in all manner of looſe and effeminate living; weakening by this means a powerful Nation, which before that time had not onely maintained its own liberty, but awed all the Provinces adjoining. After this they continued Perſian till the Conqueſt of Aſia by the Macedonians, in the diviſion of whoſe ſpoiles they fell to the portion of Seleucus and the Kings of Syria: following the common fortune of the reſt of this Aſia, till they came under the power of the Romans. Made by them one of the Provinces of their Empire; it had the Lower Myſia, or Myſia Olympena annexed unto it: by means whereof the limits of each became ſo confounded, that the Towns and Cities of the one are many times aſcribed to the other. In the falling of the Eaſtern Empire it was made (as all the reſt of Anatolia) a prey to the Turks: that part of it which lieth next to Æolis, ſubject to the Caraſian Family; as the other part towards the Phrygia Major were to the Aidinian; of which before.

13. CARIA.

CARIA is bounded on the Eaſt, with Lycia; on the North, with Lydia and Ionia; on the Weſt, with the Icarian or Ægean Sea; and on the South, with the Carpatian. So called from Cares the Sonne of Phoroneus King of Argos, once the Lord hereof; Who is ſaid to have invented the Science of Divination by the flying of Birds, called Augury, though others aſcribe it to the Phrygians.

In this Countrey is the Hill called Latmus, the dwelling or rather retiring place of Endymion, who being much addicted to the ſtudy of Aſtronomy, found out the changes and courſes of the Moon, and is therefore by the Poets feigned to have been her Paramour. Others adde, that Jupiter hid him him in a cave under this Hill, and caſt him into a dead ſleep; (which notwithſtanding, ſhe deſcended ſometimes to kiſs him) whence came the old By-word, of Endymionis ſomnium dormit. Here is alſo in this Countrey the River Salmacis, ſaid to infeeble all ſuch as either drink of it, or bath in it: from whence the Poets raiſe their fiction of Salmacis and Hermaphroditus deſcribed by Ovid; and the Proverb of Salmacida ſpolia ſine ſanguine & ſudore, mentioned by Tully in his book of Offices, and there uſed for effeminate and wanton exerciſes.

Places of moſt note in it, 1. Miletus, not far from the hill Latmus, the birth-place of Thales one of the ſeven wiſe-men of Greece, from hence called Mileſius, and the Mother of no fewer than 75. (or as Pliny ſaith of 80.) Colonies, diſperſed in ſeverall places of Greece and Aſia; antiently honoured with the Oracle of Apollo ſurnamed Didymæus, whoſe Temple being burnt by Xerxes, was again rebuilt by the Mileſians, to ſo vaſt a greatneſs that it remained without roof, compaſſed about with a Grove, and dwelling houſes, and ſumptuouſly ſet out with coſtly workmanſhip. This is that Miletus mentioned Acts XX. to which Saint Paul called together the Biſhops of Epheſus, and other the adjoining Cities, ab Epheſo & reliquis proximis Civitatibus, ſaith Saint Irenæus the renowned Biſhop of Lions, Lib. 3. cap. 14. Antiently it was called Lelegis and Anactoria. 2. Mindus, which being but a ſmall Town, had ſo great Gates, that Diogenes the Cynick cryed out and ſaid, Ye men of Mindus take heed that your City run not out at your Gates. 3. Heraclea ad Latmum, ſo called becauſe ſituate at the foot of that Mountain, to difference it from many others of that name. 4. Borgylia, or Borgylos, as Plinie calleth it, where antiently Diana had another Temple, though not to be compared to that of Epheſus. 5. Miliſa, in old times famous for two Temples ſacred unto Jupiter; the way to which for 60 furlongs was paved with ſtone for the eaſier travelling of Pilgrims, and the better ordering of Proceſſion; the principall of the Citizens ſerving there as Prieſts, which office they held unto their deaths. 7. Primaſſus, memorable for the Stratagem by which it was taken by Philip of Macedon, the Father of Perſeus. Who meaning to force it by Maine, and finding the earth ſo ſtony that it would not work, commanded the Pyoneers notwithſtanding to make a noiſe under the ground, and cauſed great mounts of rubbiſh to be raiſed ſecretly in the night at the mouth of the Mine, as if the work went very well forwards: At laſt he ſent word unto the Townſ-men, that two parts of their wall ſtood only upon wooden props, to which if he gave fire, they ſhould find no mercy; which heard, the Citizens yielded up the Town unto him. So uſefull in the Art of warre is a piece of wit, that it prevailes ſometimes more than Mines or Batteries.

In the South-weſt of this Province, thruſting it ſelf into the Sea like a ſpacious Promontory, ſtands the Countrey of DORIS, ſo called of the Dores, a Greek people, who there inhabited. The principal Cities whereof were, 1. Cnidus, not farre from a foreland or Promontory of the ſame name, famous of old times for the marble Image of Venus, called hence Dea Cnidia. 2. Creſſa, a noted Haven-Town in the time Ptolomy. 3. Halicarnaſſus (now called Neſi) the birth-place of Herodotus, and Dionyſius named hence Halicarnaſſeus; two famous Hiſtorians: and the ſeat-Royall of Artemiſia Queen of the Carians, (called from hence ſometimes the Queen of Halicarnaſſus,) who in the honour of her husband Mauſolus, built a ſtately monument, accounted one of the worlds ſeven wonders; of which thus Martiall, ſpeaking of the Roman Amphitheatre erected by Domitian;

Aere nec vacuo pendentia Mauſolæa
Laudibus immodicis Cares ad aſtra ferant.
That is to ſay,
Mauſolus' tomb filling the empty Aire,
Let not the Carians praiſe beyond compare.

That the Carians were ſo called from Cares the ſonne of Phoroneus, King of Argos, hath been ſaid before. But Bochartus will rather have them ſo called from Car; which in the Phœnician language ſignifieth a Sheep or a Ram; with numerous flocks whereof they did once abound. And this may ſeem more probable, in regard that the Ionians, next neighbours to Caria, borrowing this word from the Phœnicians, called ſheep by the name of Cara; Κάρα, Ἴωνες τὰ πρόβατα, ſaith Heſychius, the old Gramarian. But from whomſoever they had their name, certain it is they were a very warlike people, eò avmorum pugnaq; amans (ſaith Pomponius Mela) ut aliena etiam bella appeterent; who when they had no warres at home, would ſeek out for action. A little before the time of Xerxes, Mauſolus reigned here, whoſe wife Artemiſia (lately mentioned) aided that King in his undertakings againſt Greece. Afterwards in the time of Alexander the Great, we meet with Ada Queen hereof, who aided him againſt the Perſians, adopting him for her Sonne and Succeſſour. Subject after her deceaſe to the Macedonians, it followed the ſame fortune with the reſt of theſe Provinces till the defeat of Antiochus neer Magneſia; in the diviſion of whoſe ſpoiles it was given to the Rhodians: incorporated not long after to the State of Rome, and made a Province of the Empire. Wreſted from the Eaſtern Emperours by the Turkes of the Selzuccian Family; the greateſt part hereof, on the death of Aladine 2d. was raiſed unto a petit Kingdome by the name of Menteſia, ſo called from Mendos (or Mindus) the chief City of it, the reſidue being laid to the Caraman Kingdome, both long ago ſubdued by the Ottoman Family: that of Menteſia by Mahomet ſurnamed the Great, who diſpoſeſſed Elias the laſt Prince thereof, Anno 1451.

LYCIA.

LYCIA is bounded on the Eaſt, with Pamphylia; on the Weſt, with Caria; on the North, with parts of Lydia and Phrygia Major; on the South, with the Mediterranean Sea. Environed on three ſides with the Mountain Taurus, which part it from the Countries above mentioned; by conſequence naturally ſtrong, and not very acceſſible: the Sea, for the ſpace of twenty miles ſhutting up the fourth. And here it is to be obſerved, that beſides this, there was a little Region of the ſame name, not far from Troy, not much obſerved by our Geographers either old or new: but mentioned ſometimes by the Poets; as in Virgill Æneid. 4. Qualis ubi hybernam Lyciam, Xanthique flaventa deſerit, &c. which is meant plainly of the Phrygian or Trojan Lycia: the word hyberna being added becauſe of its Northern ſituation in reſpect of this.

The People hereof were ſometimes called Xanthi, from Xanthus the chief River hereof, which riſing in two ſprings from the foot of mount Cadmus, paſſeth by a Town called Xanthus alſo, and falleth into the Sea. But generally they were called Lycii, and the Countrey Lycia, from Lycius the ſonne of Pandion King of Athens; who either conquered them, or did ſome memorable Act amongſt them, which deſerved that honour.

The principall Mountain of this Countrey, and indeed of Aſia, is the Mountain Taurus, which hath his beginning in this Province, extending Eaſtward to the great Orientall Ocean: of which ſomewhat hath been ſaid already, and more is to be ſaid hereafter, when theſe hils are grown unto the greateſt. One of the branches of it, and the moſt notable in this Countrey, is that called Chimæra, vomiting flames of fire like Cicilian Ætna: the bottom whereof was infeſted with Serpents, the midle parts grazed upon by Goats, and the higher parts made dangerous by the dens of Lions. Hence by the Poets made a Monſter, having the head of a Lion, the body of a Goat, and the taile of a Serpent; according unto that of Ovid in his Metamorphoſis.

Quoque Chimæra ingo mediis in partibus Hyrcum, Pectus & ora Leo, caudam Serpentis habebat.

In Engliſh thus,

Chimæra from a Goat her mid-parts takes
From Lions head and breaſt, her tail from Snakes.

This dangerous Mountain was firſt planted and made habitable by the care of Bellerophon, a noble Grecian, who is therefore fabled by the Poets to have killed this Monſter; employed upon this buſineſs by Jobares the King of Lycia, to whom he had been ſent by Prœtus King of Argos who was jealous of him; and ſent with letters to require that King to kill him. Whence came the ſaying, Bellerophontis literas portare; applied to thoſe, who were unawares imployed do carry letters tending to their own deſtruction: ſuch as thoſe carried by Vriah, to Joab the Generall, by command of David.

This Countrey was ſo populous, that antiently there were reckoned threeſcore Cities in it, of which ſix and thirty remained in the time of Saint Paul; now nothing left of them but the names and ruins. Thoſe of chief note were, 1. Myra, the Metropolis of Lycia, when a Roman Province; by conſequence an Arch-Biſhops See, when Chriſtian. St. Nicholas one of the Biſhops hereof in the primitive times, is ſaid to have been a great Patron of Scholars: his feſtivall annually holden on the ſixt of December, is celebrated in the Church of Rome with ſeveral paſtimes, and ſtill in ſome Schools here in England (as in that of Burford in the County of Oxon (where I had my breeding and my birth) for a feaſt and a play-day. Of this City there is mention Acts 27. v. 5. 2. Telmeſus, the Inhabitants whereof were famous for South-ſaying, and accounted the firſt Interpreters of Dreams. 3. Patara, or Patras, (formerly called Sataros) beautified with a fair Haven and many Temples; one of them dedicated to Apollo with an Oracle in it, for wealth and credit equall unto that of Delphos. 4. Phaſelis, on the Sea-ſide alſo, a neſt of Pirates in the times of the Reman greatneſs, by whom then haunted and enriched, as Algiers is now: but taken by Servilius, a Roman Captain, at ſuch time as Pompey ſcowred the Seas. And unto the Pirates of this Town the former Ages were indebted, for the firſt invention of thoſe ſwift Veſſels, which the Romans called led a Phaſelus, by the name of the Town; we may render it a Brigantine. 5. Cragus, with a Mountain of the ſame name thruſting out eight points or Promontories neer to the Chimæra. 6. Rhodia, or Rhodiopolis as Plinie calleth it, moſt probably the foundation of the neighbouring Rhodians. 7. Solyma, on the borders hereof towards Piſidia; the people of which were conquered and added unto Lycia by the ſword of Bellerophon, whom Jobares, with a minde to kill him according to the requeſt of Pætus, imployed in that ſervice. 8. Corydalla, neer the Mountain called Maſigrum, the Maſſycites of Plinie. 9. Podalea, the chief Town of Mylias; as 11. OEnoanda is of OEbalia, two little Regions in this Countrey.

The Lycians were in former times a puiſſant people, extending their power upon the Seas, as far as Italy. Subjected to the Perſian not without great difficulty; the people with ſuch obſtinacy defending their liberty, that ſome of them being beſieged by Harpagus, Lieutenant unto Cyrus the firſt Perſian Monarch, they firſt burnt their wives, children, ſervants, and riches, in a common fire; and then made a furious ſally upon the Enemy, by whom put all unto the ſword. To Alexander in his march this way towards Perſia, they ſubmitted without any reſiſtance. After whoſe death, they fell with the reſt of theſe parts into the hands of Seleucus. On the defeat of Antiochus at the battel of Magneſia, it was given to the Rhodians, for their aſſiſtance in that warre; but governed as a free eſtate by a Common Council of fourteen Senators, elected out of their principall Cities: over whom was one chief Preſident or Prince of the Senate whom they called by the name of Lyciarchus. In theſe remained the ſole power of impoſing taxes, making warre, and peace, appointing Juſticiaries and inferiour Magiſtrates, and all things appertaining to the publick government. A ſhadow of which power they retained when brought under the Romans, and a ſhadow onely: the Supreme power being no longer in the Senate of Lycia, but in that of Rome. Nor had their Lyciarchus any thing but an empty name, and the vain privilege or ordering and diſpoſing the publique games, wherein by his office he preſided. When made a Province of the Empier, it had the ſame fortune as the others had till it fell into the power of the Turks: after the death of the ſecond Aladine made a part of the Kingdome of Caramania; of which more anon.

LYCAONIA is bounded on the Eaſt, with Armenia Minor, from which parted by a branch of the Mountain Taurus; on the Weſt, with the Greater Phrygia; on the North, with Cappadocia; and on the South, with Piſidia. So called from the Lycaones a people of Lycia, or from the Lycaonians Inhabitants of Lycaonia a Town of Phrygia Major, who inlarging themſelves into theſe parts, gave this name unto it. Either of which I ſhould preſer before their conceit who derive it from Lycaon King of Arcadia, diſpoſſeſſed by Jupiter of that Kingdome; or think that Lycaon was a King of this Countrey, and not of that.

Places of moſt note herein, 1. Iconium (now Cogni) the Metropolis hereof when a Roman Province; a place of great ſtrength and conſequence, ſituated advantagiouſly in the Mountains for defence and ſarety, and therefore choſen for the ſeat of the Turkiſh Kings in Leſſer Aſia, at ſuch time as they were moſt diſtreſſed by the Weſtern Chriſtians; who under the command and preſence of the Emperour Conrade did in vain beſiege it; forced to depart thence with great loſs both of men and honour. Afterwards made the Seat-Royall of the Aladine Kings, the former race being extinguiſhed by the Tartars, and finally of the Kings of the houſe of Caraman, whoſe Kingdome, called the Kingdome of Caramania, contained all the South-parts of the Leſſer Aſia, that is to ſay, part of the Province of Caria, all Lycia, Pamphylia, Iſauria, Cilicia, Piſidia, and this Lycaonia. 2. Lyſtra, the birth place of Timothy the Evangeliſt, where Paul and Barnabas having miraculouſly healed a Cripple were adored as Gods, and not long after on the inſtigation of ſome Jews, which came down from Antioch and Iconium, moſt deſpitefully treated; Paul being ſtoned into the bargain, though it pleaſed God, to raiſe him to life again, Acts 14. v. 19, 20. Such was the divine pleaſure of Almighty God, that he that did conſent to the ſtoning of Saint Stephen the Protomartyr, and took charge of the Cloaths of his Executioners, ſhould ſuffer in the ſame kind wherein he had treſpaſſed, and feel ſome ſmart remembrance of his former Actions. 3. Derbe, honoured by the preaching of the ſaid Apoſtles. 4. Laranda, ſo called by Ptolomy, and ſtill preſerving its old name; the ſecond place for reputation next unto Iconium. 5. Adopiſſus. 6. Paralais. 7. Canna. 8. Caratha, with others named by Ptolomy, but not els obſervable.

Nor indeed were the Lycaonians themſelves, from whomſoever they deſcended, of any great note or obſervation in the former times: ſubject to Cappadocia when it was a Kingdome, and reckoned as part of it in the time of Ptolomy, when made a Province of the Empire. Diſmembred from it by ſome of the following Emperours: either to create new Offices and preferments for ſome Court-favourite; or to ſatisfie the ambition of ſome Prelates, aſpiring to the dignity of a Metropolitan; it was made a Province of it ſelf. Torn from the Empire by the Turks, it was at firſt a member of the Selzuccian Kingdome, as afterwards of the Caramanian. Which laſt founded by Caraman a great Prince of the Turks, on the death of Aladine the ſecond, the laſt King of the Selzuccian Family, was a great eye-ſore unto thoſe of the houſe of Ottoman, from the time of Amurath the firſt, who firſt warred upon it, to the reign of Bajazet the ſecond, who in fine ſubverted it, Anno 1486. as ſhall be ſhewn hereafter when we come to Cicilia; the laſt of the Provinces of that Kingdome, in the courſe of this work.

16. PISIDIA.

PISIDIA, hath on the East, Armenia Minor; on the West, some parts of Lycia and Phrygia Major; on the North, Lycaonia; on the South, Pamphylia, and some part of Cilicia; from which parted by the main body of Mount Taurus. So called from the Pisidæ, the Inhabitants of it; but the reason of their name I find not amongst my Authors.

The Countrey small, but furnished with great plenty of all provisions, as appeareth by that passage of Livie, where speaking of the expedition of Manlius unto these parts, he telleth us that he came into the fields of Sagalassa (one of the Cities hereof) being of a rich soyl, and plentifull of all manner of fruit. Inde ventum est (saith he) in agrum Sagallassarum, uberem fertilemq; omni genere frugum. But this to be understood onely of the plains and champain; the mountainous parts hereof, being (like others of that nature) poor and barren.

Towns of most observation in it, 1. Antioch, the Metropolis hereof, when a Province of the Roman Empire, called for distinctions sake Antiochia Pisidiæ, mention of which is made Acts 4. and of the Jews Synagogue therein, honoured by Saint Pauls preaching, the summe of whose divine Sermon is there repeated. Built by Seleucus the first King of Syria of the Macedon race, and by him so called in honour of his Father Antiochus. 2. Seleucia, the foundation of the same Seleucus, called also to distinguish it from others of that name, Seleucia Pisidiæ. 3. Lysinnia, on the borders hereof towards Phrygia. 4. Selge a Colonie of the Lacedemonians. 5. Sagalassa, situate in the most fruitfull part of all this Countrey, as appears by that of Livie before mentioned. 6. Cremna, which onely had the honour of a Roman Colonie. 7. Termessus strongly situate in the Straits of the Mounts; the hilly Countrey about which hath the name of Milyes. 8. Olbanissa. 9. Plutanessus, of which little memorable.

As for these Pisidæ, they were originally descended of the Solymi, Inhabitants of the borders of Lycia. A valiant People, and so affirmed to be by Livie, who calleth them longè optimos bello. Nor did he speak it without cause, this small Nation holding out against the Persians, and not conquered by them, when their great neighbours were subdued. Against these, Cyrus the brother of Artaxerx' Mnemon King of Persia did pretend a quarrell, as if they had trespassed on the borders of his Province. Which though perhaps they had not done, yet this gave him good occasion to leavy an Army, pretending revenge on them; but intending to dispossess his brother of the Persian Monarchy: but Tisaphernes Lieutenant to the King in Asia, seeing greater preparations than were sufficient to oppose the weak Pisidians, made the King acquainted with his suspitions; who accordingly provided for resistance. The Army of Cyrus consisting of 12000 Grecians, and 100000 Persians: the Kings forces were no fewer than 900000 fighting men. They met at Cunaxa, not far from Babylon, where Cyrus lost both the victory and his life. The Grecians, who had made their side good, and stood in honourable terms of composition, being by Tisaphernes betrayed, lost the best of their company. The rest under the conduct of Xenophon, made safe retreat home in despight of 200000 men which followed at their heels. This Xenophon, was an agent in, and the historian of this expedition: by whose example the Spartans first, and after them the Macedonians, were encouraged to attempt the conquest of Persia. But to return to these Pisidians, they fell with others of their neighbours, under the power of the Macedonians, and were made part of the Dominion of Seleucus. Abandoned by Antiochus to the will of the Romans, and setled in obedience by the Military progress of Manlius, spoken of before; they were in Ptolomies time annexed to Pamphylia, as a part thereof. Afterwards made a distinct Province of it self, and so continued till those parts of the Eastern Empire were subdued by the Turks: first part of the Selzuccian, and Aladinian Kingdomes, after of the Kingdome of Caramania; whereof more anon.

17. PAMPHYLIA.

PAMPHYLIA, is bounded on the East, with Isauria and Cilicia; and on the West, with Lycia, from which parted by a branch of the Taurus; on the North, with Pisidia, separated from it by the main body of that Mountain; and on the South, with the Mediterranean Sea, which in those parts which lie next to it is called Mare Pamphylium. The reason of the name I find not, unless we think with Metaphrastes that it was so named, quod ex omnibus gentibus conflata esset, because inhabited by a mixture of many Nations: for so Pamphylia in the Greek tongue doth expressly signifie. And probable enough it is, that lying neer unto the Sea with an open shore, opposite to Africk, neer Syria, and not far from Greece, severall Nations from those parts might repair unto it; and from thence the name.

The Countrey for the most part is very mountainous, over-run with the Branches of Mount Taurus; but those branches feed great store of Goats, of whose hair are made abundance of Chamlets and Grograines, not inferiour unto Silks for fineness. Towards the Sea, which for the space of a hundred and fifty Miles coasts along this shore, more pleasant, populous and fruitfull; well watered, and as well planted. The principall Rivers hereof, being 1. Cataractus. 2. Cestrus, and 3. Eurymedon;

Nigh

Nigh to which laſt, Cimon the ſonne of Hilliades, Captain Generall of the Athenian Army, overthrew in one day both the Sea and Land Forces of the Perſians. The manner thus: Having by plain force b ſck their Navy, of which he took and ſunk no fewer than forty Ships and three thouſand Gallies, he ſtowed the Perſian Veſſels with his beſt men, attired in the habit, and wearing the Colours of the Perſians in the tops of their Ships. In their approach the Camp was opened, and all prepared to entertain their victorious Countrey-men: but the Greeks once in ſuddenly put them to the ſword, and took twenty thouſand of them Priſoners.

Principall Cities of it, 1. Attalia, founded by Ptolomy Philadelpus King of Egypt, and for long time the greateſt and moſt flouriſhing Citie of all this Province; well fenced, and ſeated very commodiouſly for Trade, on a very fair Bay, now called Golfo di Sattalia, by the name of the Town but little altered. And though the Romans did conferr the honour of the Metropolitan City upon Aſpendus; yet ſtill Attalia had the ſtart in point of riches; and is to this day a wealthy and well traded Empory, the wealthier for the fair Taqeſtries which are herein made. Of this Town their is mention Acts 14. v. 25. 2. Perge, famous in old times for a Temple of Diana, and the yearly feſtivals there held in honour of her; from hence called Diana Pergæa · more famous in the fulneſs of time for Saint Paul's preaching in it, mentio- Acts 14. v. 25. 3. Side, renowned in times of Gentiliſm, for a Temple of Pallas. 4. Magydis, on the Sea-ſide, not far from Side. 5. Aſpendus, an inland Town, but ſtrongly ſituate; made the Metropolis of the Province in the time of the Romans: remarkable for the Fidlers or Muſitians of it, who with one hand both held their Harps and plaid upon them, keeping the other free for more gainfull uſes; whence the Proverb of Aſpendus Cithariſta, an Aſpendian Harper, by which they ſignified a Theef. The Town firſt founded by the Argines, the Colonie ſent thither being led by Mopſus, from whom the Countrey hereabouts had the name of Mopſia. 6. Olbia, not far from Attalia. 7. Caracenſium, and 8. Colobraſſus, two of the Towns of that part hereof, which had the name of Cilicia aſpera: as 9. Cretopolis, and 10. Menedemium, of that part which was called Carbalia.

Of theſe Pamphylians there is little to be ſaid in point of ſtory, but that they were for the moſt part on the ſuffering hand; ſubject from time to time to thoſe mightier Princes, who would not let their neighburs reſt in quiet by them. Being on the ſame ſide of Taurus, and of eaſie acceſs, they became firſt Vaſſals to the Syrian, and after to the Perſian Kings. When Alexander paſſed that way in his march towards Perſia, he took in all the Sea-Towns of it: the whole brought under with the reſt of the Aſian Provinces, by Antigonus firſt, after by Seleucus the great King of Syria. In the expiration of whoſe line, this People and their neighburs of Cilicia; being left to themſelves, and tempted by Mithridates to his faction, began to be troubleſome on the Seas, and and proved notable Pirates; and were the firſt Authors or inventers of thoſe great Gallies of a hundred and forty or a hondred and ſixty Oars a peece; which the Italians call from hence by the name of Pamphyli. But forced to leave this trade at laſt, being warred upon by the Romans with great forces both by Sea and Land (a fuller narrative whereof we ſhall have in Cilicia) in the concluſion of that warre, they loſt that liberty which ſo ſmall a time they had enjoyed; and were made Vaſſals unto Rome. Afterwards made a Province of the Aſian Dioceſe, they ran the ſame fortune with the reſt, till ſubdued by the Turks: and at the death of Alidine, were ſeized on by Caraman, and ſo became a part of his Kingdome. Of which we ſhall hear more when we come to Cilicia. And ſo much for the Provinces of the Aſian Dioceſe, (the Provinces of the Iſles excepted whereof more anon) converted to the Chriſtian faith by three great Apoſtles, but moſt eſpecially by Saint Paul, of whoſe travels through moſt Cities and Regions of it there is ſuch pregnant evidence in the book of the Acts. And that Saint Peter and Saint John had alſo their parts herein, appears by the Revelation of the one, and the firſt Epiſtle of the other: Paul planting, John and Peter watering; but God himſelf giving the increaſe. Paſs we on next unto ISAURIA and CILICIA, which though Provinces of the Dioceſe, of the Orient, were parts of the Caramanian Kingdome: of which having taken a Survey, and ſo cleared our ſelves of this Peninſula, we will then ſayl about ſuch Iſlands as make up the remainder of the Aſian Dioceſe.

18. ISAURIA. CILCI[illegible]

THeſe two, though diſtinct Provinces, I have joined together, becauſe the firſt was onely a part of the laſt; Cilicia antiently comprehending both. The fourtunes of both being the ſame alſo in point of ſtory.

ISAURIA, a mountainous and hilly Province, ſeated on both ſides of Taurus, hath on the Eaſt and South the reſt of Cilicia, whereof antiently it was a part; on the North, Piſidia; on the Weſt, Pamphylia. So called from Iſaurus, the chief City of it, when firſt made known unto the Romans; which being taken by Servilius the Proconſul, imployed by Pompey in that ſervice, reduced the conquered Countrey under the command of Rome, and gave unto the Conquerour the ſumame of Iſauricus.

The quality of the Soyl, and whole eſtate of this ſmall Province, take thus from Ammianus Marcellinus, who had ſeen theſe Countries. Ciliciæ lateri dextro adnexa Iſauria, uberi palmite viret, & frugibus multis; quam mediam flumen navigabile Calicadnus interſcindit, &c. "i. e. On the right hand of "Cilicia lyeth Iſauria, a Province of a wealthy ſoyl, plentifull of Vines and much other fruits; which "the River Calecadnus parteth in the very middeſt. Beautified beſides many Towns with two principall "Cities. 1. Seleucia, founded by Seleucus: and 2. Claudiopolis, into which Claudius the Emperour " brought a Roman Colonie. For as touching 3. Isauria, heretofore a walled City, and of moſt eſteem, " it hath been long ago deſtroyed, as yielding too ſecure a refuge to the neighburing Rebels; inſomuch that " now there are ſcarce any viſible tracts of its former greatneſs. And not much after, Hæ duæ Provinciæ bello quondam Piratico cæteris mixtæ Prædonum, a Servilio Proconſule miſſæ ſub jugum, factæ ſunt vectigales; i. e. " Theſe Provinces (Cilicia and this) heretofore in the Piraticall warre joyning with thoſe " Robbers, were brought under by Servilius the Proconſul, and made ſubject to the State of Rome. And here we have in brief, the nature of the Countrey, the names of the chief Rivers, and the principall Cities, with ſo much of the ſtory as relates to the firſt ſubjugation of it. What further doth concern it we ſhall hear in Cilicia, upon the which it did depend.

2. CILICIA is bounded on the Eaſt, with Syria, or rather that part thereof which is called Comagena, ſeparated from which part by a branch of the Mounta in Taurus, called Amanus; on the Weſt, with Pamphylia; on the North, with Iſauria, and Armenia Minor; on the South, with the Mediterranean, and Syria ſpecially ſo called. It was thus named as the old tradition was, from Cilix the brother of Cadmus the Phœnician, a neer neighbour to it: but as Bochartus (of whoſe humour I have told you often) from Callukim, a Phœnician word ſignifying ſtones, quia lapidoſa eſt Regio, becauſe in ſome parts, eſpecially in that which was called Cilicia Trachæa, or Cilicia Aſpera, it was very ſtony. It is now called Caramania, as the laſt Province of the Caramanian Kingdome, which held out for thoſe falling Princes, when the reſt was conquerd by the Turks of the Ottoman race.

The Countrey ſaid by Marcellinus, to be terra dives omnibus bonis, wealthy and fruitfull of all neceſſaries. Which Character holdeth good chiefly in the Eaſtern parts, which heretofore had the name of Cilicia Campeſtris; the weſtern parts lying towards Pamphylia, formerly called Cilicia aſpera, being rough and ſtony. But generally where the lands lie in ſeverall, and are duly cultivated, it anſwereth to the former Character: being alſo very well watered, and having a fair and large Sea-coaſt, for the ſpace of there hundred miles and upwards. Which notwithſtanding, it is not much traded, and but meanly inhabited, a great part of the Countrey lying in large and common fields, to which none can lay any proper claim, and therefore planted onely with Goats and Sheep: out of which the Commoners on all ſides raiſe good profit by cheeſe and butter, by their fleeces chiefly. Here is alſo a good breed of Horſes, of which ſix hundred yearly are culled out for the ſpeciall ſervice of the Grand Signeur. But as they have ſome profitable and uſefull creatures; ſo have they others as dangerous and hurtfull to them, eſpecially thoſe which the Vulgar Grecians call Squilachi, of a mixt making betwixt a Dog and a Wolf, which go in troops, and are ſo bold and theeviſh withall, as they uſe to ſet upon a man as he is a ſleep, and leave him neither hat, cloak, nor fardell, nor any thing they can conveniently get from him.

Chief Rivers hereof are, 1. Pyramus, now called Malmiſtra, which riſing on the North ſide of the Taurus, and forcing his paſſage through that Mountain, makes ſuch a noiſe in falling down the precipices and rocks thereof, as reſemblanceth at a great diſtance a clap of Thunder. 2. Orymagdus. 3. Calicadnus ſpoken of before. 4. Cidnus, which riſeth in the Anti-Taurus, a River of a violent courſe, and ſo cold a water, that as Pliny writes, it cureth the Gout: the waters of which proved very dangerous to Alexander the Great, the coldneſs of them ſtriking violently into his ſtomack; and deadly to Fredrick the firſt Emperour of the Germans, as he here bathed himſelf, the violence of the ſtream tripping up his heels, and he not able to recover was preſenly drowned.

Of their chief hils I need add nothing, having already ſaid that the Countrey is parted by Amanus from Syria; and by Taurus it ſelf from Piſidia and Armenia Minor: not eaſie of entrance by the firſt, but very difficult by the laſt: the Streits thereof called Pylæ Cilicia, or the Ports of Cilicia, being indeed ſo ſtrait, and almoſt impaſſable, that had they been guarded or regarded by the Perſians, as they ſhould have been, the progreſs of Alexanders victoties might have ended there But Arſenes, who had the charge of them, durſt not ſtand his ground, and ſo left them open to the Enemy: whom by thoſe Ports he put into the poſſeſſion of the Kingdome of Perſia. With better faith, though no better fourtune did the Souldiers of Peſcenius Niger make good theſe Streits againſt the Emperour Severus: the Monarchy of the World lying a ſecond time at ſtake, and to be tried for in this Cock-pit. For the Nigrians poſſeſſed of theſe Streits and entrances, couragiouſly withſtood the Severian party, till at laſt a ſudden tempeſt of rain and thunder continually darting in their faces, as if the very Heavens had been armed againſt them, they were fain to leave the paſſage, and therewith the victory, to the adverſe faction; having ſold that at the loſs of 20000. of their own lives, which Alexander had the happineſs or the hap to buy for nothing.

In the borders of this Countrey towards Pamphylia, lived a Tribe or Nation called the Soli, originally of Attica: but in long tract of time diſuſed from converſe and communication with their Countrey-men, they ſpake that language ſo corruptly, that from their barbarous manner of pronunciation, and as rude expreſſion, came the word Solœciſmus. Yet amonſt theſe were born three men of eminent note, that is to ſay, Chryſippus the Philoſopher, Philemon and Aratus the Poet; out of the writings of which laſt Saint Paul vouchſafed to uſe this paſſage τοῦ γὰρ γένος ἐσμέν, i. e. for we are alſo his offſpring, Acts 17. v. 28. That bleſſed Apoſtle thought himſelf never the worſe Preacher, for being brought up in humane learning at the feet of Gamaliel: nor held it any diſparagement to the influences of the Holy Ghoſt to make uſe of it in his Sermons, and divine diſcourſes. And therefore to prevent thoſe cavils which ignorance or miſpriſion might chance to make in times ſucceeding, he hath thrice vouchſafed the words and teſtimony of the heathen writers; viz. of Epimenides, Titus 1. v. 12. of Menander, 1 Cor. 15. v. 33. and that of Aratus before mentioned. So lawfull is it in this kind for thoſe of the ſpirituall Iſrael to rob the Ægyptians; and to make this Hagar ſerviceable to their Miſtreſs Sarah.

to be built by Solon the Athenian; but generally affirmed to have been planted by those of Rhodes and Attica: mistakingly called Heliopolis, by Qu. Curtius, which is as much in Latine as Solis civitas, or the City of the Sunne. On the site hereof then decayed and ruinous (the Town having been destroyed by Tygranes the Armenian King in his late warres against the Romans) did Pompey build his City of Pompeiopolis after his victory over the Pirates, who not onely lorded it over the Seas, and consequently obstructed trade and merchandize, but wasted and spoiled the Villages of Italy it self. Pompey being Victor, and having inflicted exemplary punishment on the Ring-leaders, with the rest peopled this new Town, and the Countrey adjoining; allowing them competent possessions, lest want and necessity should again inforce them to the like courses. An action truly commendable, and worthy so great a Captain, rather to take occasion of offending from the people, than after offence done to punish them. Hythlodæus in the Utopia, somewhat bitterly, though perhaps not unjustly, inveigheth against the lawes of England, for ordaining death to be the punishment of theft, Cum multò potius providendum fuerit, uti aliquis esset proventus vitæ; ne cuipiam sit tam dira furandi primùm, deinde pereundi necessitas. Whereas (saith he) the lawes ought to make provision for putting men into some orderly course of life, and not let them runne upon the necessity of stealing first, and then being hanged for it. 2. Tarsus, the birth-place of Saint Paul the Apostle, for that sufficiently famous, were there nothing else to commend it to consideration. But it was a Town withall of great note and consequence, the Metropolis first of all Cilicia, and after the division, of Cilicia Prima. The Inhabitants whereof had the privilege of Roman Citizens. Situate in a goodly plain on the banks of the Cydnus, and by some said to be the work of Sardanapalus the last King of Assyria; it being engraven on a Monument erected to him, that in one day he had built this Tarsus; and 3. Anchiala, another City of this Countrey, neer the Sea-side, and not farre from the Promontory Zephyrium. Of the same date (if the said Monument speak truth,) but neither of the same fortune nor continuance: that being utterly decayed, but Tarsus still remaining of great wealth and strength. Much spoken of in the wars of the Holy Land, and in the Stories of the Caramanian and Ottoman Kings. And thoughthe Tarsians to ingratiate themselves with Julius Cæsar, would needs have their City called Juliopolis; yet the old name survived the new, and it is to this day called Tersia or Terassa by the vulgar Grecians; but Hamsa by the Turks, as Bellonius telleth us. 4. Adena, the Adana of Ptolomy, a large Town but unwalled, instead whereof defended by a very strong Castle. Situate in a fruitful soyl, both for wine and corn, wherewith the Town is alwaies furnished for the use of those that are to travell over the Taurus, who commonly take in here three daies provision. 5. Epiphania, the birth-place of George the Arian Bishop of Alexandria; thrust on the world of late by some learned men (but of more industry than judgement) for George the Cappadocian Martyr. 6. Mopsuestia, as famous, or infamous, rather for giving title to Theodorus Mopsuestenus, Bishop hereof, and a great Patron of the Nestorian Heresies, in the time of Saint Chrysostome. The City otherwise of good note, and of great consequence, in the course of the Roman warres, described at large by Ammianus Marcellinus. 7. Issus, upon a spacious Bay, called hence Sinus Issicus, neer the borders of Syria: memorable for the great battel here fought betwixt Alexander and an handful (in comparison) of his Macedonians, and that vast Army of Darius (himself there in person) consisting of 600000 undisciplined Asians, whereof so many lost their lives, that the dead bodies seemed to have buried the ground. For partly by the unskilfulness of the Commanders, who chose so ill a place to fight in that they could make no use of their mighty numbers, and partly by the effeminatness of the Asian Souldiers, unable to endure the charge, there fell that day no fewer than 200000 of the Persians, 40000 of them being taken Prisoners, amongst them the wives and daughters of Darius; and not above 100 of the Alexandrians, if Qu. Curtius be not partiall in relating the Story. A victorie which assured Alexander of his former purchases, and opened a way unto the rest: the Persian not being able to make head again till he had pierced into the bowels of their Empire, and added Syria and Egypt to his former Conquests. Of so great consequence is one full Victory to the losing and getting of a Kingdome. This Town it self now called Aiazzo, and the great Bay on which it standeth Golfo di Aiazzo. 8. Alexandria, built by command of the Conquerour neer the place of battel, commodiously for trade, as upon the Sea, but otherwise in a fenny and boggy soyl, which makes the air there to be very unwholesome to men not used to it; little now remaining, but a few houses on the Seashore built of straw and mudd, hardly affording it the reputation of a sorry village; and would not long continue such, but that it is the neerest Haven to the Town of Aleppo (whereof more in Syria) which draweth unto it the resort of some Christian Factors, whose houses are of clay and timber, but of them not many. The Town at first called Alexandria, as before was said; diminished first to Alexandretta, now called Scanderone. 9. Nicopolis, another of Alexanders foundations, so named in memory of his great Victory before mentioned. 10. Amavarza, a City of great Antiquity in the time of Strabo, and the Metropolis of the Province of Cilicia Secunda. 11. Heraclea, mentioned by Bellonius, and by him placed in a fruitful and well cultivated plain, at the foot of mount Taurus, a fair and large Town as he reporteth it, and distant from Adana towards the North-west about three dayes journey. But I find no such Town in Strabo, or Ptolomy, or any other of the Antients. 12. Scandeloro, a City of Cilicia Aspera, or that part of Cilicia which lieth towards Pamphilia, heretofore with the adjoining territory governed as a State distinct, when all the rest of this Countrey was under the kings of Caramania: against whom the Prince hereof, being a Mahometan had preserved his liberties, by the assistance of the Knights of the Rhodes, and the King of Cyprus. And when the Caramanian Kingdome was subdued by Baiazet; he made so good conditions for himself, that he had other lands and estates in the Lesser Asia, assigned to him in exchange for this, and so surrendred this to the will of the conquerour.

The first Inhabitants of this Countrey were of the Progenie of Tarshish the Son of Javan, by whom, or some ſome of his poſterity, to preſerve his memory, the City of Tarſus was firſt built; Increaſed in tract of time by ſome new Colonies out of the neighbouring parts of Syria, it followed for the moſt part the fortunes of it: ſucceſſively together ſubject to the Aſſyrians, Perſians, and Macedonians. In the declining fortunes of the houſe of Seleucus, they began to ſtand upon their own legs, and might have continued longer in ſo good a poſture, had they not hearkned to ill Counſails. Tempted by Mithridates to join with him againſt the Romans; of whoſe greatneſſe all the Eaſtern States were grown very jealous; and being naturally good Sea-faring men, they began together with the Pamphylians, to infeſt the Seas. At firſt they ventured no further then the ſhores adjoining. But after emboldened with ſucceſſe, and finding that the Romans were ſufficiently embroiled in domeſtick troubles, and a ſharpe warre with Mithridates, they fell upon the coaſts of Greece, and in fine of Italy it ſelf; Publius Servilius the Proconſull firſt imployed againſt them, gave them an overthrow at Sea: and following his good fortune ſet upon them in their Harbours and retiring places. In which purſuit he not only took from them Phaſelis, a ſtrong Town in Lycia, one of their Retreats, and others of their beſt and ſtrongeſt Receptacles: but waſting the whole Countrey of Cilicia, fell upon Iſaurus, the moſt defenſible Town thereof, which he took and ranſacked. No ſooner was Servilius departed home but they broke out more violently then before; filling all the creeks and ports of the Eaſtern Seas with their Frigots, Brigantines, and other light Piraticall Veſſels: inſomuch that Pompey himſelf thought it to be an action not unbecoming his greatneſs to undertake the warre againſt them. And he purſued it to ſuch purpoſe, that having armed 500 ſail of all ſorts, and ſtored his ſhips with 130000 men, he ſet upon them all at once; and in the ſpace of one ſole moneth made an end of the warre. An action not ſufficiently to be wondered at, if we conſider either the ſpeedineſſe of it, done in ſo little time as a moneth; or the cheapneſſe of the victory, purchaſed without the loſſe of one Roman Veſſel; or finally the importance and conſequence of it, the Pirates from that time not daring to infeſt the Seas, and all Cilicia ſubjected to the State of Rome. How they were afterwards diſpoſed of hath been ſhewn already. After this they did very good ſervice unto Pompey in his warre again Ceſar; of whom thus Lucan, reckoning up his Allies and Aids, Atq; Cilix juſta nunc non Pirata, carinâ.

And the reformed Cilicians now
No Pirates, in his fleet did row.

Nor were they pliant unto him onely, as unto their Conquerour, but generally ſo tame and tractable in the time of Cicero, one of the firſt Proconſuls or Lord Deputies which were ſent to govern them, that he writ merrily to Rome, that he found all quiet in his Province; ſave that the Panthars (ſome of which one of his friends had prayed him to ſend to Rome for the adorning of his triumph) were for fear of him fled into Pamphylia. At the firſt conqueſt by the Romans it was divided only into Campeſtrem and Trachæam, as was ſaid before; of which Campeſtris was reduced immediately to the form of a Province. Aſpera or Trachæa was a while continued under the Government of Kings, till the time of Veſpaſian, and then made a Province as the other. By the ſucceeding Emperours, on ſome reaſons of State (if not thoſe intimated in Lycaonia) the number of Provinces being increaſed (though the bounds of the Empire were no larger than they had been formerly) the whole was divided into three: that is to ſay, Cilicia prima, taking up all Campeſtris wholly; Cilicia ſecunda, containing the Maritime parts of Cilicia Aſpera; and Iſauria, taking up the mountainous parts of this laſt diviſion. Laid by the Emperour Conſtantine to the Dioceſe of the Orient; and conſequently ſubject in ſpiritual matters to the Patriarch of Antioch, where the Præfectus Prætorio Orientis had his uſual reſidence. In the falling of the Eaſtern Empire, it was conquered by the Saracens in the time of Muhaveas or Mnavi, the ſixt Caliph. Continuing under their command till their declination, it was recovered by the Greek or Eaſtern Emperours, and from them conquered by the Turks in the courſe of their Victories. But the firſt race of Turkiſh Kings being worn out by the Tartars, and the Aladinian Kings ending in Aladine the ſecond; it was part of the new Kingdome of the Caramanians; continuing theirs till the deſtruction of that line by Bajazet the ſecond, Anno 1486. by whom incorporated with the reſt of the Ottoman Empire.

Thus having made our Progreſs over all the Provinces of the Leſſer Aſia, and ſhewn how every one of them was made ſubject to the Turkiſh Tyranny: we muſt next draw down the Succeſſion of ſuch Turkiſh Kings as have reigned herein, till it was wholly conquered by the Princes of the houſe of Ottoman. Concerning which we are to know in the way of Preamble, that the Turks having made themſelves Maſters of the Kingdome of Perſia, and following their ſucceſſes into Syria alſo; fell to a breach amongſt themſelves. For making up whereof it was condeſcended unto by Axan, the then Perſian Sultan, that Meloch and Ducat two of his diſcontented Kinſ-men, ſhould be infeoffed in the Cities of Aleppo and Damaſcus and their ſeverall Territories; with whatſoever they could conquer from the Caleph of Egypt, poſſeſſed at that time of moſt part of Syria, and ſome of the adjoining Provinces. It was alſo then agreed upon, that a third but neerer Kinſman called Cutlu Moſes, another of the Leaders of the oppoſite faction, ſhould have leave to conquer for himſelf whatſoever he could win from the Chriſtian Princes; And he accordingly being furniſhed with a competent Army, ſubdued the Provinces of Media and Armenia in the Greater Aſia, with Cappadocia, Pontus, and Bithynia in Aſia Minor. Which and the reſt of their affairs take here in the enſuing Catologue of 1075. 1. Cutlu Moſes, Nephew to Trangolipix, the firſt Perſian Sultan of the Turks, won Media, part of Armenia Major, Cappadocia, Pontus, and Bithynia.

The Turkiſh Kings in Aſia Minor of the Selzuccian Family.

2. Sc-

2. Solyman, Son of Cutlu Moſes, for a while diſpoſſeſſed of moſt of his eſtates by the Weſtern Chriſtians, in their firſt paſſage towards the Holy Land.
3. Mahomet the Sonne of Solyman, recovered moſt of his eſtates in the Leſſer Aſia, but outed of them and ſubdued by
4. Muſat, Sultan or Lord Deputy of Iconium, but of the ſame Selzuccian family, who was thereby poſſeſſed of all the Turkiſh Provinces in the Leſſer Aſia.
5. Caliſaſtlan the Sonne of Muſat, to whom his Father left Iconium with the adjacent Provinces, wreſted Amaſia, and Ancyra from his brother Jagupaſan; Sebaſtia, and Caſarea, from his brother Doduſa; which with their ſeverall Territories were bequeathed unto them, by the will of their Father. He overthrow the Emp. Emanuel Comnenus, and united Phrygia to his Kingdome.
6. Reucratine, the third Son of Caliſaſtlan, having diſpoſſeſt his three brethren Maſut, Caſpatine, Caicoſrhoes, of the eſtates left them by their Father; became ſole Monarch of all the Turkiſh Provinces in the Leſſer Aſia. In the later end of whoſe reign, Occata the Tartarian Cham having driven the Turks out of Perſia, many of them under the conduct of Aladine, a Prince of the ſame Selzuccian Family, joined themſelves to their Countreymen here, with whoſe help they won Cilicia, from the Grecian Emperours, who in the reign of Calo-Johannes, (the Turks being then embroyled by the Weſtern Chriſtians) had not long before regained it: and after the deceaſe of Reucratine, advanced him to the whole eſtate.

The Turkiſh Kings in Aſia Minor of the race of Aladine.

7. Aladine, deſcended in direct line from Cuſſanes, the laſt Turkiſh Sultan in Perſia, having with many of his Nation ſeated himſelf in Cilicia, firſt made Sebaſtia, one of the Cities thereof, his chief Seat or reſidence: Which after the death of Reucratine, he removed to Iconium, as the antient Regall City of the former Kings.
8. Azalide, by ſome called Azadine, eldeſt Son of Aladine, waſted the moſt part of his reign in wars with his brother Jathatine; whom at laſt he forced into exile.
9. Jathatine, on the death of his brother poſſeſſeth the Kingdome; ſlain afterwards in ſingle combate by Theodorus Laſcaris, Emp. of the Greeks at Nice.
10. Jathatine II. Son of the former, driven out of his Kingdome by the Tartars, and dyed in exile: the Turks becoming Tributaries and Vaſſals unto the Tartarian.
11. Maſut and Cei-cubades of the ſame Selzuccian Family (but whether the Sons of the ſecond Jathatine I am not able to ſay) ſubſtituted in his place, as Tributaries to the conquering Tartars.
12. Aladine II. Son of Cei-cubades, ſucceeded his Father in the Kingdome, but as Vaſſall and Leigeman to the Tartars. After whoſe death leaving no iſſue of his body, the great Princes of his Family, divided amongſt them his Dominions. To Saracban fell Æolis, Ionia, and part of Lydia; from him named Sarchan, Sarachan, or Saracha-Illi; to Aidin the reſt of Lydia, Phrygia Major, and the greateſt part of the Greater Myſia, from him called Aidinia, or Aidin-Illi; to Caraſus, the Leſſer Phrygia, with the reſt of Myſia; from him denominated Caraſan, or Caraſa-Illi. To the Family of the Iſfendiars, the Cities of Heraclea, Sinope, and that part of Pontus, which lieth next to Bithynia. There were alſo leſſer Toparchies or ſub-diviſions, from whence we find a Prince of Smyrna, a ſecond of Amaſia, a third of Amiſus, a fourth of Scandeloro; beſides many others. But the main body of the eſtate was ſeized by Caraman, who for his ſhare had the whole Provinces of Lycia, Lycaonia, Piſidia, Pamphylia, Iſauria, Cilicia, with the Regall City of Iconium, the greateſt part of Caria (the reſt of it appertaining to the Prince of Menteſia) with part of Cappadocia, and Armenia Minor, and ſome Towns in Phrygia; continuing in his family for as many deſcents (as either of the former had held before) in great power and luſtre, under

The Turkiſh Kings in Aſia Minor of the houſe of Caraman.

13. Caraman, the firſt raiſer of this family, Contemporary with Ottoman the firſt King of that race.
14. Aladine Son of Caraman, and Son-in-Law of Amurath the firſt, of the houſe of Ottoman, by whom ſubdued, but pardoned and reſtored unto his eſtate, on the humble entreats of his wife.
15. Aladine II. Son of the former, ſubdued by Bajazet the firſt, and hanged by Tertumaſes, one of Bajazets great Commanders.
16. Mahomet, Son of Aladine the ſecond, recovered his Kingdome on the death of Bajazet, vanquiſhed and led captive by the mighty Tamerlane. Afterwards warred upon and vanquiſhed by Mahomet the Son of Bajazet, redeemed his peace, by yielding up unto him many of his principal Towns; and was finally ſlain at the ſiege of Attalia.
17. Ibrahim, the Son of Mahomet, and Son-in-Law of Amurath the ſecond, againſt whom unadviſedly raiſing war, he was forced to ſubmit and become his Tributary: after whoſe death, rebelling againſt Mahomet the Great, he was then alſo vanquiſhed, and a reconciliation made betwixt them.

18. Ibrahim

18. Ibrahim II. by ſome called Pyramus, the Son of Ibrahim the firſt, ſupported Zemes brother of Bajazet the ſecond in his warre againſt him: for which Bajazet having ſetled his affairs, invaded and ſubdued the Kingdome of Caramania, killed the unfortunate King in battel, and ſo united that Eſtate unto the reſt of the Dominions of the houſe of Ottoman. The ſtrange ſucceſſes of which houſe, from the firſt riſing of it to theſe preſent times, ſhall be deferred till we come unto Turcomania, from whence this Nation firſt attempted and atchieved the conqueſt of Perſia, and which only of all their large poſſeſſions doth retain any thing of their name. In the mean time we will ſurvey the Iſlands of this Leſſer Aſia, and ſo proceed to their poſſeſſions in the Greater, as they ly before us.

19. The Province of the ASIAN ISLES.

THe Province of the ASIAN ISLES comprehendeth all the Iſlands in Aſia Minor, from the mouth of the Helleſpont to the Rhodes, reckoning that for one: united firſt into a Province by the Emperour Veſpaſian; next reckoned as a part of the Aſian Dioceſe, and afterwards, together with the Province of the Helleſpont, and that of Aſia properly and ſpecially ſo called, making up the peculiar or exempt juriſdiction of the Proconſul of Aſia. Thoſe of moſt conſideration are, 1. Tenedos, 2. Leſbos. 3. Chios. 4. Samos. 5. Coos. 6. Icaria. 7. Patmos. 8. Claros. 9. Caparthos. 10. Rhodes. Others of leſs note, having nothing memorable but their names, are ſcarce worth the naming.

1. TENEDOS, is ſituate at the mouth of the Helleſpont, overagainſt the noted Promontory called of old Sigeum (but now Cape Janizarie) a Promontory of Troas, or the Leſſer Phrygia, from which diſtant not above five miles. The Iſle it ſelf in circuit no more then ten; ſwelling with a round Mountain towards the North, in other parts levell; in both producing as good wines as the beſt of Greece. It took name, as the generall tradition was, from Tenes the Son of Cycnus, King of a little City in the Leſſer Phrygia, who being falſly accuſed by his Step-dame for ſolliciting her to that inceſtuous mixture which ſhe had violently importuned, and he as piouſly refuſed, was by the command of his Father put into a cheſt, expoſed to the mercy of the Sea, and here miraculouſly preſerved. Here for a time he is ſaid to reign with great commendation for his juſtice; and afterwards going to the aid of the Trojans, to have been ſlain by the hand of Achilles; of whom therefore it was not lawful to make mention in any of the Sacrifices offered in the Temple hereof. But Bochartus caſting off all this as an old wives fable, will have it ſo called from Tzr-edum a Phœnician word, ſignifying Red clay, which the Potters made uſe of in their earthen veſſels. A town it had of the ſame name with the Iſland, in which a Temple ſacred to Apollo Sminthius; and 2. another called Aſterion, ſituate neer a little River well ſtored with Crab-fiſh, whoſe ſhells were made in the form of an Ax or Hatchet. From which Town as the Iſlanders have in ſome Authors the name of Aſterii; ſo from the other circumſtance they are ſaid to have had the ſtamp of an Hatchet on their coin or money. Memorable for an old cuſtome obſerved amongſt them, which was, that at the back of the Judge there alwaies ſtood a man with an Ax advanced; as well to terrifie the Witneſſes from giving falſe evidence to the Judge, as the Judge from pronouncing a falſe ſentence upon the evidence. Whence the Proverb, Tenedia Securis. More memorable for the finall deſtruction of Troy, which was plotted here, the Grecians withdrawing their forces hither, as if gone in earneſt, but from hence ſetting ſail again to ſurpriſe the Town, when they ſaw their plot had took effect. And ſo I leave it with that Character which the Poet gives it.

Eſt in conſpectu Tenedos, notiſſima famâ Inſula, dives opum Priami dum Regna manebant.
Nunc tantum ſinus, & ſtatio male-fida carinis.

In Engliſh thus,

In ſight of Troy an Iſland ſtands, well known,
Call'd Tenedos; rich, and of great renown,
While'ſt Priami Kingdome flouriſhed; now (they ſay)
Grown a poor Road, for ſhips an unſafe Bay.

2. LESBOS, the largeſt of theſe Aſian Iſles, is diſtant from the main land of Troas about ſeven miles; 168 in compaſs: reckoned the ſeventh in bigneſs of the Mediterranean; which Ariſtotle in his Book de Mundo, ranketh in this Order following. τυγχάνει μὲν ἐξιόλογοι, Σικελία, καὶ Σαρδόι, καὶ Κύπρος, καὶ Κρήτη, καὶ Εὐβόια, καὶ Κύπρος, καὶ Λέσβος. That is to ſay, The moſt conſiderable of theſe, are Sicilie, Sardinia, Corſica, Crete, Euboea, Cyprus, and Lesbos. And though both Scylax in his Periplus, a nameleſs Poet in Euſtathius, Diodorus Siculus, Strabo, and others of the Antients, vary in ordering of the reſt, according as their information or fancies led them: yet Lesbos comes in the ſeventh place conſtantly, without change at all. Upon which ground Bochartus will have it called Lesbos from Esburith a Phœnician word, ſignifying ſeven: contracted firſt to Esbu, by leaving out the laſt ſyllable of it; and then by changing bu to bos, and prefixing L to the beginning. Far enough fet, and were it but as dearly bought, would be good for Ladies: this Iſland being reckoned in the ſeventh place for no other reaſon, but becauſe it lay furtheſt off and moſt North from Sicilie, from whence they ordered their accompt; and not any myſtery in the name thereof.

It had then the name from Lesbos the Chief City of it, as that from Lesbus the Son of Lapythus, who married Methymna the Daughter of Macarius Prince hereof: from which Macarius, it had ſometimes the name of Macaria; as that of Mitylene by which it is now commonly called, from Mitylene another of the daughters of the ſaid Macarius. And that the memory of the whole family might be preſerved ſerved in this Iſland, Methymna alſo had a City called by her name, one of the principal of the Countrey.

The Countrey towards the Weſt and South reported to be mountainous and ſomewhat barren; the reſt level and fruitful: plentiful of excellent corn, and abounding in delicious wines, compared by Athenæus to Ambroſia, the liquor of the Gods, as the Poets fable; affording alſo plenty of ſheep, and ſtore of horſes; theſe laſt couragious and ſtrong, though but low of Stature. More memorable for the eminent perſons which it hath produced, as 1. Sappho an Heroick woman, whoſe invention was the Sapphick verſe, and therefore called the tenth Muſe. 2. Pittacus, one of the ſeven Wiſemen of Greece. 3. Theophraſtus, that notable Phyſician and Philoſopher. 4 Alcæus, the ſucceſſour of Orpheus in the excellency of Lyricall poeſie; and 5. Arion, the Muſician, who was ſo perfect on his Harp, that being caſt into the Sea playing on that inſtrument, a Dolphin took him on his back, and wafted him ſafe as far as Corinth, where he related the whole ſtory unto Periander, atteſted by the Mariners who had thrown him overboard. And though this be by ſome rejected as a poetical fiction; yet paſt all doubt, the man was not only an excellent Muſician, but an eminent Poet, the firſt inventor of Tragedies, a chief Lyrick, and the Author of the verſe called Dithyrambick.

Principal Towns herein, 1. Lesbos, ἀφ' ἧς ἡ ὅλη νῆσος Λέσβος ἐλέγετο, from whom (ſaith Stephanus) the whole Iſland had the name of Lesbos. 2. Methymna, ſo named from Methymna one of the daughters of Macarius, ſpoken of before. 3. Mitylene, ſo named from the other daughter, and wife of Lesbus: now the Chief City of the Iſland, ſeated on a Peninſula looking towards the main land, ſtrong by nature, and fortifyed by Art: enjoying on either ſide a commodious Haven, that on the South moſt fit for Gallies; the other capable of ſhips of burden. Beautified heretofore with magnificent buildings, and ſweetned with variety of delights and pleaſures: little now left of it ſince ſubdued by the Turks, but a ſtrong Caſtle manned with an able Garriſon, and a well-ſtored Arſenall for Gallies, kept here in readineſs to preſerve thoſe Seas from Pirates; with which much infeſted. But the two firſt long ſince decayed and grown out of knowledge, thoſe of moſt note next Mitylene, are 4. Vaſilica. 5. Theodori. 6. Caſtel-Gera: all of late daies, and therefore of no obſervation in point of Story.

The Iſland was firſt inhabited by the Pelaſgians, conducted hither by Zanthus the Sonne of Triopus; whence named Pelaſgia: afterwards by ſome Ionians and people of ſundry nations planted here by Macarius, (the father of Mitylene and Methymna) who by his prudence and the reputation of his juſtice, obtained a kind of Soveraignty over the neighbouring Iſlands. Lesbus the Sonne of Lapithus arriving here with his Family, maried Methymna, and had the Iſland for her Dower; though Mitylene had the hap to have the predominant City, and the Iſland conſequently called by her name. Made ſubject to the State of Athens, in the time of the Peloponneſian warre (when almoſt all Greece banded againſt that City) they revolted from it, and were ſo ſtraitly beſieged by Paches, an Athenian Captain, that they ſubmitted unto mercy. The Generall ſends to Athens to know what ſhould be done with the Mitylenians; Anſwer was ſent, that he ſhould put them to the ſword. But the Senate on the morrow after, repenting of that cruell Decree, ſent a countermand. Theſe latter Meſſengers made no ſtay, but eating with one hand, and rowing with the other, came to Mitylene, juſt as Paches was reading the former Order; by this ſpeed prevented. So neer were theſe miſerable people to a fatall deſtruction. Subdued by the Romans with the reſt of Greece, they fell together with it to the Conſtantinopolitan Emperours: from whom taken, with Chios, Samos, Andros, and ſome other of theſe Iſles, Anno 1124. by the State of Venice, upon a quarrel betwixt them and the Grecian Emperour. Confirmed unto that Signeury by the Emperour Baldwin, and all the reſt of the Ægean added to their portion; thoſe above-named were again recovered by the valour and good fortune of John Ducas, the Greek Emperour, then reſiding at Nice. Afterwards in the year 1335. the Emperour Cale-Johannes gave it to Franciſcus Cataluſius, a Noble Gentleman of Genoa, with one of his Siſters, for her Dower. By whoſe poſterity enjoyed till the year 1462. when Mahomet the Great incenſed againſt Dominicus Cataluſius the then Lord hereof, for the murder of his elder Brother, a Vaſſall and Tributary of his Empire (thoſe Princes paying to the Turk an annuall tribute of 4000 Ducats) but more for harbouring the Pirates of Spain and Italy; beſieges him in Mitylene his principall City; which in 27 daies (for ſo long it held) he conſtrained to ſubmit unto him, and therewith all the Iſland alſo. Some of the Chief families, being removed unto Conſtantinople, upon ſome reaſons of State, the main body of the people were permitted to remain here to till the land; and ſo continue to this day, with ſome few Turks, inconſiderable for their ſtrength or numbers, entermixed amongſt them.

3. CHIOS, the next to Lesbos both in ſite and bigneſs, lyeth oppoſite to the ſhore of Ionia, from which diſtant not above four leagues, is in compaſs about 126 miles. So called, as ſome ſay, from Chione a fair Nymph hereof, much ſought after by many Suters: as others ſay, from χίων, a Greek word ſignifying Snow, wherewith the mountains of it are ſometimes covered. And ſome again will have it take name from Chios the Chief City of it, which being built in the form of the Greek letter χ, firſt got that name unto it ſelf, and afterwards did communicate it to the whole Iſland. Iſidore in his Originis gives another reaſon, and will have it called ſo from a Syriack word ſignifying Maſtick, whereof there is plenty in this Iſle. Chios inſula (ſaith he) Syrâ linguâ appellatur, eo quod ibi Maſtyx gignitur; Syri enim Maſtychen Chion vocant. And were it ſo, that Chios in the Syriack did ſignifie Maſtick, there could no better reaſon be aſſigned for the name: this Iſland being more furniſhed with that commodity, than any place in the world beſides. A gumme it is growing out of the Lentiſck tree, which in the moneths of July and Auguſt the Inhabitants force out of thoſe trees by making with ſharp inſtrumeuts a deep inciſion into the the barks of them; out of which the juice dropping is afterwards hardned like a gumme, and in the Septem- ler following gathered. A Commodity with yieldeth yearly to the Inhabitants 18000 Sultanies, every Sultanie being valued at the rate of a Zechine of Venice: and therefore the felling of the Lentisck tree, at the time of the distilling of this precious juice, interdicted on the penalty of losing the right hand of him that doth it.

Other Commodities of this Island are Corn and Oyl in indifferent plenty, some quarries of most excellent Marble, a certain green earth like the rust of brass; some Silks, and Cotton-Wool, but short in worth to those of Smyrna, and other places: Honey as good as any the world affordeth; and a vein of most delicious wines, those specially which grow on the Mountain Arvis, now called Amista. Of which Plin. gives this commendation, In summa gloria fuere Thasium, Chiumque; ex Chio, quod Arvisium vocant. Of all wines (saith he) those of Thassus, and Chios, are of best esteem; and of those of Chios, the Arvisian. Strabo extolleth them in the Superlative degree, and calleth the wine hereof, οἶνον ἀειστὸν πάντ' Ἑλλήνιχῶν, incomparably the best of Greece. And Plutarch, speaking of an Epicurean or voluptuous liver, affirms that he conceived it the supreme felicity λαὶ δὲ συμβῆναι, καὶ πιεῖν οἶνον Λεσβίον, to lie with Thais, and drink these Arvisian wines. Here are also infinite store of Patriges, of a red colour, kept tame, and fed in flocks like Geese, in the Streets and Greensworths of their villages: some little Boy or Girl driving them to field, and calling them home again with a whistle when the night comes on.

The Island divided commonly into two parts, the Higher called Apanomera, lying towards the North and West, hilly, and rough, but intermixt with fruitful vales and pleasant Rivers: the Lower, opposit unto it, called Catamorea, swelled here and there with gentle hillocks, on which groweth the Lentisck. The whole inhabited by Greeks intermixt with Genoese, and (since their conquest by that people) some few Turks amongst them. Which mixture with the Genoese, tempereth the levity of the Greeks with Italian gravity: the better sort of people both in apparrel and manners coming neer the Genoese, once the Lords of this Island: the common sort continuing their old Greek humour of mirth and jollity, (not sensible of the Turkish thraldome under which they suffer) with as much licentiousness as ever. And though this intermixture hath so corrupted their language, that neither the Greek nor the Italian be here rightly spoken, but a compound tongue made up of both: yet keep they their Religions still distinct and separate, as if they had never known another.

Here are reckoned in it six and thirty Towns and villages, the principall whereof are, 1. S. Elias in the North. 2. Pigrine, in the midest hereof; and 3. Chios it self, now called Sio (as is all the Island) one of the seven Cities contending for the birth of Homer, whose Sepulchre they pretend to shew in an old Castle neer the Mount and Town of S. Elias (which were it his, would be a better argument for his buriall here, than it is for his birth.) The Town situate in the most pleasant and fruitfull part of the Countrey, to which both industry and Art have given great advantage: here being few houses without Orchards of excellent fruits, as Oringes, Limons, Pomegranats, Citrons, and a kind of Fig, much praised for their quickness of tast by the antient Romans. It standeth on the East-side opposite to the Shores of Asia, stretched along the bottom of the Haven, and on the West-side backed with a rocky Mountain, upon which it formerly did stand. The Buildings ordinary, the Streets narrow, and the Haven every day decaying: though otherwise secure once entred; and for directing of the entrance a Lantern advanced by the Genoese (when Lords hereof) to give light by night, and serve for a land-mark in the day. Fortified on the North-side by a large and strong Castle, environed with deep ditches, well furnished with munition, and a Turkish Garrison. And because the Island is on all parts accessible, not naturally fortified with rocks, and dangerous precipices, as many others; besides this Castle, they have all along the Coast small Watch-towrs, which with smoke by day, and fire by night, give notice unto one another of such Vessels as they see approaching: the Guards about the Castle being so intent also about their charge, that every minute of the night there goeth a word about the walls to declare their vigilancie.

The Chians were at first a free people, governing themselves as a Commonwealth; and by reason of their many harbours, able to furnish out a Navy of 80 Sayl, which gave them the Lordship of those Seas; till eclipsed by the Rhodians. Besieged by Philip the Father of Perseus, with his utmost power, who when he could not get it by force, proclamed freedome to the Slaves (of which here were many) and liberty to marry with their Masters wives, if they would rebell against their Masters. And when this policy would not do it, the Town being held out with greater heat of indignation, he gave over the siege. At last they became subject to the Romans, with the rest of Greece, and followed punctually the same change of fortunes, as did those of Lesbos; which we have spoken of before: till given by Andronicus Palæologus, one of the last Greek Emperours, to the Justinians, a noble Genoesian Family, assistant to him in his wars. Under them it continued as tributaries to the Turks (after the Turks had made themselves Masters of Constantinople) to whom they annually paid eighteen thousand Ducats; till the year 1566. When Solyman the Magnificent picking a quarrell with them for some suspected correspondency with the Knights of Malta, commanded Pial, one of his greatest Bassas, to seize the Island. And he accordingly presenting himself before the City with a strong Fleet of eighty Gallies, did so astonish and amaze the Inhabitants of it, that without any other summons than the sight of his Navy, they surrendred themselves unto his disposing, upon Easter-day, being the same day he came before it. Since that it hath continued Turkish, all save their Religion, enjoyed by them with like liberty as in former times.

4. SAMOS, is on the South-east of Chios, distant about five miles from the shores of Ionia; about eighty or eighty seven in compass; environed for the most part, especially on the North-west with inaccessible Rocks, but beautified with a fair and capacious Haven; of little use by reason of the Pirates which infest those Seas. The soyl sufficiently enriched with most kind of fruits, abundantly plentifull o

Oyl, &

Oyl, and Olives, but of Vines altogether unfurniſhed · which is the more to be admired in regard all the Ilands and ſhores about it, produce them in ſo great a plenty. It ſtretcheth from the Eaſt to the Weſt: and on the South part of it ſtood the City Samia, neer unto the Haven before ſpoken of. In former times populous, and well inhabited, as was the reſt of the Iland; now wholly deſolate in a manner, becauſe of the Pirates, and in moſt places very much over-grown with woods: becoming thereby very uſefull to thoſe publick enemies, who find here Timber enough for Shipping, and can upon the ſudden put a ſhip to Sea, for purſuit of their Robberies. The chief commodity it affordeth beſides thoſe above, is a medicinall Earth, uſefull for Chirurgery and Phyſick: of which in former times were thoſe Veſſels made, called Vaſa Samia, in great requeſt amongſt the Romans.

Antiently it had the names of Dryuſa, Anathemuſa, Melamphylas, and Cipariſſa: out-worn by that of Simos, which it ſtill retaineth. Memorable in old times for the birth of Juno, of one of the Sibyls, hence called Samia; and finally of the wiſe-man Pythagoras (a wiſer than any of the ſeven-wiſe Maſters, ſo renowned amongſt them) who firſt brought Philoſophy into Greece, and from thence into Italy. Once a free Common-wealth of no ſmall eſteem, the Inſtitutes whereof are mentioned by Heraclides, in his Books of the ſeverall Commonwealths then being: afterwards made ſubject to the Tyrant Polycrates, a man ſo fortunate that for a long time he never fell into any miſchance. Fearing leſt ſuch a long calm would bring on a tempeſt, he let fall into the Sea a moſt precious Ring, by him deſervedly eſteemed; that ſo it might be ſaid he had ſome miſ-fortunes. Which after he had found again in the belly of a fiſh brought accidentally to his table, he was overcome by Oronzes a Perſian, and brought to a miſerable death. Leaving a notable example that fortune is certain in nothing but uncertainties; and like a Bee with a ſharp ſting, hath alwaies ſome miſery following in the train of a long concatenation of felicity. From this time forwards it ran the ſame fortune with the reſt of theſe Ilands; ſubject ſucceſſively to the great Monarchies in former times, as of late times to the Venetians, Greeks, and Turks, who do now enjoy it.

5. ICARIA, (now called Niceria) lyeth not far from Samos, to the Weſt-ward of it, narrow, but extended out in length; the whole compaſs ſeven and thirty miles: neighboured by two great Rocks, or little Ilands, of old called Melanthii, now the Fermices; formidable at all times to Mariners, in the night eſpecially. Meanly inhabited at the preſent, though abounding in paſturage, and yielding ſufficiency of corn: Havenleſs, and therefore the leſs frequented, yet that defect ſupplyed by commodious Roads. In former times called Doliche, then Macris, after Ichthiaſa: which name it held till the flight of Dædalus out of Crete. Who juſtly fearing the anger of Minos, for being Pander to his wife in her loves with Taurus, ſecretly with Icarus his ſonne, fled out of that Iland. And becauſe he would be ſure to out-ſtrip the Rowers who purſued him, he added ſails unto his Boat, which it is ſaid he firſt invented. But Icarus, coming after in another Bark, delighted with the new device, clapped on too much Canvaſs, and bearing too great a Sayl, was here caſt away. Hence the new name both to this Iland, and the Seas adjoyning to it: and the occaſion of the Fable of Dædalus putting wings upon his ſhoulders, when he fled from Crete; and of his ſonnes flying too high, whereby the wax melted which his wings were faſtned with, and ſo he periſhed in the water. Of which thus Ovid

Dum petit infirmis nimium ſublimia pennis
Icarus, Icariis nomina fecit aquis.
In Engliſh thus,
Whilſt Icarus weak wings too high did ſoare,
He fell, and gave name to th' Icarian ſhore.

6. PATMOS, now called Palmoſa, is ſituate on the South of the other two; A little Iland, not above 30. miles in compaſs. Mounteinous, but indifferently fruitful, eſpecially of wheat and pulſe: of other commodities and fruits not ſo well provided. On one of theſe Mounteins ſtands a town of the ſame name with the Iland; having on the top thereof a Monaſterie of Greek Caloiros; and on the bottom a fair haven (I mean in reference to the Iland). Fourty ſail of Ships are ſaid to belong unto it; by the trading whereof they bring in thoſe proviſions which the ſoyl affordeth not: the ſoyl about the town being ſo incomparably barren, that nothing groweth on or near it, but on ſuch earth as is brought thither from other places. Unto this Iland (as to others in other parts of the world) did the Roman Emperours uſe to confine offenders. A puniſhment laid by Domitian on S. John the Divine, who in this place writ his Revelation to the Churches of Aſia. So much the Text affirmes for certain, as to the writing of it in this Iland. And the Inhabitants by tradition point unto an houſe on the North-ſide of the Town in which it was written; and not far off, the Cave, where it was revealed. Both places equally honoured by the Greeks, and Latines. They alſo ſhew a dead mans hand; which they affirm to be his, the nayls whereof grow again as oft as cut. But the Turks (ſaith Magnus) claim it for the hand of one of their Prophets. Let them diſpute the controverſie, whilſt we haſt to

7. CLAROS, another Iland not far off, containing about forty miles in compaſs. Well ſtored with commodious Harbours, but very mountainous, ſome of thoſe hils of ſuch an height, that from the tops thereof, the City of Epheſus in Ionia, though diſtant at leaſt eighty miles, may be eaſily ſeen. It is now called Calamo. Neighboured by Lero (of old called Leros) a little Iland not above eighteen miles in circuit; but very populous, inhabited both by Greeks and Turks, and furniſhing the neighbouring Countries with ſome ſtore of Aloes. Sacred in formertimes was Claros to Apollo; reckoned by him amongſt his honours in his brags to Daphne: wher he declares,

——— Mihi Delphica tellus, Et Claros, et Tenedos, Patareaque Regia ſervit.

That is to ſay,

The folk of Delphos, Tenedos and Clare,
And Royall Patara, my Vaſſals are.

8. COOS, COS, or COUS, for by all theſe names it was called of old, is ſituate over againſt Caria, in the very bottom of the Ægean; that is to ſay, in that part thereof which is called Mare Myrtoum, the Myrtoan Sea. A Sea ſo called, as ſome ſay, from one Myrtilus, the Coachman or Charioteer of OEnomaus, who having betrayed his race with Pelops, and importunate for his reward, was by Pelops precipitated into this Sea. Plinie leſs probably conceiveth that it took name from Myrtos a little Iland not far from Eubœa: a little to far off to extend its name to the ſhores of Caria. And therefore conſidering that Lydia antiently was called Myrtus, and that in thoſe times Æolis and Ionia lying on this Sea, were accompted but as parts thereof; I think we may reſolve with more probability that it derived this name from that Lydian Myrtus.

In this Sea ſtands the Iſle of Coos, now called Lange, affording Saylers as they paſſe by a moſt beautifull proſpect, lying for the moſt part flat and level, but ſwelling towards the Eaſt with ſome gracefull mountains, out of which iſſue many ſweet and pleaſant ſprings to refreſh the Iland, which maketh it more than ordinarie fruitful. Productive of Cypreſs trees, Turpentine, and ſundry others, both delightful and medicinall, but moſt eſpecially celebrated for thoſe rich wines, which the Good Fellows of Rome ſo much loved to quaff, called Vinum Cos. It is in compaſſe 70 miles, having a Town of the ſame name, in the ſuburbs whereof Stomalimne ſtood, antiently the Temple of Æſculapius, famous, and rich with the offerings of thoſe who having by his aſſiſtance (as they ſuppoſed) recovered health, came hither to make payment of their vowes, and expreſs their gratitude. It is now fortified with a ſtrong Caſtle, held by a Garriſon of Turks: and beſides this, two Villages onely in the Iland, and both inhabited by Greeks.

In elder times it had the name of Merope, Caria and Nymphæa, and at laſt of Coos. Memorable in being the Countrey of many famous men who were herein born; viz. of Hippocrates, the Revivor of Phyſick, then almoſt decayed, who is hence called Hippocrates Cous. 2. Simus, a Phyſician alſo; 3. Ariſton, a Peripatetick Philoſopher. 4. Philetas, as good an Oratour as a Poet. 5. Nicias, who for a time oppreſſed the liberty of this people, and 6. of Apelles the famous Painter, who to expreſs his art in the picture of Venus, (riſing naked out of the Sea) aſſembled together all the moſt beautifull woman of this Iland, uniting in that piece their divided perfections. Which famous peece being afterwards hanged up in the Temple of Stomalimne, one of the principal of this Iland, was thence conveyed to Rome by Auguſtus, and their dedicated to Cæſar, as the mother of the Julian Family: the Coans in regard hereof being eaſed of a great part of their annuall tributes. Not much leſs memorable for that fine thin ſtuffe (ſuch as now called Tiffanies) ſo much in uſe amongſt the Chief Ladies of Rome: which at once ſhewed them cloathed and naked. Perlucidâ ntuntur veſte, ita ut nudæ conſpici poſſint, as my Author hath it. Theſe they called Veſtimenta Coa, and Veſtes Coas, ſo often mentioned by the Poets, eſpecially in their Amatoria; as Coa puellis Veſtis, in Tibullus; Induc me Cois, in Propertius; Sive erit in Cois, ſaith the Poet Ovid. So in others alſo, too many, and too long to be added here. I paſſe to

9. CARPATHOS, ſituate on the South of Caria, in the Mediterranean, from this Iland, called hereabouts the Carpathian Sea. A rugged and unpleaſing ſoil, full of difficult mountains, but thoſe mountains ſtored with quarries of moſt excellent Marble. In circuit about 60 miles, extending more in length than breadth. Heretofore beautified with four Cities, and thence named Tetrapolis. But three of the four Cities are long ſince periſhed, that of Carpathos being ſtill remaining, and ſtill the principall of the Iland; both now called Scarpanto. Some other Towns it hath all along the ſhore, and every one of them furniſhed with ſome Port or Haven, but ſmall, and for the moſt part very unſafe. Situate in the midle as it were betwixt Crete and Rhodes, it hath continued hitherto in the poſſeſſion of the State of Venice (if not taken from them very lately) to whom being given with other of the Ilands of theſe Grecian Seas, at the taking of Conſtantinople by the Weſtern forces, it hath the fortune or felicity to continue theirs, when almoſt all the reſidue were ſubdued by the Turks. The people Greek, of the communion of that Church, notwithſtanding their ſubjection to a State of Italy.

10. RHODES, ſituate in the Rhodian or Carpathian Sea, lyeth over againſt the coaſt of Lycia, in Aſia Minor, from which diſtant about 20 miles. Formerly called Ophiuſa, Aſteria, Æthræa, Trinachia, Paeſſa, Corymbia, Atabyria, and at laſt Macaria; it ſettled finally and fortunately in the name of Rhodes. So named by the Grecians from the abundance of Roſes, which the ſoil produceth, Rhodos in that language ſignifying a Roſe, the Iſle of Roſes, as it were: but as the Poets ſay, of Rhoda, a Nymph of theſe Seas, here deflowred by Apollo; or rather of Rhoda, one of the daughters of Apollo begat on Venus: For ſo one of them thus declareth;

Inſula dicta Rhodos, de Sole et Cypride nata eſt.
Rhoda, from whom this Iſle took name,
Of Venus and Apollo came.

The Iland 140 miles in compaſs, enriched with a moſt temperate air, and a fertile ſoyl, producing fruits in very great plenty, full of excellent paſtures, adorned with trees which alwaies do continue green: and in a word ſo bleſt with the gifts nature, that it gave occaſion to the fable of thoſe Golden Shewers, which were once ſaid to have fallen upon it. The wines hereof ſo excellent, and ſo rich of taſt, that by the Romans they were uſed in their ſecond courſes, or reſerved for the ſacrifices of the Gods, as too good for mortals, as affirmed by Virgil in the Georgicks. The cauſe of which perpetual flouriſhing, and continuall ſpring, is to be aſcribed to the powerfull influences of the Sun, ſo dearly cheriſhing this Iſland, or ſo much in love with it, that it is constantly affirmed that no day passeth wherein he shineth not clearly on it, be the air in all other places never so much over-cast with Clouds, or obscured by mists. Fained for that cause to have been naturally a meer Marish, altogether unhabitable, if not covered with waters, till loved by Phœbus, and erected above the waves by his vigorous influences.

Of the People we shall speak anon; Look we in the mean time on the places of most observation. 1. Lindun (now Lindo a pety Town, but formerly of more esteem:) of note in those times for the Temple consecrated to Minerva, by Danaus King of Egypt, landing here when he fled out of that Kingdome. As also for the birth of Cares, the Architect of the huge Colossus, whereof more presently; but specially for the nativity of Cleobulus, one of the seven wise men of Greece: the other six, being Solon of Athens, Periander of Corinth, Chilo of Sparta, Bias of Priene, Thales of Miletum, and Pittacus of Mitylene. Seven men of whom the Grecians most immensely bragged, as if the World could neither afford them equals, or an equall number: for which derided handsomely by Lactantius, an old Christian writer, who scoffe's their paucity, and calleth it a miserable and calamitous age, in quo septem Soli fuerunt qui hominum vocabula mererentur; in which there were no more than seven who deserved to be accompted men. 2. Rhodes, antiently, as now the chief City of it, the Iland from hence taking name, and formerly, as well as in later times, depending on the fortunes and strength hereof. No place in elder times held superiour to it, for the convenency of the Haven, magnificent buildings, delightfull Orchards, and other excellencies. Situate on the East part of the Isle, on the declining of an hill, and neer the Sea, where it enjoyeth a safe and commodious Haven: treble walled, fortified with thirteen Turrets, and five strong Bulwarks, besides divers Sconces, and other out-works: this Town, and Famagusta in the Isle of Cyprus, being conceived to be the two strongest holds in the Turkish Empire. In former times, one of the principall Vniversities of the Roman Empire; this Rhodes, Marseiles, Tarsus, Athens, and Alexandria, being reckoned the old Academies of that Monarchy. And to this Town, as a most noted place of Study, Tiberius (afterwards Emperour) did withdraw himself, when Augustus had declared his two Nephewes Lucius and Caius, for his Heires: pretending onely a desire to improve himself in the waies of literature; whereas the true cause was his envy at their preferment. Honoured in those times with that huge Colossus, one of the seven wonders of the World, made by Chares of Lindum before mentioned. Composed of Brass, in height seventy Cubits, every finger of it being as great as an ordinary man; and consecrated to the Sun, as the proper Deity of the Iland. Twelve years in making, and having stood but sixty six years, was pulled down in an instant by an Earthquake, which terribly shook the whole Iland. The Rhodians being forbid by an Oracle to erect it again (or possibly pretending such an Oracle to save that charge) yet held the brass and other materials of it (in a manner) sacred. Not medled with, nor sacriligiously purloined till Mnavias the Generall of Osmen, the Mahometan Caliph, finding in himself no such scruple of conscience, (after he had subdued this Iland) made a prey hereof; loading nine hundred Camels with the very brass of it. From this Colossus, was the Iland sometimes called Colossa, and the People Colossians: not those Colossians (as some have very vainly thought) to whom Sain Paul writ his Epistle, those being of Colosse, a Town of the Greater Phrigya, as hath there been noted. Here was also in this City antiently a Temple of Bacchus, enriched with many presents both of Greeks and Romans; of both which People the Rhodians were then held in a fair esteem, but the God and the good Wines in greater. Towns of less note, are 3. Villa nova. 4. Russicare, and some others, but as little memorable.

This Iland was first Peopled by Dodanim the sonne of Javan, and the Grand-child of Japhet, whom the Greeks call commonly but corruptly Rhodanim; mistaking the Hebrew letter Daleth for that of Resh, letters so like as easily it might draw them to that mistake. Finding this Iland too narrow for him, he left here a Colony, and with the main body of his People passed into Greece, where he planted the Countrey of Epirus, as hath there been said. Those which staid here, being mistakingly called Rhodians (or called so by the Grecians, not looking with too curious eyes into their Antiquities, from the abundant of Roses herein growing) making the best use of their Haven, and other the advantages of their situation, became so expert in maritime affairs, that by Florus they are stiled Populus nauticus; and that not onely in the way of Trade and Marchandize, but of power and government: holding for many years the command of these Seas, and prescribing Lawes for the Regleiment of Navegation. Which being called the Rhodian Lawes, became the generall Rule for deciding marine causes, and ordering the Affaires of Sea, in all the parts and Provinces of the Roman Empire: and so continued till supplanted in these Western parts by the Lawes of Oleron. Fearfull of falling under the Macedonians, they applied themselves unto the Romans; whom first they aided in their warres against Philip the Father of Perseus; and afterwards in that also against Antiochus. Rewarded for this last service with Lycia and Caria, two of the Asian Provinces, which Antiochus was to leave on his composition; they became so faithfully affected to the State of Rome, that when all the other Ilands of the Mediterranean and Ægean Seas, revalted to Mithridates King of Pontus; this onely adhered unto the Romans. Proud either of their strength at Sea, or of those good Officers, they began to take upon them as Mediatours, and thought themselves fit men to advise their Masters. Grown troublesome by their frequent interpositions, and losing much of their esteem by such impertinencies: they began to grow jealous of the Romans, and incline to Perseus King of Macedon; whose Father they before opposed with their utmost power. A change which Perterculus expresseth with some admiration. Rhodij ipsi fidelissimi antea Romanis, dubia jam fide proniores in Regis partes visisunt, as his words there are. But yet they held for them against Mithridates, as before was said; and served their turn on all occasions; untill insensibly they bretraied their liberty to the power of their friends; and of Confederates and Allaies, became their Vassals. Made by Vespasian into a Province with the rest of the Isles, the Governour or President of that Province fixing here his residence, as the chief of those Ilands: which gave the title of Metropolitan tropolitan to the Bishop of Rhodes. Under that Empire it continued, (or under that of Constantinople after the division) till the year 1124. when taken from the Grecians, by the State of Venice; again recovered by the Greeks, in the time of their Emperour John Ducas, then residing at Nice. Wonne from the Grecians by the Turks, the Knights of Saint John of Hierusalem, being utterly driven out of Asia, possessed themselves of it, by the favour of Emanuel the then Emperour, who aided them in the conquest, Anno 1308. Afterwards proving bad neighbours to the Turkish tyrants, whom they ceased not to infest upon all occasions, they were many times in vain invaded: Mahomet the Great, famous for taking Constantinople and the Empire of Trabezond, spending some time before their City with both loss and shame. At the last 1522. it was again besieged by Solyman the Magnificent, Lilladamus Villerius being then Great Master: who did as much in defence hereof as policy and puissance could extend unto. But multitude in the end prevailed, and upon Christmas day, the Turk entred Rhodes as Conquerour; though possibly he might have said (as Pyrrhus once said of a like victory against the Romans) that such another victory would have quite undon him. Since that a Province of the Turks, by whom, and by some Jews banished out of Spain, the City of Rhodes is wholly inhabited: the Christians, which are licensed to dwell in the Countrey, and have leave to trade there in the day time, not suffered upon pain of death to stay there all night. And so we pass from the Ilands of the Asian Diocese, to the Isle of Cyprus, a neer neighbour unto Anatolia, but no member of it: the rest of that Diocese, and those Seas, as 11. Possidium. 12. Arcesine. 13. Bugialos. 14. Minyas. 15. Sirne. 16. Cesi, and the rest, yielding but little matter of observation, besides their names.

CYPRUS is ſituate in the Syrian and Cilician Seas, extended in length from Eaſt to Weſt two hundred miles, in breadth, ſixty, the whole cumpaſs reckoned five hundred and fifty: diſtant about ſixty miles from the rocky ſhores of Cilicia in Aſia Minor, and about an hundred from the main Land of Syria, towards which it ſhooteth it ſelf out with a long ſharp Promontory, extending heretofore to the main land, from which rent in former time by a Violent Earthquake, as is ſaid by Pliny; and worn unto this narrowneſs by the continuall working of the Sea upon it.

No place hath oftner changed its name, or at leſt had more names on the By than this. Called at firſt Cethin, or Cethinia, from Ketim the ſonne of Javan, who firſt planted in it; 2. Ceraſtis, from the abundance of Promontories, thruſting like horns into the Sea, (as the word intimates in the Greek.) 3. Amathuſia. 4. Paphia. 5. Salaminia; theſe three laſt from the principall Towns in thoſe parts hereof. 6. Macaria, from the fruitfulneſs and felicities of it. Beſides theſe it hath in ſome times had theſe By-names alſo, as 7. Aſperia, from the roughneſs of the Soyl. 8. Collinia, from the frequency of Hills, and Mountains. 9. Æroſa, from the Mines of Braſs, which abound therein. 10. And finally, all thoſe forgotten or laid by, it ſetled at the laſt in the name of Cyprus. So called, ſay ſome, from the abundance of Cypreſs Trees, with which moſt plentifully provided; as others from Cryptos a Greek word, ſignifying Concealed or hidden, becauſe ſometimes concealed by the Surges from the eye of Saylers; but moſt improbably ſaid by others to take name from Cyrus, who founded here the City of Aphrodiſia, whereas indeed ſix hundred years before Cyprus his birth, we find it by this name in Homer; more rightly Stephanus, who deriveth it, ἀπὸ Κύπρου τῆς θυγατρὸς Κινύρου, from Cyprus daughter of Cinyras, one of the Kings hereof, living before the Trojan Warres: though in my mind the firſt comes neereſt to the truth, the Cypreſs Tree, not onely growing here in ſo great abundance, but being antiently peculiar in a manner to this Iland onely.

But on what ground ſoever it was called Cyprus, certain I am it had the name of Ceraſtis upon very good reaſon: no Iland or Region that I know of (for the bigneſs of it) thruſting out ſo many ſharp Promontories. For on the Weſt, there is 1. the Promontory called Acamas, now Capo S. Piſano. 2. Drepanum, now Trapano and Melechia. 3. Zephyrum, or Caput Calidoni, now Punta Malota. On the South, 4. Phrurium, now Capo Bianco. 5. Curias, or Capo della Gatte. 6. Gades, or Capo Chiti. 7. Throni, or Capo Pila. On the Eaſt, 8. Pendaliun, now Capo di Griego. 9. Clides, now Capo S. Andrea. And on the North, 10. Crorjon, now Capo Cornochiette; beſides ſome others of leſs note. Some of the Poets give another reaſon of this name, as that Venus offended with the People of Amathus for ſacrificing their gueſts, ſhould turn them into horned Cattell: Vnde etiam nomen traxere Ceraſtæ, as it is in Ovid. But that meerly fabulous; ſomewhat of kind unto the Legend of Thomas Becket, and the Kentiſh Long-tailes. Yet ſo far we may join with Ovid, that the Iſland was not only called Ceraſtis; but that the People were alſo called Ceraſtæ, of which there wants not proof from ſome other Authors; with which we need not trouble our ſelves, that name being altogether worn out of uſe, and no other but that of Cyprus given it in common ſpeech. Nor is it a matter of more ſtrangeneſs that Cyprus ſhould be called ſo by the Grecians, from its abundance of Cypreſs Trees, antiently and originally peculiar to this Iland, as before was noted: than that the ſame Grecians ſhould give unto the neighbouring Iland the name of Rhodes, from its great plenty of Roſes; or to the neighbouring Continent the name of Phœnicia, from its great plenty of Palme-trees; the words ſo ſignifiying in that Language.

It is ſituate under the fourth Climate, ſo that the longeſt day in ſummer is no more than 14. hours and an half: and for that cauſe the air in ſummer time exceeding hot and ſwelthry: the ſoyl moyſtned with ſome few brooks, meriting rather the name of torrents, than rivers; which being generated for the moſt part by rain water, are not ſeldome dried up by the heat of the Sun: inſomuch that in the reign of Conſtantine the Great, this Iland was for 36 years together almoſt utterly forſaken; no rain falling all that time. Theſe inconveniences notwithſtanding, it is ſtored with ſuch plenty of all things, that without the help of any forreign Nation, it is of it ſelf able to build a tall ſhip from the keel to the top-ſail, and ſo put it to Sea furniſhed with all things needful for a voyage, or a Sea-fight. It alſo aboundeth in Wine, Oyl, Corn, Sugar, Cotton, Honey, Wooll, Turpentine, and Allum; Verdegreece, all ſorts of Metals, ſtore of Salt, Grograms, and other commodities: whereupon this Iland was once called Macaria (i.e. happy.) By reaſon of which wounderful affluence of all neceſſaries, and that variety of pleaſures (even to ſenſuality) which the place afforded, it was antiently conſecrated unto Venus, who is hence called Venus Cypria, and Dea Cypri, Sic te diva potens Cypri, in Horace; and in Ovid, Festa dies Veneris, tota celeberrima Cypro,

Venerat; ipsa suis aderat Venus aurea festis.
Venus feasts hallowed through all Cyprus came;
And Venus with her presence grac'd the same.

The people hereof are warlike, strong and nimble; of great civility, hospitality to their neighbours, and love to strangers of all Nations, Jewes onely excepted. For in the Empire of Trajan, the Jewes inhabiting Egypt and the adjoining Countreys, drew themselves together, and chose one Axander for their Captain: under whose conduct they entred into this Island, and laid it desolate, killing in it 240000 persons of all sexes and ages; not without much bloodshed vanquished and slain by Lucius the Emperours Lieutenant. Since which time the Cypriots permit no Jew to enter into the Iland: but come he hither voluntarily or by force of tempest, they lay hands on him, and lead him presently to execution. A hated Nation, that neither innocence can protect, or equity reprieve from that cruel custome.

The women in former times much noted for their Unchastity, to which their worshipping of Venus was no small incentive; it being the custome of these women to prostitute themselves on the shores to the passers by: their very Virgins not refusing to be hanselled there, before their mariage; either to raise their portions by the sale of their bodies, or else to please their Godess with such beastly sacrifices. And if Volaterranus may be credited (as I think he may) the Ladies which attended on Queen Carlotte, when she came to Rome to seek for aid against James the bastard, who had dispossessed her of this Kingdome, shewed themselves little chaster than those antient Cypriots. Somewhat more fortunate in the men, Æsclepiades the Author of the verse so named. 2. Xenophon, an old Poet. 3. Zeno, and 4. Apollonius, the Philosophers. 5. Epiphanius, the learned Bishop of Salamis; and 6. above all, Saint Barnabas, the dear Associate of Saint Paul, being all natives of this Countrey.

The Christian faith was first here planted by Saint Paul, and Barnabas, as the very first fruits of their Apostleship, after they had been separated to the work of the Ministry by the Imposition of hands; as appeareth Acts 13. v. 4. &c. The Church hereof, by reason of the Antiquity of it, and the honour of this joint foundation, so privileged in the best ages of Christianity, that the Arch-Bishop of this Island had all prerogatives of a Primate; consecrated by his own Suffragan Bishops, and acting in all sacred and Ecclesiastical affaires, without dependance on, or relation to, the See of Antioch, whereunto all other Bishops in the Eastern Diocese were either subordinate or subject. Which privilege being questioned in the Council of Ephesus, was by the Fathers there assembled, on a full hearing of the cause, approved and ratifyed; confirmed by the Civil sanction of the Emperour Justinian, whose wife was a native of this Island; and by the name of Jus Cyprium, the privilege or exemption of the Cyprian Church, transmitted to the Prelates of succeeding times. Which notwithstanding, they continued in good correspondence with the Eastern Churches of the Greek Communion, and officiated all Divine Acts after the rites and forms thereof; till the Venetians became Lords of it, who brought in the Latine Service into some of their Churches, and appointed Bishops and other Ministers of the Papall party, for execution of the same. And for the Government of these Churches, they had at first fourteen Bishops and Arch-Bishops, to gratify Queen Alice, (who had a mind to enrich her friends with some of the spoiles of them) reduced by Innocent the third to four only, that is to say, the Arch-Bishoprick of Nicosia, the Bishopricks of Famagusta, Paphos, and Amathus; but each See furnished with two Prelates, the one for the Greeks, the other for the Latines, of which the Bishops for the Latines have all the Lands and annual Revenues, which of right belong to those Cathredrals, the Greek Bishops living upon stipends, leavyed on the Priests and Deacons of their jurisdiction.

Rivers, as formerly was said, here are very few: and of those few, the principall are called Lycus, and Lapithus; the first running towards the South, the last towards the North; both not seldome so dried up, that they leave their empty Channels without any water. Both also have their Source from the hill Olympus (the highest Mountain of the Iland) garnished with Trees and fruits of all sorts; in compass about eighteen Leagues (which make four and fifty Italian miles) and at the end of every League a Monastery of Greek Monks or Caloires, and a fountain of fresh water for the use of the house. Here are also two other little Rivers, the one called 3. Bodens, the other 4. Tolius, but of the same nature as the former.

By Ptolomy, or in his time, divided into four parts or Provinces, but since it fell into the hands of the Lusignan family, distributed into twelve Counties or Cantrades; most of them called by the names of their Principal Towns. viz. 1. Nicosia. 2. Famagusta. 3. Paphia. 4. Audima. 5. Limissa. 6. Masorum. 7. Salines. 8. Messoria. 9. Crusocus. 10. Pentalia. 11. Carpassus. 12. Cerines. The whole containing, besides these Cities and great Towns, 805 Villages, or thereabouts, which they called Casales; whereof the one half antiently belonged unto the Crown; the other half divided betwixt the Lay-Nobility, and the Ecclesiasticks: the Patrimony of these last being computed at 80000 Crowns of annual rents, besides casualties, and the vails of the Altar. But because the tracing out of these Cantrades will be very difficult (as a way which none have gone before me) I will adhere to the division made hereof in the time of Ptolomy, into the Provinces of 1. Paphia, 2. Amathusia, 3. Lapethia, and 4. Salamine.

1. PAPHIA, so called of Paphos the chief town thereof, taketh up the West part of the Iland: in which the Townes of most importance and observation, are, 1. Paphos, on the Sea-side, by Pliny called Pala-paphos, or old Paphus, built as some say by Cyniras, the Father of Myrrha, and so named in memory of Paphus his father: but as others say, by Paphos, the Sonne of Pygmalion, Kings of Phœnicia and Cyprus: to which last Ovid doth agree, who speaking of Pygmalions statue, turned into a woman by the power of Venus (or rather of his beautiful wife, fabled, for the surpassing whiteness of her skin, to be made of Ivorie) he addes this of her,

Illa Paphum genuit de quo tenet insula nomen.
She Paphus bare, from whom the name
Of Paphia, to the Iland came.

Here Venus had her so much celebrated Temple; hence the name of Paphia; and here her Votaries of both sexes in their natural nakedness did perform her sacrifices. Both Town and Temple ruined by a fearfull Earthquake; or as the Legends have it, by the prayers of Saint Barnabas; the ruins of it still remaining. 2. Paphos Nova, or New Paphos, Now called Baffo, five miles from the old, built by Agapenor, one of the Nephews of Lycurgus the Spartan Law-giver, after the sack of Troy forced hither by a violent tempest: consecrate to the same impure Godess, and much frequented, but without injury to the other; those which here offered, not thinking they had done her sufficient service, unlesse they went in a solemn manner of procession, and paid their vowes also at the other. 3. Arsinoe, situate betwixt both; built by, or called so in honour of Arsinoe daughter of Ptolomy the first King Egypt, and Lord of Cyprus, of that house. 4. Drepanum, now called Trepano, under the Promontory so named, a well-traded Port, but miserably defaced by the Turks, when they took this Iland. 5. Connelia, one of the richest of the Iland, by reason of the plenty of Sugar, and Cotton, and Wooll, growing thereabouts. Built in the place of 6. Cithera, dedicated to Venus also, but differing from the Iland of that name in the Ægean Sea, rather in pronunciation than the purity of her oblations: the last syllable save one, in the name of that Iland, being short in verse, but this of Cyprus sounding long, as in this of Virgil.

Est Amathus, est celsa mihi Paphos, atq; Cithera.
Cithera, Amathus divine,
And lofty Paphos, are all mine.

2. On the South-East of Paphia lieth the Province or District of AMATHUSIA, taking up the South parts of the Island which look towards Egypt. Chief Towns hereof, 1. Amathus, giving name unto this division, then of most note, and much frequented for the annuall sacrifices made unto Adonis the darling of Venus, who had here another of her Temples: the ruins of both hardly now discerned. Built as some say by Amasis King of Egypt, when he conquered this Iland; but as others say by some of the Anathites, descended from Anath one of the Sons of Canaan. 2. Cetium, or Citium, (for I find it called by both names) the birth-place of Zeno the Stoick, hence called Κιτιεὺς, or Citiensis; and memorable for the death of Cimon the Athenian Generall, a Town wherein the memory of Cittim, the Son of Javan, is most apparently preserved. 3. Episcopio, one of the chief of all the Island, built on the place, or out of the decay, of 4. Curias, not far from the Promontory of the same name, founded by the Argives, where Apollo had both a Grove and a Temple, by the name of Apollo Hylates: his Altars in those times held so sacred, that whosoever presumed to touch them, was thrown into the Sea from the Promontory or rocks adjoining. 5. Salines, or Salinæ, so called from the rich Saltpits, one of the chief Towns of this part; and giving name to one of these twelve Castrades, into which the whole is now divided.

3. LAPETHIA, the third part of the Iland, lyeth on the North thereof, opposite to Cilicia in Asia Minor. Places of most importance in it, 1. Nicosia, the Regall City of the Kings, and the See of the Arch-Bishop, and the chief of the Iland: antiently called Ledronsis, and Lentenis; but those names long ago laid by. Situate in the midest of the Isle; and in a plain and champain Countrey, abundantly fertile and delightfull. Environed with a fair wall, so exactly round as if it had been drawn with a pair of compasses; in circuite about five miles, and both for situation, numbers of people, and magnificent buildings of all sorts both publick and private, compared by some to the most beautiful City of Florence. Fortified by the Venetians, when in their possession, with new walls, deep ditches, and eleven strong Bullwarks, with three great Out-works, all of them built according to the Art of modern fortification. But notwithstanding all these works, and the help of 250 peece of Cannon planted on the walls, and about the City, it was by the Turks taken at the second or third assault, Septemb. 9. Anno 1570. So evident a truth it is, that Fortifications are more strengthened by the gallantry and courage of the Defendants, than the Defendants are by their Fortifications. 2. Cerines, situate neer the Sea, strong by art and nature, and furnished with all things necessary to endure a siege; but yielded to the Turks by Alfonsus Palacius the unwarlike Governour, terrified with the great slaughter made at the sack of Nicosia, before the enemy came neer it. At first called Ceuranie, and said to have been built by Cyrus the great Persian King, when he first subdued the nine Kings hereof, and united the Iland to that Crown; blest with a more temperate and wholsome air, than any other in the Countrey. 3. Tremitus, the birth-place of Spiridion, a Bishop of the Primitive times, renowned for miracles, many of which reported by Sozomen, lib. 1. cap. 10. and other Ecclesiasticall writers. Wholly decaied, the ruine of it much contributing to the rise of Nicosia. 5. Lapithus (by Pliny called Lapetos) on the banks of a small Riveret of that name. Of so great note in former times, that it gave to this Division the name of Lapethia. In this part standeth the hill Olympus (now the Mountain of the holy Cross) described before.

4. SALAMINE, the fourth and last Province of this Iland, taketh up the whole East-parts hereof: So named from 1. Salamis, once the chief City of the Isle, and the See of the Primate, or Metropolitan hereof, in the Primitive times. Destroyed by the Jewes in the reign of Trajan, and re-built again; but being after that taken, sacked, and razed unto the ground by the Saracens, in the time of Heraclius, it never could again recover: the Metropolitan See after that subversion, being removed to Nicosia cosia. It was sometimes, and by some writers, called Constantia also; but that name could give it no more perpetuity than the other of Salamis. Memorable whilest it stood for the founder of it, being Teucer the sonne of Telamon King of Salamis, an Isle of the Ægean Sea; banished his Countrey by his Father, and setled in this Iland by the power of Belus, King of Phœnicia: as also for a famous Temple sacred unto Jupiter, hence called Salaminius. Out of the ruins hereof arose 2. Famagusta, now the prime City of these parts; built as is said by Costa, the Father of Saint Catharine; but that uncertain. Situate at the East end of the Iland, in a plain and low ground betwixt two Promontories, the one called the Cape of Saint Andrew, and the other Capo di Griego, or the head of Græcia. In compass not above two miles, in form foursquare, but that the side towards the East stretcheth out more in length than the other three. On two parts beaten on with the Sea, the other parts towards the Land defended with a Ditch not above fifteen foot in breadth, an old stone wall, and certain Bulwarks. The Haven (opposite to Tripolis a Town of Syria) openeth towards the South-east, defended from the injury of the Sea by two great Rocks, betwixt which the Sea cometh in at a narrow passage not above forty paces broad, but after opening wider and wider, maketh a convenient Harbour, rather safe than large, assured both by the difficult entrance, and a chain crossed over it. The whole Town, when the Turks appeared before it, but meanly fortified: the works of it of the old fashion, generally decaied except one Bulwark, which was built according to the modern Arts of Fortification, with Palisadoes, Curteins, Casemates, and all other Additaments: most gallantly defended by Bragadine the noble Generall, to the wonder and envy of the Turks, who spent no lesse then 118000 great shot upon it; and at last yielded upon honourable terms, had they been as punctually performed. 3. Aphrodisium, so named of Venus, whom the Greeks called Aphrodite, who had here another of her Temples. 4. Arsinoe, built also by one of the Arsinoes Queens of Egypt (there being two others of this name, and the same foundation,) now called Lescare, and antiently renowned for the Groves of Jupiter. 5. Tamassus, of good note in the time of Strabo, for rich Mines of Brass, as afterwards for abundance of Verdegreece and Vitriol, found plentifully in the fields adjoyning. 6. Idalium, neer a Mount of the same name, so called by accident. For Chalcenor the founder of it being told by Oracle, that he should seat himself, and build a City where he first saw the rising Sun: one of his followers, seeing the Sun begin to rise, cried out ἴδου ἥλιον, that is to say, behold the Sun. Which omen taken by Chalcenor, he here built this City. But whether this were so or not (as for my part I build not very much upon it) certain it is, that Venus had here another Temple, neighboured by the Idalian Groves, so memorized and chanted by the antient Poets. So strong an influence had lust and sensuality on this wretched People, that every corner of the Iland was defiled with those brutish Sacrifices which day by day were offered to that impure deitie: though to say truth, it was no marvail if having made their Belly their God, they made also in the next place their glory their shame.

The first Inhabitants of this Iland were the posterity of Cittim the Sonne of Javan, and grand-sonne of Japhet: who having seen his brother Tarshish setled in Cilicia, (where his memory is still preserved in the City of Tarsus) planted himself and his retinue in this opposite Island. The City of Cetium as Ptolemy, or Citium as Pliny calleth it, one of the antientest of the Iland; which with the authority of Josephus and others of the antient writers, put it out of question. But being this Iland was too narrow to contain his numbers, and willing to seek further off for a larger dwelling, he left here so many of his followers as might serve in time to plant the Countrey; and with the rest passed into Macedon, where we have already spoken of him. Made tributary first to Amasis King of Egypt, from which distant about three or four daies sailing. Subjected afterwards to the Phœnicians, a neer neighbour to them, who being a Sea-faring people, made themselves masters of the Sea-coasts and maritime places. Cinyras the Father of Myrrha (by whom both Father and Grand-Father to Adonis) is said to have been King of both. The like affirmed of Belus one of his Successors, who is said to have been the founder of the City of Citium, named so (if not rather repaired than new built by him,) with reference no doubt to Cittim, the first Progenitor of this People. By the power and favour of this Belus, Teucer the Sonne of Telamon banished his Countrey, accompanied with many followers from Salamis, Athens, and Arcadia, was settled in the East-parts hereof, where the City of Salamis, by him built, was his first plantation. Yet so, that the Phœnicians kept their former hold: it being evident in Story that Elulæus one of the Successors of this Belus, (but a King of Tyre,) and a Co-temporary with Salmanassar King of Assyria, passed over into Cyprus with a puissant Navy to reduce the Citieans to obedience, who had then rebelled. The Iland at first comming of Teucer hither so infinitely overgrown with woods, that the people were not able to till the land. Insomuch that notwithstanding the great wast made of them, both in building ships, and casting metals, a law was made that every one which would should fell them, and take as much ground in severalty for his own inheritance, as he could overcome and make fit for tillage. Encourged herewith, the natural Cypriots, together with the Colonies of Grecians, Phœnicians, and Ægyptians, so bestirred themselves, that at last they brought it unto Champagn: parcelled out in succeeding times amongst nine Kings, for so many Cyrus the great Persian Monarch found at his comming hither. But Cyrus, though he did subdue all those petit Princes, yet he took not from them their estates, or titles: contented with the conquest of it, and an annual tribute. For after this, in the time of Artaxerxes Mnemon, we find Evagoras, and Nicocles, to whom Isocrates inscribed two of his Orations, to be Kings hereof. And in the time of Alexander the Great, Citium it self (such was the honour born unto the Mother-City) had a King apart, not subject unto any other. The King whereof to indear himself with the Conquerour, gave him a sword, μαχαίραν θαυμαστὴν, saith Plutarch, an admirable sword, both for colour and lightness, which he after used in all his fights. And after the death of Alexander, his great Commanders cantoning his estates amongst them, the Princes and people of this Iland were in great distractions; not knowing to whom they they might submit for their best advantage. But Ptolomy who had seized on Egypt for his part of the spoil, being strong in shipping, settled them by a personal visit; and fortifying some of the best pieces in it, assured the Countrey to himself. To him and his posterity it continued subject till the time of Ptolomy Auletes the nineth King of this line in our Accompt, who gave it for a portion to one of his Brethren: in whose time, the Romans, without any colour or pretence of quarrell, but only to enrich themselves with the spoil of the Iland, sent Portius Cato to subdue it. And he at first assayed to get it with the Kings content, offering him, in the name of the Roman Senate, the Priest-hood of the Temple of Paphos, being a rich and gainful Office, and of high esteem among that people. But when Ptolomy for fear of a worse mischief had made away himself by poison, Cato without more ceremony takes possession of it. And because Ammianus Marcellinus the Historian, hath so significantly expressed this business, and withall described so punctually the estate of this Iland; we will adde to this discourse from him; though somewhat be repeated which was said before. Cyprum insulam procul à Continente distantem, & pretiosam, &c. "The Isle of Cyprus, farre distant from the Continent, and well stored with Harbours, is famous, besides "many Municipall Towns, by two principall Cities, that is to say, Salamis, and Paphos, the one "sacred to Jupiter, and the other to Venus. An Isle so admirably fruitful, and with all things furnish-"ed, that without the help of any forrein Nation, it is able of it self to build and rig forth a ship from "the very keel unto the top-sail, and trim it with all tackle necessary for a present voyage. Nor do I "shame to say, that with greater avarice than justice, the Romans did invade this Iland; King Ptolo-"my, our old Confederate and Ally, being unworthily proscribed, for no other reason, but that our "treasury was bare, our Exchequor empty. And he no sooner had prevented this dishonour by a quick "and voluntary death, making away himself by poison, but the Iland was forthwith made tributary, "and the riches of it, velut hostiles exuvia classi imposita & in urbem adducta per Catonem, as the spoils "of some conquered enemy were brought on Ship-bord, and conveyed by Cato unto Rome. So far and to this purpose he.

I know there is another cause alleged for the sending of Cato on this Errand, viz. that Clodius who was then Tribune and sped the Edict, might have opportunity by his absence to revenge himself on Cicero and some others of the opposite faction: but the main business was the money, as before was said; the prey amounting to 7000 Talents, which comes to two Millions, and one hundred thousand Crowns, of coin now currant. Which money and moveables, amounting unto so vast a sum, he fearing to lose by Sea, divided it into many small portions, which he put into several boxes, viz. in every box two Talents and fifty Drachms. At the end of every box he fastened a long rope with a piece of Cork; by which floating above the water, the money, if by Shipwrack lost, might be espied again: which was not much unlike the buoyes which Mariners fasten by long ropes to their Anchors, that they may be the sooner found. We see by this that the pretence of the Romans to this Countrey was very weak: Avariùs magis quam justius summus assecuti, are the words of Sextus Rufus also. But being made a Roman Province, it was in the division of the Empire assigned to the Constantinopolitan Emperours: under whom it suffered, as all other parts of the Empire did, by the violent invasion of the Saracens, who spoiled and ransacked it in the time of Constans the second, destroying then the City of Salamis or Constantia. But that tempest being overblown, they returned again unto that Empire, governed by a Succession of Dukes, till the year 1184. At which time Andronicus Comnenus usurping the Greek Empire, compelled Isaacibus Comnenus, one of the bloud Royal, to shift for himself: who seasing on this Iland made himself King thereof, and ruling till the year 1191. when Richard the first of England, being denyed the Common courtesie of taking in fresh water, and seeing his Souldiers abused by the Cypriots, not only took the King Prisoner, but subdued the whole Iland. And as Paterculus telleth us, that when Marcus Antonius had captivated Artamasdes King of Armenia; Catenis, sed ne quid honori deesset, aureis vinxit; So did our Richard keep a decorum towards this Prisoner, binding him not in bonds of Iron, but silver. King Richard having thus possessed himself of this Countrey, sold it for ready money, (which for his mannaging of his intended wars against the Turk, he most needed) unto the Templers: and taking it, upon I know not what discontent, again from them, he bestowed it on Guy of Lusignam, the titulary and miserable King of Hierusalem; receiving in way of exchange, the title of that lost and shipwracked Kingdome; with which title he and some of his Successours for a time were honoured.

In the posterity of this Guy, this Iland continued free and absolute till the year one thousand foure hundred twentythree when Melechella (or Melechnaser) Sultan of Egypt, invaded this Countrey, took John King hereof Prisoner, ransomed him for 150000 Sultanies, restored him to his Kingdome, and imposed on him and his Successours, the yearly tribute of 40000 Crowns. This John was Father to another John, whose two Children were Carlotte a legitimate daughter, and James a bastard Sonne. James, after the death of his Father, dispossessed his Sister Carlotte of the Crown, by the consent and help of the Sultan of Egypt. and the better to strengthen himself against all opposition, he took to wife Catharina Cornari, daughter by adoption to the Venetian Senate; whom at his death he made his heir, if the child she went withall (having then none by her) should die without issue, as it did, not long after it was born: and she seeing the factious Nobility too head-strong to be bridled by a female authority, like a good child resigned her Crown and Scepter to the Venetian State, Anno 1473. These defended it against all claims, (paying only as tribute to the Ægyptian, and after to the Turkish Sultans, the 40000 Crowns before mentioned;) till the year 1570. when Mustapha, Generall of the Turks, wrested it from the Venetians, to the use of his Master Selimus the second, who pretended title to it as Lord of Ægypt. The governour of the Venetian Forces at the time of this unfortunate loss, was Signior Bragadino: who as long as hope of succours, meanes of resistance, or possibility of prevailing continued, with incredible valour made good the Town of Famagusta, in whose defence consisted the welfare of the whole Island. At last he yielded it on honourable conditions, had they been as faithfully kept, as punctually agreed on. But Mustapha the Turkish Generall inviting to his Tent, the principall men of worth in the Town, caused them all to be murdered: and as for Bragadin himself, he commanded his ears to be cut off, his body to be flead alive, and his skin stuffed with straw, to be hanged at the main yard of his Gally. The chief of the prisoners and spoiles were in two tall ships, and one Gallion, sent unto Selimus; but he never saw them. For a Noble Cyprian Lady destinated to the lust of the Grand Signeour, fired certain barrels of powder; by the violence whereof both the vessels and the booty in them, were in part burned, in part drowned. A famous and heroick act; inferiour unto none of the Roman Dames, so much commended in their Stories, though more to be commended in a Roman than a Christian Lady.

Thus having summed up the affaires of this Iland from the first plantation of it, till this last sad conquest, I will lay down the succession of the Cyprian Kings of the Noble Lusignam Family, in this ensuing Catalogue of

The Kings of Cyprus.

1. Guy of Lusignam, the titulary King of Hierusalem, estated in the Kindome of Cyprus by Richard the first of England.
2. Almericus, the brother of Guy.
3. Hugh, the Sonne of Almericus.
4. Henry, the Sonne of Hugh.
5. Hugh II. Sonne of Henry.
6. Hugh III. Sonne of Hugh the second.
7. John, Sonne of Hugh the third.
8. Henry II. the Brother of John.
9. Hugh IV. Sonne of Guido, the younger brother of John, and Henry the second.
10. Peter, the Sonne of Hugh the fourth.
11. Petrinus, the Sonne of Peter.
12. James, younger brother of Peter, and Uncle to Petrinus.
13. Janus, the Sonne of James, made Tributary by Melechnaser, to the Kingdome of Ægypt.
14. John II. the Sonne of Janus.
15. Carlotte, sole Daughter and heir of John the second, first maryed to John the Prince of Portugal, and after to Lewis Prince of Savoy; outed of her estate and Kingdome, by
16. James II. the bastard Sonne of John the second, who by a strong hand seized upon it; and by help of the Venetians kept it during life.
17. James III. born after the decease of his Father, whom he survived not very long. After whose death, being the last of this Family, the Venetians possessed themselves of Cyprus: which they invaded with no better title than the Romans had done in former times; and not likely to be blest with a long fruition of that which they had so unjustly got into their hands. But of that already.

And here it is to be observed that these Cyprian Kings retaining the title of Hierusalem (towards which they sometimes cast an eye) bestowed upon their greatest Subjects, and deserving Servitors, both titles of Honour and Offices of State, belonging antiently to that Kingdome. So that we find amongst them a Prince of Antioch, a Prince of Galilee, a Count of Tripoli, a Lord of Cæsarea, and a Lord of Mount Tabor; a Seneschall of Hierusalem, a Constable, Marshall, and High Chamberlain of that Kingdome also. With better reason, though no doubt with as little profit, as the Pope gives Bishopricks, and Arch-Bishopricks in Greece or Ægypt. But those titular Offices are now quite extent, though possibly some of the titles of honor which were took from thence, may be still remaining.

But to return unto the Turks, having thus taken Famagusta, and Nicosia, on which the whole Iland did depend, all other Cities of it, and the whole by consequence, were forced to submit to the Turkish Tyranny. The Noble men, and Citizens of principall quality, either most cruelly massacred in the sack of those Towns, or banished for ever their native Countrey, as men whose living there might possibly endanger their new conquest. But the Countrey people, Artificers, and persons of inferiour rank, permitted to enjoy both their lives and livelyhoods; together with their severall and respective religions, in the same manner as before: paying such ordinary taxes as were laid upon them. And so this goodly Iland came into the hands of the Turks, who have hitherto enjoied the possession of it: For notwithstanding that the Venetians, inthe year next following, with the help of the Pope and King of Spain, gave the Turks that great and memorable overthrow, at the famous battel of Lepanto: yet did they nothing in pursuit of so great a victory for the recovery of this Iland; and indeed they could not: the confederates returning home, and dissolving their Fleet, as soon as they had secured their own estates by the overthrow of the Turkish Navy. And though the Venetians, to put the best face they could on so great a losse, so highly pleased themselves with the following Victory, that they put the same in balance with the losse of Cyprus: yet an ingenious Turk to let them see the folly of so vain a boasting, compared the losing of Cyprus, to the loss of an Arme, which could not without a miracle be recovered; and the loss at Lepanto to the shaving off of ones beard, which growes the thicker for the cutting, as indeed it proved: For the next year the Turks armed out another Navy, no leſſe formidable than the other had been before, braving therewith the whole Chriſtian Forces, not as then disbanded.

What the Revenues of it were to the Kings hereof, I cannot certainly determine. The profits of Salt only, and that of the Cuſtome-houſe yielded yearly to the Signeury of Venice, when it was in their hands, a million of Crowns. For the Cuſtomes and profits of the Salt were farmed for 500000 Crowns per annum, which being turned into the Chief Cyprian Commodities, were counted double worth that money, when unladed at Venice. To which if we ſhould adde the lands of the former Kings, and other waies of raiſing money on the Subject, I cannot ſee, but the Intrado of the Crown muſt needs amount conſtantly to a million and an half yearly, if it were not more.

The Armes hereof were quarterly, firſt Argent, a Croſs Potent between four Croſſes Or; ſecondly Barre-wiſe of eight pieces, Arg. and Azure, ſupporting a Lion Paſſant Azure, Crowned, Or; thirdly, a Lion Gules; and fourthly, Argent, a Lion Gules; as Bara a French Herald hath given the Blazon.

On the Eaſt of Cyprus towards Syria ly four ſmall Ilands, which Ptolomy calleth by the name of Clides, not far from the Promontory of that name; both Promontory and Iland now called Saint Andrews: and towards the Weſt another little knot of Iſlets, which he calls Carpaſia; but nothing memorable in either. So I paſſe them over.

There are in Cyprus
Arch-Biſhops 2. Biſhops 6.

And ſo much for CYPRVS.

OF

OF SYRIA.

SYRIA is bounded on the East, with the River Euphrates, by which parted from Mesopotamia; on the West, with the Mediterranean Sea; on the North, with Cilicia and Armenia Minor, from the last parted by Mount Taurus; and on the South, with Palestine, and some parts of Arabia. The length hereof from Mount Taurus to the edge of Arabia, is said to be five hundred twenty and five miles; the breadth from the Mediterranean to the River Euphrates computed at four hundred and seventy; drawing somewhat neer unto a square.

In the Scriptures it is called Aram, and the People Aramites, because first peopled and possessed by Aram the sonne of Sem, though Hamath, Arphad, and Sidon, the sonnes of Canaan, did also put in for a share: and yet not called thus by the Scriptures onely, but by some of the Heathen writers also. For Strabo doth not onely acknowledge, that the Syrians in his time were called Ἀεμμοι, but citeth Possidonius a more antient Writer, for proof that the Ἀελμοι, which Homer speaketh of must be those Syrians: further averring, that the Syrians called themselves by the name of Aramæi, or plainly Aramites. But by the Greeks they are called Syrians, or Surians, from the City Tyre, called antiently by the name of Sur, or Tsur, (of which more hereafter) either because the Tyrians or Tsurians, had in those times the command of the Sea-coasts of this Countrey; or else that Tyro or Tsur being the chief Mart-Town of all those parts, was the place where they traded with these Aramites. Conform to which antient Appellations, the City of Tyre is again called Sur, and this Countrey Soria.

But here we are to understand, that though the Syria of the Romans, as it was a member of that Empire, was limited within the bounds before laid down; yet antiently as well the Aram of the Hebrewes, as the Syria of the Greeks and Romans, was of greater Latitude: of which because it may be usefull to the understanding of holy Scriptures, and of some Classick Authors also, I shall enlarge a little further. For Aram, taken in the largest exception of it, extendeth from the Coast of Cilicia, North, to Idumæa towards the South; from the River Tigris in the East, to the Mediterranean Sea, upon the West, conteining besides the Syria of the Greeks and Romans (in which Palestine also was included) Arabia the Desart, and Petræa, Chaldæa, Babylonia, and all those Provinces to which the name Aram is either prefixed or subjoyned in the Book of God, as Aram-Naharaijm, Aram-Sobah, Padan-Aram, Aram-Maahah, Sede-Aram, Aram-Beth-Rehob; all mentioned in the holy Scriptures. Some doe extend it further yet, and do not only bring Armenia within the Latitude of this name, which they derive from Aram-minni, whose neighbourhood to Syria may give some colour to the errour; but even those People of Cappadocia bordering on the Euxine Sea, the Inhabitants of which were antiently called Luco Syri, or white Syrians. But this not having any good warrant or authority wherewithall to back it, shall not come under the compass of this consideration. But for the rest, I find it generally agreed upon amongst the learned, that Aram-Naharaijm, is the same with the whole Countrey of Mesopotamia, so named both by the Jewes and Grecians, because it is environed with the two famous Rivers of Tygris and Euphrates; which Priscian by a meer Latine name, would have to be called Medanna (but Inter-Amna by his leave would express it better) and as for Padan-Aram wherein Laban dwelt, which is called Sede-Aram by the Prophet Hosea, chap. 12. v. 13. that is a part onely of the other: the whole Countrey of Aram-Naharaijm or Mesopotamia being divided into two parts; whereof the more fruitfull lying North-ward, is called Padan-Aram, or Sede-Aram, to whose Inhabitants Xenophon gives the name of Syrians; the barren and more defart lying towards the South, which by the same Author is called Arabia. For Aram-Maachah, mentioned 1 Corin. 19. 6. it is conceived to be that part of Syria, which was after named Comagena, whereof Samosata was the Metropolis or Mother City. And as for Aram-Sobah, of which and of Adadezer the King thereof, there is so frequent mention in the Books of the Kings and Chronicles, it was the Province lying on the North-East of Damascus, and [illegible] the banks of the River Euphrates, and is the same with that which [illegible] called [illegible] from the City Palmyra. South-west of which amongst the pety Kingdomes on the North of Gessur in the Land of Palestine, lay the Kingdome of Aram-Beth-Rehob, confederate with Ammon in the warre which they had with David, 2. Sam. 10. 6. Nor did the Greeks less extend the name of Syria, then the Hebrewes did the name of Aram, if they stretched it not further. Certain I am, that Strabo comprehendeth the Assyrians in the name of Syria, where he affirmeth, that the Medes over-ruled all Asia, καὶ καλούσασι τὴν τῶν Σύρων ἀρχὴν, the Empire of the Syrians (he meaneth the Assyrians) being overthrown. And in Herodotus it is said, that those whom the Barbarians call Assyrians, ὑπὸ μὲν Ἑλλήνων ἐκαλέοντο Σύριοι, were called Syrians by the Greeks. And to that purpose Justin also, Imperium Assyrij, qui postea Syri dicti sunt, Annos 1300 tenuere. But these all writ writ after the time that Seleucus and his race had the poſſeſſion of the Eaſtern Empire: who living for the moſt part in Syria, from whence they might more eaſily furniſh themſelves with Souldiers out of Greece, (as they did moſt commonly for all their military expeditions) cauſed all the other parts of their large dominions to be called in tract of time by the name of Syria. But on the other ſide, as the Syria of the Romans extended not to the Eaſt and South, as the Aram of the Hebrews did: ſo it contained ſome other Regions, that is to ſay, thoſe of Phœnicia and Paleſtine, which were not comprehended in the name of Aram; as being planted by a people of another race, and of different fortunes, till brought together under the command of the Babylonians. In which regard we will treat ſeverally of the natures of the ſoyl and people; their originals, government, and ſucceſſes, till we have brought them into one hand: and then continue their affaires as one joint eſtate. But firſt we will ſurvey the antient and preſent fortunes of Chriſtianity, and other Religions herein embraced or tolerated, wherein the whole, according to the bounds and limits before laid down, is alike concerned.

And for Religions in this Countrey, here is choiſe enough; thoſe namely of the Mahometan, Chriſtian, Pagan; and one compounded out of all, which is that of the Druſians. The Mahometan imbraced by the generality of the people throughout the whole, and by all that be in any office or authority, is only countenanced and approved of, though the reſt be tolerated. The Pagan intertained onely in the mountainous Countreys bordering on Armenia; inhabited by a people whom they call Curdi, or the Curdenes, ſuppoſed to be deſcended from the antient Parthians, as being very expert in Bows and Arrows, their moſt uſual Annes. A race of people who are ſaid to worſhip alike both God and the Devil; the one that they may receive benefits from him, the other that he may not hurt them. Se alios deos colere ut proſint, alios ne noceant, as Lactantius doth affirm of the antient Grecians. But their principall devotions are addreſſed to the Devil only, and that upon good reaſons, as themſelves conceive. For God they ſay is a good man, and will do no body no harm, but the Devill is a miſchievous fellow, and muſt be pleaſed with ſacrifices that he do not hurt them. And for the Druſians, they are conceived to be the remainder of thoſe Frankes (by which name the Turks call all Weſtern Chriſtians) who driven unto the mountains, (when they loſt the ſoveraignty and poſſeſſion of the Holy Land) and defending themſelves by the advantage of the place, could never be wholly rooted out by the Turks: contented at the length to afford them both peace and liberty of their religion. But they have ſo forgot the Principles of that Religion, that they retain nothing of it but baptiſm; and not that generally neither: accounting it lawful moſt unlawfully to marry their own Daughters, Siſters, or Mothers: and yet conform unto the Turks in their habit only, wearing the white Turbant, as the Turks do; but abhorring Circumciſion, and indulging to themſelves the liberty of wine, by law forbidden to the Turks. A people otherwiſe very warlike, ſtout and reſolute: with great, both conſtancy and courage, reſiſting hitherto the Attempts of the Turkiſh Sultans. The Countrey they poſſeſs environed with the confines of Joppa about Cæſarea Paleſtina, betwixt the Rivers of Jordan and Orontes, extending Eaſtwards as far as the plains of Damaſcus: ſo that there is no part of Syria, except Comagena, unto which their habitations reach not.

But for the Chriſtian Faith it was firſt preached here by ſome of the diſperſed Brethren, (which fled from the rage of perſecution) in Phonice, and the City of Antiochia, amongſt whom Saint Peter, as he paſſed through all quarters, Acts 9 31. is by the Fathers ſaid to have been the Chief. The Church more fully planted in it by Barnabas firſt, after by Paul and Barnabas jointly. Who ſpending there a whole year together, inlarged the borders of the Church, and gained much people, as is ſaid Acts 11. v. 19. &c. inſomuch that here the Diſciples were firſt called Chriſtians, v. 26. Not called ſo accidentally as a thing of chance, but on a ſerious conſultation had amongſt themſelves, and a devout invocation on the name of God to direct them in it. The word χρηματίσαι uſed in the Originall importeth ſomewhat of Oracular and Divine direction. And certainly it ſtandeth with reaſon that it ſhould be ſo. For if upon the giving of a name to John the Baptiſt, there was not only a conſultation had of the Friends and Mother, but the dumb Father called to adviſe about it; and if we uſe not to admit the pooreſt child of the pariſh into the congregation of Chriſts Church by the door of Baptiſm, but by the joint invocation of the name of God for his bleſſings on it: with how much more regard of Ceremony and Solemnity muſt we conceive that the whole body of Chriſts people were baptized into the name of Chriſtians? And there is ſome proof for it too, beſides probability and conjectures. For Suidas, and before him Johannes Antiochenus an old Coſmographer, do expreſly ſay, that in the daies of Claudius Cæſar, ten years after the Aſcenſion of our Lord and Saviour, Euodius received Epiſcopal conſecration, and was made Patriarch of Antioch the Great in Syria, ſucceeding immediately to St. Peter: then addeth, that at that time the Diſciples were firſt called Chriſtians, τῶ αὐτῶ Ἐπισκόπῳ Εὐοδίῳ προσομιλήσαντος αὐτοῖς, καὶ ὀνομάσαντος αὐτοὺς τὸ ὄνομα τοῦτο, &c. i. e. Euodius their Biſhop calling them to a Solemn Aſſembly, and impoſing this new name upon them, whereas before they were called Nazarites and Galilæans. A people ſo hated by the Heathen, that they ceaſed not to ſlander them from the firſt beginning. For as concerning this Sect, we know that it is every where ſpoken againſt, ſaid the Jews of Rome to the Apoſtle, Acts 28. 22. Tacitus, a Roman, but a Gentile, goes yet further with them, calling them homines per flagitia inviſos, & noviſſima meritos exemplo; the calumny in his time being ſtrong and generall, that at their private meetings they devoured Infants, and had carnall company with their Mothers and Siſters. Which defamations notwithſtanding they grew in few years to ſo great numbers that they were a terrour to their Enemies, though grievouſly afflicted, tortured, and put to ſeverall kindes of death, under the ten Famous Perſecutions, raiſed againſt them, by Nero, Anno 67. 2. Domitian, Anno 96. 3. Trajanus, Anno 110. 4. Marcus Antonius, Anno 167. 5. Severus, Anno 195. 6. Maximinus, Anno 237. 7. Decius, Anno 250. 8. Valerianus, Anno 259. 9. Aurelianus, Anno 278. 10. by Dioclesianus, tianus, Anno 293. All, but this last especially so extremely raging, that (as Saint Hierome writeth in one of his Epistles) there were martyred 5000 for each day in the year, except the first of January, on which they used not to shed bloud. But sanguis Martyrum semen Ecclesiæ. This little grain of Mustard-seed, sowed by Gods own hand, and watered by the blood of so many holy men, grew so great a tree, that the branches of it spred themselves over all the world: and got such footing, even in the Roman Army it self, (men commonly not of the strictest kind of Religion,) that when Julian the Apostata had vomited out his soul, with Vicisti tandem Galilæe, they elected Jovinian, though a Christian, for his Successor, with this acclamation, Christiani omnes sumus, We are also Christians. But see how the baptizing of Gods people by the name of Christians, in the City of Antioch, hath drawn me out of my way. I return again, both to the place and to the Author. In whose evidence, besides what doth concern the imposition of the name of Christian upon the body of the faithful, we have a testimony for Saint Peters being Bishop of Antioch, the first Bishop thereof (of the Church of the Jews therein at least) as is said positively by Eusebius in his Chronologie, Saint Hierome in his Catalogue of Ecclesiasticall writers, Saint Chrysostome in his Homilie de Translatione Ignatii, Theodoret, Dialog. 1. Saint Gregory Epistol. lib. 6. cap. 37. and before any of them by Origen, in his sixt Homily on Saint Luke. With reference whereunto, and in respect that Antioch was accompted alwaies the principal City of the East parts of the Roman Empire (the Prefect of the East for the most part residing in it) the Bishop hereof in the first Ages of Christianity had jurisdiction over all the Churches in the East, as far as the bounds of that Empire did extend that way. To which by Constantine the Great the Provinces of Cilicia and Isauria, with those of Mesopotamia and Osroena were after added: containing fifteen Roman Provinces, or the whole Diocese of the Orient. And though by the substracting of the Churches of Palestine, and the decay of Christianity in these parts by the conquests of the Turks and Saracens, the jurisdiction of this Patriarch hath bin very much lessened: yet William of Tyre, who flourished in the year 1130. reciteth the names of 13 Archiepiscopal, 21 Metropolitical, and 127. Episcopal Sees, yielding obedience in his time to the See of Antioch. Since which that number is much diminished, Mahometanism more and more increasing, and Christianity divided into Sects and factions: insomuch as of three sorts of Christians living in these Countreys, viz. the Maronites, Jacobites, and Melchites, onely the Melchites are subordinate to the Church of Antioch, the others having Patriarchs of their own Religion.

And first for the Melchites, who are indeed the true and proper Members of the Church of Antioch, and the greatest body of Christians in all the East, they are so named in way of scorn by the Jacobite and Maronite Schismatick, separating without just cause from their communion. The name derived from Malchi, signifying in the Syriack language a King or Emperour: because adhering to their Primate, they followed the Canons and decisions of preceding Councils, ratified by authority of the Emperour Leo, by whom subscription was required to the Acts thereof, and were in that respect, (as we use to say) of the Kings Religion. Conform in points of doctrine to the Church of Greece, but that they celebrate divine service as solemnly on the Saturday as upon the Sunday: subject to their true and original Patriarch, who since the destruction of Antioch doth reside in Damascus; and on no terms acknowledging the authority of the Popes of Rome.

Next for the Maronites, they derive that name either from Marona, one of the principall Villages where they first inhabited; or from the Monasterie of S. Maron, mentioned in the first Act of the Council of Constantinople holden under Mennas, the Monks of which called Maronites, were the head of their Sect. Some points they hold, in which they differ from all Orthodox Christians; others in which they differ onely from the Church of Rome. Of the first sort, 1. That the Holy Ghost proceedeth from the Father onely, without relation to the Sonne. 2. That the Souls of men were created all together at the first beginning. 3. That male Children are not be Baptized together, but at severall times by one and one. 4. That Heretiques returning to the Church, are to be re-baptized. 5. That the Child is made unclean by the touch of his Mother till her purification, and therefore not Baptizing Children till that time be past, which after the birth of a Male Child, must be forty daies, of a Female, eighty. 6. That the Eucharist is to be given to Children presently after Baptism. 7. That the fourth Mariage is utterly unlawfull. 8. That the Father may dissolve the mariage of his Sonne or Daughter. 9. That young men are not to be Ordained Priests or Deacons except they be maried. 10. That nothing Strangled, or of blood, may be eaten by Christians. 11. That Women in their monethly courses are not to be admitted to the Eucharist, or to come into the Church. 12. And finally (which was indeed their first discrimination from the Orthodox Christians) that there was but one will and action in Christ, the Fautors of which opinion had the name of Monothelites. Of the last kind, 1. That the Sacrament of the Lords Supper was to be administred in both kinds; 2. and in Leavened bread; 3. that bread to be broken to the Communicants (and not each man to have his wafer to himself,) according to the first Institution. 4. Not reserving that Sacrament, 5. nor carying any part of the consecrated Elements to sick persons in danger of death. 6. That Mariage is nothing inferiour to the single life. 7. That no man entreth the Kingdome of Heaven till the General Judgement. 8. That the Saturday or old Sabbath is not to be fasted; 9. nor the Sacrament upon daies of fasting to be administred till the Evening. They withdrew themselves from the See of Antioch, and set up a Patriark of their own, many ages since, (but the certain time thereof I find not) conferring on him for the greater credit of their Schism, the honourable title of the Patriarch of Antioch. His name perpetually to be Peter, as the undoubted Successour of that Apostle in the See thereof. Dispersed about the spurres and branches of Mount Libanus, where they have many Townships and scattered Villages, of which four are reported to retain in their common speech the true antient Syriack; that is to say 1. Eden, a small village, but a Bishops See, by the Turks called Æchera, 2. Hatchtuth, 3. Sherrie, 4. Bole- ſa, or Blouſa, little ſuperiour to the reſt in bigneſs or beauty, but made the ſeat of their Patriarch, when he comes amongſt them. At ſuch time as the Weſtern Chriſtians were poſſeſſed of theſe parts, they ſubmitted to the Church of Rome; but upon their expulſion by the Turks and Saracens, they returned again to the obedience of their own Patriarch, on whom they have ever ſince depended. His reſidence for the moſt part at Tripolis a chief Town of Syria; but when he came to viſit his Churches, and take an accompt of his Suffragan Biſhops (who are nine in number) then at Blouſa, as is ſaid before. Won to the Papacy again by John Baptiſt a Jeſuite, in the time of Pope Gregory the thirteenth, who ſent them a Catechiſm from Rome printed in the Arabian language (which is generally ſpoken by them) for their inſtruction in the Rudiments of that Religion: yet ſo, that their Patriarch ſtill retains his former power, and the Prieſts ſtill officiate by the old liturgies of thoſe Churches in the Syriack tongue. So that this reconciliation upon the matter is but a matter of complement on the one ſide, and oſtentation on the other: without any increaſe of power or patrimony to the Pope at all. And for the Jacobites, though diſperſed in many places of this Countrey, yet ſince they are more entirely ſettled in Meſopotamia, where their Patriarch alſo hath his abode or reſidence, we ſhall there ſpeak of them.

The language vulgarly here ſpoken is the Arabick tongue, continued here ever ſince the ſubjugation of theſe Countreys by the Saracens. But antiently they ſpake the Syrian and Phœnician languages. Of which the firſt, (for of the other we ſhall ſpeak when we come to Phœnicia) was the very ſame with the Chaldæan, (as the learned Brerewood hath obſerved) either originally ſo, or elſe received by them when firſt conquered by the Babylonians. In which reſpect the Jews when they returned home from their long Captivity, gave to the language which they brought with them the name of Syriack; being a compound of the Hebrew and Chaldæan tongues: Chaldæan for a great part of it, as to the ſubſtance of the words; but Hebrew as to the notation of points, Conjugations, Affixes, and other properties of their former and original ſpeech. And of this more herafter alſo, when we come to Paleſtine. But whatſoever their language was in former times, it is now ſo overtopped by the Arabick, that it is ſpoken in ſome Villages of the Maronites onely in all theſe Countreys; the Arabick being generally uſed in all the reſt, as was ſaid before.

Principall Rivers of theſe parts, are, 1. Chorſæus, called Chiſon by the Hebrews, which hath its fountain in Paleſtine, but his fall in Phœnicia, not far from Mount Carmel. 2. Orontes, now called Saldino, and by ſome writers Jordan the leſs, ariſeth out of the hills called Pieria, not far from Mount Libanus, and after a while running under the ground, breaketh forth again about Apamia, and paſſing by the great City of Antioch, falleth into the Sea not farre from it. It was firſt called Typhon, and took this name from one Orontes who built the firſt bridge over it, as we find in Strabo. 3. Eleutherus, which riſeth out of ſome part of Libanus, and glideth with a ſpeedy courſe thorough a ſtrangely-intricate Channel, into the Mediterranean Sea: guilty of the death of the Emperour Frederick Barbaroſſa, who falling from his horſe as he purſued the Infidels, and oppreſſed with the weight of his Armour, was here drowned, and lyeth buried at Tyre. It is now called Caſmer. 4. Singas, by ſome ſaid to be called Marſoas alſo, which ariſing in the mountainous parts of Comagena, and paſſing by the City of Aleppo, falleth into Euphrates. 5. Euphrates, the moſt famoſt River of the Eaſt; of which more hereafter.

Chief Mountains of it, 1. Carmel, which being properly of Phœnicia, we ſhall there ſpeak of it. 2. Pieria, out of which the River Orontes hath its firſt Originall. 3. Caſius, not far from Antioch, ſaid to be four miles high perpendicularly. 4. Libanus, famous for its multitude of Cedars growing thereupon; affording materials unto Solomon for the holy Temple. Beſides which it afforded ſuch ſtore of Frankincenſe, that ſome derived the name from λίβανος, ſignifying Frankincenſe in the Greek: and ſo repleniſhed with Honey falling from the Heavens, and hanging on the Boughs of the Trees, that the Husbandmen uſed to ſing (as Gallen telleth us) that God rained honey; and yearly filled their pots and veſſels with the ſweets thereof. This the moſt famous and greateſt Hill of all theſe parts, extending in length 150 miles, that is to ſay, from Sidon a City of Phœnicia, to Smyrna, one of the Cities of Cœle-Syria: and taking ſeven hundred miles in compaſs. Inhabited wholly in a manner by the Maronite Chriſtians, who to keep that dwelling to themſelves, without the intermixture of Mahometans, doe yearly pay to the Great Turk ſeventeen Sultanies a man, for every one above twelve years of Age, each Sultanie being reckoned at ſeven ſhillings and ſix pence of our money. And yet thoſe Maronites though intire, without intermixture, are held to be the ſmalleſt Sect, for numbers, in all the Eaſt, not eſtimated to exceed twelve thouſand houſholds, by reaſon of the indiſpoſition of this Mountain, in moſt places unfit for habitation. For beſides the craggineſs and ſteepineſs of it, which makes many parts hereof to be inacceſſible; the higher Ridges of it are in a manner perpetually covered with Snow, not melted in ſo hot a Climat at the neereſt approaches of the Sun. And thence no doubt it took this name: the word Leban, in the Hebrew and Phœnician Language ſignifying White, or whiteneſs: even as from the like whiteneſs of Snow, the higheſt part of the Pyrenan hills had the name of Canus; and that perpetuall Ridge of Mountains which part Italy from France and Germany, had the name of Alpes. 5. Anti-Libanus, oppoſite to the former, and from that ſo called, a rich, but litle Vally onely being interpoſed, out of which Vally the Orontes hath its ſpring or Fountain; the hill Pieria there beginning to advance it ſelf. Some make but one Mountain of them both, divided into two great Ledges or Chains of Hills. Of which the main body lying towards the North, hath the name of Libanus; that on the South being but a branch or excurſion of it, called Anti-Libanus. And to this the Scripture gives ſome hint, in which both paſs for one by the name of Lebanon.

The whole Countrey was antiently divided into theſe ſix parts, viz. 1. Phœnicia. 2. Paleſtine. 3. Syria ſpecially ſo called. 4. Comagena. 5. Palmyrene, and 6. Cœle-Syria, or Syria Cava. But Paleſtine, coming under a more diſtinct conſideration, we ſhall now ſpeak onely of the reſt.

1. PHOENICIA.

PHOENICIA is bounded on the East and South, with Paleſtine; on the North, with Syria properly and ſpecially ſo called; on the Weſt, with the Mediterranean Sea. So called by the Grecians, from the abundance of Palm-trees therein growing, the word φοινιξ in that language ſignifying a Palm. And for a further proof hereof (for I know there are other Etymons and Originations pretended for it) the Palm was antiently the ſpeciall Cognizance or Enſign of this Countrey, as the Olive-branch and Conie of Spain, the Elephant of Africk, the Camel of Arabia, and the Crocodile to Egypt, being peculiar to thoſe Countries. And in an old Coyn of the Emperour Veſpaſian's ſtamped for a memoriall of his conqueſt of Judæa, the Impreſs is a woman ſitting in a ſad and melancholick poſture at the back of Palm-trees, with theſe two words, Judæa Capta, inſcribed thereon: in which no queſtion may be made but that the deſolate woman ſignifieth the Land of Judæa, and the Palm Phœnicia; Phœnicia being ſeated immediatly on the North at the back of Jewrie.

But it was thus firſt called by the Greciaans onely, the Latines and other People after them taking up that name. For by themſelves, and the People of Iſrael their next Neighbours, they are called Canaanites, or the poſterity of Canaan, five of whoſe ſonnes, viz. Zidon, Harki, Arvadi, Senari, and Chamathi, were planted here: the other ſix inhabiting more towards the South and East, in the Land of Paleſtine. For further evidence whereof we may adde theſe reaſons: firſt, that the ſame woman which in Saint Mathews Goſpel, chap. 15. v. 22. is named a Canaanite, is by Saint Mark, chap. 7. v. 26. called a Syro-Phœnician. Secondly, Where mention is made in the Book of Joſuah of the Kings of Canaan, the Septagint (who very well underſtood the Hiſtory and Language of their own Countrey) call them βασιλεῖς τῆς φοινίκης, or the Kings of Phœnicia. Thirdly, the Pœni, or Carthaginians, being beyond all diſpute a Tyrian or Phœnician Colony, when they were asked any thing of their Originall, would anſwer that they were Chanaai, meaning (as Saint Auguſtine that Countrey-man doth expound their words) that they were Originally Chanaanites, of the ſtock of Canaan. And laſtly, from the Language of it, which antiently was the old Hebrew, Canaanitiſh, or the Language of Canaan; ſpoken both here and in Paleſtine alſo, before that Countrey was poſſeſſed by the houſe of Jacob: as appeareth plainly by thoſe names by which the places and Cities of Canaan were called, when and before the Iſraelites came firſt to dwell amongſt them, which are meerly Hebrew. And ſo much, as unto the Language is acknowledged by Bochartus alſo, who in the entrance of his Book inſcribed Chanaan, declares what profit may enſue from that undertaking to the Hebrew tongue, cujus Phœnicia lingua dialectus fuit, of which the Phœnician language was a dialect onely.

The Countrey of it ſelf not great, extended in a good length, from the further ſide of mount Carmel where it joyns with Paleſtine, to the River Volanus on the North, by which parted from Syria: but withall ſo narrow, that it is litle more than a bare Sea-coaſt, and therefore very rightly called terrarum anguſtiſſima by a modern Writer. Rich rather by the benefit and increaſe of Trade (to which no Nation under Heaven hath been more addicted) than by the naturall Commodities which the Land afforded: yet for the quantity there of no place could be more plentifully furniſhed with Oyl, Wheat, and the beſt ſort of Balm, and moſt excellent Honey; the lower part hereof being deſigned for the Seat of Aſher, of whom Moſes propheſied, Deut. 33. v. 24. that he ſhould dip his foot in Oyl. So that the Countrey generally, it was well conditioned, lovely to look upon, populous, and adorned with more beautifull Cities, than ſuch a ſpan of Earth could be thought to hold. Of which thus writeth Ammianus, Acclivis monti Libano Phœnicia Regio, plena gratiarum & venuſtatis, urbibus decorata magnis & pulchris, &c. i. e. Falling from Mount Libanus lieth the Countrey of Phœnicia, full of all graces and elegancies, adorned with great and beautifull Cities, of which the moſt renowned for the fertility of their ſoyl, and the fame of their achievements, are Tyre, Sidon, Berytus, &c.

The People antiently by reaſon of their Maritime ſituation, were great Adventurers at Sea, trading in almoſt all the Ports of the then known World, and ſending more Colonies abroad upon forreign Plantations than any Nations in the Earth. An active and ingenuous People, ſaid to have been the firſt Navigators, the firſt builders of Ships, the firſt inventors of Letters, (of which hereafter more on ſome other occaſion) and the firſt authors of Arithmetick; the firſt that brought Aſtronomy to an Art or Method; and the firſt makers of Glaſs. Defamed in holy Scripture for their groſs Idolatries, by which they laid a ſtumbling-block at the feet of the Iſraelites: Aſtoroth (or Aſtarte) the Godeſs of the Sidonians (but whether Juno, Venus, or ſome other, I diſpute not here) being ſo highly prized amongſt them, that Solomon himſelf when he fell from God, made this one of his Idols. Once yearly, as Euſebius telleth us, they ſacrificed ſome of their ſonnes to Saturn, whom in their language they called Moloch. And in the inmoſt retreats of Libanus had a Temple to Venus, defiled with the practice of moſt filthy luſts, intemperately uſing the naturall Sex, and moſt unnaturally abuſing their own. Nor could the purity and piety of the Chriſtian Faith prevail ſo far as to extinguiſh theſe ungodly rites, till Conſtantine finally deſtroyed both the Temples and Idols, and left not any thing remaining of them but the ſhame and infamy. St. Auſtin addeth, that they did proſtitute their Daughters unto Venus, before they maried them: and it is moſt likely to be true. For the Phœnicians and Cypriots being ſo near neighbours, and ſubject for a time to the ſame Princes alſo, could not but impart their impure Rites and Ceremonies unto one another.

Rivers of note there can be none in ſo narrow a Region, but what are common unto others, and ſhall there be ſpoken of. Moſt proper unto this is the River of Adonis (now called Canis,) ſo named moſt probably bly from Adonis the Dearling of Venus, whose rites are here performed with as much solemnity as they be in Cyprus. His Obsequies celebrated yearly in the moneth of June with great howlings and Lamentations, Lucian fabling that the River usually streameth blood upon that Solemnity; (as if Adonis were newly wounded in the Mountains of Libanus,) to give the better colour to their Superstitions. But the truth is, that this redness of the water ariseth onely from the winds, which at that time of the year blowing very vehemently, doe thereby carry down the stream a great quantity of Minium or red Earth from the sides of those hils, wherewith the waters are discoloured. Such use can Satan make of a naturall Accident to blind the eyes and captivate the understandings of besotted people.

Chief Mountains of this Countrey are, 1. Libanus, spoken of before, which hath here its first advance or rising. 2. Carmel, which Ptolomy placeth in this Countrey, of which it is the utmost part upon the South, where it joyneth with Palestine. Washed on the North-side with the Brook Chison; on the West, with the Mediterranean Sea: steep of ascent, and of indifferent altitude, abounding with severall sorts of fruits, Olives and Vines in good plenty, and stored with herbs both medicinable and sweet of smell. The retreat sometimes of Elias, when he fled from Jesabel, whose habitation here, after his decease, was converted to a Jewish Synagogue. To this place (being then in the possession of the Kings of Israel) did that Prophet assemble the Priests of Baal, and having by a miraculous experiment confuted their Idolatrous follies, caused them to be cut in peeces on the banks of the River Chison neer adjoyning to it. Upon this visible declaring of the power and presence of the Almighty, the Gentiles grew perswaded that Oracles were there given by God; by Suetonius called the God Carmelus. Where speaking of Vespasian, who had then newly took upon him the Imperiall dignity, he addeth, Apud Iudæam Carmeli Dei oracula consulemem ta confirmavere sortes, &c. that consulting in Judea with the Oracle of the God Carmelus, he was assured that whatsoever he undertook should succeed well with him. In after-times the Order of the Friers Carmelites, as successouts unto the Children of the Prophets left here by Eliah, had their name from hence: the Ruines of whose Monastery are still to be seen, with a Temple dedicated to the blessed Virgin; and under that a Cave or Chappell, said to have been the lurking place of that holy Prophet in the time of his troubles.

Places of most importunance in it, 1. Ptolemais, now nothing but a ruine of what it hath been, but formerly of great strength and consequence. Named Ace at the first, a refuge for the Persian Kings in their wars against Egypt: enlarged, or rather new built, by Ptolomy, the first of that race, by whom called Ptolemais, which name still continued, though Claudius Cæsar planting there a Roman Colony, would fain have had it called Colonia Claudii: after the conquest of it by the Saracens, in the time of Omer the great Caliph, it returned towards its first name, and was called Acon, or Acre, both names still remaining in vulgar speech, as that of Ptolemais amongst Latine writers. Situate in the flourish of it on a flat or levell, in form of a triangular-Shield; on two sides neighboured by the Sea which comes up close to it; on the third looking towards the Champaign: environed with a double wall, to each wall a Ditch; fortified on the outside with Towers and Bulwarkes, within the wals so strongly housed as if the whole Town had been a Conjunction of fortresses, and not ordained for private dwellings. In the midst of the City was one Tower of great strength and beauty, which had sometimes been the Temple of Bel-zebub, and was therefore called the Castle of Flies: on the top whereof was maintained a perpetuall light, like the Pharos of Egypt, to give comfort and direction in the night to such Mariners as made towards this Port. Took from the Christians by the Saracens in the time of Omer, and from them wrested by the Turks with the rest of Syria, it became Christian again Anno 1004. in the Reign of Baldwin the first, brother of the famous Godfrey of Bouillon, and second King of Hierusalem, by the help of the Genoese, who for their pains had the third part of the City assigned unto them. Recovered by Saladine to the Turks, and from him taken again by the Western Christian, under the conduct of Philip of France, and Richard the first of England, Anno 1191. it continued in the possession of the Kings of Hierusalem, notably defended by the Hospitalers (now Knights of Malta) till the year 1291. When besieged by an Army of a hundred and fifty thousand Turks, it was forced to yield, though lost by inches: and the Turks fearing lest the Christians would again attempt it, razed it to the ground; demolishing the large walls and arches of it, which lie like massy Rocks on their old foundations. Memorable in those times, for the brave service here done by the Christians of the Western parts; of which none more renowned than those of our Richard the first, and Edward the first. This later here treacherously wounded by an Infidell, with a poisoned knife, the venome whereof could by no means be asswaged, till his most vertuous wife (herein proposing a most rare example of conjugall affection) sucked it out with her mouth. And for the former, he became so terrible and redoubted among the Turks, that when their Children began to cry, they would say, Peace King Richard is coming: and when their horses started, they would spurre them saying, What you Jades, doe you think that King Richard is here. By the Mamalucks, when Lords of Syria, it was patched together, and made fit for habitation rather than defence: not Peopled by above 300 Inhabitants, nor would it have so many but for the Haven adjoyning; which though a small Bay, and of very ill anchorage, is much frequented by the Merchants of our Western World, trading here for their Cotton Wools, with which the neighbouring Countrie is abundantly furnished. I have staid the longer in this place by reason of the great fame and importance of it, as being the last hold which the Christians had of all their conquests; with the loss whereof they laid aside all thoughts of those holy wars.

2. Tyre, seated in a rocky Iland, about seventy paces from the main Land; well built, and circular of form, as well by Art as Nature impregnably fortified. A Colonie of the Sidonians, and therefore by the Prophet Esay, Chapter 23. verse 12. called the Daughter of Sidon: but by them built upon an high hill; the ruines whereof by the name of Palætyrus, or old Tyre, are remaining still.

Removed unto the Iland by Agenor King of the Phœniclans, and by him named Sor, or Tzor, from the rockie ſituation of it, (as that word importeth.) Mollified by the Greeks to Tyrus, and from them taken by the Latines, though known to them alſo by the name of Sarra, (the Tyrian purple being by Virgil, and ſome other of the antient Poets, called Sarrarum Oſtrum,) and now at laſt returned to its firſt and originall name, vulgarly at this day called Sur. A City in the elder times of great trade and wealth: the Prophet Eſay chap. 27. v. 8. calling the Merchants hereof Princes, and her Chapmen the Nobles of the World. Excelling all others of thoſe times both for Learning and Manufactures, eſpecially for the dying of Purple, firſt here invented, and that as Julius Pollux ſaith, by a very Accident: the Dog of Hercules (or if not his, ſome Dog or other) whoſe lips by eating of the fiſh called Conchilis or Purpura, had been made of that colour. Grown to great pride, by reaſon of the wealth and pleaſures, her deſtruction was fore-ſignified by the holy Prophets: accompliſhed in Gods own time by Nebucadnezzar; who with great induſtrie and toil joyned it to the Continent. But his works being demoliſhed by the fury of the Sea, and the labour of the Tyrians, it was after ſeventy years again reedified; and having flouriſhed after that for two hundred years, by Alexander the Great was again demoliſhed; to whoſe indefatigable perſeverance nothing was impoſſible. For having filled the Channell with the ſtones and rubbiſh of old Tyre, and rammed them in with huge beams brought from Libanus, he made a paſſage for his Army: and having once approached the walls, ſo over-topped them with Towers, and frames of Timber, that at laſt he made himſelf Maſter of it, putting to the ſword all ſuch as reſiſted, and cauſing two thouſand of them to be hanged in cold blood, all along the Shore, for a terrour to others. This rendition of the Town was divined by the Southſayers which followed the Camp of Alexander, upon a dream which he had not long before. For dreaming that he had diſported himſelf with Satyres; the Diviners onely making of one word two, found that Σατυρὸς was no more than Σὰ Τύρος, that is, Tua Tyrus; and it hapned accordingly. Recovering once again both her riches and beauties, ſhe became a confederate of the Romans in the growth of their fortunes, endued by them with the privileges of their City, for her great fidelity. Made in the beſt times of Chriſtianity, the Metropolitan See for the Province of Phœnicia, the Biſhop hereof having under him fourteen Suffragan Biſhops. Subjected to the Saracens in the year ſix hundred thirty and ſix, and having groaned under that yoke for the ſpace of fourhundred eighty and eight years, was at the laſt regained by Guarimund Patriarck of Hieruſalem, in the Reign of the ſecond Baldwin, the Venetians contributing their aſſiſtance in it, Anno 1124. In vain attempted afterwards by victorious Saladine; but finally brought under the Turkiſh thraldome, Anno 1289. as it ſtill continueth. Now nothing but an heap of ruines, but the very ruines of it of ſo fair a proſpect, as ſtriketh both pity and amazement into the beholders; ſhewing them an exemplary pattern of our humane frailty. Subject at the preſent to the Emir, or Prince of Sidon, and beautified with a goodly and capacious Haven, one of the beſt of the Levant; but of no great trading.

3. Sarepta, by the Hebrews called Sarphath, ſituate on the Sea-Coaſt betwixt Tyre and Sidon. Memorable in holy writ for the miracle here performed by the Prophet Eliiah, in raiſing the poor Widows Sonne: in Heathen writers, for the pureſt Wines, little inferiour unto thoſe of Falernum in Italy, or Chios in Greece. Of which thus the Poet.

Vina mihi non ſunt Gazetica, Chia, Falerna, Quæque Sareptano palmite miſſa bibas.

In Engliſh thus,

I have no Chian, or Falernian wines,
Nor thoſe of Gazas or Sarepta's vines.

4. Sidon, the antienteſt City of all Phœnicia, and the moſt Nothern of all thoſe which were aſſigned for the portion of the ſonnes of Aſer: beyond which the Countrey of Phœnicia, having been hitherto nothing but a bare Sea-coaſt, beginneth to open towards the Eaſt in a fine rich vally, having Libanus upon the North, and the Anti-Libanus on the South: once cloſed up from the reſt of Syria with a very ſtrong wall, long ſince demoliſhed. It was ſo called from Zidon, one of the ſonnes of Canaan, who firſt planted here; not (as ſome ſay) from Sida the daughter of Belus, once a King hereof: this City being mentioned in the Book of Joſuah, when no ſuch Belus was in being. Situate in a fertile and delightful ſoyl, defended with the Sea on one ſide, and on the other by the Mountains lying betwixt it & Libanus; from whence deſcended thoſe many Springs, with which they watered and enriched their moſt pleaſant Orchards. The Inhabitants hereof are ſaid to be the firſt makers of Chriſtall Glaſs; the materials of the work brought hither from the Sands of a River running not far from Ptolomais, and onely made fuſible in this City. And from hence Solomon and Zorobabel had their principall workmen both for Stone and Timber, in their ſeverall buildings of the Temple. The People hereof ſo flouriſhing in Arts and Trades, that the Prophet Zechariah chap. 9. v. 2. calleth them the wiſe Sidonians. A City which at ſeverall times was both the Mother and Daughter of Tyre: the Mother of it in the times of Heatheniſm, Tyre being a Colony of this People; and the Daughter of it when inſtructed in the Chriſtian faith, acknowledging the Church of Tyre for its Mother-Church. The City in thoſe times very ſtrong both by Art and Nature, having on the North-ſide a Fort or Citadell, mounted on an inacceſſible Rock, and invironed on all ſides by the Sea: which when it was brought under the command of the Weſtern Chriſtians, was held by the Order of the Duch Knights; and another on the South-ſide of the Port, which the Templars guarded. Won by the Turks with the reſt of this Countrey from the Chriſtians, and ruined by thoſe often interchanges of fortune: it onely ſheweth now ſome markes of the antient greatneſs; the preſent Sidon ſtanding ſomewhat Weſt of the old, and having little worth a particular deſcription.

The Haven decayed, or ſerving at the beſt for Gallies; with a poor Block-houſe rather for ſhew than ſervice: the walls of no greater ſtrength, and as little beauty; and the buildings ordinary, but that the

Moſque,

Moſque, the Bannia of Bathes, and the Cane for Merchants, are ſomewhat fairer than the reſt: yet gives a title at this time to the Emir of Sidon, one of the greateſt Princes of all this Countrey, of whom more hereafter. 5. Berytus, originally called Geris, from Gergethi the fift Sonne of Canaan, took this new name from Berith a Phœnician Idol herein worſhipped; and now called Barutti. Deſtroyed by Tryphon in the warres of the Syrians againſt the Jews, it was re-edified by the Romans, by whom made a Colonie, and honoured with the name of Julia Felix, Auguſtus giving it the Privileges of the City of Rome. By Herod and Agrippa Kings of the Jews, much adorned and beautified; and of no mean eſteem in the time of the Chriſtians: when made an Epiſcopall See under the Metropolitan of Tyre. Being a place of no great ſtrength, nor aimed at by every new Invader, it hath ſped better than the reſt of theſe Cities (though ſtronger than this) retaining ſtill her being, though not all her beauties; well ſtored with merchandize, and well frequented by the Merchant. Nigh to this Town is a fair and fruitful Valley, which they call Saint Georges; in which there is a Caſtle, and in that an Oratory of the ſame name alſo. All ſacred to Saint George the Martyr, who hereabouts is fabled to have killed the Dragon, and thereby delivered a Kings daughter, but what Kings I know not, nor they neither. 6. Biblis, ſometimes the habitation of Hevi the fourth Sonne of Canaan, and then called Hevaa: afterwards made the Regal Seat of Cinyras, Father and Grand father of Adonis, by his Daughter Myrrha; whereof we have already ſpoken when we were in Cyprus. Of ſuch eſteem in the Primitive times of Chriſtianity, that it was made a Biſhops See; deſolate and of no repute ſince it loſt that honour, and became thrall unto the Turks. 7. Orthoſia, called alſo Antaradus, becauſe oppoſite to Aradus, another old City of this tract, but in after ages called Tortoſa, and by that name well known in the Hiſtories of the Holy Warre, undertaken by the Weſtern Chriſtians. To whom it made ſuch ſtout and notable reſiſtance, that though beſieged on all ſides with united forces (the whole Army formerly divided, ſitting down before it); yet after three moneths hard ſiege, they were fain to leave the Town behind them, and content themſelves with ſpoiling the adjoining Country 8. Tripolis, ſeated in a rich and delightful plain, more fruitful than can be imagined: one of which fruits they called by the name of Amazza Franchi, i. e. Kill-Frank, becauſe the Weſtern Chriſtians, whom they call by the name of French, died in great numbers by the intemperate eating of them. A Valley which is ſaid to have yielded yearly to the Counts of Tripolis, no leſſe than 100000 Crowns. As for the Town, it ſtandeth about two miles from the Sea, at the foot of Mount Libanus; ſo called becauſe built by the joint purſes of three Cities, that is to ſay, Tyrus, Sidon, and Aradus. Of no great note among the Romans, for ought I can find, till made one of the Epiſcopal Sees, belonging to the Arch-Biſhop of Tyre, in the Primitive times. But thriving by degrees, it grew to principal Accompt by the time that the Weſtern Chriſtians warred in the Holy Land: when conquered by them, it was made one of the Tetrarchies, or Capital Cities for the four Quarters of their Empire; which were, Hieruſalem for Paleſtine, Edeſſa for Comagena, or Meſopotamia; Antioch for Syria, and this for Phœnicia. Committed at the firſt taking of it, to the cuſtody of Raymond Earl of Tholouſe in France: whoſe poſterity, whileſt it laſted, had from hence the title of Earles of Tripoli. A City, which I know not by what good hap, hath ſped better than any of thoſe parts, retaining ſtill as much in ſtrength and beauty as ever it had; if not grown greater by the ruine of all the reſt. Situate two miles from the Sea, as before is ſaid, but not above half a mile from the Haven, which lieth upon the Weſt ſide of it, compaſſed with a wall, and fortified with ſeven Towers, of which the fourth is commonly called the Tower of Love, becauſe built by an Italian Merchant, who was found in bed with a Turkiſh Woman, for which he had forfeited his life, if not thus redeemed it. Before the Haven is an ill-neighbouring bank of ſand, which every day groweth greater and neerer to it; by which in time there is a Prophecy which ſaith it ſhall quite be choaked: On both ſides of it many ſtore-houſes for the Merchant, to ſtow his goods in, and ſhops to ſell them; the way from thence unto the City having on both ſides very pleaſant Gardens.

The Town it ſelf ſtretched out in length from South to North, is ſituate, as before was ſaid, at the foot of Libanus, conveying a Brook into the Streets, and many pleaſant ſprings into the chief of their gardens: in which, and in thoſe towards the Haven, and on other ſides of the Town, the Inhabitants keep great ſtore of Silk-Worms; ſelling their Silks raw unto the Italians, and buying them again of them in the Stuff or Manufacture. The buildings generally low, and the Streets but narrow, except that leading towards Aleppo, which is fair and open. Over the Brook, at the Eaſt-ſide of the City are built two Bridges; and on the South-ſide a ſtrong Caſtle mounted on an hill, built by the French when they had the cuſtody hereof; now garriſoned for the Grand Signeur with 200 Janizaries. At this time it is looked on as the Metropolis or chief City of Phœnicia; honoured with the reſidence of the Patriarch of the Maronites, for the moſt part dwelling in this Town; and enriched with a great part of the Trade of Scanderone, or Alexandretta, removed hither ſome fourty years ago by the Turks appointment; that Haven lying unfenced and more open to Pirates.

That the Phœnicians were deſcended of the Sonnes of Canaan hath been proved already. And being deſcendants of that ſtock, they were at the firſt governed like them, by the Chiefs of their families, whom they honoured (as moſt Nations did) with the title of Kings: But moſt of the Canaanitiſh Kings being overcome and ſlain by Joſuah, Agenor, a ſtout and prudent man, one of thoſe many Kings which commanded in thoſe parts of the Countrey, ſeeing how impoſſible it was to reſiſt that enemy; borrowed ſome aid from Ægypt, where he had his breeding, to make good the Sea-coaſts of his Countrey, in which the Philiſtims who interpoſed upon thoſe coaſts betwixt him and Ægypt concurred alſo with him. By which aſſiſtance, and by the fortifying of Zidon, Tyre, and Ace (or Ptolomais) which were all the Cities of this Countrey that were then in being: he did not only preſerve his own eſtate from the preſent danger, but left it ſo aſſured to the Kings ſucceeding, that neither Solomon nor David, nor any of the Kings of Iſrael durſt durſt attempt upon them. To Agenor ſucceeded his Sonne Phœnix, (Cadmus his elder brother going into Greece in ſearch of his Siſter Europa, raviſhed by Jupiter, where he built Thebes, and therein reigned till his death) from whom, as ſome conceive, this Countrey had the name of Phœnicia. And though I have declared my ſelf for another reaſon of this name, which I like much better; yet I ſhall rather yield to this, or to any other, than to that of Bochartus: who will have it derived from Ben-Anak, or the Sonnes of Anak, (as if the old Phœnicians were ſuch Giantly men) which muſt firſt be contracted in Beanack, then by the Grecians turned into Pheanac, and at laſt into Phœnix. Such farre-fetched and extorted Originations never pleaſe my fancy, who had much rather hearken to the old received opinions touching the firſt Originals of names and nations, where there is not very pregnant reaſon to perſwade me otherwiſe; than ſtrain my ſelf ſo farre for a new invention; or hearken unto thoſe that do. But for what cauſe ſoever they were named Phœnicians, certain it is they were a very active and induſtrious people, trading in the moſt parts of the Mediterranean, and planting Colonies in many. Thebes and Sephyra in Bœotia, Nola in Italy, Gades in Spain; Utica, Leptis, Carthage, in Africk, were of their foundation. Nay if we may beleeve Bochartus, there was no Iland, or Sea-coaſt in the Mediterranean, or on the Cantabrian, Gallick, or Britiſh Ocean, wherein they did not keep ſome factory, or erect ſome Colony. What Kings ſucceeded Phœnix in a conſtant and continued courſe, I can no where find. Moſt like it is they were not under the command of any one Prince: and that beſides the Kings of Sidon, where Agenor reigned, there were ſome others who called themſelves Kings of Phœnicia alſo, as well as they. Of which ſort were Cyniras, Paphus, and Pygmalion, who had their Regal Seat at Biblis, and lorded it over a good part of Cyprus; as did alſo Belus who gave ſome part of that Iſle to Teucer, as is ſaid before. There is alſo found mention of one Phaſis, a Phœnician King, at ſuch time as the Grecians conquered Troy. After him none till the ſubjugation of this Countrey by the Babylonians: Tetramneſtus, Tennes, and Strato, mentioned in ſucceeding times, being Tributaries to the Perſian, and no abſolute Princes. Whether it were that the Phœnicians were made ſubject to the Kings of Tyre, or that the Kings thereof did nothing to preſerve their memory; I am not able to determine. Certain it is that the Kings of Tyre came in ſhort time to be of very great repute, and to poſſeſſe themſelves of the coaſts of Syria, and Phœnicia, and a great part of Cyprus: whereby, and by the benefit of their trade and ſhipping, they grew rich, and powerfull, and of great conſideration in affairs of the World. The names and hiſtory of whom I ſhall here ſubjoin, in this enſuing Catalogue of

The Kings of Tyre.

A. M.

1. Abibalus, as Joſephus, Abemalus as Theophilus Antiochenus calleth him, Co-temporary with Samuel: ſuppoſed to be the ſame which the Sonne of Syrach mentioneth, Eccleſ. 46. verſe 18.
2. Saron, the Sonne of Abibalus, whom David, as Euſebius ſaith, compelled to pay tribute; complained of by that Prophet, Pſal. 83. v. 7.

2931. 3. Hiram, the Sonne of Saron, confederate with David, to whom he ſent Cedars, with Carpenters and Maſons, towards his buildings in Hieruſalem, after he had beaten thence the Jebuſites; as he did afterwards to Solomon when he built the Temple. Much mentioned in the Books of Kings and Chronicles. 53.

2955. 4. Baleaſtartus, or Bazorus, ſucceeded Hiram. 7.

2983. 6. Aſtartus, brother of Abdaſtartus, recovered the Kingdome to his houſe, out of the hands of the Uſurpers. 12.

2995. 7. Aſtorinus, or Athorinus as Theophilus calleth him, the younger Brother of Aſtartus. 9.

3004. 8. Phelles, the Brother of theſe three Kings, and youngeſt Sonne of Baleaſtartus, reigned eight moneths only.

9. Ithobalus, called Ethbaal, 1 Kings 16. 31. Sonne of Aſtorinus, ſlew his Uncle Phelles, and ſo regained his Fathers Throne; before which he was the High-Prieſt of the Godeſs Aſtaroth or Aſtarta, (a dignity next to that of the King). He was the Father of Jezabel, the wife of Ahab, ſo often mentioned in the Scripture. 32.

3037. 10. Badezar, or Bazar, Sonne of Ethbaal. 6.

3043. 11. Mettimus, by ſome called Matginus, Sonne of Badezar, and Father of Eliſa, whom Virgil celebrateth by the name of Dido.

3052. 12. Pygmalion, the Sonne of Mettimus, who ſlew Sicheus the husband of his Siſter Eliſa, to get his riches; but yet was coſened of his prey: his Siſter Eliſa, accompanied with her Brother Barca (the founder of the Noble Barcine Family, of which Annibal was) and her Siſter Anna, flying into Africk; where ſhe built the renowned City of Carthage. 47. The names of his Succeſſors we find not till we come to

13. Elulæus, deſcended from a Sonne of Pygmalion, who overthrew the Fleet of Salmannaſſar the Aſſyrian, in the port of Tyre.

14. Ethobales, or Ethbaal II. who vaunted himſelf to be as wiſe as Daniel, and to know all ſecrets, as ſaith the Prophet Ezekiel, chap. 28. v. 1, 2. And yet not wiſe enough to preſerve his his Kingdome from Nabuchadonosor; who after a 13 years took the City of Tyre, and subjected it unto his Empire.

15. Baal, the Sonne and Successor of Ethbaal the second, but a Tributary to the Babylonians.

After whose death the Tyrians had no more Kings, but were governed by Judges, or by such titular Kings onely as were sent from Babylon. And though Tyre and Sidon did recover breath in the fall of the Babylonian Empire, and the unsettlednes of the Persian: yet being of the Persian faction, and having dependance on that Crown, they were by Alexander held unworthy to continue. Who therefore depoted Strato the King of Sidon, and overthrew the City of Tyre, in the taking whereof he had spent more time than in forcing all the Cities of Asia.

After this time Phœnicia, being reckoned as a part of Syria, followed the fortune of the whole, subject unto the Syrian Kings of the house of Seleucus, till made a Province of the Romans; subject to the Constantinopolitans, till the fatall year 636. when subdued by the Saracens. Successively conquered by the Turks, Christians, and after their expulsion by the Turks again: then by the Mamalucks of Egypt, and finally with the rest of Syria, by Selimus the first united to the Turkish Empire. Subject at this time, or of late to the Emir of the Drusians, (commonly called the Emir of Sidon) of which people we have spoken before. A people who in the time of Amurath the third, were governed by 5 Emirs or Princes; one of which was Man-Ogli, who so resolutely resisted Ibrahim Bassa, Anno 1585. This Man-Ogli then kept his Court or residence at Andirene, a strong place situate on a hill, and was of that wealth, that he sent to make his peace unto the above-named Ibrahim, 320 Arcubuses, 20 packs of Andirene Silks, and 50000 Ducats. At a second time he presented him with 50000 Ducats more, 480 Arcubuses, 1000 Goats, 150 Camels, 150 Buffes, 1000 Oxen, and 200 Weathers. By these rich gifts we may not a little conjecture of the Revenue of the present Emir of Sidon; who since the year 1600. hath reduced almost all the Countreys belonging once to five Princes, under his own Empire; containing the Towns and Territories of Gaza, Barut, Sidon, Tyre, Acre, Saffet, (or Tiberias) his seat of residence, Nazareth, Cana, Mount Tabor, Elkiffe, &c. This present Emir, by name Faccardine, was not long since driven out of his Countrey by the Turk, and forced to fly to Florence: but he again recovered his own, laid siege to Damascus, and caused a notable rebellion in Asia; not quenched in a long time after. And finally having possessed himself of the City and Castle of Damascus, prepared for the taking of Hierusalem also; threatning to make the Christians once more Masters of it. This was in the year 1623. How he sped afterward, and whether his Sonne, as stout and valiant as himself, hath since his death succeeded him in his Estates, I am not able to say: having of late heard nothing of them.

2. SYRIA PROPRIA.

SYRIA PROPRIA, or Syria specially so called, is bounded on the East, with Palmyrene; on the West, with the Mediterranean; on the North, with Cilicia; on the South, with Phœnicia and some part of Cœle, Syria.

This part of Syria I take to be the Land of Hamath, so often mentioned in the Scriptures; the Kingdome of Toi or Tou, next neighbour, and sworn Enemy to Adadezer King of Aram-Sobah: who hearing of the great discomfiture which David had given unto that King, sent his Sonne Joram or Adoram, (for the Scripture calls him by both names) with Presents unto him, as well to congratulate his success, as to be assured for times to come of his love and amity. So called from Hamath one of the Sonnes of Canaan, who fixed his dwelling in these parts, and left many Cities of that name in Syria and Palestina (which we shall meet withall in the course of this work) either built by him or his posterity. Now that the Land of Hamath was this part of Syria, I am perswaded to believe by these following reasons. viz. 1. From the neighbourhood hereof to Arpad or Arphad, conjoined together, as in Esay 10. 9. and Jer. 49. 23. So in other places, viz. Where are the Gods of Hamath and Arpad, 2 Kings 18. 34. The King of Hamath, and the King of Arphad, Esay 37. 13. And we know well that Arvad was the name of an Iland over against the mouth of the River Eleutherus, one of the Rivers of this Countrey: so called from Arvad, one of the Sonnes of Canaan, alluded to by the Greeks and Romans in the name of Aradus, by which this Isle was known unto them. 2. By the vicinity which it hath to Palmyrene, the Aram-Sobah of the Scriptures, to which it joyneth on the East, with the King whereof (as bordering Princes use to be) the Kings of Hamath for the most part were in open warre. Of which see 2 Sam. 8. 9, 10. & 1 Chr. 8. 9, 10. 3. From the authority of Saint Hierome, who finding mention in the Prophet Amos, cha. 6. v. 2. of a City named Hamath the Great, determineth it to be that City which afterwards was called Antiochia (the principall City of this part, and indeed of Syria): the title of Great being added to it, to difference it from some other Cities of this name of inferiour note. And 4. from comparing the places in Scripture, with the like passage in Josephus the Historiographer. The Scripture telleth us; that Hierusalem being forced by the Babylonians, Zedekias the King was brought Prisoner to Nabuchadnezzer, being then at Riblath, 2 Kings c. 2. v. 6. to Riblath in the Land of Hamath, v. 21. where the poor Prince first saw his Children slain before his face; and then miserably deprived of sight, that he might not see his great misfortunes, was led away to Babylon. Ask of Josephus, where this sad tragedy was acted, and he will tell us that it was at Reblatha (or Riblah) a City of Syria, Antiqu. l. 10. c. 10. and if we ask Saint Hierome what he thinks of Reblatha, he will tell us that it was Urbs ex quam nunc Antiochiam vocant, the City which in following times was called Antioch. On these grounds I conceive this part of Syria to be the land of Hamath intended in the Texts of scripture above-cited, though there were other Towns and Territories of the same name also.

The

The Countrey is naturally fertile; the hedges on the high-way sides affording very good fruits, and the adjoining fields affording to the Passenger the shade of Fig-trees. Were it not naturally so, it would not be much helped by Art or Industry, as being very meanly peopled, and those few people without any incouragement either to plant fruits or manure the Land. Their Sheep are commonly fair and fat, but so overladed in the tail, both with flesh and fleece, that they hang in long wreathes unto the ground, dragged after them with no small difficulty. Pliny observes it in his time, that the tails of the Syrian Sheep were a Cubit long, and had good store of wooll upon them. Natur. Hist. l. 8. c. 48. And modern Travellers report, that the tails of these sheep do frequently weigh 25 pound weight, and sometimes 30 pounds and upwards. The like hath also been affirmed of the sheep of Palestine, comprehended in old times in the name of Syria. And that may probably be the reason why the rumpes or tails of sheep (and of no beast else) were ordained to be offered up in sacrifice, of which Levit. 3. v. 9. But besides the store of Wooll which they have from the sheep, they have also great plenty of Cotton Wooll, which groweth there abundantly; with the seeds whereof they sow their fields, as we ours with Corn. The stalk no bigger than that of Wheat, but as tough as a Beans; the head round and bearded, in the size and shape of a Medlar, and as hard as a stone: which ripening breaketh, and is delivered of a white soft Bombast intermixed with seeds, which parted with an instrument, they keep the Seeds for another sowing, and sell the Wooll unto the Merchant: a greater quantity thereof issuing from that litle shell than can be imagined by those who have not seen it.

The people heretofore were very industrious, especially about their gardens; the fruitful effects whereof they found in the increase of their herbs, and plants. Whence the Proverb, Multa Syrorum Olera. But withall they were observed to be very gluttonous, spending whole daies and nights in feasting, great scoffers, and much given to laughter. Crafty and subtile in their dealings, not easily to be trusted but on good security: and so were the Phoenicians, their next neighbours also. Hence came the Greek Adage which Suidas speaketh of, Σύρος πρὸς Φοίνικας, Syri contra Phoenices, used by them when two crafty knaves endeavoured to deceive each other. They were noted also to be superstitious, great worshippers of the Godess Fortune, but greater of their Syrian Godess, whatsoever she was. Affirmed by Plutarch to be a womanish and effeminat nation; prone unto tears, and such as on the death of their friends would hide themselves in caves from the sight of the Sun. Herodian addeth, that they were wavering and unconstant, lovers of plaies and publick pastimes, and easily stirred up unto Innovations. But at this time, they are almost beaten out of all these humours, having been so often cowed and conquered, that they are now grown servilely officious to them that govern them: not without cause, defective in that part of industry which before enriched them.

Where by the way we must observe, that this Character of the people, and that of the Countrey belong not to this part alone, exclusively of those which follow, but to all Syria, and every part and Province of it, except Phoenicia, which being planted by a people of another Stock, hath had its Character by it self. The whole by Ptolamy divided, besides Comagena, Palmyrene, and Coele-Syria, into many petit Regions, and subdivisions, as 1. Pieria. 2. Casiotis, from the hills adjoining. 3. Seleucis. 4. Apamene. 5. Laodicene. 6. Cyrrestica. 7. Chalcidice, and 8. Chalybanotis from their principall Cities. Of which in all he musters up the names of an hundred and upwards, then of some note, most of them now grown out of knowledge, and many of them of no mark or observation in the course of business. So that omitting his method we will follow our own, and take notice only of such places as antiently were, or at this present are, of most observation and importance in the course of Story: with reference notwithstanding to the subdivisions made by Ptolomy, as they come in my way, reckoning Cyrrestica, Chalybanotis, Casiotis, and the territories of Seleucus, Laodicea, and Apamea, into Syria Propria; and Pieria into Comagena.

First then to begin with those Cities which ly most towards the East, we have in Cyrrestica, 1. Zeugma, on the banks of the River Euphrates, memorable for the passage of Alexander the Great, who there passed over his Army on a Bridge of Boats. 2. Berræa, supposed by some both antient and modern writers, to be that which is now called Aleppo; but the position of the place agreeth not with that supposition, Aleppo being placed by our modern Cosmographers in the 72. degree of Longitude, and the 38. of Latitude; whereas Berræa is assigned by Ptolomy, to the 36. degree of Latitude, and the 71. of Longitude. Besides that the River Singas on which Aleppo is situate, keepeth it self almost on an even course in the Latitude of 37. between 20 and 30. minutes over; which is more by a degree and a half than the site assigned unto Berræa. 3. Cybros, as in the Latine Copies of Ptolomy, mistook for Cyrrhus, once the chief City of this part, from hence called Cyrrestica. 4. Heraclea, neer which Minerva had a Temple: in which, as in that sacred to her in Laodicea, they used once yearly to offer a Virgin for a sacrifice: but afterwards on the sight of that gross impiety changed it to an Hart. 5. Regia, now Rugia, two dayes journey from Antioch, took by the Christians in the beginning of the warres for the Holy Land. 6. Hierapolis, of great renown in those dark times of ignorance and idolatry for the Syrian Godess therein worshipped; from whence it had the name of Hierapolis, or the Holy City, being formerly by the Grecians called Callinice, by the Syrians, Magog, one of the first seats of Magog the Sonne of Japhet, and from him denominated. The Godess so esteemed of in those wretched times, that from all parts, Assyria, Babylonia, Arabia, Cilicia, Cappadocia, and indeed what not, they brought her many rich gifts and costly offerings: Nero himself who scoffed at all Religions else, being for a while a great Votary of this Syrian Idol, though afterwards he grew weary of her and defiled her with urine. The Temple built by Stratonice the wife of Seleucus in the midst of the City, compassed with a double wall about the height of 300 Fathome: the roof thereof inlaid with gold, and made of such a fragant and sweet-smelling wood, that that the clothes of them which came thither retained the ſent thereof for a long time after. Without the Temple there were places inclosed for Oxen, and beaſts of Sacrifice; and not farre off a lake of 200 fathom in depth, wherein they kept their ſacred fiſhes: the Prieſts attending here for their ſeverall Offices, amounting in number to three hundred, beſides many more ſubſervient Miniſters. The tricks and jugglings of theſe Prieſts to deceive the people, he that liſt to ſee, may find them copiouſly deſcribed in the Metamorphoſis of Apuleius: which changing but the names and times, may ſerve for a Relation of thoſe gulleries and Arts of Leger-de-main, which the Friers and Pardoners have practiſed in the Church of Rome. 7. Chalybon, whence the parts adjoining were called Chalybonitis; conceived by Poſtellus and ſome others to be Chalepium or Aleppo, but on no good ground: this City having one degree leſs of Northern Latitude, than Berroea had. 8. Barbariſſus in the ſame ſubdiviſion neer the banks of Euphrates. 9. Chalcis, the principal of that part of Syria Propria which is called Chalcidice, but not otherwiſe memorable. 10. Telmediſſa, another Town of the ſame diviſion, and as little famous. 11. Seleucus, ſo named from the founder of it, the firſt Eaſtern Monarch of that race, and the greateſt Builder of the World: founding nine Cities of this name, ſixteen in memory of his Father Antiochus, ſix by the name of Laodice his Mother, and three in honour of Apamia his firſt Wife, beſides many others of great note in Greece and Aſia, either new built, or beautified and repaired by him. From this, the Countrey hereabouts had the name of Seleucis. 12. Laodicea, one of the Cities founded by Seleucus, in honour of Laodice his Mother; from which the Region adjoining is called Laodicene. Built by him in the place where formerly had ſtood the City Rhamantus, ſo called from a certain Sheepherd, who being ſtrook with a flaſh of lightning cryed out amazedly Rhamantus, that is to ſay, Deus ab excelſo, before which time it had been named Leuca Acte, from the whiteneſſe of the Sea-cliffs neer to which it is ſituate: the Countrey roundabout commended antiently for the beſt wines, and choiſe of very excellent fruits. 13. Apamia, ſo named in honour of Apamia, the wife of Seleucus, which together with Laodicea and Seleucus before mentioned, having the ſame founder, and maintaining a ſtrict league of amity with one another, were commonly called the Three Siſters. From this the Countrey neer is called Apamene. 14. Emeſa, (now Hamſe) the Epiſcopall See of Euſebius, hence called Emeſenus, who flouriſhed in the time of Conſtantius the Sonne of Conſtantine: in whoſe name are extant certain Homilies, juſtly conceived to be of a later date. The City ſeated in a ſpacious and fruitful plain of Apamene, watered with many pleaſant and cheerfull Riverers; once of great note, as may be eaſily conjectured from the walls hereof, which are ſtill perfect and entire, built of poliſhed ſtone, and of very large circuit: but the dwelling-houſes ſo decayed, that it affordeth nothing worthy obſervation. 15. Epiphania, in the cantred or ſubdiviſion of Caſiotis; called at firſt Hamath, from Hamath a Sonne of Canaan, the founder of it; and upon that account miſtaken by Saint Hierome for another Town of the ſame name in the Tribe of Naphthali: ſo different from this place both in Longitude and Latitude (as we ſhall ſhew hereafter when we come to Paleſtine) that they can by no means be the ſame. But that old Town being gone to ruin, it was repaired, if not re-edified by Antiochus Epiphanes King of Syria, who thereupon commanded it to be called Epiphania, obeyed therein as Joſephus telleth us by the Macedonians, though the Syrians ſtill called it Amatha as in former times, Antiqu. l. 1. ca. 7. 16. Latriſſa, which ſtill preſerveth its old name, being now called Laris; much mentioned in the warres of the Holy Land, eſpecially for the death of Baldwin the firſt Brother of Godfrey of Bovillon, and ſecond King of Hieruſalem, Anno 1118. 17. Gebal, the Gabala of Ptolomy and others of the antient Writers, ſituate on the South of Laodicea, from which twelve miles diſtant; mentioned Pſal. 83. as a confederate with Tyre and other uncircumciſed Nations, in their hatred and deſignes againſt the Iſraelites: at this day called Gabella (with little difference from the old name of it) and by that name remembred in the Stories of the Holy Warres. 18. Aradus, one of the Co-founders of Tripolis, ſituate in a rocky Iland of a mile in compaſs, directly oppoſite to the mouth or influx of the River Eleutherus, and diſtant from the Continent about twenty furlongs. So called from Arvad one of the Sonnes of Canaan, and mentioned by that name in the Prophet Ezek. chap. 27. v. 8. 11. This once a Kingdome of it ſelf, containing not this Iland only but ſome part of the Continent; eſpecially about Amaradus (ſo called becauſe built over againſt it) ſituate on the Northern banks of the River Eleutherus, of which we have ſpoken in Phoenicia. 19. Daphne, about five miles from Antioch, but afterwards by the continuall enlargements of that City, accounted as the Suburb to it; ſo named of Daphne one of the Miſtreſſes of Apollo, who was here worſhipped by the name of Apollo Daphnæus, and had here his Oracle and his Groves, with other the Additaments appertaining unto thoſe Idolatries; as much eſteemed of but more ſumptuous than thoſe of Delphos. The Grove about ten miles in circuit, environed round with Cypreſſes and other trees, ſo tall and cloſe to one another, that they ſuffered not the Sunne to enter in his greateſt heats: the ground perpetually covered with the choiſeſt Tapeſtry of nature, watered with many a pleaſant ſtream, derived from the Caſtalian founteins as it was given out; and yielding the moſt excellent fruits both for taſte and tincture, to which the wind and air participating the ſweetneſs of the place, did adde a moſt delightfull influence.

A place deviſed for pleaſure, but abuſed to luſt: he being held unworthy of the name of a man, who transformed not himſelf unto a Beaſt, or trod on this unholy ground without his Curtezan: inſomuch as they which had a care of their good names, did forbear to haunt it. A fuller deſcription of it he that liſts to ſee, may find in the firſt Book and 18. chapter of Sozomens Eccleſiaſticall Hiſtory, who is copious in it. The Temple ſaid to have been built by Seleucus alſo, renowned for the Oracle there given, by which Adrian was foretold of his being Emperour; and therefore much reſorted to by Julian the Apoſtata for that purpoſe alſo. But the body of Babylas the Martyr and Biſhop of Antioch, being removed thither by the command command of his Brother Gallus then created Cæsar by Constantius; the Devil and his Oracles were both frighted away; as the devill did himself confess to Julian. Who being desirous to learn here the success of his intended expedition into Persia, received this Answer, that no Oracle could be given as long as those divine bones were so neer the Shrine. Nor was it long after, before the Idol and the Temple were consumed by a fire from Heaven; as was avowed by those who observed the fall of it: though Julian did impute it to the innocent Christians, and in revenge caused many of their Churches to be burned to ashes. 20. Antioch, situate in that part hereof, which is called Casiotis, first built, or began rather by Antigonus, when Lord of Asia, by whom named Antigonia; but finished and enlarged by Seleucus, after he had overthrown and slain him at the battell of Issus: by the Jewes or Hebrews once called Reblatha. Built neer the place, and partly out of the ruines of an antient City, in the second Book of Kings called Riblah in the Land of Hamath; Hamath the Great in the sixt of Amos; by Josephus and the Syrians, Reblata. Memorable in those daies, for the Tragedies of Jehoahaz and Sedechias, Kings of Judah: the first of which was here deprived of his Crown and Liberty by Pharaoh Neco King of Egypt, 2 Kings 23. 33. the other of his eyes and Children by the command of Nebuchadnezzar King of Babylon, as was said before. In following times it was by some Greek writers called Epidaphne, from the neerness of it to that Grove: as afterwards in the times of Christianity, by the name of Theopolis, or the City of God, either from the many miracles there done in the Primitive times; or from the great improvement which the Christian faith did here receive, where the Disciples first obtained the name of Christians. The Royall seat for many Ages of the Kings of Syria, and in the flourish and best fortune of the Roman Empire, the ordinary residence of the Præfect or Governour of the Eastern Provinces; next of the Præfectus Prætorio Orientis, who had not only the superintendency over the Diocese of the Orient, though that large enough, but also of the Dioceses of Egypt, Asia, Pontus, Thrace; extending so his Jurisdiction into all the parts of the then known World. Honoured also with the residence of many of the Roman Emperours, especially of Verus and Valens, who spent here the greatest part of their times; and from the first dawning of the Gospel, with the Seat of the Patriarck. A title of such eminency in all times of the Church, the second in Accompt to the See of Rome (till Constantinople being made the Imperiall City, got precedence of it) that there are at this time no less than four great Prelates which pretend unto it: that is to say, the true Patriarck, governing the Christians of those parts, whom they call Syrians or Melchites; the Pseudo-Patriarcks of the Jacobite and Maronite Sectaries, both which, for the greater credit to their Schism doe assume this title: and finally, a titular Patriarck nominated by the Pope, who since the time that the Western Christians were possessed of these Eastern Countries, hath assumed a power unto himself of nominating Patriarks for Alexandria, Hierusalem, and this City of Antioch.

The City seated on both sides of the River Orontis, about twelve miles distant from the shores of the Mediterranean; the River Parfar passing on the South-side of it. By Art and Nature fortified even to admiration, compassed with a double wall, the outwardmost of which was stone, the other of brick, with four hundred and sixty Towers in the walls, and an impregnable Castle at the East-end thereof, and on the other side defended with high broken Mountains, whereunto was adjoyning a deep Lake, comming out of the River Parfar, before mentioned. Adorned in former times with many sumptuous Palaces, and magnificent Temples, answerable to the reputation of so great a City: till taken by the Saracens, and after by the Turks and Mamalucks, men careless of all State and beauty in their fairest Cities, it began to grow into decay. Recovered by the Western Christians from the power of the Turks; after a siege of seven moneths, June 3. Anno 1098. confirmed in their possession by a great and memorable Victory, got in the very sight hereof within few daies after, (June 28.) obtained against Corbanas, Lieutenant to the Persian Sultan; in which with the loss of four thousand and two hundred of their own, they slew a hundred thousand of the Enemy. The Town and territory given by the Conquerours to Bohemund a noble Norman and Prince of Tarentum: who by practising with one Pyrrhus, who had the command of one of the chief Towers thereof, afterwards called Saint Georges Tower, was secretly let into the City, and so made way for all the rest. Bohemund thus made the Prince, or as some say, King of Antioch, left it to Bohemund his sonne about ten years after; succeeded in this principate by Tancred and Roger, Princes of great renown in those holy wars: which last unfortunately slain by the Turks, not far from Aleppo, in the year 1120. Baldwin the second having revenged his death by a signall victory, joyned this estate to the Kingdome of Hierusalem. Betrayed about sixty years after this, that is to say, in the year 1188. it came into the power of Saladine, the victorious King of Egypt and Damascus; and therewithall no fewer than five and twenty Cities which depended on the fortunes of it: the glories of this famous City so declining after this last Tragedy (but whether laid desolate of set purpose, or destroyed by the injury of time, I am not able to declare) that it is grown the sepulchre of what once it was, and lieth buried in its own sad ruines; hardly preserving the repute of a sorry village. Such is the instability of all worldly glories. Some other Towns there are in this part of Syria, but not to be remembred the same day with Antioch. Of which the most observable is 21. Albaria, distant two daies march from Antioch, remembred in the Warres of the Holy Land.

As for the story of this Province, as a State distinct, we find it had a King of its own, called the King of Hamath (the Kingdome of Toi, or Tou before remembred) who together with the King of Arphad, commanded in this part of Syria; and the Isles adjoining. Vassalls in time succeeding to the Kings of Tyre, who lorded it over all the Sea-coasts hereof: and consequently had great influence on the Inlands also. And it continued in this State till the Assyrian Kings began to turn their forces Westward; when added to that Empire by Tiglath Phileser, after the subversion of the Kingdome of Damascus; or by Salmanassar after the destruction of that of Israel. The proud but dreadful vaunt which Senacherib, the Successour of those mighty Monarchs, made to Hezekiah, viz. Where are the Kings of Hamath and Arphad; Arphad; ſhews clearly that thoſe Kingdomes had been conquered not long before; and therefore needs by Salmanaſſer, or Tigluh Phil-ſer. Afterwards in the ſtruglings betwixt the Babylonians and Egyptians for the chief command, it was a while at the devotions of the Kings of Egypt; it being at Rebluth in this Province, that Jehoahaz King of Judah was put into bonds, by the command of Pharoah Neco, as was ſaid before. But Neco being long after vanquiſhed by Nebuchadnezzer King of Babylon, it returned again unto that Crown; and after the ſame fortunes with the reſt of Syria.

3. COMAGENA.

COMAGENA is bounded on the Eaſt, with the River Euphrates, by which parted from Meſopotamia; on the Weſt, with the Mounteins called Amanus, which divide it from Cilicia; on the North, with Taurus, by which ſeparated from Armenia Minor; on the South, with Palmyrene. Called alſo Euphratenſis and Euphrateſia, when a Roman Province, by reaſon of its ſituation bordering on that River.

The reaſon of the name I find not amongſt my Authors: but find that many learned men conceive it to be that part of Syria, which the Scriptures call Syria Maacha, mention whereof is made 1 Chron. cap. 19. v. 6. gainſayed by others becauſe they find a place called Maacha in the Tribe of Manaſſes: but with no great reaſon as I take it. For being it is joined (in the 2 of Chron. 19. v. 6. above mentioned) in the ſame action with Meſopotamia, and Syria Sobah; and not ſo only, but placed between them in the method of that holy pen-man; I dare not think but that they were all very neer neighbours, and ranked according to the natural ſituation of them. Which agreeth very well with the ſite of this Comagena, having Meſopotamia on the Eaſt, and Aram-Sobah on the South. Nor is it any ſtronger proof unto the contrary that Maacha is a Town of the Tribe of Manaſſes; then if a man ſhould ſay that there is no ſuch Province as Mansfield in High Germany, becauſe there is a Town of that name in England; or no ſuch place as Savoy among the Alpes, becauſe there is an houſe of that name in London.

As for the people hereof, beſides what they have common with the reſt of the Syrians; they were of old much given unto Divinations; and for that cauſe derided thus in the ſixt Satyr of Juvenal.

Chief places of this part, 1. Samoſata, the Metropolis or head City of it, when a Roman Province ſituate neer the banks of Euphrates, over which it had a bridge for paſſage into Meſopotamia. Unfortunate for being the birth-place of Lucian that profane Scoffer of Chriſtianity, though otherwiſe a man of a quick wit, and great abilities: as alſo of Paulus Samoſatenus, Patriarch of Antioch; condemned of Hereſie in a Councill holden in his own City, Anno 273 (by the great and moſt learned Biſhops of that Age, there aſſembled together) for teaching that our Saviour was no other then a natural man, but neither God nor the Sonne of God, as the Scriptures teſtify. 2. Germanicia, (by ſome called Germanicopolis) on the other ſide of the Countrey neer the Mountain Amanus: no leſſe unfortunate than the former in being the birth-place of Neſtorius Patriarch of Conſtantinople, who troubling the peace of the Church with Heterodoxie, and impertinent nicities, about the bleſſed Mother of Chriſt, as alſo about the nature and perſon of Chriſt himſelf: was thereupon condemned of Hereſie in the Council of Epheſus, Anno 435. In former times called Adata, or as ſome write Adapa: but took this new name from Germanicus Cæſar, in honour of whom it was made a Roman Colony by Auguſtus: teſtified by this Inſcription extant in Onuphrius, viz. COLONIA JULIA GERMANICIA, SACRA, AUGUSTA, FELIX. 3. Singa, ſo called from the River upon which it is ſituate. 4. Antiochia penes Taurum ſo called becauſe ſeated at the foot of that Mountain; to difference it from the other of this name in Syria. 5. Pimara, one of the chief Cities of that part which is called Pieria. 6. Doliche, a ſmall Town, but made an Epiſcopall See in the beſt times of the Church, as appeareth by the Acts of the Councills of Antioch, and Conſtantinople, in which there is ſome mention of the Biſhops of it. 7. Aleppo, now the Principall of all the Countrey, ſuppoſed by ſome to be the Sepharvaim, mentioned 2 Kings 17. 24. It was thus called as ſome ſay from Halep, which in the language of thoſe parts ſignifieth milk, afforded liberally by the rich paſtures round about it: as others more improbably from Aleph, the firſt letter of the Greek Alphabet, becauſe the firſt in eſtimation of the Cities of Syria. Moſt probably from Alepius: Leiutenant here in the time of Julian the Apoſtata, who did here many notable exploits, and amongſt others, in or neer the ruins of ſome old Town of theſe parts, not yet agreed on (in caſe it be not Sepharvaim before mentioned) advanced this City. Situate on the banks of the River Singas, which riſing out of the hill Pierius, with many windings and turnings runneth thorough Comagena, and there falleth into Euphrates. Deſtroyed by Haalon King of the Tartars,
